Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

Miscellaneous Selections.

A DISGUSTED SMOKER.

A well-known revenue agent, now connected with the department in this city, but late of Chicago, where millions of cigarettes are manufactured, was spoken to on the subject of cigarettes.

"I used to be a confirmed cigarette smoker, but now you could not induce me to touch one of them," he said.

"Why, how's that?"

"Well, it's because I went into a large manufacturing establishment in Chicago one day, and what I saw there sickened me on the imitation smokers. How are they made, and of what? Of all that is vile and injurious and mean. Cigar butts, picked up from the streets, barks of certain kinds, tobacco stems and refuse, are heaped together in one filthy pile and then saturated with opium, which gives the cigarette that soothing effect desirable to all smokers. I tell you sir, if all cigarette smokers could see as I have seen, how one of the greatest firms in Chicago manufacture cigarettes, the trade in the same would soon fall off or cease entirely."

PADDLING AND PRAYING.

Said Thomas Jones, an old colored preacher: "When I was escaping from slavery, and found myself out on the ocean, I prayed God to help me, and He did help me. I found some boards and got on them. Well, what did I do then? Did I stop praying, and think because I had a few boards I could go on alone now, and didn't need the Lord's help any more? No! I kept on praying and held on to the boards. Well, what did I do then? Sit still, and expect the Lord to carry me safely through and think I had nothing to do? No! I took a stick for a paddle, and went to paddling and praying. I did not sit still, like those who have a name to live, and are dead; but I just went to paddling, and I did not forget to pray, and by paddling and praying I got through. So God expects us to pray, and also to paddle, and not wait for Him to do the work he has set us to do."

There is sound philosophy in the old man's talk. Paddling is needful, as well as praying; and a more ancient teacher once declared that "faith without works is dead, being alone."—Sel.

SAINT JOHN AND DANIEL CLUBS.

Worthington, in Noble Co., Minn., leads the way in this regard. At a late visit by the writer they had out their bands and torches, and manifested the only enthusiasm in political matters in the village. The club is eighty-one votes strong and more coming.

They are wide awake at Mankato, all the Protestant clergymen leading the way.

At Charleston I found them all prepared for the organization on Monday night through the efforts of J. B. Stevens and Rev. Mr. Wright. You may write this Wright down as all right. Nearly forty voters joined that night and more are in sight.

At Winona, in the midst of a tremendous rain storm, the court house was well filled and a rousing club was organized. In the last three weeks I have only found two ministers who were not openly for St. John, and they two were wavering.

I. M. Weston, a leading banker and Democratic light of Grand Rapids, Mich., says to a Detroit Journal reporter: "The Prohibition vote in the Fifth district is going to be a large one. The vote for Tatem in the spring of 1883, for supreme court judge, was 2,000, and then the party was not in any such organized condition as it is at present. Besides he was running against justice Chaplin, a very popular resident of the district, so you see their vote will, will—well, not be insignificantly small, at least."

A Prohibitionist who dare not vote his principles—Blaine.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD
Is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits.

Signal Notes.

THE national dodger—Blaine.

GRAND CROSSING, Ill., has a St. John and Daniel club of thirty-nine members.

JOHN B. GOUGH supports St. John and Daniel, and calls on all Republican Prohibitionists to do likewise.

TWELVE hundred voters of Geneseo county, Mich., are members of prohibition clubs.

G. R. HADDEN, of Lockport, N. Y., estimates that St. John's vote in Niagara county will be 600.

THE New York Independent demands the withdrawal of Blaine's name and the substitution of St. John.

WHO was the first man ever elevated above his state and home interests by a national nomination?—Blaine.

A PROMINENT politician claims that Massachusetts will return 20,000 votes for St. John, Daniel and prohibition.

WHERE one newspaper in California supported the prohibition candidate in 1880, nine now support St. John and Daniel.

ONE of Michigan's most prominent citizens writes us that St. John and Daniel will receive from 60,000 to 100,000 votes in that state.

OF the forty voters in Boston, Allegheny county, Pa., thirty-four have pledged themselves to vote for St. John and Daniel.

THE prohibition campaign banner, at Madison, Wis., was cut down a few nights ago by the saloonatics, thereby making many votes for St. John and Hastings.

IN 1880, Olean, N. Y., gave Neal Dow one vote, now it has a St. John and Daniel club of seventy members, and over two hundred votes are claimed for St. John.

THE Prohibitionists of New York feel confident of casting from 60,000 to 70,000 votes for St. John. If the election could be put off until January 1, 1885, he could be elected.

THE Des Moines brewers attempted a very shabby method of bribery, by sending to one of the supervisors, a few days before applications for permits were heard, $250 in currency, to "apply on note." To another, a pledge to organize a German Republican club, if the permits were granted. Publish the corrupters of law and justice.

"LARGE attendance and much enthusiasm" the reporters say of the Allegan county, Michigan, Prohibition convention, which nominated a county ticket, Sept. 15, "Prohibitionists of Lapeer county, gathered to the number of 200," says a dispatch of the county convention, at Lapeer, Sept. 13; and so it is all over the state.

THE Prohibitionists met in state convention at Denver, Col., on the 17th. After some discussion it was decided not to put a ticket in the field at present, but a committee of fifteen was appointed to report a ticket by the first of October. The platform adopted pledged the support of the party to St. John and Daniel for president and vice-president.

TEMPERANCE FABLE.—Some rats once assembled in a large cellar to devise some method of safely getting the bait from a steel trap, which lay near, having seen numbers of their friends and relatives snatched from them by its merciless jaws. After many long speeches, and the proposal of many elaborate but fruitless plans, a happy wit, standing erect, said, "It is my opinion that if with one paw we can keep down the spring, we can safely take the food from the trap with the other." All the rats present loudly squealed assent. Just then they were startled by a faint voice, and a poor rat, with only three legs (the other leg having been cut off in the trap), limping into the ring, stood up to speak: "My friends I have tried the method all of you proposed, and you see the result: I have lost one of my legs. Now let me suggest a plan to escape the trap: let it alone."

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.
Let it be forever remembered that the
Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY
is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from
CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.
It also operates the best route and the short line between
Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.
Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.
Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated
North-Western Dining Cars,
the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.
All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.
It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.
Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.
For maps, descriptive circulars and summer resort papers, or other information not obtainable at your local ticket office, write to the

Worth Thinking Of.

What Ayer's Cherry Pectoral does:—

It prevents the growth, to serious illness, of a dangerous class of diseases that begin as mere trivial ailments, and are too apt to be neglected as such.
It alleviates even the most desperate cases of pulmonary diseases, and affords to the patient a last and the only chance for restoration to health.
It breaks up a cold, and stops a cough more speedily, certainty, and thoroughly than any other medicine.
It spares mothers much painful anxiety about their children, and saves the little ones' lives.
It cures all lung and throat diseases that can be reached by human aid.

How Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Does Such Good.

It expels the mucus from the throat and the air passages of the head, and cleanses the mucous membrane.
It allays inflammation, puts a stop to tickling in the throat and coughing, and enables the patient to rest.
It heals sore throat, reduces the swollen tonsils, and restores natural tone to the affected vocal cords.
It soothes to natural and refreshing slumber, during which Nature regains strength to combat disease.
It clears out and heals diseased air cells in the lungs, and helps Nature to repair the waste made by the corrosion of pulmonary disease.
It puts a stop to the cankerous decay of Catarrh.

Why Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is so Perfect a Medicine.

Because it is a scientifically ordered compound, of great potency, the product of years of study, observation, and experience in the treatment of throat and lung diseases.
Because it is prepared from the purest forms of the drugs employed in it, chemically combined by a process of such perfection and accuracy as would be unattainable, even by the most skillful pharmacist, dealing with small quantities.
Because it is not only the most effective medicine for the uses to which it is designed, but, owing to the enormous quantities in which it is made, is sold at so low a price that it is placed within the reach of every household.
Because it is an active curative agent, that must be taken by drops, as prescribed in the directions accompanying each bottle, and not a mere palliative syrup that may be swallowed by mouthfuls.

Where Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Stands Before the World.

It is popularly known to be a medicine that has cured laryngeal, bronchial, and pulmonary affections where all others had failed.
It is a favorite household remedy to-day with people whose lives were saved by it, when they were young, a generation ago.
It has held the first-place in popular estimation for nearly half a century in this country, and is more and more highly appreciated, year after year, both at home and abroad.
It evokes daily, from all over the world, expressions of gratitude for lives saved by its use.
It is everywhere recommended by reputable druggists, who know, from conversations with their patrons, and from their own experience, how almost magical are its effects for good.
It is regularly prescribed by many physicians of the best standing, and is recommended by Professors of Medical Colleges, to their students, as invaluable for all diseases of the throat and lungs.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 40. CHICAGO, OCTOBER 16, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Annual Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at St. Louis, October 22, 23. 24, and 25, in the United Presbyterian church, corner Nineteenth and Morgan streets.

THE annual meeting of the stockholders of the Woman's Temperance Publication Association will be held at St. Louis, Mo., in the United Presbyterian church, Thursday, Oct. 23, 1884, commencing at 3 o'clock p. m. At this time annual reports of officers will be given, eleven directors elected for the ensuing year, and such other business transacted as may be brought regularly before them. The meeting of directors will immediately follow this meeting of stockholders.

MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

SOME sorry proof reading in last week's issue deprived poor Hans Makart's name of an important letter, and set Catherine Cornaro forth minus a resonant syllable. When the scribe's away, the types will play.

A GOOD deal of indignation is manifested in some circles of English society that Mr. Gladstone, having failed in his project to license railway carriages to sell drink, has aided the conversion of these vehicles into tobacco shops. The civil service is likely to be heavily burdened to carry out the excise provisions, which require a license for every coach in which the peripatetic vendor may sell his wares.

THE Chicago Tribune labors one day to prove that the Democratic party is the father of prohibition in the United States, and the next shows with all the conclusive reasoning of which it is capable, that if the Democratic party is allowed to rule, all the restrictive and prohibitory laws will be at once repealed, and the temperance reform set back a thousand years.

THE governor of Kansas, who has so steadily denied his ability to enforce prohibitory law in the state, now in his political beggary for another term declares that he would have enforced the rulings of the railroad commissioners, a body of his own appointment and a pet institution of his regime, by calling upon the armed force of the state, if the railroads had not acquiesced. Strange how easy it is fight railroads, and how hard to fight whisky.

THE pleasant news comes from St. Louis, that a charming reception is to be given the delegates to the convention, on Tuesday evening, October 21. Mrs. W. L. G. B. Allen, a lady well known in the social circles of that social city, and a sister also of Mrs. Stuart, of Cleveland, so tenderly remembered for her good work in the Ohio amendment campaign, will be the hostess on this occasion. St. Louis is famed for its hospitality and we are not surprised at this manifestation thereof.

A DISREPUTABLE point has been gained in a most disgraceful manner by the liquor party of this city. The county board, in this interest, has located a large majority of the polling places of the city in saloons. In two wards, comprising the best part of the North Side, which is eminently a residence quarter, every polling place is a saloon. The evident intent has been to force the most respectable portion of the inhabitants to stay away from the polls. The county board is the tool of the liquor traffic and the liquor traffic is the city's tyrant.

DENMARK has a bad reputation in European evangelical conferences. At a recent session of one of them it was reported by a Copenhagen pastor that every fourth divorce, every third crime, three-fourths of all persons imprisoned, were said to be due to intemperance. The magistrates were now making efforts to lessen the number of brandy shops, the chief source of all the evil. In Copenhagen alone the number had risen from 600 to about 2,000 in twenty years.

Another statement was by Pastor Rindfleisch, of Dantzic, who remarked that "crimes were on the increase, and this was due to drink." In support of this assertion he quoted from statistics showing that two-thirds were caused by brandy. This large proportion was due in part to the state of the law in that country, according to which drunkenness was admitted as an excuse for crime.

PROHIBITION has suddenly become a matter of national action, and in a most unlooked-for manner. The other day when the new U. S. steamship Atlantic was launched, the freak of little Jessie Lincoln, who suddenly determined to keep and carry home the bottle of wine which she was delegated to break upon the prow of the new vessel, occasioned a new departure in ship christening. One of the deck hands, noticing that the child did not break the bottle, grabbed up a bucket of water and threw its contents on the ship's bow as she made her first plunge into the water, and so inaugurated a new regime in in the U. S. navy. A child's hand, all unconscious of its mighty task, lighted the fuse which destroyed Hellgate Rock. The pretty little granddaughter of Abraham Lincoln, little recking the import of the act, may have put out one of the false lights of custom and tradition.

THE 29th of October is announced as a day of fasting, humiliation and confession of national sins and earnest prayer that Divine aid may be given to those measures which will result in the speedy putting away of this guilt, and the suppression of the traffic in alcoholic drinks.

We believe that this is the first time in our history that a political party has called for the prayers of Christian men and women. During the war, proclamations of this character were issued by the President, but not by political parties or their managers. May there be a wide spread and hearty observance of this day! Christians of all political faiths can certainly unite in the petitions, as well as in the confession of sin.

MAINE journals are kept busy answering false charges. It would seem that the recent loud expression of approval of the principle and practice of prohibition should be sufficient, but the license dog starts up in every cornfield as the prohibition train rushes on, and barks and runs as long as he can. The old and oft exploded comparison of Maine with West Virginia, this time taken from the Boston Advertiser, draws out the following from Gov. Dingley:

The Advertiser would have its readers believe that West Virginia is a state in which license generally prevails, when as a matter of fact nearly all the counties of that state adopted prohibition, and of course show the usual diminution, of grog shops. Maine has only one-fourth as many grog shops, proportionally, as any totally license state or communities in the north has. In New York and New Jersey there is one dram shop to every 180 inhabitants, in Rhode Island one to 200, in Delaware one to 250, in the license towns and cities of Massachusetts one to 200—all open grog shops,—but in Maine only one to 700 inhabitants, and these mainly secret. Moreover the Advertiser misrepresents our laws prohibiting dram shops, when it styles them "compulsory teetotalism." There are no laws in Maine prohibiting men from drinking liquor, or eating diseased meat, or discharging toy pistols; but there are laws prohibiting dram shops, and the sale of diseased meat and toy pistols—which are another thing.

In regard to the vote on the amendment he further says:

Of the 58,000 not voting, unquestionably one-third would have voted "yes" if the friends of license had made an open fight against it. There are thousands of Prohibitionists who did not vote for the amendment because they did not think it necessary, who would have voted "yes" if an open issue had been made against it by the friends of license. It is well understood that the liquor interest looked over the ground with a view of making an organized movement against it, and gave up the plan because they became satisfied that if they raised the square issue of prohibition or license, they would be beaten by 20,000 more majority than by letting the matter alone. As a matter of fact no amendment of our constitution ever received so large an affirmative vote as the prohibitory amendment.

OUR NATION.

AMELIA M. STARKWEATHER.

The clang of arms, the clash of steel,
Incited by the rolling drum,
Resounded loud for woe or weal;
And tongues were mute, and lips were dumb,
As watching from afar, they saw
The smoky wave surge to and fro,
With trembling hearts, and filled with awe,
They watched, one hundred years ago.

And aching hearts grew faint and sick:
For long and dreadful was the fray.
But when at last, so densely thick,
The smoke and clouds had cleared away,
Upon the graves that strew'd the land,
Was found a thing in embryo.
A nation, beautiful and grand
Sprung up, one hundred years ago.

Since then, old Father Time has sown,
The seeds of death, with angry frown.
And with his ruthless scythe, hath mown
His thousands upon thousands down.
And yet she lives! Our nation lives!
To bless the day that gave her birth.
She reaches out her hand, and gives
A "Welcome home," to all the earth.

But shall our banner, grand and fair,
The ensign of a nation free,
Look down on human souls, that wear
The galling chains of slavery?
More dreadful far, than any wrought
From iron ore, in furnace fires;
For while they bind the victim caught,
They fill the soul with base desires.

O, nation grand! O, people free!
How long shall rum dominion hold,
And blot out the divinity,
God stamped on man so strong and bold?
How long will ye so idly stand,
And view the wrecks of human lives
That broadcast lie throughout the land,
While rum, the dreadful demon thrives?

Arise! in all the strength and pride
Of freedom, and a holy cause,
Till our loved land be purified,
And joy abound through righteous laws.
Then with glad anthems shall we sing,
Justice and truth have met below;
And to the skies the chorus ring,
"Praise God from whom all blessing flow."

LIBERTY AND LAW.

MARCIA HUMPHREY.

Liberty, as Webster defines it, "is freedom from restraint, ability to do as one pleases," and although synonymous with freedom, yet they are often distinct in application. Since the day the Mayflower landed upon these shores the determined few who lifted to God their aching and oppressed hearts for freedom from religious oppression, freedom from restraint in holy things, the cry has gone unanimously forth, "Give me liberty or give me death." Give me unrestrained liberty of virtuous thought and action. Let me call no man master. And this sentiment originating in holy obedience to God's laws, has resolved itself into a spirit of monopoly, regardless of all honor, and has run into a detestation of restraint from any evil man may devise. We enjoy the heaven-born religious freedom first given us, as an inheritance from our ancestors. But men still clamor for a freedom unasked for by them; a new and broader platform, the foundation of which did not enter their truthful hearts when founding this great republic. The essence of this spirit has permeated and interwoven itself into the very birth and life of this people, and is being re-echoed by a vast foreign element, whose mighty tread rocks this land like a volcano, and whose stifled war-cry is heard in whispering tones from the center to the circumference of this nation. An element which flings these unrestrained sentiments into the face of a virtuous public as audaciously as its advocates reel in drunken and obscene condition through our streets, where the blood of martyrs once flowed for liberty from restraint only in holy things, and not unrestrained indulgence in crime. True, they had a mistaken zeal leading them to take strong opinions and measures against all who differed from them in religious worship, but the strength of their desire was to found a colony free from everything offensive to Heaven.

True, a great sin was afterward introduced by avaricious men which grew into a gigantic evil as they advanced in numbers and prosperity. But when it had become monstrous in its deadly effects upon the oppressor and oppressed, the old-time spirit of our forefathers entered into the hearts of good men, and eradicated the poison from the land. This call for personal liberty is the watch word of the brewers and distillers, and its monied influence, as has been reiterated again and again, is filling our prisons, jails, poor houses and insane hospitals, and degrading the homes of the world; and is fast becoming the rock over which thousands of our business men will fall; and upon which they are already sliding to ruin; while the foreign born men in the liquor traffic flourish over their downfall.

We have become, with our free acceptance of a strong foreign emigration to our country, so steeped in clamorous demands for unrighteous liberty, so tenacious in usurping a base selfish power over high ennobling principles, so determined—as evidenced by the liquor traffic—to secure to vile men the privilege of manufacturing for harm whatever the heart dictates, to allow them to "drink whatever, whenever and wherever they please," regardless of the consequences to the people, that at a moment's warning the reckless call and riotous demands of a drunken mob crowd, can fill our streets, surround our native and honored citizens, crushing out by blows and numbers, his vote at the polls They can also with their reckless brawls and clubs attack peaceable honest men, and even men in authority; kill, stone, tar and feather them and drag them through the streets in a more helpless and pitiable condition than was the poor untutored slave, Anthony Burns, who lived suffered and died in the youthful days of our heroic Wendell Phillips.

Even within a week a small torchlight procession of Irish American Republicans marching from Cambridge to Boston—a few miles distant—to attend a Republican rally in Faneuil Hall, were assaulted by an Irish drunken Democratic mob, with missiles of different descriptions, to to prevent their attendance at the hall. Some were seriously injured, and not sufficient police force could be summoned to quell the mob and in self defense the torch bearers were compelled to turn upon their foes and fight for their lives and freedom to enter the hall in safety. And this within the sound of metropolitan Boston, in 1884. During the long series of years of the Republican party has a mob been known to assail a procession of Democrats? Has any body of temperance men ever attacked their opponents in this manner? They have worked only as the law allowed. The temperance cause was not born of riot. The "crusade" was begotten of God, born in the hearts of good women and its missiles have been prayer and moral suasion, and only as law can be made to govern evil, can we attempt to rule our opposers. Whence then comes this disgraceful mob spirit? By what principles are such men actuated? Men defy compulsory law in the rum traffic, saying "This will never convert men from drink, though you shut up every rum shop in the country. This indulgence has existed since the days of Noah," etc.

True, we cannot compel men to obey the law written by the finger of God in their hearts; yet, for the safety of the home and rising generation we can use compulsory law for outward observance, and cause the sin to hide in shame, away from the sight of the school children and young men the revolting exhibitions in our streets. By making it a crime we can save millions a year from falling. This law has to do with the murderer, the burglar, and even the petty thief who steals a loaf of bread to satisfy his hunger. Has it nothing to do with the instigators of this great and glaring iniquity who foster these crimes and breed them like a pestilence? Has it no right to enter the domains of a rumseller's heart and business, compelling him to observe the letter of the law, if not the spirit, for the safety of our citizens upon whose neck he flings his death grasp?

Constitutional and legislative enactments, when made effective, keep evil subdued. It can put its iron heel upon the neck of the liquor assassin. Complicity in a crime makes a man guilty. Then why not men who manufacturer and sell deadly tools to the people for a gradual suicide, whose deathly sharpness pierce the hearts of so many and the glitter of whose blade magnetizes so many into a senseless, besotted life! A tool which its manufacturer knows if handled becomes deadly in its effects, causing millions to sink into depths into which angels might look and weep tears of blood, and archangels might veil their faces. A sword that pierces many parents' hearts as they look upon the face of their bloated and betrayed child, and in agony exclaim with one of old, "O, Absalom, my son! my son! would God I had died for thee!"

The motto of the hour with many is written in bribery, debauchery and blood; emanating from the hearts of wicked men, framed in red, white and blue, an eagle for an emblem, and surrounding it on all sides, are the stars and stripes; old as the history of this nation, a drinking mob element hold it up to the view of the multitude; and many bow down to it as the heathen to their gods.

Our dearly loved ones are buried beneath its bloody folds by the scores, while our government looks complacently on, defying any man, or any set of men to pull it down. O, if they could see more plainly the leech sucking the life of the people, whose hold is withering the souls and bodies of men, sending them to the gallows and the prisons, methinks they would not hold their peace, lest the very rocks and stones cry out against them. Says the noble Mrs. Lathrap at Chautauqua anniversary: "This question has been lifted to the level of the eyes of this people, and it will not go down again till it is settled in righteousness. When I speak of the final settlement of the question I mean the settlement of the attitude of the government toward this traffic that is demoralizing our civilization."

Differences in regard to measures to cope with this evil are natural to the human heart, and it may be well that it is thus; lest we thrust the sickle into the harvest ere it is ready to gather. But while the glorious old doctrine of moral suasion proclaims its truths, prohibition clasps its hand, feeling that it cannot longer struggle alone. While monied men rule the hour, and men will sell their birthright, and those of their family for "a mess of pottage;" so long as gold supersedes honor; so long as open liquor shops with their sickening fumes greet us at every step, and are given to us by men in authority.

There are different roads to reach the same goal, and all conspire to bombard the citadel and break down its walls. With the Omnipotent arm for a leading weapon, the combined efforts will eventually lay this crime in ashes, never again to be resuscitated under the protection of our government. "The march of progress is the march of God."

THE PRICE OF A KEG OF BEER.

NARCISSA E. WHITE.

Temperance people are often accused of forgetting the financial interests of the country in their great zeal for the moral, but let me give a single instance of the financial interests involved in licensed liquor.

The state of Pennsylvania ever in the foremost ranks in educational matters, has by law divided the state into twelve Normal school districts and again and again appropriated large sums of money to establish these Normal schools for the professional training of her future teachers. One of the largest and most prosperous of these schools is located at Edinboro, a little village of Erie county, Pennsylvania, and for twenty years has had as its most efficient principal, Prof. J. A. Cooper, a graduate of Yale college, and a large hearted Christian gentleman.

The buildings of the Normal school stand by themselves in twelve acres of enclosed grounds, two of the buildings being boarding halls for the lady students. As morality is an absolute essential in the future teacher a law was passed by the board of trustees prohibiting on the school grounds all use of tobacco, intoxicating liquors and profane language and Prof. Cooper, the principal, was instructed to see that this law was enforced.

Although the village is small, for years back it has had two licensed hotels, and within the last six months the third was opened almost under the very eves of the Normal school. The result was what any one might expect—not only were a greater or less number of the Normal students, those wards of the state, every year dismissed for drunkenness, but the boys of the village, becoming drunken and demoralized, were accustomed to come on the school grounds and even into the ladies halls, smoking and swearing, to the no small annoyance of the lady students.

Again and again had Prof. Cooper, (at first alone—latterly assisted by the newly organized W. C. T. U.) made the most strenuous efforts to have the liquor licenses of the village revoked or withheld, but with little success except to make himself on this account a "marked man" to the liquor element.

One night this spring a number of the drinking young men of the village assembled (the village "justice" being one of them) and procuring a keg of beer, drank to their satisfaction, then in a half maudlin condition, proceeded to make night hideous by playing a brass horn or two and a couple of drums before the various hotels, finally between the hours of one and two o'clock at night wending their way to the school grounds in front of the ladies halls, rousing the inmates from their slumbers. The principal, Prof. Cooper, hearing the disturbance hastened to the grounds and explaining to the young men that they were breaking the laws of the school requested them to desist. But the only answer returned him was oaths and a continuance of the offense. The trustees of the school realizing that the best interests of the school were imperiled by such conduct, entered suit against the young men, to be tried at the September court.

A few weeks after this disturbance a term of court was held at which expired licenses would be renewed, and Prof. Cooper and a number of the trustees and teachers repaired to the county seat and testified before the judge of the great injury done to the school by the granting of license, citing the conduct of the young men before mentioned, as an example, these young men themselves being put on the witness stand and admitting all the important points of the charge.

The judge severely reprimanded the youths, and gave as his decision that "whereas the state normal school was a ward of the state, and to be protected, no liquor license should henceforth be granted by him in the village of Edinboro."

Of course such a decision was a thunderbolt to the liquor element and their fury was at once combined against the principal of the school as the chief author of their defeat. So, when the trial of the young men for disorderly conduct on school grounds, came on in September, although these young men had themselves previously admitted their misconduct, under the pretense of nullifying the testimony of the chief witness against them, but in reality out of sheer malciousness and revenge they summoned no less than twenty witnesses "of their kind" to testify that Prof. Cooper was not a man of truth and veracity. Of course there were hundreds on the other side, indeed the entire moral intelligent part of the community, who were ready to certify that Prof. Cooper's character for truth and veracity was beyond the shadow of a doubt, and that to all who knew the professor and also the character of the men testifying against him, such a charge could only seem like the "hugest" kind of a joke. But all the same all these witnesses had to be paid and the result was that by the time this trial was over that one keg of beer drank by the young men of Edinboro had cost the citizens of Erie county, counting loss of time, traveling expenses, etc., no less than fifteen hundred dollars. How long are such financial burdens to be meekly borne by the sober citizens of this state?

When Neal Dow was laboring for prohibition in Maine he was one day accosted thus by a drinking man, "Neal Dow, what business is it of yours whether there are saloons in Maine or not, so long as we who want to drink, buy and pay for our own liquor?" "Ah," replied the temperance veteran, "but that is just the point; the trouble is, you tipplers drink the liquors, but it is the sober citizen of Maine who eventually has your liquor bills to pay."

Is this not equally true of every other state.

MAKE A CHAIN.—THE REST OF IT.

MRS. E. E. MARCY.

And here comes that chain "that like a wounded snake drags its slow length along." After enduring a good many little struggles of thought in order to obey the literal command to make a visible chain, this plan was at length adopted. Plain visiting cards were chosen, and to make them attractive some little design painted in the upper left hand corner. On the front of the card was to be written the name of any one who wished to be a link in the chain; and on the back some verse of scripture of her own choice. The cards were then all joined together with button rings, five rings between the cards, commencing with one on which was this pledge: "All we whose names are in this chain promise not to drink anything that will intoxicate." And a number of cards bore this text, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." Who shall say that the word of God, which is quick and powerful and a discerner of the thoughts and intents of all hearts, may not make this formula, that covers all outward righteousness as well as all inward grace, in after years, when the strictly literal shall give place to that which it typifies, as well—mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of sin? Surely we know that His word shall not return unto Him void. And so when as many as would had chosen their cards, and the text to be written thereon; they were all bound together with the little silvery links; and we became a temperance chain.

Now the chain hangs in my parlor, and a pretty memento it is; and like the rosary of the Romish church, it it is also a prayer chain, for often as I tell its cards, one by one, there comes a little unspoken prayer into my heart for each little soul therein represented; waifs and wanderers as they may be, "Away on the mountains cold and bare." And many, who see it, and ask what it means, after listening attentively to the explanation, will say, "Ah! that is an idea!"

I hope it is a thought that will spring up with fruit; and that this work among the needy children will become adopted by every W. C. T. U. in the land; and that a department of this kind of labor will be organized, and thus this form of benevolence duly recognized by their highest tribunals. You will notice, I said above, as many as would chose cards. In our preliminary talk, when the thought of the chain was yet in embryo, and the question was asked who would like to be in the chain, some hands were not raised. In little private talks, it came out that "My mamma doesn't think I am old enough," and "My mamma gives me such things for medicine."

Dearly beloved, these thing are down deep in the first reasonings of the being. Being crafty I caught them with guile (bait.) I made the pretty chain to entangle them in its meshes, and I think none are too young, or too sickly, to be willing to be bound with it.

Now God speed the work for the children. There are thousands, yea, millions, stretching out needy and helpless hands, and it is in the power of the Christian women of the land, to fill them with blessings. Without our help they will be filled with cursings, to fall not upon themselves alone, but upon ourselves and our children.

A NEW WEAPON.

REV. L. PFEIFFER.

Some weeks ago Mrs. Ada H. Kepley, of Effingham, Ill., in her article "A New Discovery" mentioned a German book on alcoholism, written by Dr. A. Baer, of Germany, and through her instrumentality it was sent to me from New York (by Steiger & Co., the largest German book store and book sellers of this country) Thanking that lady for her great kindness, I feel obliged to write a review on this book. Though I have read but a few passages, I find it very excellent, and useful for a temperance worker; especially it can be used for literature, having stores of valuable points in this direction.

This book has 621 pages, was been printed in 1878, at Berlin, and published by August Hirschwald (N. W. unter den Linden) Dr. A. Baer is a member of the royal board of health (Koeniglicher Sanitaets Rath) and and archiater at the penitentiary Ploetzensee, near Berlin. Thus he writes in the preface of his book, as follows:

"Having been in activity in the medical prison service for a good many years, I have met with the consequences of alcoholism so frequently and so differently, that it appeared to be a task for me worth of trouble to state in connection all facts and inquiries, as well as all disputable questions as yet concerning this important line of social life. This work will explain the physiological and pathological influence of alcohol upon the individual organism, and settle the value of alcohol as a food, a relish, and a medicine; it will try to show how the consumption of alcoholic beverages proves to be in the different countries, with individual nations and races, and what influence it exercises upon the society, the physical, the psychical and moral life of the nations; it will, finally, give directions for the means used in single states for the subdue of intemperance, and consider the results that have been attained by it."

But in order that the readers of The Union Signal may have a better idea of the value of this book, I will make a sketch of its contents, in extract:

FIRST PART.

The Alcohol and its Effect on the Individual Organism.

Section 1. Invention, presentation and qualities of alcohol. The effect of alcohol on the animal organism.

a. Physiological effect of alcohol (its effect on the blood, on the blood circulation, on the respiration, on the nerve system, on the activity of digestion, on the secretion of the kidneys, on the exchange of matters and the temperature of the body; the remaining of alcohol on the animal organism.

b. Pathological effect of alcohol on the animal organism. 1. The acute intoxication of alcohol, issuing into death. 2. The chronical intoxication of alcohol (or chronical alcoholism,

Section 2. Alcohol as a food, relish, and medicine.

SECOND PART.

Section 1. The spreading of drinking mania, and the consumption of alcoholic liquors, especially of whisky, in single countries.

Sec. 2. Alcohol and its influence upon the physical life.

Sec. 3 Alcoholism and its influence upon the welfare and morality of the people.

THIRD PART.

The Means of Subduing Alcoholism.

Section 1. Temperance and abstinence societies.

Sec. 2. Legal measures against intemperance.

Sec. 3. Of the means for subduing intemperance indirectly: 1. Compensation for spirituous liquors by other substances. 2. Care for the welfare of the working class. 3. Propagation of knowledge and propmotion of morality among all classes of people. 4. Promotion of temperance in the army. 5. Promotion of temperance by private persons.

Dr. Baer's book on Alcoholism is, indeed, a wonderful work, and "a new discovery" for us. He made deeper studies on this question than any one before him. His work embraces the question as a whole and gives a right answer to it. Having made information about alcoholism from all parts of the world, he made also different statistics on the most important lines of this question, especially for the different provinces of Germany. He asserts that total abstinence and abolition of intoxicating liquors (or prohibition) would be the best means to subdue alcoholism; but he could not believe in the practicability of this measure, as we do; there being unsurmountable difficulties in the way. At the time of writing his book Dr. Baer was almost the only champion of this noble cause; but, fortunately, now there is a temperance movement in Germany, too. May God grant it good success!

Having made a review on this valuable book, I would still say, that I am willing to write some more articles for The Union Signal out of it, and also for any German papers, if practicable.

A THRILLING REMINISCENCE.*

What has the future in store? Let the past answer through its history of another struggle of the Christianity of the nation with another national sin.

About forty years ago I attended my first political convention, the first anti-slavery convention ever held in

*From the Annual Address of Miss Mary Allen West at the Illinois State Convention.

Peoria. I came with my father and mother and I love to remember that in the inception of that great reform as in this, father, mother and children stood side by side. We reached Peoria the night before the convention, but no hotel or home dared shelter us, for fear of the mob which was even then gathering. Moses Pettingill secured an unfurnished, unfinished room in a warehouse, where we women and children spent the night, in darkness lest a light should betray us to the raging mob. My father with my uncle, Levi Spencer, one of the earliest pastors of this church, and other men were guarding points liable to attack, and while engaged in this duty Mr. Spencer was wounded in the head by a brickbat thrown through the window. The mob seized a poor fellow whom they mistook for an abolitionist, tarred and feathered him and rode him on a rail through your streets. The grim procession, heralded by oaths and lighted by torches, passed our retreat. I shall never forget the weird scene, nor the impression this first torchlight procession made upon me.

The convention met next morning in a small private room, because no church or public hall would open its doors to the abolitionists. One row of benches against the wall of the little room accommodated all that attended that meeting. My father sat on the end of the bench nearest the door, with me on his lap. He was appointed secretary, and placing me on the seat took a chair at the rude table.

Soon the door opened and the leader of the last night's mob entered—a big burly butcher, armed with a club with which he had doubtless felled many a beef. He closed the door, took his stand in front of it, planted his club close beside me and leaned on it right over my head. For a time which seemed to me interminable, he stood there. Then restrained from doing the meditated violence by a power he did not know, he withdrew. Twenty years later I saw that same man in the streets of Galesburg as captain of a band of wide awakes, parading in honor of the abolition president, Abraham Lincoln.

When such changes are wrought in the space of a short score of years, what may we not hope for in a cause as sacred and never so despised as was abolition. The fact that we meet here, in the strong hold of the liquor interest, that this beautiful church throws open its doors and decks itself with flowers for our reception, that we are welcomed to the loveliest homes in your city, all this indicates that our hopes are nearer fruition than were the hopes of the abolitionists twenty years before the strong, clean hand of Lincoln struck the shackles from the slaves.

And the same God who commanded in that struggle is our leader. He it is that fighteth for us, for "the battle is not yours, but God's." We know not the way nor time when He will give the victory, but we know it will come.

He hath sounded forth the trumpets that shall never call retreat,
He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat;
Be swift, my soul, to answer Him, be jubilant, my feet,
For God is marching on.

THE PROHIBITORY AMENDMENT IN MAINE.

Dear Union Signal:—The efforts of the people to establish morality as the basis of all legislation has been fully demonstrated, in the recent settlement of the prohibitory amendment question. The result of twenty-five years of prohibitory life under the Maine law, of its goodness, its inestimable worth to the homes of Maine, has been entirely proven by the fact that here in the extremest border of conservative New England, the women were attuned to concert pitch of duty, so that everywhere, or nearly everywhere, throughout this good commonwealth wives and mothers and daughters rallied at the polls, on the 8th day of September, 1884, the historic amendment day of the state of Maine.

It has been truthfully said, that there must be brought into public life something to appeal to the mind and conscience as well as to interest, and I think that appeal was lovingly made, right here in this Pine Tree state on amendment day. If I held the brush of the artist or the pen of the ready writer, I might produce a picture that could go down to history, but I can only briefly sketch in my crude way that remarkable time. Nearly all the readers of The Union Signal are familiar with the work of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president of the Maine W. C. T. U. It has been one of the precious privileges in my workaday life, to meet, know, and love this most gifted woman. What she is as a leader, financial manager, loving friend, and Christian counsellor, no words of mine could fitly express. Suffice it to say, the hearts of the women do safely trust her, and all would cheerfully rise up and call her blessed. Nor can I sufficiently thank our national president for assigning to me this pleasant post of duty. The lecturers who gave their services in the great contest were inspired to best efforts by the zeal and energy of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, and although in the midst of a national political contest, the amendment was kept clearly before the people as a non-partisan issue. Miss Frances E. Willard came not a moment too soon, and brought what was most needed, the clear light of her high thinking. Mrs. Pearson, one of Old England's ablest woman speakers, proved a powerful lever in lifting the head and heart into a pure moral atmosphere. Mrs. Mary Woodbridge with her large experience in the Ohio campaign her elegant presence and ripe culture, did effective service; and so untiring souls from abroad and here at home in Maine, worked and prayed until the final victory. How shall I describe that memorable day?

The sun never shone more brightly through the clear and pungent air of this "Pine Tree state," nor upon a fairer scene. In bold relief, near the polls, stood the white tents of the W. C. T. U. adorned with scriptural texts, and fountains of ice-water, and the gentle eyed and gracious women, with baskets of bouquets, tied with white ribbon to which were attached mottoes of Holy Writ, the noble, stalwart sons of Maine, bending to receive these fragrant favors from loving hands. The entire absence of the degrading odor and spirit of the rum saloon, the perfectly respectful demeanor of the hardiest sons of toil; and as one policeman remarked, no need of police service today. The Christian women are God's policemen.

When Miss Frances Willard spoke in Belfast each window of the fine old church was a bank of fragrant flowers, worthy of California, and before her stood a real ballot-box, embedded in roses; above, suspended by an invisible cord, was a snow white dove, with the olive branch of Maine, the yes ballot in its beak, just ready to fall into the box. On that memorable election day, it did seem as if the Heavenly Dove, with quickening power, had enkindled the hearts of the Maine voters to a high and holy patriotism, for never were hands so firm, to cast that weapon "better than the bayonet" against the giant evil. When the night closed in upon us, and the news flashed along the wires that a terrible snowstorm of white ballots had buried deep that evil in this goodly state, it seemed as if Maine from her farthest border gave the glad exultant shout, and that the echo answered even from off California shores. One could almost hear the prayers of rejoicing, after the long suffering, as they lifted their tearful eyes to this bright star in the east, that "shall never go down until the records of valor decay."

It seemed that those prayers were being wafted heavenward, and the "God bless the brave souls in Maine," was a new baptism for the coming future, when noble minds and generous hearts may rally around the principles of this guiding star, that the deep yearning of multitudes for purer national life, upheld by high moral principles, may give that impetus to the new party, that righteous indignation, and "soul loving enthusiasm," and that bond of national unity, springing from a common faith, that will make us all willing to dare all, to heed the voice of God calling us to "go forward."

THE GREAT SYMPOSIUM.

The letters which pour in upon the editor relative to the political situation would fill the paper from now till Christmas. It seems best therefore to condense sufficiently to let each voice be heard, and we herewith present the salient points of each letter pro and con, and shall continue the symposium so long as time permits, and expressions continue to be made.

MRS. JULIET H. BRAND, OHIO.

We here in Oberlin have just been having the privilege of listening twice to Mrs. Foster on temperance and prohibition topics. Thinking to know more about her I have looked up her name in Miss Willard's book, "Woman and Temperance," and find the following: "In her own home Mrs. Foster is universally honored, and for her beloved Iowa she has grandly wrought from the beginning until now, when more by her exertions than those of any other individual, the constitutional amendment has been ratified by the people. . . . There is not a state at the north in which our cause is not today more powerful than it would have been but for her logic and her eloquence. . . . Best of all, she loves the Lord Jesus Christ, and above her chief joy desires and labors to build up His kingdom on the earth." Also I have looked over the The Union Signal of Oct. 2, and find her spoken of by implication as one who refuses "to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty," as having strangely contradicted her utterances of the past and as seemingly having "ignored the very interest which she has been instrumental largely in arousing,"—and again as being the "most embarrassing difficulty" in the way of a certain temperance lecturer—though he met with many difficulties. All of which last references make me fear that we women are falling into the campaign methods of the common party newspapers.

Now we have considered Mrs. Foster a grand temperance lecturer. She is working in the line that must be pursued for years, no matter what the parties do at this election, or at the next election, and we question if it is sisterly or Christian or politic to allow her work to be crippled by this criticism from within the ranks of the W. C. T. U. She is making prohibition sentiment wherever she goes, and who says that is not the very thing needed in the long run? And it is to be a long run, not a mere spurt. She thinks we will get to national prohibition in a few years when more states have adopted it. Some of the rest of us think we shall get it this year, or in a few years. What a vast difference, to be sure!

There have been grand things said about how affairs would flourish if women had the ballot. Now I do hope that this division of sentiment in the ranks of the W. C. T. U. is not going to demonstrate the fact that there will be grand times only so long as good women are all agreed, and that the moment they disagree in methods even, though not in principle, they will attack each other with the same severity that men have been accustomed to carry into such matters. My plea is that people like Mrs. Foster who are known to be earnest Christians of good temperance principles beyond a peradventure, and what is more of a good record in the battles fought with the liquor power, that such people shall have their position treated with respect, no matter where they stand. They are entitled to it. Present all the arguments against their views which you can, but let there be absolutely nothing personal, nothing to insinuate false or cowardly motives. I certainly think that the cause of God is going to be hurt more in this campaign by the flings which good people are making at each other, because while having the same aim their judgment as to means differs, than by all the lying and bribery of the lower class of professional politicians. Some of us do not see how a man can support the Republican party and be a good Prohibitionist. No matter if we don't see it, we know he is a good man and a good Prohibitionist by his past record, so we are bound to respect his judgment though ours may differ. Some of us do not see how a man who loves the cause of temperance can at this time vote for the third party, and so give the election to the Democrats, and throw our poor suffering cause into the hands of its worst enemies. No matter if we don't see it. We know the man to be sound on temperance by his past record, so we must respect his judgment though ours may differ. We have got to learn this lesson during this campaign or fail utterly to represent the spirit of Christ at a time when there is a special demand for it.

One speaks, in this issue of The Union Signal to which I have referred, of a certain man who is "true and courageous, who dares to stand up for St. John and Daniel." As if, when so many good people were talking in that way it did not take even more courage to dare to stand up for Blaine! Another summons the members of the W. C. T. U. in a certain state to the judgment, to hear the sentence of "neither cold nor hot," because they do not see as she does, that just now the best way to help the cause is to vote for the third party. On this very Sabbath when we are having our quiet gospel temperance meeting, excursion trains are being run into Akron, carrying crowds to hear third party speeches by St. John, who himself went to Akron on the Sunday train. Now I tremble lest in the next presidential campaign we shall hear of great political mass meetings held by all the parties on the Sabbath, following the example of this party of moral reform.

So let the good people of each party devote themselves to the motes and beams in their own party's eye and I venture to say there will not be much spare time between now and the 4th of November.

MRS. JUDITH ELLEN FOSTER, IOWA.

In your issue of October 2, I find this quotation from Margaret Fuller: "Does any man wound thee? not only forgive, but work into thy thought intelligence of the kind of pain, that thou mayest never inflict it on another spirit."

I have no desire to answer in detail the editorial comments or critical communications contained in late issues in regard to my published statements as to my convictions on pending political issues, and the relation of our organization to those issues.

If our women will study my "Amendment Manual" and my legislative reports, as a whole, and compare them with my late utterances, they will, I think, according to common rules of construction, find that I teach no new doctrine, that I renounce no former position. I have simply, as a national superintendent, advised concerning the work of my department, and protested against methods which I believe will delay the securing of constitutional prohibition. I have made no partisan speeches, have given no platform advocacy of the claims of any candidates, but have said over and over again the truths concerning total abstinence and prohibition which I have taught for years.

In addition to this as an American woman, I have conscientiously endeavored through the public press to avert an appalling national calamity, putting a libertine in the White House. I shudder at the thought that women in their misguided zeal be indirectly accessory to the national disgrace. I cannot however for the sake of personal vindication, through the columns of our paper, take up a controversy so offensive to my sense of womanly dignity and so contrary to the gospel rule of charity.

In many localities the ladies are united in their desire to keep alive and promote the temperance sentiment; to educate the young; to circulate temperance literature, and to work against the licensing of saloons in their own midst, also to throw the weight of their influence against the example of the saloon. Beyond this they do not agree. Many good temperance workers in the unions are supporters of James G. Blaine. Now is it becoming Christian women to neglect the work lying at their own doors, to quarrel over the White House, when women have no voice in the matter? The 4th of November will soon be over, and with it the excitement of the campaign, and there will still be work for the sisterhood of the white ribbon. Is it not the idea of the union to give the largest liberty of opinion, and is it a Christian temperance union principle to drive out all ladies who do not fully indorse Mr. St. John? I give all honor to the Prohibition party, in my own heart, for they are doing their best to educate the people to right ideas on the subject, but I do not want to see local unions disbanded, good women disheartened and the temperance cause neglected. Neither do I think Miss Willard, in her great earnestness, or Mr. St. John, in his nobleness of heart, would think it wise to take such a step.

[No, neither Miss W. nor any other true prohibitionist would counsel or set an example of such neglect. The state and local W. C. T. unions are not necessarily involved in this campaign—and are so only as they choose to be. —Ed. Signal.]

MRS. J. T. FOOTE, OHIO.

I enclose extracts from a paper read before the Cuyahoga county union on the "Attitude of our W. C. T. U. toward the Parties during the Presidential Campaign."

My reasons for endorsing the Prohibition party:

1. I find in the national minutes for 1883 the following resolution: "That we will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes." (See page 31, Sec. 5). I find in report of plan of work committee of same convention a memorial to the leading political parties entitled the "Memorial of the American Home against the American Saloon." I find later on in the history of our W. C. T. U. work a national call for a day of prayer. Topics assigned: Platform of parties, "that they may declare the saloon must go." For presidential candidates, "that they may be committed, by personal habits and public pledge, to national prohibition." For Christian voters, "that they may be inspired to represent the women by outlawing the saloon." Later I find reports of the wonderful presence of the Spirit attending upon these all day prayer meetings held everywhere throughout these United States.

Do I believe in answered prayer? Am I expecting that that day of crying unto the Lord will be heeded?

A little further on and the Prohibition delegates convene in Pittsburgh for the purpose of selecting their standard bearers. The old line "dyed in the wool" Prohibitionist goes there determined that no man shall be nominated whose Prohibition party principles have not been tested and tried by summer's heat and winter's cold. Government employes are there to urge the endorsement of nominees already before the public, but another is there, even the Lord of Hosts Himself! The prayers of the women are there and fill the house with incense, and what is the result? God's clearly spoken answer to our resolution, our memorial, our day of prayer.

We are partisan, not one of us but that if we knew the party would win this year would be willing to work for its success as eagerly and untiringly as we did for the success of the second amendment.

We have a perfect right to be partisan; in fact it is expected of us. Everybody expects us to support the Prohibitionists and doubts our sincerity when we say we do not. One of the most prominent politicians in my own ward said to me last year on election day, "Why don't you peddle your own tickets, not go round here with your hands full of Republican and Democratic tickets?" The politicians know which are our tickets if we do not ourselves. I should lose my self-respect if I attempted so impossible a thing as non-partisanship at this late day. An attempt to pass a resolution committing the Ohio W. C. T. U. to a non-partisan attitude at our late state convention, was promptly "sat down upon." It was recognized then that we are a progressive union, that we live in tents and ought to pitch them each night on new vantage ground.

Because we were non-partisan last fall is one of the best arguments in favor of partisanship this fall. We cannot stand still; our past experience has taught us that we are not called to do the same work twice.

Last year we tried to mend our constitution; this year we are to try mend our executive and our legislative power, and that is partisan work.

Finally, I endorse the party now because it is a child of our own prayers. The Christian voter for which we asked the Lord has had "the courage of his convictions," and has severed his old party ties, and is waiting for us to give him the right hand of fellowship. Ought we not to be at his side? The old parties will not be slow to notice his defection from their ranks and with argument and persuasion and ridicule win him back, if possible, to vote just "once more" in the familiar ranks.

Shall we be less persistent and aggressive? They will notice, too, how we stand by our reformed men as they make their first attempt to walk in the new way, counting no sacrifice on our part too great that will hold them. These men need us quite as much. Let no fear lest our other lines of work should lag for lack of funds or be alienated if we take this step deter us. Let us grasp with broader comprehension the truth that the "wealth of the world is His," and that "He holds in His hands the hearts of the children of men."

Let no thought that we will antagonize an element that in our non-partisan work aided us, hinder our onward stepping. Let us remember that "when a man's ways please the Lord He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." Trust in the Lord and do right, and He will bring it to pass.

MRS. E. F. WALDO, MICHIGAN.

When the question before the American people was the non-extension of slave territory, and the liberation of the slaves, those who stood on the affirmative side of this question allied themselves with the party that promised to work for the accomplishment of this object, not with those who said "This is not a national question." This same question, by the way, not being one half as much a national one as the liquor traffic of today. If the anti-slavery element of our country had waited until it was "possible to elect the presidential candidate of an anti-slavery party before such a party was formed, I fear our dear Mrs. Livermore would have passed even more than her sixty summers before she would have put to the service of such a party "her pen, her voice and her purse."

Let us whether disfranchised or otherwise, say we will not exert our influence to put in the presidential chair one who is in favor of making the revenue from whisky a "permanent fund," because whatever permanency is given to the fund must of necessity be given to the business.

Here in Michigan the Republicans have given us, in place of what was at one time a prohibitory law, capable occasionally of being enforced, a license law under which for the conviction of a criminal a kind and degree of evidence is required, which, if necessary to the conviction of an offender against other laws would render them impossible of execution, and then after filling almost every office with men who do not wish to execute this law we are insultingly asked why do you not execute the law we have?

Let us not as women fear to work for the right, even though we should in some future day fail to receive the favor of the state legislatures in some of our plans of work. I would rather have God on our side than even the Republican party!

MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP, MICHIGAN.

When President Garfield lay in the long agony of weeks that followed the shot of July 2d, the physicians stood over him in a scientific tableau and sent out daily bulletins to tell the unsuspecting and unscientific public, just where the ball was located, the track it travelled, and the probable results.

When Garfield lay dead, the ball was found in quite another position, and where its unhindered work must of necessity be fatal. When that fact came abroad the faith of ordinary and common sense people was greatly shaken in all medical science, and especially in certain medical men.

Some such feeling ran through the ranks of our W. C. T. U. women when Mrs. Foster's letters were published. Had she not done our legal thinking for years? Had she not located this deadly thing which was bringing ruin to the nation, and told us it lay in the wrong attitude of national and state law towards the destroyer?

Had she not often eloquently shown the struggle between the national policy of permission, and the state policy of prohibition? Had she not sought and found the opportunity to come before the committee at Washington, and plead for national legislation upon this subject in harmony with what Hon. Henry W. Blair has so long been seeking, even going farther than his thought? Had she not said in presence of hundreds of witnesses, that if she lived anywhere outside of "Canaan" she would be in favor of party action?

Verily she had, and more than all this. It is not strange, therefore, that with her manual (the W. C. T. U. classic, on this subject), before them, beside her reports, speeches, and legal opinions ad infinitum, the average temperance woman should gasp out "The difficulty is not where we thought it was. The national government has no blame or responsibility after all, and we must all go and do what Iowa did, or die on the wrong side of Jordan. Why did she lead us on, and not say so, before this hour?"

The first shock over, however, the slow, brave doubt has come whether one woman's opinion is the exact science of law, from the incorporation of a W. C. T. U. to the highest powers of government, expressed in constitutions, and the other women are just now doing their own thinking.

It is not the purpose of this writing, however, to make answer to Mrs. Foster's position on the main question. Mr. Blaine has invited such a multitude of pens and voices to discuss the question whether the liquor traffic is or is not a national issue, that it is decided by this time that no opinion will dismiss the case to the realm of state action, while the national government is the first partner in the whole concern, and has the lion's share of the profits.

There is quite another word yet unspoken which concerns our N. W. C. T. U., and is the purpose of this letter.

Twice during the year, in the most public fashion, the women who composed that grandest of all conventions at Detroit, have been told that they did not vote as they supposed they voted. That really they did not at all understand what they meant, and therefore intended the very opposite of what they said.

These women, in presence of clear language, well defined in Miss Willard's annual message, voted for a petition to the national party conventions and to congress, asking for national party and national government action upon the liquor question, the ideal being at least one million names.

In December following the executive board of the state W. C. T. U. of Michigan, without a question as to what was meant in Detroit, voted not to undertake the popular petition because of the immense labor involved, showing that they knew how they voted.

Yet we were told, in company with the other delegates, that our construction of that action was wrong, and no such thing was intended.

Now again, in presence of a resolution so plain in its meaning, that he who runs may read and understand, our "construction" is again at fault, and we are told that when we pledged "our influence to that party by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles," we meant no such thing.

Let it be remembered that this second action logically followed the first. Miss Willard was to be our pleader in the party conventions, and was to seek, petition in hand, a party name for the principle of prohibition. By a new construction, however, the popular petition from voters, became a memorial from women, but with that in her hand the president of the National Union asked Greenback, Democratic and Republican conventions "What embodiment of Prohibition principles" will you put in your platforms? The world knows the result.

At Pittsburgh alone, the seeker after that "best embodiment" found reply. The world knows again where these events carry us, with that resolution on record.

Even if "influence," was meant, how can any woman who voted for the resolution and understood it, support either of the other parties with their well defined attitude upon this question.

"Some women," felt the import of that resolution, and foresaw these evil days when those who had always praised, speak words of blame; and when some of our own furnish aid and comfort to the enemy.

Thus twice in a year, hundreds of the brightest women in the land, who have been among these things for a decade, have been told by one woman that they did not understand their own action.

Manifestly the "sin of presumption" has been committed, but not by the "other women."

WORK AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE OF THE NORTH.

Dear Union Signal:—After an absence of some weeks your paper made its welcome advent again, reminding me of the coming of a dear friend. I had been almost constantly engaged in temperance work for months, had even spoken at one place seven times in one day and night, and in some places twice a day, when I felt a failure of strength, and stopped awhile and got a little rest by the way. The work is beginning to gain some ground among the colored people, not as fast as I would desire, but a permanent work that will ground itself in the heart and conscience of a people who have behind them ages of poverty, ignorance and slavery must be looked upon not as the result of spasmodic excitement, but of patient continuance in earnest, Christly work. I am now trying to gather information for my annual report, but having written to different states and finding the information coming in somewhat slowly, permit me through these columns to ask the state superintendents of colored work, and all others interested in that department, to please send me as soon as possible any facts or items they can furnish me with in respect to the progress of temperance work among the colored people of the north. Yours in the cause of temperance and prohibition,

Frances E. W. Harper.

REMEMBER THE W. C. T. U. IN YOUR WILL.

Dear Union Signal:—With Mrs. Aldrich of Iowa, I too "have a concern." Living in the Quaker city of Philadelphia, I may be supposed to have come by it honestly. In reading over the wills and bequests of many of the good and respected citizens lately called away from us, I am impressed with the fact that while they have remembered the "Homes" and philanthropies of all kinds made necessary by a legalized liquor traffic, they have, one and all, forgotten the great philanthropy which in poverty and weakness is trying to grapple with the chief cause of the homelessness and misery of this country.

In making our wills and bequests, dear readers of The Union Signal, let us remember the great temperance movement. And let not the fact that we cannot give much deter us from giving what we can. Every little helps.

KEEP TRYING.

If boys should get discouraged
At lessons or at work,
And say, "There's no use trying,"
And all hard tasks should shirk,
And keep on shirking, shirking,
Till the boy became a man,
I wonder what the world would do
To carry out its plan?

The coward in the conflict
Gives up at first defeat;
If once repulsed, his courage
Lies shattered at his feet.
The brave heart wins the battle
Because through thick and thin,
He'll not give up as conquered—
He fights, and fights to win.

So, boys, don't get disheartened
Because at first you fail;
If you but keep on trying,
At last you will prevail;
Be stubborn against failure,
Try! Try! and try again;
The boys who've kept on trying
Have made the world's best men.

THE TWO PATHS.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

F. M. HOLMES.

CHAPTER VI.—HARRY MEETS AN OLD FRIEND.

For some time Harry's life went on in this way. Attentive to his duties he soon won the trust and esteem of his employers, and steadfast to his principles he gained before long the respect of his companions. Finding that he was resolute they gave up tempting and teasing him to break his abstinence pledge.

After business he always hastened home to his little brother, and notwithstanding that the child was very happy with kind old Mrs. Julian, he was always overjoyed to see Harry return. And what pleasant and cosy little teas they had together in that old back parlor!

But Harry had not lost his old love for study, and so not a day passed but he devoted some of his spare time, after Teddy had retired to rest, to learning.

The day that he received his first earnings will always remain a red-letter day in his memory, and who shall describe his joy when he took home that first month's money at night! Hitherto they had been living upon the proceeds of his prize at school, but the money was almost gone. He heard nothing of his old companions. It was like living in a new world now, and there was scarcely anything in this new life to remind him of that which he had left behind. Thus months rolled away.

Meanwhile Teddy was sent to a small school near, paid for of course from Harry's scanty earnings; but he learnt far more from his brother, who taught him frequently in the evening after his return from business, or in the evening after his return from business, or in the early summer mornings before he left for the city.

They saw but little of their uncle. Having procured a situation for his nephew, and found him a comfortable though poor lodging, that gentleman thought he had discharged his duty, particularly as he was not himself a wealthy man, and his family was large. In fact, his property and money were going, as his brother's (Harry's father) had gone. He was another victim to the drinking habits of society. Like many another, he too would shortly fall out of the ranks into a drunkard's grave and leave his family impoverished and needy. With the exception of Christmas day, and one or two other holidays in the course of the year, Harry and Teddy never went to their uncle's.

One evening, about two years after Harry had been in London, he was standing at an old bookstall, turning over the leaves of a volume he thought of purchasing, when he was suddenly startled by some one slapping him heartily on the back, and a voice he knew well exclaimed,—

"Why, Harry, my boy, how are you? What a happy chance that we have met!"

And turning hastily he saw Philip Gregory.

"Why, Philip, I am glad to see you! To think that we should meet like this after so long!"

"Yes, indeed. Well, now, come along and let us have a good talk, and linking his arm in Harry's the two friends walked on together. In a very few words Harry acquainted his companion with the principal events of his life since they had last met, and when he had finished Philip in his turn became equally communicative.

He had left school at the end of the same term that Harry had, but he did not refer to the flogging he had had, nor to any of the events that had taken place at school. His conversation, in fact, was full of his life in town.

His father had been able to procure a good situation for him, and from his dress and talk Harry could see that he had plenty of money. He was lodging in a far more expensive and fashionable quarter than the modest back street in Camden town where Harry abode, and when he entered the large house and saw the nicely-furnished rooms, he could not repress a feeling of envy.

But it was only momentary, and he quite forgot it in listening to his friend's lively conversation. It was, however, full of drinking, and smoking, music halls and casinos. Like many another boy, he thought it was manly to drink and smoke and talk loud of these and kindred things. It was quite clear that his and Harry's life were as wide apart as the poles!

As he was talking thus, his landlady knocked at the door, and said that Mr. Skipworth was waiting below to see Mr. Gregory.

"Skipworth!" cried Harry; "why I know him! He is in our office."

"Is he?" asked Philip. "Why, how nice to have such a jolly fellow for a companion!" But meantime his brow contracted, and he did not seem well pleased to see "such a jolly fellow" after all.

"Tell him I'll be down in a minute," he said to his landlady; and when she was gone he said to Harry, "Could you lend me a few shillings? The fact is I owe this fellow a little money, and I shall not get my salary until the end of the month, and the guv'nor won't stamp up just yet."

Harry was much surprised, and indeed annoyed, at the request, for it was clear that Philip had far more money than he had; but, nevertheless, the look of real distress on his friend's countenance caused him to open his purse.

"How much?" he asked.

"Well, could you make it a sov?"

A sovereign! Why, it was all poor Harry possessed until the first of next month. But, happily, his lodgings and Teddy's schooling were all paid up till then, and he had absolutely no arrears to meet.

"I—I cannot manage that," said he, diffidently; "you see I have Teddy to support."

"Oh! well, ten shillings then," and catching the money out of Harry's hand he flew down stairs.

He remained so long out of the room that Harry began to think that he had left the house, and when after a long lapse of time he returned it was easy to see from his excited appearance that he had been drinking; and Harry sighed as he thought that his carefully treasured half-sovereign had evidently been partly spent in wine.

It was with a sad heart he left his friend that evening and returned to his lodgings. It was evident that Philip had continued the path he had begun to tread even before he left school, and that the doctor's words and punishment had not been heeded.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—I have been to a convention, and while there I heard this little story in verse that I think will please you all very much. It shows that there are temperance horses as well as "other folks." A true and earnest temperance woman in the city of Rockford, Ill., Mrs. T. G. Backus, whom we all love dearly, owns and drives (very gently, as she does everything else) this famous horse, whose name is Dolly. Because her mistress is such a staunch friend and advocate of the "cause" Dolly soon became one also. She used to carry the temperance women on many errands of love and mercy and never seemed so proud as when she had in charge her dear mistress and that good friend of and ex-general in the Prevention Army, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. One day these ladies were out on a temperance mission as usual and drove up in front of the postoffice. Just as they did so a brewer's cart, full of beer kegs, was driven in front of them, when lo! gentle Dolly, who never before was known to do such a fractious thing, began to back in a most positive and decided manner away from the beer wagon. This dumb protest at once inspired Mrs. Henry, and straightway the following verses dropped from her ready pen:

There never beat a truer heart
Beneath a silken vest,
Than that which throbs with loyal strength
In Dolly's patient breast.
A brave, quick heart, with hidden fire
And pulses firm and strong,
Scorning no honest hitching post,
Waiting, if short or long;
So that the standing ground is sweet,
If it be not too near
Some other nag who stoops to draw
A filthy cart of beer.

Chorus.—Then she will not fail to "Back-us,"
Back us from the cart of beer;
Dolly, back us, back us steady,
Gently, Dolly, we are ready;
For we will not hitch you here,
Where you'll smell this filthy beer.

There's something due this faithful beast;
She bears her burdens well.
But all the merit of her deeds
My pen can never tell.
The union of the sisterhood
She serves by night and day;
With the "Crusade" she marches on,
And never calls for pay.
She never scorns the bit or rein,
But just one thing is clear,
She will not stand it to be hitched
Behind a cart of beer.

Chorus.—Then she will not fail to "Back-us,"
Back us from the cart of beer, etc.

Isn't it a pretty story? I think it would make a nice recitation for a Band of Hope concert. I wish if you know of any more temperance horses or dogs you would not fail to report them to your ever loving friend,

Captain Deborah.

205. Biblical Enigma.

I am composed of 30 letters.

My 1, 22, 12, 24, 8, 25, 21 a being whom Nebuchadnezzar saw in a vision.

My 2, 27, 17, 6, 10, 3, 26, 11, a slave converted to Christianity and the occasion of Paul's epistle to Philemon.

My 3, 14, 22, 7, 14, 8 the daughter of King Talmai, and mother of Absalom.

My 4, 23, 16, 29, 15, 10, 22 a fortress near Jerusalem, from which soldiers came to rescue Paul from the Jews.

My 5, 22, 12, 8, 14, 30 a Hebrew prophet under whose care Solomon was educated.

My 6, 29 king of Egypt, whose seal was found in Sennacherib's palace, recently disentombed at Nineveh.

My 7, 2, 15, 11, 16, 4, 27, 12, 28, 5, 20 the first Christian emperor of Rome, in 4th century.

My 8, 13, 21, 4, 18 a king of Tyre. Josephus relates that he and Solomon were wont to exchange enigmas with each other.

My 9, 14, 3, 25, 6, 17, 11 the city from which the Hebrews began their exodus from Egypt.

My 10, 6, 22, 28, 4, 8 pre-eminent among the Hebrew prophets and poets lived at Jerusalem.

My 11, 4, 18, 22, 9, 28, 14 a city built by Omri. Ahab built there a palace of ivory.

My 12, 20, 30 16 the dwelling of the Patriarchs.

My 13, 7, 29, 15, 10, 26, 3 city from which Paul fled, pursued and almost killed by the Jews.

My 14, 21, 16, 25, 18, 4, 11 a faithful minister who took the place of Titus at Crete.

My 15, 25, 8, 26, 11, 8, 12, 22, 5, name given by Hezekiah, to the brazen serpent.

My 16 28, 12, 26, 6 a converted Greek and companion of Paul in missionary work.

My 17, 22, 11, 16, 25, 9 a church festival named from a Saxon goddess.

My 18, 14, 5, 22, 17, 27 foster-brother of Herod and minister of Christ at Antioch.

My 19, 25, 9, 11, 28, 6 a Roman lady whom Paul called his beloved sister.

My 20, 15, 2, 24, 8 for whom the first mentioned city of the Bible was named.

My 21, 17, 19, 9, 4, 28, 3 another name found in Genesis, for the Anakin, or race of giants, to whom belonged Goliath.

My 22, 15, 5, 14 a young widow who became a prophetess and was 84 years old when she saw the Savior.

My 23, 20, 9, 3 emperor, who in A. D. 64 persecuted the Christians at Rome.

My 24, 8, 17, 4, 22, 9, 28, 18, meaning "fire-priests," occurs but once in the Bible.

My 25, 16, 8, 4, 30 the person to whom the 89th Psalm is inscribed.

My 26, 9 the birth-place of Abraham.

My 27, 13, 6, 21, 2, 24, 8 an Assyrian god, in whose temple Sennacherib was slain.

My 28, 12, 8, 22, 18, 4, 9 his posterity took charge of the tabernacle in the wilderness.

My 29, 11, 16, 21, 10, 24, 8 called by the Arabs and Persians, the "camel-bird."

My 30, 13, 7, 14, 5, 2, 21 one of the first seven deacons, appointed at Jerusalem.

My whole is the name of a large army now in the field. It is battling in a righteous cause. We have faith in its ultimate victory. H. E. R.

MOTHER—A MEMORIAL.

MRS. MARY A. LEAVITT.

Since all her inborn graces,
With charm of look and tone,
By gift of heav'n were dowered
With beauty not their own;
And since her life-long meekness
Forbids to speak her praise,
I praise the Power attuning
To harmony her days.

'Twere sin against love's bidding
If ne'er a song should bear
From out her life's full sweetness
One chord upon the air.
And grief, in its true nature,
Takes neither thought nor care
To hide how more than worthy
Its love and sorrow are.

Tho' deep beneath the surface
Grief's under-current lies,
Yet oft times will its billows
Impetuous swell and rise:
So swell these broken ripples
Of song,—because they must,
For her whose living presence
Has faded into dust.

'Mid falling rain and, tempest—
Amid the outer din,
To lull a crying infant
One sits and sings within.
My heart the child resembles;
Its grief is like the rain;
I sing amid the tempest
This lullaby to pain.

O heart! I'm weary singing
Thy bitter cry to smother!
O child, amid life's tempest
Still crying for thy mother!
Who comes not for thy calling,
Tho' calling o'er and o'er:
The wild winds only answer
Thy wailing—at the door.

But, child, an unseen halo
Encircles in its glow
The clouds that o'er thee gather,
The storms that 'round thee blow:
Her oft breathed prayers and blessings
Transfuse the very air;
Her silent, soft caresses
Still fold thee unaware.

Her life has not evanished,
Tho' its mortal sun has set;
The twilight is a-tremble
With her sweet influence yet.
O child! that sees no beauty
Save in the bygone day;
O heart! a-weary, waiting
Its unreturning ray!—
Her memory sets a rainbow
The mists are sown with promise
Adown the lonely years!

And, tho' each wind that wanders
Thro' memory's open door
Is plaintive with the echoes
Of days that are no more;
Yet child, so softly floating
That not a mist is stirred,
Comes th' whisper of a music
That is more felt than heard;—
Her life's low, tranquil cadence,
Serenely sweet and calm,
Falls over pain's wild discord
With melody and balm.

And, child, her prayer—her life-work
Is but the golden key
That sets ajar heaven's portal
For many more than thee:
Oh, many shall be singing
On th' shining hills of day
Who caught on earth heaven's keynote
From her life's harmony!

As from that life's pure influence
On earth new chords must flow,
So, in the choir celestial,
Full many a harp must go.
If pebble dropt in water
Sends (widening more and more)
A circle o'er the surface
That touches either shore;—

So must a holy current
Flow from her life of prayer;—
By tide of time not bounded
But measured only where Borne o'er the waves immortal
That wash the eternal shore,
The ripples of its blessing
Shall sweep forevermore!

A SUMMER MEMORY.—TEMPERANCE DAY AT CHAUTAUQUA.

MRS. E. A. MATHEWS.

Chautauqua, beautiful quiet home of thought and culture, haunt of the weary soul seeking rest from the teaching, the sewing, the cooking, the house keeping of the past year, the resort of old and young—the young for pleasure, the old for peaceful meditation and heavenly aspirations!

It is not for me to praise that which has been so aptly described by other and abler pens. But let me draw from memory's picture gallery a scene that I shall never forget, and one that I want you to share with me.

A forest, leafy and high, grassy paths, rustic seats, and beautiful cottages peeping through the green and bosky shrubs, wide avenues, cleared of all that could prevent a view, or obstruct the footsteps of the wanderers, and at the end of long vistas, far, far away, a glimpse of bright, dancing, glittering, ever-moving blue waves, the smiling morn of a summer day on Lake Chautauqua.

All this is early in the morning, while a serene quiet as yet broods over us, and a balmy air scented with the odors of wild fern, the wintergreen and the sassafras leaves which linger in tangled luxuriance in the deep ravines and high hills, that have as yet escaped the Destroyer's hand.

Ere long the scene changes—the bell, Chautauqua's famous bell, rings out over the lake, and now the paths are filled with busy people hurrying to and fro, for is not this the decennial day of the great W. C. T. U.?

A high, arching roof, a swelling amphitheatre, open sides, through which breezes blow, and sunshine gleams—tier after tier of faces, bright, smiling, earnest, and alert—while away down on the central point of observasion there is a plain platform with table and chairs all draped with bright-hued folds, flowers everywhere, and in front of it in pure white and purple blossoms, the monogram "F. W." Now sounds the organ rolling out the good old temperance song,

Oh, come resign your ruby wine,
Ye smiling sons and daughters.

There is a hush, a subdued rustle of expectation, and lo! the "Elect Lady" and her friends, a sisterhood of noble women, come gently in, and occupy the platform.

A silent moment, and then the air is rent with applause, and Chautauqua's White Lily Salute greets them from the thousands there assembled.

I shall not attempt to describe F. W., for it is a well known fact, that to worship at her shrine, is a part of the cultus of every woman of the W. C. T. U., but I will say like the Psalmist "If I prefer not her to all other (ladies, not joys, as in the original,) then may my right hand forget its cunning, etc."

With her were Mrs. Chapin, Mrs. Wells, Mrs. Lathrap, Mrs. McLaughlin, all great women, and many others, also great, but unknown to me. Of their words you have heard in other places, The Union Signal has repeated some of them to you. They spoke from the stand-point of the home, the cradle, the death-bed, the grave, and eternal destiny, from personal observation, and perhaps from personal experience. They spake in words that came burning from hearts blazing with the furnace heat of a great conviction, yet did their reason convince and their logic cut deep.

After two grand meetings, one in the morning, one in the afternoon, the Hotel Atheneum opened its parlors to the temperance folks, and Miss Willard held a royal reception. Crowds thronged every available nook and corner, and who so proud as the Illinois women, of the homage paid our own queen, well knowing that she would placidly accept it all, as a tribute to the cause, and forget her own existence, save as connected with it.

But hark! the bell rings out good night, the people slowly depart from the fairy like scene. Quiet settles down over Chautauqua, and temperance day is ended, its results to follow and develop all through the years to come, both in our own little lives, and in the larger destiny of our country.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Topic: THE TEMPLE BUILT.

Lesson Text: 1 Kings 6:1-14.

Golden Text: Mine house shall be called a house of prayer. Isaiah 56. 7.

Time. B. C. 1012.

Place. Mt. Moriah.

1. The first verse of the lesson brings to mind the long period of time during which the Most High had been worshipped, not in a suitable temple in which to enshrine His glory, but in the worn tabernacle of the pilgrimage, intended only as a temporary habitation. It brings close home to us the sad reason of this long delay. Wars and fighting, but above all the ever present idolatry and disobedience of the people which caused these wars, prevented not only the perfect conquest of the promised land, but the fit embodiment of God's presence in the land. National sin and disobedience always bring retribution to the offenders, and sorrow and deprivation to those who have not bowed the knee to Baal. A nation's growth and development is always retarded by its toleration of sin. Even its art and and architecture are not what they might be if a pure standard of morals were erected in the land.

2. In spite of all, notwithstanding the gross violation of divine commands, Israel's new temple was twice as large as its tabernacle. The divine choice of a peculiar people had not been honored by that people as it should have been, but its vitality and its unchanging force built up even this disobedient and gainsaying nation. It is well worth considering in this connection, the unchangeableness of God, amidst the varying conditions and effects of man's disobedience. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep," even though Israel revels in the indulgence of passion and self-will. God's loving purpose for His children, though thwarted and twisted by them still works out their redemption in so far as their opposing will permits. It is dreadful to set over against His unchangeable love and power, our ignorant, unloving souls, so puny and feeble, and yet so mighty, to resist Him.

3. "No workman's steel, no ponderous axes rung,
Like some tall palm, the noiseless fabric sprung."

As a tree grows, a flower opens, a season changes without the observation attracted by noisy methods, the temple grew to its fair proportions and majestic beauty. If the clang of iron tools and the breaking of stone had been a feature of its building, it would have seemed man's work. It seems a part of God's plan in building up His Kingdom that the instrumentalities most forceful shall be those that no man can claim—no human hand can wield, whose glorious workmanship shall be attributed to God alone. When slavery was abolished this was emphatically and observedly true. The abolitionists of forty years ago had compromised their principle by uniting with a party which set itself only for the defense and preservation of free territory. When that party came to its kingdom, it was with the avowed determination not to meddle with existing slavery. When its first president, Abraham Lincoln, was installed, he publicly gave out his purpose to save the Union with slavery in it if possible. It was God's purpose alone to abolish it, and His purpose was accomplished in such a way that no man could glory. It will doubtless be so in the prohibition of the Drink Traffic. "My glory will I not give to another."

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

WHAT IS THE HOME?

God's name for man's home was Paradise. In that beautiful garden wherein He placed man He expressed His thought for humanity. Home in that Divine thought was a place of beauty, its name being the synonym of untainted loveliness; a place of culture, a place of power and dominion, "over every living thing" says the sacred record; a place of protection, an angel guarding its gateway with his sword of flame.

This was God's plan, but evil entered Paradise and God's plan was marred. The evil of Paradise is the evil of the present. God's "Thou shalt not" now, as then, is answered by man's "I will." And out of this rebellion, this ancient treason, comes man through the ages. He is a homeless creature through sin, and when at last the promise was fulfilled, and the Deliverer came, He too was homeless. Born in a manger, He had not where to lay His head. He came to restore home to man, and man to his home on earth and his home in heaven. Ever since the struggle of the ages has been for this paradise, and today the battle rages most fiercely round the four walls of home.

What is this home? It is the unit of society, the unit of the state. A family of sons and daughters separate. Each son and daughter creates a new home adjoining the old one. This forms a neighborhood whose interests are those of its homes. Other families and their colonies occupy the surrounding territory, and the aggregation is commonly called a village or a city. Legislation is necessary. A schoolhouse must be established. Why? For the home. A highway is to be located from one point to another. It must accommodate the greatest number of homes, going past the mill, the post office, the school house and the church. Why? In order that the homes may be fed, enlightened, blessed.

Other communities join their concerns to this one, and a state is formed. Legislation in the state is necessary. Taxes are levied. Why? Because the homes must be protected by law and by the officers of the law. States confederate, and a nation is the result. Here, too, laws must be made. Foreign foes must be repelled. The defences of the nation must be strengthened. Forts are built, cannon forged and fleets sent to sea. Why? Because the homes of the nation are its most precious possession and must be protected.

The unit of government then is the home. For it men plow the fields, ply the loom, mine earth's treasures underground, sail the seas. For it railways are built, markets filled with produce, courts established, laws made, colleges endowed and church spires reared. It is the inspiration to all labor, the incentive to all high and noble enterprise. In its interest government exists, civilization civilizes, education educates and Christianity Christianizes. When anything less than this is true of any nation, that nation is in danger of being overthrown. When any country admits an enemy that triumphs over its homes, the foundation stones are moved out of their place. When it cherishes this internal foe, makes it a part of the national system, takes tribute from it and carries on a sort of partnership with it, not only the foundation but the fabric is weakened, and sooner or later must be destroyed. A spoiler which robs character of all that is human as well as all that is divine, making murderers out of men sworn to love, cherish and protect helpless womanhood and childhood, filling the almshouses with four-fifths of their inmates, the jails and prisons with nine-tenths of the criminals of the land; beggaring, crazing, killing—such a spoiler is the licensed liquor traffic of the nation. The home is at once its enemy and its prey. The saloon or the home must go,—which shall it be?

A PRETTY performance that deserves more publicity than it has received was the presentation of a gavel by the Y. W. C. T. Unions of Minnesota to the parent organization at the recent state meeting of the W. C. T. U. A turn-about is always fair play, and the speech which so pleasantly accompanied the gift is hereby appended as a specimen of high art in that direction:

In our youthful days our mothers furnished the rod of chastisement; your daughters, the daughters of the state return the rod, bound together with cords of sisterly love and union work for the Master. St. Paul sends the oak, which in all ages has been the object of veneration from the time of the "Oaks of Mamre" under which Abraham sat, down to that of the Greeks, by whom it was held sacred, of the Romans, who dedicated it to Jupiter, and of the Druids who worshipped under its shade.

The maple represents St. Cloud union which with fidelity and womanly reserve is still keeping the camp fires burning. The cherry from Winona represents education, typical of the good work the young ladies are doing there for the little girls in the industrial school. Minneapolis furnished walnut, which means strategy; they by strategy are trying to overthrow King Alcohol, by teaching kitchen garden and thus making the homes attractive. The gavel was made by Mr. Ernest Amyan, honorary member of the Minneapolis Y. W. C. T. U.

Mothers of the convention accept a word of advice from your daughters. Be loving, be kind, but—be-ware.

The president in accepting the gavel made apt allusion to the fact that the "rod of coercion" had never been used, since "love is the fulfilling of the law."

In labors most abundant and intelligent for the success of prohibition in government, is Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, national superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors, and her devices to interest and engage these servants of government in both army and navy, are so ingenious and insinuating that they can not fail to win votes. Her kind, motherly letters to the boys on sea and shore, her battle songs for the new war, her "Memorial Day" tract and her appeal "to those who go down to the sea in ships" will go straight to the hearts of those "mother's boys," and some day of quiet thoughtfulness will bring all their truths to bear on conscience and right action. When the mothers of these soldiers and sailors realize that another mother's labor is joined to their prayers, the love and gratitude of such will be Mrs. McClees' sweet compensation.

Another hint comes to us concerning the preparation of unfermented wine. A valued and reliable correspondent says that instead of using common cork stoppers she uses stoppers of rubber which need only to be crowded in firmly to make the sealing perfect. They cost a little more, but last for years. They can be obtained of a druggist, numbered and priced according to size. No. 3, which is one and one-fourth inches long, and slopes from three-fourths to one-half inches in diameter at top and bottom is the size most common. They do away with the wax, so unpleasant to handle, and fit bottles of various capacities. She also says that this preserved juice of the grape makes delicious sauce for sweet puddings, and is always ready at the busy dinner time. It is especially nice for suet and graham puddings. It is also excellent to add as a flavor to sweet sauces. A bottle opened in cold weather will keep several weeks if made sufficiently sweet at first. To those who believe in pies it is recommended for mince meat.

The new book of primary instruction in the physiological effects of alcohol, prepared for school use under Mrs. Hunt's special oversight, and largely by her own hand, is, we understand, nearly ready. As we have before stated, the entire work has been edited by Dr. Palmer, of Michigan University, a critical authority in scientific study, and is said by him to be free from the errors which have been noted and objected to in other books prepared for introduction in schools. A. S. Barnes & Co. are the publishers, and it will doubtless supply the existing want, which is strongly felt in all those states which have made scientific temperance instruction compulsory. Primary scientific literature has long been our need, in all states, for Bands of Hope and independent school exercises.

Mrs. J. R. Nichols desires that we remind those who will contribute articles to be sold for a Literature Fund, that they will be received by her at the national convention at St. Louis. She hopes that contributions will be sent by delegates as far as possible, in order to save express charges. Let all articles be addressed to Mrs. Nichols in care of the National W. C. T. U. convention and they will be sent to the church in which a room has been set apart for their reception and where they will be sold. There seems to be an understanding with some that articles are to be sent to New Orleans; so far, no such arrangement has been made, but everything will be disposed of at St. Louis and the money thus gained used to buy literature for gratuitous distribution at the New Orleans Exposition.

The good missionary to the lumbermen of northern Michigan, Rev. J. D. McLaulin, whose report of work done had a place in The Union Signal of a few weeks since, writes us in regard many inquiries which have reached him, by saying that all papers and packages designed for the woods should be addressed to him at Reed City. He further states that song books are especially acceptable, as the men like to sing, and that a consecrated gospel singer could do a vast amount of good in these regions, "so near and yet so far." Remember him with an abundance of good reading matter, as the winter camping draws near.

The freight agent of one of the largest eastern railways, in an Ohio town told Mr. and Mrs. Foster during their recent trip in that state that his chiefs had ordered that no more contracts be taken for shipping alcoholic liquors of any kind into Iowa, the contracts hitherto existing having proved impossible of execution, as the railways crossing Iowa would not receive or deliver such goods. Inter state commerce bids fair to be regulated to a large degree by Iowa's prohibitory law.

The Challenge is a lady's pretty gauntlet thrown down by the W. C. T. U. of Colorado to a gainsaying public. It is edited by Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford, whose name is not new to literary journalism and who sustains herself fully in this brave prohibition sheet.

One dear woman "I wot ot" has taken a book agency to get the wherewithal for expenses to the St. Louis convention. The Lord move the hearts of people to buy of her!

The other day at an Illinois convention (Mrs. Frances Jenkin's district), I saw the sixteen year old president, and fifteen year old secretary of a live, progressive W. C. T. U. Both are blooming and there is sure to be fruit.

At the same convention I learned of East Lynn, the banner W. C. T. U. of the state in one respect. In a population of 200, the W. C. T. U. raised $25 for state work.

A truly non-partisan woman is one who will not even say "tea party" in a W. C. T. U. meeting or convention. So says the beloved "H. W. S."

One "organ" of a philanthropic society has paid a dividend. The "Heathen Women's Friend" Mrs. Dr. W. F. Warren, editor, saved fourteen hundred dollars since its founding, over and above receipts and they have used the money to start a paper for women in India, so that the zenanas are to have light shining in on them from the "Friend" on this side the water that has shown such ability on the part of both editor and publisher. The Union Signal will be the next "paying organ."

At a recent temperance meeting in Kansas, the minister offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, thou knowest that the Democrats cannot be trusted on this temperance question, the Republicans have gone back on us, we cannot depend upon the Greenbackers, we have therefore nowhere to go but unto Thee. Thou canst help us! Bless the speaker who shall address us this evening, may she tell us the truth, and may we all do right and vote right, in Christ's name Amen.

Knowledge, the London journal of Richard A. Proctor, gives a new "wrinkle" in the dealings of the liquor men. A catalogue falling under the editor's notice has an article called "Spirit Flavors," one pound of which added to fifty gallons of plain spirit will make immediately a fine old brandy. Then there is "Wine Aroma," with which a customer's bottle of "rare old port," is made within two minutes from the time of the customers' order. Caveat emptor.

The New Orleans exposition is to have five stands for the sale of lager beer and five for cider. Simply this and nothing more.

A Council Bluffs woman, it is said, followed her husband to a saloon, and, just as he was in the act of taking a drink of whisky, she rushed up and snatched the glass out of his hand, and then ran for a justice office, where she deposited the glass and its contents before the astonished official. She swore out a warrant against the saloon keeper, and with the glass of liquor in her custody, thinks she has outwitted even Judge Hayes.

The W. C. T. U. of High Point, Guilford Co., N. C., have closed every saloon in the town. Good 'nough!

Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb says that in her recent trip "out west" (where is that)? she found a temperance "inn" well worth remembering. It was the "Fifth Avenue," of Pueblo, Colorado, and it made the W. C. T. U. delegates most welcome. "I'll make a note o' this," quoth I.

Miss Kimball, while summering on into autumn at her brother's, Dr. Carlton Kimball's, Woodford, Me., has the happiness of living under the St. John flag which floats proudly from the roof of this pleasant home.

I have heard many pleasant things of the "flag raising" exercises, with Mrs. Bent's cornet "on the spot" discoursing sweet and patriotic strains.

Which reminds me of something. The other day the Prohibition flag in a little village near by us, was so tossed and tangled by the wind, that of its names and inscription "For God and home and native land" only "God" and "St. John" were visible. A gentleman rather smilingly called attention to the combination. The W. C. T. U. representative replied, "That's all right, one, with God, is a majority, always."

I have had a letter. Here it is:

Dear Watcher on the Tower:—Do you ever see any conventions where the ladies come together to consider the work for a whole quarter and then, instead of taking hold and consulting and exchanging views on plans of work, ask in the preachers of the town who talk about everything except what we who want to work but don't know how, want to hear?

Why will our sisters not do the work the best they can and save us from the talks of these men who will not even "vote as they pray"? Tell us what you think of it.

Well, I scarcely know what to say about it. St. Paul does command women to ask their husbands at home, but I do not read that he advises bringing them into conventions.

An excellent article on "Woman and Intemperance" has come to my tower. It is one of the many interesting club articles that so often touch this vital question, and was written and read by Mrs. George Sherwood, of the Irving Club, Chicago. It is now in pamphlet form.

On Duty.

NEW YORK.

STATE CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of New York state held its annual convention, in the Park M. E. church, at Hornellsville, Sept. 24, 25 and 26. The executive committee met the 23d and 27th. The ladies of Hornellsville provided a royal entertainment. The church was most profusely trimmed. Back of the pulpit, upon purple ground, with gilt letters, was our talismanic motto "For God and home and native land." Upon shields of cut flowers were "W. C. T. U," and "Welcome," in immortelles. The platform was a perfect bower, and from the chandeliers beautiful hanging baskets were suspended. Charming music was furnished by the Prohibition glee club.

About one hundred and seventy-five delegates were present beside a large number of visitors. From 8:30 to 10 a. m., Mrs. Hannah W. Smith, national superintendent of evangelistic work, gave some of her matchless "Bible readings." The subjects selected, and the manner of their presentation, were most happy, and opened up a rich field of Christian experiences, as the conferences following indicated. The spirit of these meetings was a benediction of peace which rendered the business of the convention particularly harmonious.

Our beloved president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, presided with her usual dignity. The recommendations of her annual address, plainly indicate, that she has great confidence in her state, and faith in a great enlargement of the work which it may accomplish. The corresponding secretary reported a gain of one hundred and thirty-seven local unions, during the past year.

The treasurer's report was most gratifying. Our expenses have been great, but the treasury is not exhausted yet. The "silver and gold" are our Father's, and He can command it for His service.

The reports given by the various superintendents of departments were of a most encouraging character, showing a marked advance all along the lines.

The report of Miss E. W. Greenwood, superintendent of scientific instruction, was most enthusiastically received. This report was more than a report, more than an address, it was the history of one of the greatest triumphs ever achieved in this state, viz., the passage of a compulsory temperance education bill, by which every child is to have definite instruction upon the subject, and then be fortified against temptation. Text books have been put into many schools, and oral instruction is given in many others. The teachers are giving the subject much attention, preparatory to Jan. 1st., when the law must be enforced. The W. C. T. U's. have determined to look after it as the following resolution unanimously adopted indicates:

Resolved, That it is the advice of this convention that the unions of this state may carefully consider it their lawful duty to attend the annual school meetings and election of school officers.

Steele's Physiology and Hygiene was also endorsed. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, was present and gave valuable suggestions in regard to the enforcement of the law.

We have lost by death nineteen of our number, among them some of the pioneers in the work, but for them to die was gain.

The following resolution was offered and almost unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we express our endorsement of the action of our beloved national president, Miss Frances E. Willard, and of the national executive committee in regard to the Prohibition party, as being in harmony with the resolution passed in the national convention at Detroit.

A children's meeting, which was crowded out of the church by necessary business, was conducted in the park, immediately after the close of the public school. Miss Julia Colman, well known to the children as Aunt Julia, superintendent of department of temperance literature, addressed the children, recommending to each child a cider mill which would never make them drunk. This mill was their own teeth and mouth, which she heartily endorsed as the proper mill for crushing apples and extracting their juices a with most wholesome effects. Mrs. Pierson, of Auburn also addressed the children in fitting and memorable words.

A meeting for young ladies was conducted by Miss Emilie Underhill and Miss Graham of Brooklyn. Mrs. McLaughlin made a few remarks by request, also Mrs. H. W. Smith. A Y. L. C. T. U. was organized, with Miss Clara Alford as president and Miss Jennie Hubbard as secretary, with a goodly number of members.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt and Mrs. Emily McLaughlin addressed the evening audiences. With their strong vigorous thoughts and magnetic character, the audience were spell bound. Mrs. McLaughlin made a strong plea for prohibition; being fresh from Maine the spirit was upon her.

Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson was present and recited "A Legend of the Orient."

A nice little item not laid down in the program, was the presentation of a beautiful gold watch to our president, Mrs. Burt. Mrs. H. A. Perrigo, of Brockport, made a felicitious little speech, in behalf of the donors. For once, our dignified and composed president lost control, and we had to sing "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love," while she regained herself.

The officers for the present year are: Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president; Mrs. E. H. Griffith, corresponding secretary; Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, recording secretary; Mrs. E. M. J. Decker treasurer.

The convention was one of our very best, the past year has been a rich one, and we begin the new one with fresh hope and vigor.

G. M. Gardenier,
Rec. Sec. W. C. T. U. of N. Y.

WISCONSIN.

The state convention just held at Waukesha was the largest and most enthusiastic ever enjoyed by the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. The unusual attendance was mainly due to our beloved national president, who not only gave us one of her delightful lectures, but lent the inspiration of her presence to two important business sessions.

Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Willard's private secretary, addressed a meeting of young ladies and organized a large Y. W. C. T. U. at Waukesha. We trust this is the beginning of more active work in this department in Wisconsin.

The opening lecture was given by Prof. J. Adolph Schmitz, of Elgin, Ill. The only regret in the minds of his hearers was that so little time remained for practical suggestions concerning German work in our own state. Nothing more need be said of the excellence of his lecture than that it increased the desire of our workers to engage his services for their own localities and that the politicians earnestly protest against his coming before election.

The closing lecture by Mrs. Marion B. Baxter, of Charlotte, Michigan, with its vigor of thought and beauty of expression made a fitting close for our successful convention. Mrs. Baxter will give two weeks to our work early in the new year. Those who wish to avail themselves of Mrs. Baxter's aid should make immediate application at our headquarters.

A resolution endorsing the action of the national convention declaring allegiance to that party, "which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles," was remanded to the committee with instructions to make it more definite and emphatic, declaring unequivocally for St. John and Daniel. The resolution thus amended, after an animated discussion, was passed with two dissenting votes.

A resolution binding the women of the W. C. T. U. to withdraw all patronage from state fairs as long as intoxicating liquors are sold and games of chance allowed on the grounds, was passed unanimously and the corresponding secretary was instructed to prepare copies of this resolution to be sent to all meetings of ministerial bodies, requesting them to take similar action.

As the time for the election of officers approached all hoped that Mrs. Emma C. Bascom who had presided with such grace and dignity, would consent to a re-election, but as she positively declined, the then vexed question of the presidency was happily decided by the nomination of Miss Amy C. Kellogg, of Fort Atkinson, whose election was made unanimous. Mrs. Bascom was elected first vice president; Mrs. S. A. Rounds, of Eureka, second vice president; Miss Alura Collins, of Mackwanago, recording secretary; and Mrs. Hiram Johnson, 525 Langdon street, Madison, treasurer.

Words fail us to express the grateful appreciation of our women for the thoughtful hospitality of the ladies of Waukesha, the lunches served in the church by which so much invaluable time was saved for busy workers, the beautiful decorations, which made so attractive the place of meeting and the finely rendered music which very greatly enhanced the interest of all our public meetings.

Such a convention cannot fail to give great impetus to the work throughout the state, and we expect to reap even in the coming year an abundant harvest from the seed then sown.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. was held in Milford, Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 24 and 25. Twenty-three unions out of the sixty forming the state organization were represented. Sixty delegates and officers were present, and a great number of citizens and friends from surrounding towns attended the sessions.

At 10 a. m. Wednesday a devotional exercise of one-half hour was conducted by Mrs. S. A. Buzzell, of Nashua. At 10:30 the convention opened by singing "Rock of Ages," and reading of a psalm, which was followed by prayer by Mrs. C. E. Albee, and a brief address of welcome by the president, Mrs. N. H. Knox, of Lebanon.

Committees were appointed, the report of the treasurer read and accepted, after which came a discussion on the best method of raising funds to carry on the work, by Miss Holmes, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Knox, Mrs. Richardson and others. To raise the fee of membership, to establish a birthday thank offering, a gift of jewelry and other articles that might be spared, working for funds outside of the union, and to make it an incorporate body so as to receive bequests, were among the methods for raising funds suggested.

The afternoon prayer service was conducted by Mrs. McIntire, of Portsmouth, who read portions of the Scripture and offered prayer. The report of Mrs. Ashael Wallace, of Carrol county, was intensely interesting, showing what one brave, earnest woman can do. Eleven unions in that county had been established by her. She gave a graphic account of her work, and the success of her triumphal tour through the county was received with cheers.

The report on fermented wine in churches by Clara E. Rowell was particularly an able document, and was warmly commended by all present. She had received reports from the churches in fifty towns where there are local unions. She stated: "There are two hundred and two Protestant churches which partake of the Lord's supper; of these the following churches report the use of unfermented wine; the Advent, Christian, Free Will Baptist, Methodist and Universalist have a clean record in this respect, while the Baptist, Congregationalist and Union churches report one each using fermented wine, the Unitarian three, the Episcopal thirteen. Mrs. Richardson, of Amherst, now opened the question box, and among the questions discussed were the following: May the church consider the temperance work hers? Can one be a Christian and not endorse the work? In what way can we interest our churches to unite with us in the work? Will the churches follow if the pastors lead? Ought not total abstinence to be a requirement for church membership? What is the best plan of conducting a reading room? The discussion that followed on these and other questions was a lively one; though gentlemen entered into it by invitation, the ladies certainly carried off the palm. Their handling of the subject was excellent, their arguments were sharp and decisive.

The excellent address of welcome given Wednesday evening by Mrs. J. B. Melendy was ably responded to by Lucy J. Holmes of Derry. The annual address of the president, Mrs. Knox, of Lebanon, was an admirable one, and commanded the respectful attention of the audience. It was a faithful exposition of the union's work. Surely it seems to be the privilege of womanhood to spur to action the manhood of the nation.

The report of the corresponding secretary, Miss C. R. Wendell of Dover, followed, and was an able production. She gave the increase of local unions the past year as 29, 11 having been formed by one lady, and at a cost of only $12 to the union. The report of flower mission and prison and alms house work by Mrs. M. E. Partridge, of Claremont, was very entertaining.

Reports from the various superintendents of departments Thursday morning were not only interesting, but indicated interest and advance.

A children's meeting of great interest was held in the afternoon, addressed by Miss Kimball, of Chicago. Two hundred children marched in, led by Col. J. W. Crosby, with music and banners, and participated in the services. Upon the banners were the mottoes: "Tremble King Alcohol, we shall grow up!!!" and "No Tobacco for us." Six hundred were present at the service.

The following officers were elected: president, Mrs. N. H. Know, of Lebanon; recording secretary, Clara E. Rowell, of Franklin; corresponding secretary, Miss C. R. Wendell, of Dover; treasurer, Mrs. Geo. E. Jenks, of Concord.

Among the resolutions adopted we note the following:

Resolved, That we deprecate the common use of cider, wine and beer, and other alcoholic drinks as a medicine among professedly temperance people, and that as Christian women we throw the influence of our precept and example against such practice.

Resolved, That whereas we, as Christian women, consider that intemperance leads to the breaking of every command of the decalogue, and the subject of temperance has thus far been geared on, as it were, to the working machinery of the churches, and left to the option of the individual, hereafter it be considered an organic part of church work, and we add to our faith temperance, and total abstinence as essential to church membership as chastity, Sabbath observance or any other cardinal virtue.

Resolved, That we endorse the position of the president of the W. C. T. U., Frances E. Willard, in regard to the National Prohibition party, and that we acknowledge with gratitude the sympathy and recognition extended to us as an organization of temperance workers by the political Prohibition party of this nation, and that we are prayerfully looking forward to the time when believers in Prohibition, of all classes and parties shall become, not only theoretical but practical Prohibitionists, making our prohibitory law constitutional.

Miss Kimball addressed a large audience in the evening, speaking of the work of the W. C. T. U., and the reasons for it, and especially of her own branch of work in the Sabbath school department.

REPORT OF THE SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION OF GENESEE COUNTY.

The second annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Genesee county convened at Grand Blanc on the 9th of September, at 1:30 p. m., and continued through Wednesday evening.

Tuesday afternoon the opening half hour was devoted to prayer, praise and reading of scriptures, conducted by Mrs. Hurd, of Grand Blanc.

Reports were given from Flint, north side; Flint, south side; Fenton, Clio, Pine Run, and Grand Blanc; also a report by Mrs. H. N. Jennings, county vice president.

Questions for discussion: 1st. The best means for carrying on our work and awakening more interest therein. Responses by Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Mrs. Mulholland, Mrs. Beagle, Mrs. J. M. Davis, and Mrs. H. N. Jennings. 2nd. Question on tobacco. Responses by Mrs. Slook and Mrs. Johnson.

Tuesday evening the devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Mr. Hurd. Address of welcome, Mrs. Burrington, Grand Blanc. Response, Mrs. Mulholland, Clio. Poem, "A Plea for Prohibition, Mrs. M. E. Thompson, Fenton. Poem, "An Army of Sweepers," Mrs. Lamb, Holly. Singing and benediction.

Wednesday a. m. the devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Watson, Flint. Discussion, juvenile work, led by Mrs. Boden, Pine Run. Responses by Mrs. Curtis, Mrs. Hurd and Mrs. Lamb. Paper on jail work, Mrs. Holman, Flint, followed by much discussion as to our duty toward prisoners and vagrants.

Wednesday p. m. the devotional exercises were led by Mrs. C. H. Johnson. Paper by Mrs. M. G. Davis, Grand Blanc. Election of officers: Recording secretary, E. Lena Griswold, Pine Run; treasurer, Mrs. L. N. Beagle, Flint. Essay, "Three Words of Strength," Mrs. Thompson, Grand Blanc. Reading of poem, "Betsey Todd on Election Day," Mrs. Lamb. Select reading from Miss Willard's book on Woman and Temperance, by Mrs. Dr. Slaight.

Wednesday evening, address of district president, Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint. Brief remarks by the clergymen of Grand Blanc. Poem, "Truth," Mrs. M. E. Thompson, Fenton.

We can hardly be permitted to add to these lengthy minutes, yet we can not refrain from giving more than a passing notice to Mrs. Holman's charming paper on jail work, so full of good practical sense, the very embodiment of the maxim of "prevention being better than cure," and withal so permeated by the spirit of the Master who said, "I was a stranger and ye took me in; I was in prison and ye came unto me."

We can not speak in too grateful terms of the good people of Grand Blanc who welcomed us so cordially to their homes, and especially of the dear ladies on whom involved the heavier task of providing entertainment for us during the excessive heat and who were so untiring in their efforts to make our stay with them a most delightful one. E. Lena Griswold, Rec. Sec.

MINNESOTA.

Resolutions adopted by the state W. C. T. U. convention. The committee on resolutions submitted the following, which were adopted:

Resolved, That we extend to our beloved national president, Miss F. E. Willard, our appreciation of her wise counsel and words of encouragement; also to her efficient secretary, Miss A. Gordon, for her friendly aid in the young ladies' and childrens' work.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt thanks to the women of Winona, who have, with such cordial kindness, received us into their homes, and furnished such a pleasant reception on our arrival; also to the trustees of the Congregational church for the use of their beautiful and commodious building, and to the Congregational and Methodist choirs for the delightful music given us.

Resolved, That we indorse the policy of the W. C. T. U., as expressed in the following resolutions passed at Detroit, viz: "We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes; and, whereas the Prohibition party is the only one which has so declared itself, we now pledge our best efforts to promote the interests of this party and its candidates."

Resolved, That instead of circulating petitions and laying them before a legislature, a majority of whose members have been elected under a pledge to stand by the interests of the liquor dealers, we will make our petition to the individual voter to support only such candidates as have publicly avowed their intention to submit a constitutional amendment for the prohibition of the liquor traffic; and that we will present such voters pledges at all our public meetings and on other suitable occasions.

Resolved, That an amendment to the constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants; also an amendment enfranchising women, are the two crowning measures which will consummate the deliverance of the republic from the thralldom of the liquor traffic.

Resolved, That we recognize with gratitude the efforts of our state superintendent of public schools and his helpers in securing temperance instruction in our schools under existing laws, and that we pledge our co-operation and aid in this excellent work.

Resolved. That we will memorialize our state legislature, through our executive committee, for the enactment of a law making gambling and the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds where our state and county fairs are held, a penal offense.

Resolved, That we appreciate the action of the International Convention at Louisville, in their endorsement of the plan of putting a quarterly temperance lesson into the regular course of Sunday school studies.

The Y. W. C. T. U. held a very interesting session at the Congregational church. The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Miss Holbrook and Miss McIntyre. Miss Carrie Halbwok, of St. Paul, made an able report of the work of the St. Paul union. Miss Holstein gave an interesting report for the Winona Union, and Miss Carrie Nettleton presented an excellent report on the Minneapolis work.

Miss Bell Mathews, of Winona, gave a fine recitation, "Pledged with Wine," and Celia and Lena Ash, of Minneapolis, interested the audience with recitations and songs.

A collection was taken jointly for the union and for the aid of the library of the young ladies of Anoka, which was destroyed by the recent fire, but voted entire to Anoka by the Winona Y. W. C. T. U. Com.

PENNSYLVANIA.

I want to give you a note or two of work in this state. The W. C. T. U. of Beaver county had arranged for me to address the crowds upon their fair ground, Sept. 26, which appointment I filled. Oct. 2, I spoke on the Indiana county fair ground, by arrangement of the Indiana county W. C. T. U. It is wonderful to see how the W. C. T. Unions are influencing agricultural boards, and driving out liquor selling and gambling on the fair grounds. Some of them propose to attack horse racing, and compel it to, at least, become a minor part of the fairs instead of the chief feature of such displays. Indiana, Pa., is a strong Republican town, and the W. C. T. U. is making a brave fight against fearful odds. They engaged the court house some time since, for a lecture on Oct. 1, during my engagement there, but when the Republicans found they could have a prominent speaker of their party on that date, they demanded that the W. C. T. U. yield it to them. When the W. C. T. U. refused to do so, claiming that they had engaged both the court house and their speaker several weeks previous, the Republican committee threatened to put their speaker's stand and a brass band just outside the door, so that the W. C. T. U. speaker could not possibly be heard. Thus driven from their position they yielded and canceled their appointment. If the speaker had known the circumstances in time, she would have insisted on the engagement, and risked being heard. It is consoling under such circumstances to be constantly referred to the Republican party as the grand medium through which we are to secure prohibition.

It is marvelous how the votes for St. John and Daniel are increasing in this region. At Blairsville, where I had an appointment last night, a gentleman who is quietly registering the votes as he finds them, showed me the list, which has now increased from two last year that would have been cast for such a ticket, to more than sixty; many of them gained since Blaine started on his tour.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch of this morning says, "that though St. John may dye his moustache, he has at least not been guilty, so far, of going about attended by a brass band," and again, warns political leaders that the Prohibition vote is by no means decreasing because the Prohibition leaders are working in a quiet way, and not indulging in a any old time campaign "flum-a-diddles," to delude the people. J. R. Nichols.

Lock Haven.—As The Union Signal readers hear so little about us in this part of the world perhaps a notice of our work may not be uninteresting, for are not all these good temperance workers helping to "make a chain"?

Mrs. Mary B. Reese, of Ohio, paid a visit to our valley recently and did good work for God and home and native land. She visited Nittany, Sugar and Bald Eagle valleys in our county, holding meetings in several small towns and organizing unions in four towns; from the valleys she went to Renovo, an important railroad town on the P. and E. R. R., there she held a mass meeting, and also organized a very promising union; she then left our county and went on to Centre and Clearfield counties. Mrs. Reese has the power of drawing the hearts of the people to her and of awakening an interest in the temperance cause wherever she goes, and like Tennyson's brook I expect she will go on and on forever, for she is untiring and indefatigable. She goes always wherever she thinks she can work for the Master, goes without any fixed price or promise of remuneration, depending solely upon the collections to pay her traveling expenses. Collections in small places, you know, are like doubtful things "mighty uncertain," and so while this faithful servant is by no means laying up treasures on earth, she is certainly laying them up in heaven. Clinton county is waking up, and it is all owing to the untiring efforts of Mrs. Reese. In Lock Haven she has spoken to full houses, both in the Lutheran and Methodist churches. She has done a good work here; we have now eight unions in Clinton county which she has organized. She will always be welcomed in Clinton county.

Mrs. Dudley Blanchard, Pres. W. C. T. U.

ALONG THE LINE.

After an interval of several months I find myself for the third time in Clinton county, Pennsylvania, where until recently Lock Haven was the only auxilary. Now there are eight, four of which I organized in February, and the other four, Flemington, Logansville, Renovo and Beech Creek in the last few days. "Born full grown," a common experience in these wonderful days, ready for work, with an intelligent apprehension of its meaning, may be truthfully said of these unions, with practicality written upon all their efforts.

At Mill Hall, a picturesque mountain gap, where the lovely homes of Mr. Robert Mann and sons, representatives of a famous manufacturing family, are delicate bits of art upon the rugged mountain sides, we found Mrs. Jencks, president, and Mrs. Annie L. Mann, her indefatigable secretary, working wonders for "God and home and native land," doing more for fallen humanity, one of the brethren said, "than all the churches put together."

At Clintondale Miss Puella (a queen) Dornblaser (tower light) what a significant name for a W. C. T. U. president, has placed temperance text books in the hands of the public school teachers and obtained permission to have them used.

Band of Hope, Mackeyville, under the leadership of Miss Alma Maurer and Mrs. Mabel Dumm, is making a good record.

At Lock Haven, in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Blanchard, whose latch-string is always on the outside for weary workers, we spent a few delicious hours of rest and refreshing. The famous coffee room is a center of gospel temperance influence, and the favorite stopping place for men from all the country round. Leaving Logansville, a pleasant little mountain resort, at three a. m. with the mail carrier, we were amply repaid for loss of sleep, terrible jolting over rough roads, and a breakdown, by the companionship of a Christian driver, who talks temperance to all his passengers. A relative of Neal Dow was the other occupant of the stage, who made the twelve mile trip interesting with incidents gathered along prohibitory lines in the Pine Tree state.

At Salona we were privileged to meet with the Woman's Missionary Society of the Central Lutheran Synod of Pennsylvania and invited to answer the question, What part ought Christian women to take in public, religious services? Quickened by the fiery baptism of the crusade in my own Ohio, it was not difficult to answer that question, standing as we do upon the solid foundation of a blessed experience. At Renovo royal welcome and co-operation awaited us. Lutherans, Methodists and Presbyterians united in the services of Sabbath evening. The spacious church was packed and the lovely auxiliary seemed to form itself, so spontaneous and enthusiastic was the response. Rev. Mr. Stevens, a giant in reform as well as in height, with brother Cook rendered efficient service. Mrs. John P. Harris, of Bellefonte, president of county union, has done wonders for Center county with her noble band of Christian workers. Three local unions, a continuous flower mission, regular prison visitation, a public fountain costing several hundred dollars, with nine other auxiliaries, are only part of the work accomplished during a year and a half. Howard union has 29 young lady members. Only one fault could I find with these splendid societies, dearth of Union Signals in so many. Bellefonte subscribes for fourteen extra copies for ministers and others for the year, while nearly all members are subscribers.

I succeeded in scattering "our paper" right and left "along the line," never feeling satisfied with a new union unless one copy at least was subscribed for.

A few more days remain to us in which we hope to pre-empt one or more localities for W. C. T. U. occupancy, and then expect to enter a door, the open sesame of which is temperance conviction in the heart of another elect woman just being born into the kingdom and hitherto a stranger to its blessed privileges.

Mary Bynon Reese.

GEORGIA.

Although a communication from Georgia seldom appears in your columns, yet the cause of temperance is still dear to the hearts of those of our people who are determined the saloon must go.

Notwithstanding the motto of the conservative element is "Keep temperance out of politics," yet in several of the most important counties the issue before the people is not Democratic or Republican, but between legislative candidates pledged for or against local option.

The number of prohibition counties is steadily increasing. Not long ago Jackson county voted out liquor by six hundred and eighty-seven majority. It is safe to predict that much of the time of the next legislature, to convene in November, will be spent in the discussion of local temperance bills.

The state temperance convention organized "The State Temperance Association," and elected M. C. R. Pringle of Saundersville, president, and Mr. G. W. Whidby, of Atlanta, secretary. The executive committee is being carefully selected by Mr. Pringle.

The Good Templars have gone to work with renewed zeal, and, having a half dozen organizations in the field, are reporting many new lodges.

Since last November we of the W. C. T. U. have not had a state organizer. Our Mrs. McCalla, assisted by Rev. A. J. Hughes, organized a union at Ringgold, and Miss Kate Mallette of Eastern Georgia, organized several unions in Greene county. Having a desire to see face to face those with whom I had corresponded, and having the sanction of the proper authorities, I have spent my summer vacation in visiting our dear workers, and in organizing unions in places where the way seemed clear.

Gladly would I speak of the workers at Ringgold, Greshamville, Greensborough, Hamilton, Columbus and Chipley; but a detailed account of my visits to these places has already been published in some of the Georgia papers. Several features of the work struck me most forcibly and agreeably, i. e., the unselfih, untiring devotion of the "elect women," who know no such word as fail, the sympathy and support given by ministers and good men, the beautiful family feature in some of these unions where men, women and children are united; and the interest shown by the colored people. At Hamilton I spoke to the colored temperance society, now numbering 255, and listened to one of the best reports I ever heard from a man named Gideon. Col. Mobley, Miss Barnes, and others of the white union, were present.

At Chipley, with the endorsement of Mrs. Q. T. Purcell, president of the W. C. T. U., I organized a colored society of 32 members, their pastor, Rev. Peter Bryant being elected president. It grieved me to think I had not the means of supplying them with the much needed literature.

In addition to the unions already mentioned, I also visited Martin's chapel, a large country union near Lawrenceville, which is doing true reformatory work under the leadership of its president, Mrs. M. A. Sullivan, ably seconded by her husband, the pastor, and by Rev. Mr. Fowler.

In an adjoining county is Mt. Zion, a country union, whose self-sacrificing president, Mrs. E. V. Woodliff, walks a mile and a quarter to attend its meetings. The heroism of this gentle Christian woman is truly remarkable. At Toccoa I failed to organize, owing to the fact that the ladies had just joined a different temperance organization, but here, too, I presented our cause to both white and colored audiences.

On my homeward route I chanced to stop at Alta, and here in a most unexpected manner a union was formed under such circumstances that I felt God was in the matter. A chosen instrument in His hand is the gifted young president, Mrs. Inez Gibson.

I went next to Clarkesville and there, although a perfect stranger, such was the co-operation of the minister, the editor, and the ladies, that another union was soon added to the list, Mrs. M. A. Houston, president.

After a brief season of rest at home, I returned to Mt. Zion and Alta unions. At Norcrass, also on the Atlanta and Charlotte railroad, I have recently organized a union mainly through the assistance of Rev. Mr. Newton and Mrs. Mattie Brown. In Madison, the largest town between Atlanta and Augusta, a few godly women who have the cause at heart met me in the parlor of Mrs. A. S. Hough, and here we organized a W. C. T. U., with Mrs. Hough as president, and Mrs. Jeffie Fastern secretary. The latter is the granddaughter of the editor of the first temperance newspaper ever published in Georgia, a man who fifty years ago suffered for his adherence to temperance, missions, and an educated ministry.

ILLINOIS.

ELEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

"All Illi nois for God and temperance," is the motto of the Illinois W. C. T. U., and one looking upon the three hundred and forty delegates, representing a paid membership of 9,037 members, assembled in the Congregational church of Peoria, during Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week, would certainly have been convinced that the motto did not represent "words, idle words," merely, but that it had been wrought out in earnest effort.

The pulpit of the beautiful church, arranged most conveniently for convention as well as church purposes, presented the appearance of a choice conservatory, so profusely was it adorned with rare and beautiful plants and cut flowers. The great organ bore the appropriate and inspiring motto, in white letters on a crimson ground, "O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

That the women of Illinois mean to claim this promise, all the deliberations, all the plans for the work of the coming year, abundantly testified.

The day sessions were mainly occupied with reports of district presidents and superintendents of departments, all indicating marked progress. One hundred and six auxiliaries, twenty-one Y. W. C. T. Unions, and sixty Bands of Hope have been organized during the year. The total number of unions is 437, with a membership of over 9,000. The total number of Bands of Hope 200, with a membership of probably 8,000.

The report of Miss Helen L. Hood, chairman of committee on publication of temperance literature, was most gratifying. She says:

"We have printed 158 000 leaflets, numbering 1,551,000 pages, at a cost of $737.81. These leaflets are for the use of the workers. The department has also printed 5,000 state reports, 5,000 copies of Miss West's address, 5,000 decennial day programs and 13,000 crusade leaflets, making the grand total of literature published since last October 186,000 pamphlets, numbering 2,052,000 pages, at a cost of $1,112.31, and every dollar of this has been paid, and we owe no man anything.

"Over 138,000 of the leaflets have been scattered throughout the state. Every district convention has had large bundles, and county conventions, fairs, public meetings, and private individuals have been supplied. The value of the leaflets thus sent back into the state is fully $600.00.

"During the winter we placed the leaflets on sale and have found many states glad to purchase of us. Our receipts from sales have amounted to $126.92, which has gone toward paying the expenses of headquarters' postage. Almost all of the states and territories have bought of us. Ohio ordered 5,000 of The Story of a Great Conviction at one time, Missouri and Pennsylvania have also patronized us well. We thank God most heartily that this department of the W. C. T. U., has been so blessed."

The hours of devotional service, from eleven to twelve each day were truly memorable and blessed, their hallowed influences being felt during all the sessions. Of Thursday's service that good friend and brother-in-law of the W. C. T. U., Mr. A. G. Tyng, said: "I have been in many conventions, but never in one where the blessed influence of the Holy Spirit was more manifest than in this one during the hour which I have just enjoyed in this room."

As leaders there were Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, present for the first time in three years; Mrs. Louise S. Rounds and Mrs. T. B. Carse.

The work of the coming year is very fully and clearly stated in the resolutions, of which the full text is given, and in the summary of the plan of work adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

Once more renewing our allegiance to the Power which has thus far protected and guided us, the W. C. T. U. of Illinois affirms in this eleventh year of its existence as a state organization, the following principles upon which the work of the society is based:

1. Believing that total abstinence is the true foundation of all temperance reform we urge the persistent presentation of the total abstinence pledge in all our meetings, and the incuication of the scientific truths concerning total abstinence in all our communities and among all classes of society that intelligent conviction upon this subject may both underlie and determine individual action.

2. We believe the natural outcome of a thorough understanding and practice of total abstinence principles is the prohibition of all alcoholic beverages, since it cannot be wise, nor safe, nor right to manufacture and sell as a beverage that which it is unwise, and unsafe and wrong to use as a beverage.

3. Believing that intemperance is a sin against Divine law and the liquor traffic a crime against society, we cannot as Christian women, mothers, wives and sisters, look with anything but disfavor upon the licensing, at any price, of an evil which assails good citizenship, robs character of its divinest attributes, plunders the home and destroys the soul.

4. Since only those nations which honor God by obedience to His laws have the assurance of His blessing, we believe it to be the duty of all in authority to faithfully execute and enforce those statutes which aim to preserve the sanctity of the holy Sabbath, and we especially condemn, for the sake of our families, the opening of business houses, dram shops, beer gardens and the parade of military and national societies upon our streets on the day set apart by both Divine and civil law for devotion and rest. We advocate also the faithful enforcement of all the prohibitory provisions of the present dram shop law of our state, commending especially the faithful efforts of the state and local citizens leagues, praying that the time may soon come when it will not be necessary to call in an outside and extra-legal force to supply a lack of faithfulness and courage on the part of those elected to perform these duties.

5. We adhere to the opinion so firmly held by our state society for the past seven years and embodied by our state convention of one year ago in its plan of work, that since law is the expression of the average public sentiment, and but one-half of this average public sentiment has been expressed in law, we should, in the interest of securer homes, "sweeter manners, purer laws," work earnestly to place the ballot in the hands of woman.

6. Since childhood and youth have been made by Divine appointment the especial charge of woman, as mother and teacher, we accept the sacred trust committed to us, and by means of home influence and school instruction, kindergarten training, Bands of Hope and all other suitable and available agencies we will seek to awaken, cultivate and strengthen the temperance sentiment in the minds of children. Moreover, believing that the American system of public schools is the inevitable corollary of the Declaration of Independence, that the great work of the schools is to prepare for citizenship, and that intemperance is the great antagonist to good citizenship, we feel that public schools to which our children are committed through so long a period of youth, must teach temperance as a safeguard to our homes and to citizenship, or be derelict to their duty both to the children entrusted to them and to the state which supports them. We would also call attention to the fact that since through the excitement attending presidential campaigns the boys of our homes are in especial danger of being led astray we feel it to be our duty to be at this time, if possible, more untiring in our watchfulness and more importunate in our appeals to our Father in their behalf.

7. While we regard all our various forms of work as inspired by a love for the souls for whom Christ died, and evangelistic effort the door by which we have entered so many waiting fields, we believe that special efforts in the line of gospel temperance work should engage all our societies, and we pray for a large increase of this kind of labor during the coming year.

8. Since a large proportion of our foreign population is opposed to the doctrine of total abstinence and to the passage of laws prohibiting the liquor traffic, and since foreigners hold the balance of political power in our state and nation, influencing legislation, and to a large extent controling politics, we believe that special efforts should be made to secure from our temperance foreigners an open avowal of their adherence to the doctrines of total abstinence and prohibition; that greater efforts must be made among Germans, Irish, Scandinavians, French, Swiss, Poles, Bohemians and other nationalities, to disseminate temperance truths, by larger distribution of literature in their own language, and so far as possible from their own writers, co-operating in this effort with their religious teachers wherever possible. Fraternal relations should be sought for with them through their schools, religious, social literary and other societies, and in all ways should we seek to impress upon our foreign citizens that the attitude of our society toward them is kindly, reasonable and full of untiring patience and labor.

9. We recognize with deep thankfulness the wise guidance of our state society by its president during the past two years and believe that our present prosperity and advanced position in all lines of work is largely due to her unselfish labors and her missionary toils. Especially do we believe that the financial system now in operation in our state, and upon which our entire work so largely depends, is one of sound and practical wisdom, and we reach this conclusion after one year's trial through the reports of a majority of district presidents who have proved its efficiency in their respective localities.

10. We rejoice also in the work of our literature department, its two million and a half of printed pages published for use, and circulation in our own state, and would here reaffirm our belief that by the wise distribution of a sound temperance literature adapted to home needs, by a large circulation of our national organ, The Union Signal, and by all means for engaging the public eye as well as well as the public ear, we shall educate and uplift public sentiment to the level of total abstinence from the use and entire prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating drinks.

11. While we recognize the fact that our organization is in no sense a political one, its members having no voice in the affairs of the nation, we would as a state society, and without in any degree disturbing local interests and harmony by such expression, heartily endorse the resolution of the National W. C. T. U., passed at the Detroit convention in November last, in regard to the attitude the temperance women of this nation should take in reference to political parties, such resolution reading: "We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes."

Resolutions five and eleven were adopted by rising vote, the former with one dissenting voice, the latter with none.

PLAN OF WORK FOR 1884–85.

The recommendations of committee on plan of work as adopted by the convention are given in the following synopsis.

Organization. Finance.—Sending of all dues to district treasurers, all other monies to financial secretaries; a record by the state treasurer of receipts and expenditures by districts, leaving the itemized reports of each district to the district treasurer; the closing of state treasurer's books by Oct. 1st, that a printed report may be issued before state meeting.

County Organization.—The benefit of county organnization was cordially recognized, its specific form left to the discretion of the several districts, a list of county presidents to be included in state directory.

Preventive. Kindergarten Department.—A new department created for the organization of free kindergartens in all suitable localities.

Band of Hope.—Organization in every union, adoption of the "Band of Hope Manual" published by The Union Signal, with the constitution there given, and the publication of all Bands with names of superintendents in the annual report.

Sunday School Work.—Persistent effort recommended for the introduction of quarterly temperance lessons.

Scientific Temperance Instruction.—A general educational campaign in the interest of the bill to be introduced at the opening of the state legislature.

Hygiene.—Regular course of study in clubs, institutes, Normal and public schools, a state Normal class and mothers' meetings.

Heredity.—Individual support of medical journal proposed by national and state superintendent and thorough study of hereditary tendencies according to plans suggested in Dr. Burnett's leaflet on Heredity.

Educational. Temperance Literature.—A liberal appropriation for keeping up a full line of the worker's leaflets published last year; the publication of a peoples' series suitable for the temperance education of all classes, the securing of copyrights that all publications may be kept as exclusive property, and to this end the incorporation of the Ill. W. C. T. U.

Press Work.—The securing and filling of a column in all local newspapers regularly, and subscribing for the National Bulletin, issued by Mrs. Esther T. Housh, Brattleboro, Vt.

Influencing Educational Medical and other Conventions.—The ootaining by the superintendents of a list of all meetings to be held by these bodies, that they may be visited by committees who shall present the work of the W. C. T. U.

County Fairs.—Early and earnest effort to prevent the offering of premiums on domestic wines, and urging upon the attention of the officers, the state law forbidding licensing the sale of alcoholic liquors within two miles of agricultural fairs.

Foreign Work.—A suitable appropriation enabling the superintendent to prosecute the work in all its branches successfully.

Evangelistic, Camp and Grove Meetings.—A more earnest prosecution of this department along the lines pursued last year; the holding of basket meetings where camp-grounds cannot be secured; a circular from the superintendent giving the plan of work, hints and suggestions. All meetings to be under the exclusive management of the W. C. T. U.

Prison and Jail Work.—A movement having for its object the appointment of women on the state board of charities, and as physicians in the women's wards of state hospitals and insane asylums, in addition to the usual work in this department.

Flower Mission.—The observance of prison day on the Sabbath, as that is the only day when meetings with the prisoners can be held.

Legislative. Franchise.—Effort to secure the submission of an amendment extending the elective franchise to women, and in case this should not be adopted, effort to secure municipal suffrage by direct vote of the legislature.

Scientific Temperance Instruction.—Introduction of bill making instruction regarding effects of stimulants and narcotics compulsory in all schools supported by public money.

Also establishment of legislative headquarters at Springfield during session of legislature wtih adequate appropriation therefor.

The evening sessions drew crowded houses and their exercises were of an unusually high order. Of the opening address given on Tuesday evening by the woman whom Illinois delights to honor, Frances E. Willard, the following is a brief summary:

"The human being is like this organ back of me. There are many pipes and stops. The sort of music depends upon the sort of player. Skillful hands can bring forth the utmost harmony. We are assembled here under the auspices of a society which strikes the notes of harmony. We are the successors of the true crusaders of the twelfth century. Ours is a grand movement to enthrone the living Lord. The twelfth century would have spurned a crusade with this object in view; but in the nineteenth century there is a purer vision." She then spoke of the enlightenment of the present age, instancing as indications of progress the action of the late national teachers' association, where 600 teachers pledged their aid in instructing the 10,000,000 children under them, and that of the Inter-National Sunday School Convention at Louisville.

"We must fight the liquor dealers with their own weapons. They are brewing beer; we are brewing public sentiment. They are rectifying spirits; we are rectifying the spirit.

"I will speak of some of the evolutions: First, there should be no sectarianism in our work, but all sects should be united in its advancement. Second, there should be no sex in citizenship. Third, there should be no sectionalism in politics. In this grand cause all should be united and the Mason and Dixon line forgotten. Lay aside old issues.

"We are not partisan. We belong to the party that promises us the best embodiment of prohibition principles. We handed our memorial to our four national conventions, but in only one case was it noticed. We have a tariff for the protection of everything but the protection of the home. We lend our aid to those that give us the most encouragement. The fanaticisms of yesterday are the reforms of today and the victories of tomorrow. With charity towards all and malice toward none, we move forward."

Wednesday evening Mr. Wm. Reynolds bade the convention so hearty welcome that Mrs. Mary B. Willard was moved to say in response that she was sure even 300 delegates might find not only house room but heart room for many more than four days in Peoria. Miss Lottie Hunter, of Monmouth, a little miss of only eleven years, gave a recitation entitled "A Woman's Hand" very finely.

The annual address of the president, Miss Mary Allen West, was one of her finest efforts.

After outlining the progress of the W. C. T. U., and especially the power of women in past ages, Miss West said, "I am proud that I have 8,000 woman at my back. In one hour I cannot tell what these 8,000 have done. Such great things have never before been realized. An organization not founded upon the solid rock of Jesus Christ would have been shattered to pieces long ago. But here we stand, each doing what she thinks best." She then showed how close the contest was in congress and how the brewers fought them. Named the states in which prohibition is in force and its effects. The remarkable progress in this direction among the Roman Catholics was also delineated, and the great work going on in the various parts of the country.

Her arguments, deduced from the experience of the past year, in favor of giving the ballot to women were clear, logical and convincing. Her recommendations for the work of the coming year were such as would be expected from the "assorted brain" of Illinois' president. The address will be printed in pamphlet form for general distribution.

Thursday evening a warm welcome was given to Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster, who spoke in her usual forcible and pleasing manner on "The Philosophy of Total Abstinence."

Introducing her subject with a very vivid description of Correggio's Holy Family and the wonderful lighting of the picture, Mrs. Foster went on to show that the light of the world, as of the picture, is Jesus Christ. It is the light that was in the Child that has enabled men to fathom the depth of the outer world. Only those who are acquainted with the light can understand the law of Jesus, and having found it only those acquainted can keep it. This is the platform upon which we stand. The dignity of a law depends upon the maker.

She explained the seeming contradictions of the word "wine" in the Bible. When the Bible was written there was no such article as distilled liquors, so its injunctions against intoxicants applies to wine. She then delineated some of the terrible effects of their use.

In eloquent tones she pictured the wonderful powers of this thing called the brain, and showed how it is affected by alcohol. In most pathetic language she showed it was no weak act to be affected by the pleadings of the sufferers, and to do something in their behalf. The effect of this traffic on the home was shown in undeniable terms. Her opinion on the woman suffrage question was clearly asserted. She told how universal suffrage worked in Washington. Three hundred gamblers left in three weeks on this account. In speaking of the work done there by the women of the churches, Mrs. Foster made a strong argument in favor of woman's suffrage. She said, "I want the church to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. I think this the strongest possible argument in favor of giving the ballot to woman. Legal prohibition means more than simply the legislative action, it shows the teachings of these many years. We are pushing you men to the wall but when you just have to choose you'll stand on the side of the woman in preference to the saloon keepers. You know God's law but you won't keep it unless Christ is in your heart. Gentlemen, you may know that prohibition is right yet you don't work for it, because Christ is not in your soul."

The usual resolutions of thanks took the form of a "Letter to Peoria" which was adopted by rising vote. The closing hour of the convention was devoted to a memorial service conducted by Miss West, and a consecration service, led by Mrs. E. G. Hibben. The parting song, "Blest be the tie that binds," voiced anew the deep realization of the strength and blessedness of the tie binding so firmly the hearts of all W. C. T. U. women. SEC.

—Mr. Thomas Murphy, an earnest champion of the W. C. T. U., is ready to fill engagements.

—Miss Hood desires to say in response to numerous and urgent inquiries that the BAND OF HOPE MANUAL, published by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association is now ready, that she "can recommend it unhesitatingly as just what Band of Hope workers have so long and earnestly desired. Do not fail to order a supply at once." See publisher's department for full description and price.

—Two invaluable campaign documents just from the press, are "The National Prohibition Party, or St. John vs. the Demi-John," and "The Governmental Liquor Traffic." Unions will find both of great service, and it is most desirable that they be circulated freely. Price of the former; 50c per hundred; of the latter, 40c per hundred. Address THE UNION SIGNAL.

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

Signal Notes.

The workingmen of Maryland are enthusiastic for the Prohibition ticket.

The Portland (Oregon) News estimates the Prohibition vote in that city at 1,000 this year.

The Prohibitionists of Montour county, Pa., met at the court house in Danville on Saturday last and nominated a full county ticket.

All the world knows that Earl Dufferin has been appointed Viceroy of India, but it may be news to some to hear that the distinguished diplomatist is a total abstainer.

George Hawkins Williams, a Democrat and late president of the Maryland state senate, one of, if not the leading lawyer of the state and a millionaire, has pronounced boldly for St. John and Daniel.

Alvah George, of St. Albans, Vt., flung out the first flag for St. John and Daniel in the state, and to the surprise of the Republicans there was a general "rally" 'round that flag."

A private letter from Lewisburg, Pa., says they have a Prohibition club at that place numbering sixty members with new additions daily. Some of the most influential men of the place are active members.

At the prohibitory state convention of R. I., twenty-two towns were represented. Hon. Sidney Dean presided. The resolutions adopted approve the action of the National Prohibition convention, and pledge an earnest and hearty support to the national ticket.

According to statistics compiled by as New York charity association it appear that Third avenue has 379 liquor shop with bars—exclusive of restaurants and grocery stores—where liquor or beer is sold. Not counting the vacant or partly vacant blocks, it has the equivalent of 223 full-built blocks, giving five saloons to every three. Twenty-one per cent. of all the occupied house lots have liquor shops on them. The estimated annual sales of Third avenue liquor shops is $3,750,000.

"But, doctor I must have some kind of a stimulant," cried the invalid, earnestly; "I am cold, and it warms me." "Precisely," came the doctor's crusty answer. "See here this stick is cold"—beside the hearth, and tossing it into the fire; "now it is warm; but is the stick benefited?" The sick man watched; the wood first sent out little puffs of smoke, and then burst into flame, and replied: "Of course not, it is burning itself?" "And so are you when you warm yourself with alcohol; you are literally burning up the delicate tissues of your stomach and brain.—Home Protector.

"Sweet cider will never hurt me or any of my boys," said a Christian man, the father of seven sons, when warned of the folly of having cider made on his farm and drank in his family. One by one the boys as they went out into the world were easily led into the habit of taking strong drinks, to gratify the alcoholic appetite the cider had created. Every one died a drunkard. When the youngest of the family and the last remaining one, crawled home to his mother to die, he said pitifully, "If it had not been for father's cider press we should never have learned to drink."

The prophets who foretold the "ruin" of Kansas as a result of prohibition are not justified by the facts. The returns of the county assessors, received and audited at the state capital, July 14, show a large increase of taxable property the past year. In four items alone, viz. taxable land, town lots, personal property and railroads there is an aggregate increase of $34 093,-293. Nearly 2,000,000 acres of taxed land have been added in one year. Further "the increase is over sixteen per cent. in taxables in one year, which is five times greater than the average yearly increase of the country in wealth." Query: How long can any state keep its head above water when its affairs are in such a hopelessly bankrupt condition?

There are fifty thousand voters in St. Louis, who, disgusted by the infamies of local politics, refuse to exercise their right of suffrage. Judge Breckinrige, a Christian gentlemen, interested as a lawyer in the election of a judge of the court of appeals, presided over the Republican judicial convention which nominated Judge Rombauer, the other day, and was constrained in an apologetic way, to observe that while he cast his vote at the polls for his party, he had hitherto refrained from attending the primaries. The foul and rotten primaries held in the saloons of the city, and attended by the hoodlums wihout regard to party, are unfit for decent men to frequent.

The Prohibition Songster.
The National Temperance Society has just issued a new collection of words and music for Prohibition Gatherings, Glee Clubs, Camp Meetings, etc., with ringing Prohibition Songs and Music adapted to the Campaign just opening before us. It contains among other good things: "The River of Prohibition," by Edward Carswell; "Vote It Out," by Dwight Williams; "The World is moving on," by Robert Lowry; "There is a Curse in the Land," by Rev. C. H. Mead; "Which Way is Your Musket a-Pintin' To-day?" by Jonn W. Hutchinson; "The Coming Ship of State," "Rally for the Right," "We Mean to Vote as we Pray," "Song of a Thousand Years," "Save the Boy," "Ring it Out," etc., making 64 pages. Price 15c.; $1 50 per dozen; $12 per hundred.

Miscellaneous Selections.

"INVARIABLY."—The Duke of Wellington, on being asked by Lord Wharncliff, "Is drunkenness, in your opinion, the great parent of all crime in the British army?" replied, "Invariably."—Parliamentary Commission.

THE writer of a letter from Montreal, in the Manchester Examiner and Times, says: Montreal is one of the most beautiful of American cites, but its inhabitants do not aim at beauty alone. An American visitor was lately being taken round the city; on his guide taking him to a block of buildings consisting of a school, a church and a brewery, "Well," he said, "I guess you have got here education, salvation and damnation all together."

IF figures tell the truth, what stronger argument do we need for total abstinence than the following table prepared and published by Mr. Nelson, a distinguished English insurance man?

A total abstainer 20 years old has the chance of living until he is 64.

A total abstainer 30 years old has the chance of living until he is 66⅛.

A total abstainer 40 years old has the chance of living until he is 68¾.

A moderate drinker 20 years old has a chance of living until he is 35½.

A moderate drinker 30 years old has a chance of living until he is 44¾.

A moderate drinker 40 years old has a chance of living until he is 51⅝.

THE New York Sun publishes an exposition of chemical wine manufactured in New York city which will not be likely to greatly enhance the sense of security on the part of the wine-drinkers against the perils of adulteration. It appears that there exists there a school for giving the needed instruction for the compounding of chemical imitation liquors of various drinks. On the wall the reporter found posted this placard: "In order to meet a long-needed necessity we have established a school the object of which will be to instruct pupils in the art of manufacturing wines, liquors, brandies, etc., of all kinds, by chemical process at little cost." It was admitted at this school that "wines and liquors are made up in hundreds of places in this city," and that "the Rhine wines that we get from France and Germany are in the main chemical wines." The reporter asked: "What does it cost you to make good chemical Rhine wine?" The answer was: "We can make it for from twelve to fourteen cents a gallon, inclusive of labor. Claret can be manufactured at the same figures, and other wines and liquors proportionately low." These significant figures show, in the light of high prices at which wines and other liquors are retailed to consumers, the enormous profits realized in the liquor business.

IN the Examiner last week "Tontate" tells a good story, headed a "New Political Argument:" "May I tell a story the scene of which was in the 'mountain region' of Kentucky. A generation ago Mrs. Grimes kept a hotel at Olympia Springs. She was a woman of muscle, of business capacity, of courage and energy. She was respected and feared in all that section. A gentleman friend of hers had sent her a live bear from Arkansas, which she kept chained in the back yard, and it grew to be very large. She was an ardent and outspoken Whig, and a devoted worshiper of Henry Clay. On one occasion the Democrats had a meeting at the Springs in the interest of their candidate for Congress, Judge French. The speakers roundly denounced the Whig party, and this disgusted Mrs. Grimes a good deal; and when they assailed the character and public acts of Henry Clay, that was more than she could stand. She made up her mind that this thing had to stop, but what could she do? "When a woman will, she will, you may depend on't," and Mrs. Grimes was not a woman to be daunted by difficulties. She went into the yard, unchained the bear and turned it loose upon the Democrats. Such a scampering, running and rapid mounting of horses were seldom seen, and in ten minutes the meeting had vanished. This incident greatly helped the Whigs in the campaign."

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 41. CHICAGO, OCTOBER 23, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

"Now vice protects virtue," is the sententious summing up of the high license advantage by the Walla Walla Daily Union. The legitimate deduction from such nonsense is, The more vice, the surer virtue.

Do NOT forget that October 29 is set apart by the undoubted friends of the temperance cause as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer. We can observe it in our homes, in business houses and offices; we can remember it in the counting room and in the nursery. It is the first appeal of its kind known in our history. It simply calls to the prayer—May God speed and defend the right!

THE Chicago Tribune will sometime have to settle matters of dispute between itself and the saloonists in prohibition states. The Tribune says, "Prohibition does not prohibit in a single state." The dram sellers of Davenport, Iowa, says "Hundreds of men and women have been fined and imprisoned, property to the amount of $8,000,000 destroyed hundreds of worthy and industrious citizens robbed without mercy, and scores of business houses made vacant."

THE third annual convention of the church temperance society met in New York city on Monday and Tuesday of this week. Thirty-one dioceses in the United States have officially endorsed the society, and it is in a fair way to soon cover the entire territory occupied by the Episcopal church in America. Its policy is conservative, but its attitude is not unfriendly we think, to more progressive societies, and its efforts in behalf of a sober nation are certainly not unappreciated by these. Mr. Graham, the secretary and organizer of the society is thoroughly furnished to the good work before him.

AT the recent licensing sessions of the court in Edinboro, a new presence was observed. It was that of women from Cowgate, the Pleasance and other low streets where saloons do most abound, and whose appeal was "We wish to be sober, we know that drink is our ruin, but we are weak mortals, our children are easily tempted, and we cannot resist the temptation scattered in our way at every turn." Local option, when it has won its way through the unwilling parliament, will give some of these women, and hosts of their better conditioned sisters, a vote that will be more effective than the mute appeal of their unusual presence, or the word spoken with tears.

THE Advance of Chicago, (Rev. Robert West' editor), the leading journal of the Congregational denomination in two-thirds of the United States, presents a strong contrast to some fearful, halting church organs in the present political crisis. It never cringes nor fawns, but now when most a bugle blast is needed to wake up sleeping consciences, and to make the deaf hear, its clarion note rings out over the land—"Put none but pure and honest men on guard over the nation today." Following its own advice it comes squarely out for the Prohibition ticket. Its non-sectional editor, despite his name, preaches and lectures and writes for a solid country, and against a solid north and solid south.

O, THAT some political economist would arise to give us the real economic relation of the $900,000,000, expended each year for drink in the United States, to the business interests of the country. Allow one million to the government partner in the manufacture of the drink, and to the farmers who furnish the grain out of which it is made, and you have the sum $800,000,000 which is distributed as profits among 5,000 distillers, 2,500 brewers, 1,500 rectifiers, and 4,500 wholesale liquor dealers and 180,000 saloon keepers—an army of less than 200,000 men; a sum two-thirds as large as the value of the entire cereal crop of the country which feeds our own and other nations, and whose price is divided among not less than a million and a half of men Judge ye, anti-monopolists, which is for the greatest good of the greatest number.

SOME close questions are pushed upon citizens in these days. The man who would make his vote count for absolute rightness and righteousness, is confronted with this query from his more practical (?) brother: Why give your ballot for the unattainable and so defeat the least of two evils which are surely upon us? The conscientious citizen if he chooses to pass unnoticed the very doubtful comparative merits (?) of the two evils, may well answer on this wise: The good I seek is not unattainable. It is only attainable however by just such a course as I am taking. I am not responsible for the lack of courage and principle which underlies your action. I am not accountable for your deflection from absolute right. If there is any such thing as expression of choice by a ballot, my vote will go straight as an arrow to its mark to the end I seek, prohibition of the liquor traffic. No jugglery of politics or morals can make anything of it but the legitimate expression of a freeman's will in regard to the greatest evil that afflicts our country. With my convictions and principles, to cast it other than for the prohibition movement, would be throwing away, not the vote merely, but the occasion, the responsibility, and the satisfaction of doing right.

GOVERNOR ST. JOHN'S reply to the dimly veiled appeal of the Republican party that he shall withdraw from the field, is one which shall reassure the hearts of those who "bide in the home," and who mourn for the beloveds slain by drink, and the dear ones worse than slain. Let us thank God that there is a candidate who dares, who does not falter, and who says that he will not withdraw in such brave and steadfast words as these:

> I shall neither withdraw from the canvass nor assume a neutral position, but, with God's help, I shall continue this warfare on the liquor traffic as long as I live and the flag of our country waves its protecting folds over a legalized dram shop. And while a vote for any candidate, simply as such, may be lost, a vote for principle is never thrown away. I, therefore, appeal to all lovers of God and country and home to burst asunder the party shackles that have bound them, and, rising above mere partisan considerations, cast their ballots for principle, leaving to God the results.

THE New York State Temperance Assembly is the latest temperance organization of which we have heard. In fact it is scarcely a month old. It is an infant in arms—the arms of the Republican party. Its first feeble cry was a wail, not against intemperance, but against prohibition by national political measures. The first demand of its little life was not for sustenance, but for the withdrawal of all men and means by which the logical outcome of temperance work for the last fifty years may be secured. In order to make its cry heard it was obliged to leave its cradle and seek the aid of stronger voices than its own. These were not wanting, and its piteous appeal rang out over the nation some two weeks ago, begging Governor John P. St. John to retire from the presidential contest. Like all infants, however, it cried for the unattainable moon. It put its tiny fingers in the flame of a torch that is to light beacon fires on every hill side in the nation. It will know better hereafter, if it ever knows anything, and this lesson from experience will be dear to its future, if it is to have any. The Rev. Dr. Hatfield, who lent his resonant though not stentorian voice to the cry, confesses that the waif which beguiled him into co-operation is utterly unknown to him, and that he only aided its appeal because of a broad and intense humanitarianism. Even its progenitors seem to have deserted it, and instead of a family record there remains a lingering suspicion in the public mind that it was a feeble effort at a manikin, whose automatic voice will be so soon forgotten as to remind one of the epitaph on a very young baby's tombstone:

> "Since I was so quickly done for,
> I wonder what I was begun for."

THROES AND THROWS.

JULIA A. WILLARD.

"What are you doing, oh brother, today?
Throwing your ballot so precious away,
Into the enemy's hands to play?"
Yes, I am throwing as martyrs threw down
Life, for a kingdom above, and a crown,
Those wrong-headed martyrs of Smithfield town.
As the passenger list in the Mayflower threw
Away country, and home, and happiness, too,
(A fortunate throw both for me and for you.)
There was throwing away was akin to mine
When the blue boys and grey stood up in line,
And threw away self for a thought divine,
To shudder and shiver in Arctic cold.
Charge home to the ghosts you may there behold
"Ah, you threw away life in those regions old!"
Tell a million farmers, all over the land,
Who are scattering seed with liberal hand,
"Ye are fools and blind, O wasteful band!"
Tell workers and waiters, the wide world o'er,
Who see the invisible evermore,
Tell to them, as they pull for the farther shore,
"Ye are throwing away your wavering stroke,"
Turning your backs on the good ye invoke;
Forsake your frail bark for our ribs of oak."

ANNEX.

After martyr wo came the church's weal.
There's a shining wake at the Mayflower's keel.
And freedom flashed from the foeman's steel.
In the Arctic zone, life's jewels thrown down,
Science proudly sets in her gleaming crown.
When the summer and autumn shall smile again,
Where the sowing and throwing away have been
Shall be food for the numberless children of men.

ALCOHOL AND POLITICS.

HON. HENRY W. BLAIR.

Recognizing the fact that alcohol is already in politics, and that it will stay there until the battle is fought out to the bitter end, I wish to advance a few suggestions as to the future plan of action. The peculiar nature of American government complicates the situation. Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as the state government or as the national government. Neither alone is government,—each is a part of a great whole,—each is supreme in its sphere, and each is as essential to the formation of government in its complete and proper sense as are the people who individually possess the citizenship of both.

The evils of alcohol are national in extent. No one disputes the power of the general government to regulate or destroy the liquor traffic in the territories except those who hold to the full-grown doctrines of squatter sovereignty, and who would remit intemperance and all other evils, and, in fact, the whole social status, to the people of the territories themselves. As regards the states, if the power of each of them over the alcohol traffic were absolute, there would be no occasion for this article. But such is not the fact, neither is it the theory of the law as to the relation of the governments of the states and of the nation to each other. In all questions touching foreign commerce, and commerce between the states and with the Indian tribes, the general government is supreme; whatever is property and an article of commerce in any state or territory, or in any foreign country, which seeks transmission anywhere in the entire domain of the whole country, is under the protection of the law and of the army and of the navy of the United States. The lines which separate the states are at best geographical, that is to say, practically imaginary. The United States ship alcohol in the original packages from every point in and out of the country, and no earthly power save rebellion, or an amendment of the national constitution can prevent.

The appetite for alcohol is everywhere. It is almost as strong as the love of life, and constitutes an imperative demand. If the supply exists the demand will make short work with the exterior of original packages. In other words, the national government is the great ally and protector of alcohol; and so long as the national constitution is its real stronghold, the battle for prohibition in the states, while it may succeed in the official bulletins and while it will rescue a great multitude of bodies and souls from death, must still falter and in the end substantially fail, or at best be renewed forever. Even if prohibition reigned in every state and in the territories, yet so long as importation and transportation should continue, as they must until the national constitution is changed, the result of legal reforms within would very largely be to transfer the capital now invested and paying taxes in our own country to foreign lands, to be there used to the still larger profit of the owners, and the support of other governments, or to give the entire capital and profit to foreigners who would then manufacture and sell full supply of the American demand.

I would by no means be understood to assert that the heroic struggles in the states hitherto have been useless, or that the glorious conflicts of the present can be suspended. On the contrary, they are the very life and hope of the cause. They very largely restrict and do greatly reform. They create the public opinion which will crystallize in both state and national law. The struggle in any state is part of a greater one in the nation at large. It is all one fight; but it is high time that the effort which is one in its nature and object, should concentrate for its natural and necessary end. The effort which this gentleman is making should not, because of misdirection, fail of that complete success which is so indispensable to the world. There is force enough to win everything, and it is easier far to accomplish both —to carry the states and the nation at large—than either alone.

State elections and congressional elections and presidential elections are all taking place together. Alcohol is a political issue that more truly concerns national politics than it does the politics of the several states. Why, then, is it that year after year the dreary work of Sisyphus goes on in every state; that the stone is rolled up the hill with infinite labor in the state, only to be rolled down again by the force of national law at the top? Why is it that in Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts for years, and now in Kansas, Iowa, and wherever prohibition shall hereafter succeed, national law is permitted to save the accursed traffic, and nullify laws enacted by the states for the preservation of their people?

Nor is prohibition of the sale of alcohol the only end to be attained by national action. The suppression of the manufacture of alcohol for hurtful purposes is logically the first step, and practically an indispensable one to the reform. This truth is coming to be understood, and everywhere the prohibition of the manufacture as well as sale for use as a beverage is demanded. The objection that the manufacture cannot be stopped is seen to be absurd when the attempt is actually made. It is much easier to control manufacture and distribution in the distilleries and breweries of the country than to control the sale in the hundreds of thousands of saloons and dram shops as well as authorized agencies to which the "original package" is now transferred by national law. Every place of manufacture is now under the strictest supervision of national law in order to collect the nation's share of blood-money. Surely it would be comparatively easy to authorize only the manufacture, transportation and sale for beneficial use, and by a proper system to trace the product of the manufacturer to the duly authorized agencies of states, cities and towns for retail consumption, as now provided in all state prohibitory laws.

Prohibitory laws have already attempted with considerable success the most difficult work, which is that of controlling the sale. What might not be done if the manufacture also were within reach of the law throughout the whole country? But the entire power of the traffic can easily be concentrated in a few states or a single state, and hence in the absence of national prohibition it is only necessary for it to retain possession of a single locality, in order to preserve the market of the whole. Although an alert public opinion might partially enforce state laws for a season, it is quite evident from past experience that in time the enemy would again come in like a flood. The drink-ward tendencies of the Caucasian race, notably of our own branch of it, will conquer any but the most wise, comprehensive, and far-reaching legislation, which shall by its good results forever create and reinforce that overwhelming public opinion which wages perpetual war through the judicial power against all forms of crime. Although great good might be accomplished by prohibitory congressional legislation in the territories and the District of Columbia, still the only national law which can radically remedy the evils of alcoholism must be enacted by an amendment of the constitution of the United States, to be supplemented by appropriate statutes for its enforcement. The submission of such an amendment, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation, and transportation of intoxicating liquors for use as beverages, to the people of the states for their ratification or rejection ought not to be opposed by any party organization. If the Republican and Democratic parties were so far to respect the temperance sentiment of the country as to perform this act of deference to the theory of our institutions, they would be consulting their own peace and the integrity of their respective organizations. It is very evident that a vast mass of the voters of the country are prepared to break from old party affiliations unless they find within the organizations to which they now belong an honest purpose to prohibit the traffic in alcohol, by both state and national law, or at least to take the sense of the people on that subject. The nominees of no party will receive their support in the next presidential campaign, which does not especially pledge itself to submit by congressional action such a prohibitory amendment to the people in the ordinary method of amending the constitution.

This condition of things may not seriously embarrass the Democratic party, but even that party will find, in the southern states especially, a spirit abroad among the people of which its leaders may little dream. Unless the Republican party leaders are blind and given over "to believe a lie to the end," they will take up the standard and move forward. The Republican party will not sit on the fence much longer. The masses of the people in it, and a very large majority of the virtue, intelligence and wisdom of that party believe in the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and these elements will get down on the right side of the fence very soon. The fence is not an easy seat, and those who desire effective action cannot, or at least will not, wait much longer for their former associates in contentions which are passing away to make up their minds on the liquor question. It ought not to require much thought or time for a Republican to decide that the people should have an opportunity to amend the national constitution if they please.

If the leaders of the Republican party fail seasonably to comprehend this, I fear they will find themselves retired or their party defeated—one or the other, and perhaps both—when the votes are counted in national elections not far remote. What the Republican party most lacks now is the courage of its own convictions. Its convictions are strong enough, and the path of duty is clear enough. We cannot dally and delay forever. Courage and resolution alone are necessary in the future as in the past. Losses in one direction will be made up by enthusiastic and permanent gains, and still greater losses from the very heart of the party will be prevented.

It is better for the country that the votes of foreign nationalities at the American polls should meet an issue upon which they themselves can divide. Upon discussion of this issue the Irishman and the German will in due time demonstrate that they are Americans. When the temperance elements of the Republican party goes out of it, the party will be dead. Its soul will be gone and its body offensive.—North American Review.

A W. C. T. U. WORKER IN BRANDY-LAND.

MRS. ISABELLA H. IRISH.

The familiar face of The Union Signal was the first that greeted me on my arrival at my destination in "Sunny France," and I may be pardoned for indulging in a little feeling of exultation that of all the papers and periodicals ordered to our consulate, the woman's paper was the most prompt in making its appearance.

Since then my heart has been gladdened, and my mind enriched by its regular visits, and lest I should be classed among those who are hearers and not doers of the word, I send you some tidings from this distant point of observation.

First of all I want to assure my sisters who are in the heat of the battle that I long to be with you in the contest. It is only the hope of renewed vigor and added fitness for the work that reconciles me to the separation which will, I trust, be only temporary. As I read from week to week the stirring records of temperance camp-meetings and conventions, I am cheered by the notes of coming victory which seem to be wafted on the breezes from my native land. All these things are in strange contrast with my present surroundings, for, as is well known, Cognac is one of the strongholds of the brandy power. It is said that in one single cellar in this city there is enough brandy stored to make one-third of the world drunken, and there are many other brandy cellars (warehouses) here though this particular one is said to be the largest in the world.

The four members of my family are probably the only total abstainers in this city of fifteen thousand people. One of the proprietors of the afore-mentioned cellar is a leading member of the only Protestant church in the place, and one of the clerks of the church is in the employ of a brandy firm. The first time I called at the house of the good pastor (a truly pious man), I was asked if I would have "something to drink."

From the time we embarked on a French steamer in New York harbor, we have repeatedly been told we would be compelled to drink wine in France, that everybody drank it, that it is necessary for the health, and that the water would make us sick. But contrary to all our expectations and to all previous reports we have found an abundance of good water. That we drink is obtained from a spring beneath the castle of Francis I., which stands near the city limits. And though this old home of royalty, in the convulsions of the centuries has been profaned by its conversion into a brandy cellar, the water still retains its pristine purity. Every day an old woman comes around with a barrel upon a donkey-cart crying L'eau de Fontaine, so we have no excuse for drinking wine, and as for being sick I have not been so well in months as for these few weeks since I have been here, and my health is steadily improving, and the other members of my family are enjoying good health. But though there is so much of the fiery spirits stored in this city that many solid blocks built of lime stone have turned black as ink from its fumes, but little brandy is now being manufactured here. God has for several years past laid an embargo on the manufacture of brandy in the ravages of the phylloxera, which has destroyed the vines until the grapes from which it was made can no longer be produced. The Frenchmen say the "pest" came from America. However this may be I believe the Lord has been answering the prayers of Christian men and women in an unexpected way. But there are vast quantities of the "fire-water" stored away and being shipped from here to different parts of the world. A moral earthquake is needed to convince these people that their business is evil and only evil.

The results as seen in this country seem to be far less destructive than in America. The wine which is the popular beverage of the people is drank chiefly in the homes and contains but little spirit. Hence drunkenness is rare and it would doubtless be a difficult task to convince the people that total abstinence is better than moderate drinking. But I am not without hopes that when I have become sufficiently familiar with the language I may be able to sow some good seed. As there are scarcely a dozen people here who can speak English, it is about all I can do now to study diligently and add to my meagre knowledge of French.

Sabbath breaking is fearfully prevalent here among almost all classes of people, and as we perceive how lightly even professedly Christian people regard the obligation to keep the first day of the week holy, we can but groan in spirit and entreat the God of nations to send some mighty awakening power into this land.

The fact that war and pestilence have made such dreadful havoc among its inhabitants is in conformity with the promise of the Divine Lawgiver to that people who regard not His Sabbaths.

But the leaven of Christianity is at work and this nation will yet be redeemed for Christ. We were glad to find here two Protestant congregations holding regular services, the one named above and a McCall mission, in both of which there are a good number of devout worshipers. The temperance movement which has been inaugurated in Paris will spread through the republic, for Paris is France. Thank God for a temperance association and a Band of Hope in that gay metropolis.

IN THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT.

CHENEY BROTHERS' SILK, AND CHENEY BROTHERS' TOWN.

MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP.

What woman who seeks utility, economy and beauty, all in one, but has heard of Cheney Brothers 'American silks? They come within the range even of the temperance women, who have neither time nor disposition to array themselves in purple, fine linen and changeable suits of apparel, in the serious business they have undertaken.

But although most women have seen and perhaps worn Cheney Brothers' silk, not many of my readers perhaps have been at Cheney Brothers' town of South Manchester, in Connecticut.

A short ride from Hartford on the New York and New England Road, brings you to North Manchester. When taking a train on the manufacturers' own line a five minutes' ride brings you to South Manchester, where the silk mills are located.

The town has been largely the outgrowth of this great industry, established twenty years ago; and is one of the most beautiful in the state. You can ride through street after street with the impression of being in a park. The houses are set back among the trees, and the wide unbroken lawns run in their greenness down, to the lines of the carriage roads.

The homes of the operatives are specially noticeable. In many of these manufacturing towns the work people are in overcrowded tenement houses, or in shells of cottages without much appearance of comfort or care; but here it is not so. The houses are single and roomy, set wide apart, in the midst of clean grass, and shady foliage, and look like homes. Capital has given kindly thought to labor, and put at the best, both physical and moral conditions. South Manchester is a no license town; the vote being that way for several years, and the law is well enforced. It is no uncommon thing for one of the Cheneys to go out with the officers when it is necessary to ferret out a law breaker, so the strongest influence is on the side of temperance.

A temperance association and the W. C. T. U. look after public sentiment and Mrs. I. P. Rodgers, a lady of wealth and culture who gives her easy leisure to noble things, has a Band of Hope three hundred strong. A company of very bright young people, mostly employed in the mills, stand around her and sing and work with a will, in rare loyalty.

Into all this beauty and prosperity the "rum mill" wants to come, so, a very lively, no license campaign has been going on; citizens' meetings, appeals to voters, and free lectures, in the beautiful town hall, being the means used to turn the vote to the right side. George W. Bain, the writer of this letter, and others, have taken part in this campaign.

The Cheney brothers began their pioneer establishment for the manufacture of American silk in the "old mill," which was at first on a very modest and experimental scale. Annex after annex, mark the progress of the years, until now, the great "new mill" with the finest machinery in the world is making silks of every hue and grade to the delight of all wearers.

When you walk among the silks, satins, and velvets, (for they make the latter also) and see the curious looms turn out the silk handkerchiefs and mufflers you can scarcely resist the wish that you were a whole dry goods store so as to possess the shimmer, gleam and shine of the many textured, many hued materials. And when you see the lovely silk floss you long to be an entire Fourth of July procession and fling them to the breeze.

But oh! the toil and skill of brain and hand back of the era of the dry goods house, or the procession. I could not tell all I saw, but only a few things which interested me most. The cocoons, looking like tufts of cotton, came part from China and part from America. These are made by worms, and the first weaver of the silk eats its way out. The cocoons are then boiled before coming to the factory. This raw material is beaten with rods, rolled on cylinder wheels set with wire teeth, cut into sections, then sent through combing machines, from whence it comes out flossy as a baby's hair. Under the deft hands of women mostly its bulk vanishes into threads so fine that it takes six hundred miles of it to weigh a pound.

There are spools and spindles and reels and looms that well nigh inspire reverence, as they seem to steal all the skill of the human hand, and in a cool-blooded way multiply it a million fold, tossing the result at your feet in rattling scores.

One result of progress is to run these gossamer-like threads through a row of burning gas lights at such rapid rate that while it takes off all roughness, leaves the main thread unsinged. The silk after it is woven is subjected to the same test.

The choicest silk comes from Japan, not in cocoons, but in shining "hanks," as our grandmothers called it, of golden thread, in the natural color. In this the silk worm does not eat its way out, but when its work is done the cocoon, with the worm inside, is thrown into boiling water for a time, and the thread is wound off from the first spinner. It is worth much to see a bale of the shining stuff; anti-filling, anti-grease, anti-crease, anti-every bad thing, is the silk woven from these threads so true to nature.

The manufactory is an achievement of which any American may be proud, and temperance woman will rejoice that the commanding influence of those who brought all this to pass, is on the right side of our great question.

Mr. Rodgers is a manufacturer of fine paper. He opened his factory before the first Cheney mill was built, and with his noble wife has had a hand in the present condition of things. It is good for a town to be well born.

I like Connecticut; and I saw just two "wooden nutmegs" made from the "Charter Oak," but there are none on sale. Radicalism does not grow spontaneously in this soil, but many good things do.

Women are a little in disgrace yet because of what Eve did in the Garden, but it is coming out all right for woman and for temperance.

OVER SENSITIVENESS.

"GRANDMA THINK-AND-WORK."

The fear of unfavorable criticism, or over sensitiveness, on the part of temperance workers is like the blight of an untimely frost on many a bud of noble purpose which would blossom and come to grand fruitage could this weak and sinful fear be overcome. Let us once seize the true inspiration of our glorious motto, "for God and home and native land," and we shall not be hurt by small things, we shall welcome criticism, if it be just, and it nearly always is, and if we be right minded it will do us good. To every growing vine there is always a superfluity which requires to be cut away, and though the knife make the vine bleed, it is good for it. Many a painful process of evolution results in the "survival of the fittest."

If unfavorable criticism palsies our powers and lays us aside from a good work, it is well the work can well spare us until we are healed.

Let us remember that this over sensitivness is infectious. Are we over tired, forgetting who has promised that "as our day is, so shall our strength be," let us be very careful how we communicate this to others. God can well spare us from the work for which we are not fitted. Let us step carefully aside, not magnifying ourselves or our grievances, real or imaginary. There will be presented easy avenues of return when we are needed.

It has been discovered that raw onions are more efficacious in the cure of snake bites than whisky. Should the time come when raw onions are the cure for snake bites, there will be a falling off ninety per cent. in the list of such casualties in this country.

THREE STATES IN A WEEK.—ILLINOIS, IOWA AND NEBRASKA.

Letter from Miss Willard.

Dear Union Signal:—It was delightful to get even a peep at that great convention of Illinois with three hundred and five delegates, representing nine thousand paying members and four hundred local unions. The fellowship of those heroic Peoria workers is evermore an inspiration. "Where sin aboundeth" Christian zeal abounds as nowhere else.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Tyng and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Reynolds are a gospel quartette to be entertained in whose home is a memorable joy. Then to have Tillie Carse and Helen Hood alongside, and our editor too, is a foretaste of the heavenly fellowship. I shall never cease to recall with pleasure our visit to Bishop Spaulding of the Catholic church that morning of our departure for Iowa. How I wish every member of the W. C. T. U. would read his article in the September North American Review on "The Basis of Popular Government." What liberal, enlightened thoughts he has. He is as true an American and patriot as I have ever seen. After a long day's ride we reached Oskaloosa about eight o'clock at night, and learning that Mrs. Foster was speaking at the Opera House, drove there at once. The women whose faces are so honored and familiar were out in force and filled the broad platform with as goodly an array of those who "have the gospel in their looks," as any state union can muster or need desire. Mrs. E. A. Wheeler, of Cedar Rapids, first president of the W. C. T. U. of Iowa, presided. Mrs. Foster made her report as superintendent of legal work, in the clear-cut, lawyer-like style for which she is distinguished, supplementing it by a witty and stirring address on the evolution of the great legal movement of Iowa; the heroic history of the past seven years, consummated in the people's choice June 27, 1882, and the law which went into operation July 4. She then stated substantially the same view of national prohibition presented in her official letter to The Union Signal. Mr. and Mrs. Foster then left for our Illinois W. C. T. U. meeting at Peoria. Mrs. Aldrich came forward and took the collection in a manner that captured the audience. Her "gay wisdom," to borrow Lord Beaconsfield's phrase about Sir Wilfrid Lawson, her motherly kindness were irresistible. In a great opera house audience, when the spell of a famous orator like Judith Foster is removed, the people usually disband in spite of every effort to detain them, but Mrs. Aldrich's appearance is "a spell to conjure by." To take a collection well is a work of art, and I wish the gift were more frequently displayed. No music or other exercise should ever intervene between the address of the evening and the collection plea. Ladies should be at the front ready to start out on the instant with collection baskets. An audience can but admire the generalship that plans and executes this financial cavalry charge with precision and alacrity. I have studied this branch of the subject for ten years with the object lesson of success and failure under my eyes. Women have special gifts for making this a really attractive part of the program if they will plan and ponder as they ought. On the Iowa program, which is a model in all respects save color, this is how the collections are set down for the four evening meetings: "Christian giving illustrated," "Five minute exercises in practical Christianity," "Free will offerings," "Parting gifts and parting words."

We were entertained in the family of Mr. Charles Hutchinson, cultivated English Quakers who came to America ten years ago. Mrs. Hutchinson reminds me of our Hannah Smith in her true heartedness and cheery spirit. Mr. H. is chairman of the St. John electors of Iowa. The Prohibitionists wisely refrained from putting a state ticket in the field but have given opportunity to any voters whose clearness of discrimination leads them to stand by the party that stood by prohibition in the state and rebuke the one that will not stand by it in the nation.

By invitation of President Trueblood, I addressed the students of Penn College, one of the three under care of the society of Friends, the others being Haverford, near Philadelphia, and Earlham, at Richmond, Indiana. It did my heart good to hear the melodious voices of the students in song, and the earnest words of their noble president, whose presence, life and character illustrate the definition of the grand phrase "a manly man."

Mrs. A. M. Palmer's "Faith meeting," with its rich cluster of texts and commentary, came to us as strength and comfort at the morning hour. This dear sister's schooling the past year in Dr. Cullis' institutions at Boston has specially prepared her for the work broadening before her as a temperance evangelist. At the election of officers, Mrs. Aldrich received an almost unanimous vote for a second term as president. She is universally beloved as any one can see who watches her "mothering up" of the convention and when they told her "she was a woman who would bear watching," and proceeded to give her a handsome chronometer, her dear heart was so deeply touched that she just cried and the women followed suit. The same phenomena occurred when "Little Invincible," as they call Mrs. Laura Berry, for years their treasurer, had a like token of love from the noble Hawkeye band. She sent word to me to "answer for her" and I was moved to speak on the delight of belonging to a company that does not wait until the grass waves over a worker's grave, before manifesting its tender appreciation. Mrs. Foster had an elegant "crazy quilt" presented her by a county union, and was made a life member of the National W. C. T. U.

Mrs. E. A. Wheeler, Mrs. Maxfield, their splendid Iowa corresponding secretary, were made life members of the Iowa union and I don't know how many other lovely and graceful things were done. Our gracious Mrs. Carhart, so dear to the National W. C. T. U., short as was her connection with us, joined hands with the other ex-president of the state union in decorating with flowers the national and state officers present. Mrs. Aldrich said, "We declared we would not have these goings on of flowers and compliments as they do at the 'national,' but I must admit we've carried the whole business to high water mark this year."

After these episodes came reports, election of officers, delegates, etc. Iowa has 195 local unions, 3,127 paying member, 440 subscribers to The Union Signal and 420 to The Capital its own state organ. Ten years ago the union began with 37 delegates from only 19 unions. Its magnificent achievements are best summed up in the triumphant motto, placed highest of all in the decorated church, "Iowa redeemed," and its method in the state motto, "This is the victory, even our faith."

The address of Mrs. Aldrich was full of admirable points from which I select two of specially "current" interest:

All the inspiration and courage our woman's heart and prayer could give was given to the Prohibition bolters' ticket in 1877, when Dr. Elias Jessup, who had rendered the temperance cause such good service in the state senate renounced all hopes of further political promotion in Iowa, and accepted the prohibition nomination for governor. Although no woman could cast a ballot in that election, we believe our W. C. T. U. women did much toward placing in the ballot-boxes that year 10,545 clean white prohibition votes. Aye, more, when in the spring of 1879 the thought of temperance workers in other states was considered, adopted by us, and we prayed into existence our plan of work for constitutional prohibition, who dare say that those "lost votes," "thrown away" on Dr. Jessup, had not somewhat enlightened our political leaders, so that they were willing to offer their help in the settlement of the vexed temperance question by this "non-partisan method," and glad to redeem their promise.

Later on comes this generous utterance:

I have sometimes thought that perhaps the reproachful failure of some really good Christian women to work in harmony with others, was needed to keep us all from being exalted above measure and forgetting that human nature must be under the power of the spirit of God if we would continue to work together in love and dwell in peace. Let no root of bitterness creep in or be cherished among us; let us agree to disagree if need be, to abide by the honestly expressed will of the majority, and work together harmoniusly for the uplifting of humanity by the overthrow of a legalized traffic in all intoxicating beverages.

Among the loveliest women at this convention, (or any where else), is Mrs. Anna Lee Mahin, recording secretary of the state union. In declining the position for the coming year, for the same reason that dear Mrs. Carhart did last year, viz., duties imperative in her own home, Mrs. Mahin uttered a golden sentence which I wish to copy:

The temperance woman's home must prove to the world that the temperance work is right for women.

Mrs. Mahin's husband is one of Iowa's leading editors, and true to prohibition as the needle to the pole. To this sweet, new friend, Anna Mahin, I owe one of the sweetest pleasures of my life.

It was on this wise: The women of Iowa are so broad-minded, that not by pen or voice has any one of them hinted to me that in coming to address them in the fever heat of the presidential campaign they wished I would not speak of the gospel of St. John and the prophecy of Daniel. Without making it a hobby, I did bring in that subject at the close of my address, frankly stating my reasons and why it is that the majority of our women, the nation over, do sympathise with the Prohibition rather than the Republican party. At the close, Mrs. Mahin came forward with a lovely basket of flowers and with a tenderness, refinement and simplicity of speech possible only to a nature of the utmost womanliness, presented me the flowers saying, after she had broken my heart by assurances of love and faith, "If you lived in Iowa, dear friend, you would think as we do, even as you say that were we Illinois women we should agree with you." She spoke also of the pleasure it was to recount the reciprocity between these sister states, Mrs. Foster being with the Illinois' women this very evening, and telegraphic messages of the utmost friendliness having that day been interchanged between our convention at Peoria and this one at Oskaloosa. I wish the speech was written out, but no words could render the exquisite beauty of the spirit and sweetness of the tone.

I could but say to the audience "Behold the amenities of politics," and I have been thinking since, as never before, what an element of "sweetness and light" women may bring into the chaos of some future presidential campaign.

Mrs. Jackson, of Muscatine, gave us an inimitable little talk that evening on finance and Mrs. Aldrich's "faith for fifty dollars" was honored by that amount in the collection and gift of five dollars that come later.

Miss Laura Minkler, a graduate of Iowa Institute for the Blind, gave a recitation of an original poem. The "Decennial offerings" were opened at the close of the last day and it was a rich feast. Each local union had sent its contribution and its text. Mrs. Florence Miller, the gifted editor of The Capital, read these texts in her clear, pleasant voice and it was a marvel how varied and suggestive were the passages, only one being twice quoted. None impressed me more than these: "We offer willingly, for all things come of Thee, and of Thine own have we given Thee."

When the Presbyterian pastor was introduced he gave us this striking thought: "As the Spirit of God was in the world long before the incarnation so was the spirit of gospel temperance, but it waited for its incarnation until the advent of the W. C. T. U."

The Iowa W. C. T. U. is full of "witty inventions." It has elegant certificates of life membership and honorary membership, and seeks constantly to increase its lists in these grades at $5 and $10 dollars respectively. It prints its ballots not the names of candidates of course, but the full list of officers, superintendents and all, taking the informal ballot for all at once. Its "Benedict Home for Women" is the most vivid illustration which any state can show that the W. C. T. U. is "not willing that any should perish." Its juvenile work, under Mrs. Goode (Hinman) has surpassed any other. Its women are original thinkers. Mrs. Thickstun, of Pella, Mrs. McKinney, of Decorah, Mrs. Callanan, of DesMoines, Mrs. Throop, of Mt. Pleasant, Mrs. Wood, of Marshalltown, Mrs. Thrall, of Ottumwa," are "born leaders" and prohibition is the dearest word in all our work to them. The ballot for woman is an accepted article of faith and will ere long be wrought out in works. They are not to be criticised for their stand this year on political methods. In their hearts they are with the vanguard but they believe it good faith to take the position indicated by their leadership. Let us "live and let live."

The ladies of Oskaloosa served lunch four days to 200 women, as toothsome and homelike as the nicest home need furnish. We sang our blessing to Old Hundred. Philip Bliss gave it to me at Thousand Island Park years since. I have spread it everywhere I could:

> "Be present at our table Lord,
> Be here as everywhere adored.
> Give us Thy grace and grant that we > May feast in Paradise with thee."

Anna Gordon organized a Y. W. C. T. U. of thirty lovely girls that will be "heard from" I doubt not.

We came on at night to Omaha and find here the largest convention ever held in Nebraska, sixty delegates, representing as many local unions, Mrs. Ford presiding in her genial fashion. Mrs. Folsom, a woman of marked talent, is corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. C. Barned, recording secretary; Mrs. Pollock, treasurer; and Mrs. E. W. Cooley, the tireless organizer.

Their program is almost as big as that of the national and they are breezy as their own great prairies.

On the subject of the Prohibition party they give no uncertain sound. Like Illinois, whose unanimous rising vote for the Detroit resolution so rejoiced my heart as announced by your telegram, dear editor, Nebraska will be heard from. New York has been already I learn.

NOTES.

—The Nebraska W. C. T. U. arranged for a "morning sermon" from a woman, which was given in the chief M. E. church. This was preceded by a "temperance love feast," Mrs. Gen. J. Cooley presiding. Bread and water were passed by Mrs. Jennie Ford, of Kearney, the well beloved retiring president, and Mrs. Jennie F. Holmes, of Tecumseh, her successor (the first a Methodist, the second a Universalist, and both earnest Christian women.) Brief testimonies were given by earnest men and women about their call to this work, their patience, of hope and labor of love. One lady said that her father built the first frame house in Milwaukee, Wis. She had heard the rumble of its beer wagons most of her life. For awhile she was living in Nebraska, and that same old rumble greeted her in its metropolis (Omaha), this morning, as she came to church. It was the dream of her heart to go back to Milwaukee, the beautiful city she loved, over which the serpent's slimy trail was spread, and there to work for the banishment of beer and the restoration of a Christian Sabbath.

— Inquiry develops the fact that high license "works" after this fashion in Omaha (said by temperance workers to be a city even more wicked than Chicago!): A saloon keeper is to pay one thousand dollars per year. But this is placed on deposit in quarterly installments, and if during the last quarter he discontinues his business for a few days, his money is refunded—for behold! he has not "kept open" a whole year, and ought not to be required to pay license, poor fellow! Again: It is expressly provided that no one man shall go on the bond of more than one saloon-keeper, but one man's name was found by a W. C. T. U. woman on nine bonds. Again: No signature to the bond is valid unless that of a resident of the ward in which the saloon is situated, but the constant violation of this is patent to any one who studies the books at the city hall. The saloons are open and beer carts on the move all through the Sabbath. The mayor is a drunkard, and the city at the lowest ebb in morality. "High license regulates in beautiful fashion at Omaha, Nebraska's bustling metropolis, beautiful for situation, "where every prospect pleases, and only rum is vile."

— But we have a noble band, led by Mrs. Soule, recently of the W. C. T. U. in Sioux City, Ia., with Band of Hope led by Mrs. George Clark, one of Jenny Duty's Cleveland coadjutors. Their restaurant is a success financially and every way, and their work a felt force. Last night they had a packed Opera House and a $50 collection, with the Methodist pastor, Rev. Mr. Savage on the platform, a full fledged St. John man. "Some doubted" of course, but "the Lord gave the word, and great was the company of women that published it." Let us not be disobedient to the heavenly vision. At the close, the call to prayer (October 29) sent out by the National Prohibition party was read, and the unions urged to observe it.

— John B. Finch gave a magnificent address by invitation of the W. C. T. U. convention, on prohibition and St. John.

— Omaha supports a prohibition daily, The Dispatch.

Yours, as ever, FRANCES E. WILLARD.

THE GREAT SYMPOSIUM.

MRS. L. H. WASHINGTON, CONNECTICUT.

I have read with deepest interest the conflicting opinions as to political position, or affiliations of the W. C. T. U. While it has been often expressed, and is generally understood, that everybody can do as she pleases, not a little censure expressed or implied has fallen upon the devoted heads of our state officers. Possibly many of the women counseled "not to run before sent," or to be persuaded of the devil to leap from the pinnacle to destruction, are not far seeing, and I may be shortest sighted of them all; yet I fail to see how our high officials could have done less than they have and have been true to their delegated trust. They might have said, "We must not meddle with politics, it isn't pretty for women;" and thus gone back ten years on our record. Otherwise could our leaders, or the rank and file, do less than stand by our proclaimed principles; and, if we may not vote for, declare for, the men tried and true, who have heeded our exhortations, planted themselves unequivocally upon the protective platform for which we have pleaded.

We were told in the Washington National Convention, by superintendent of legislation, "Women, ask for just what you want; ask for a whole loaf, you may be obliged to accept a half loaf, but ask a whole loaf every time." Now shall we say, we did not expect any bread; only intended to agitate the bread question; thought it would be well for you to be educating our state domestics how to make bread? I have just clipped the following from our New York paper:

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 1, 1884.—A hideous crime committed here last night is almost unparalleled in its atrocity. Michael Shay, living in a miserable hovel at No. 400 Clark street, went home during the night in a drunken state, and with the body of a dead infant, to which his wife had given birth during the night, beat her to death. When arrested Shay was in such a sodden condition that nothing intelligent could be obtained from him.

Mothers think of it, do we want bread? and shall we ask until we get the whole loaf?

After all, which is the worse, to brain a woman with a baby in low life, or, to break the heart, and craze the brain of a woman, with a baby in high life? Democrats think of it! Will you give us bread and prohibition, instead of license and orphan asylums? It is loudly claimed that Republican principles fought the nation's battles and abolished slavery. While we did not "carry the musket" we did make your banners, certainly helped furnish ammunition, and above all we furnished you every mother's son. Some tilled the field and raised, while many earned the bread and cared for your children in your absence. We bound up your wounds and nursed you back to life. We have strewn flowers on graves of fallen comrades, while to many loved husbands or sons have been returned worse than dead, through slavery to drink Republicans think of it! Will you give us bread? the whole loaf instead of crumbs here and there?

My husband has just been advised by letter not to throw away his vote. As I have just now possession of his study and find his reply upon the table, allow me to copy it, underlining and all.

DEAR BROTHER:—I congratulate you upon being stirred up in politics. Surely there is need of it. But somehow I can't get up any enthusiasm but in one direction—Prohibition. I shall not vote for any man or candidate in the field, but for an idea, a principle. I prefer now, to stand with the party of the future. It must come just as certain as the downfall of slavery. You may say my vote will be thrown away and perhaps worse if given to St. John. But I can't help it. He stands for my ideal. I must keep peace with conscience. I must vote as I pray and mean to work.

A vote is thrown away only when cast contrary to principle. I break with the Republican party because it glaringly ignored the only great question which Providence has thrust upon the times in which we live.

I have heard that our son has expressed an intention of casting his first presidential ballot for St. John and Daniel, and devoutly hope it may be true.

Raise the flag for Prohibition,
Rear the unfurled banner high;
Over all our favored nation,
Bear it on to victory.
Worthier of their birthright, when
To prohibit rum's black traffic,
Stand enrolled our noblest men.

MRS. JOHN SOBIESKI, ILLINOIS.

I trust you will pardon me for my boldness in presuming to review the recent letter of our honored sister and gifted champion, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, but for years I have been a worker in the temperance ranks, and as the wife of a valiant soldier in our reform have watched with the deepest interest every step that has been taken and every battle that has been fought and rejoiced in every victory that has been won. I cannot express the unutterable sadness that I experienced in reading the recent letters of Sister Foster and as briefly as possible I wish to review some of the objections that she urges against the address of the officers of the National Union.

She says: "I believe our national organization should maintain a non-partisan attitude toward the political questions of the day." If she means the question of protective tariff or revenue reform, or the finance question as relates to our currency, then we all agree, I think without a dissenting voice, that we should be non-partisan. But if she means the great question that is being pressed home upon the hearts and consciences of the voters of our country today, withdrawing the legal sanction from the liquor traffic, withdrawing from it all recognition of government, and stamping it out of existence; then I protest that our organization must be partisan on this question, giving its sympathies, its labors, its prayers to the army that is fighting its battles in our behalf and opposing with all our moral force those who are seeking to perpetuate this crime, or in a cowardly way seeking to dodge the issue.

Speaking of the resolution passed at Detroit, she says: "I believe that resolution passed at Detroit was never intended to thus commit us. I believe the convention would have laid the resolution on the table if it had supposed that any such construction would have been put upon it." Does our sister intend to convey to us the idea that they did not intend anything by the resolution, but, as the gentlemen say in their conventions, it was done for "mere buncombe"? We are loath to believe this. A convention composed of such women as Frances Willard, Mary Lathrap, Mrs. Livermore, Mrs. Buell, and Helen Hood, brave, able, conscientious and God fearing women, we do not believe capable of consenting to anything but honest "deliverances."

Again she says: "Even if it is claimed that we must give the influence of the organization to some party, I should give my conviction that the demand for national prohibition is not the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and that the National Prohibition party is powerless to protect our homes." To what party then should we give our support? To the Democratic party with its late platform wherein it declares its opposition to all laws looking to the suppression of the dram shop? Shall it be to the Republican party with its infamous sixteenth plank adopted in Philadelphia in 1872 that has never been repealed but reaffirmed at all of its national conventions since?

Again she says: "The National Prohibition party is powerless to protect us." Then let us by work, agitation, appeals and prayers make it so strong that, by the help of God, it can protect us and our loved ones.

Again she says: "Congress cannot, according to the constitution of the United States, prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in the states." No one disputes this. "The demand that it shall submit the question of constitutional prohibition to the states while so very large a proportion of the states are shielding the traffic by license laws, is not a wise conservation of force in our great battle for God and home and native land." We will say to our sister that we have no expectation that two old corrupt whisky bound parties will ever submit a constitutional amendment to the legislatures of the of the several states for their ratification, but we do expect that the young growing Prohibition party will ere long be in possession of a vast majority of the states and then they will submit an amendment that will stamp out the last remnant of this crime.

Again she says: "Could not congress wipe out the traffic in the District of Columbia and in the territories? Yes and no. It has the constitutional power to do so, but while so large a proportion of the members of congress come from states where the traffic is licensed, can they be expected to abolish from the nation's domain that which is protected by the states which they represent?" Would not it have been better if Sister Foster had put it in this way? that so long as members of congress are elected by two parties that enter into a competition for the votes of the liquor element can they be expected to pass such laws? We would answer No, and we are preparing to elect to power a political party that will not compete for the liquor vote, and through such a party we do expect that we can and will accomplish this work.

It may be asked, what do you expect a Prohibition party can do? In the first place, we would elevate to the presidency a man of pure and lofty character, the White House of our nation would be the abode of virtue and temperance. We would have a man in the presidential chair whose conduct and speech, if he took a journey through the country, would be of such a character that we could commend them to the young men of the nation. Our present executive in his trip to Yellowstone Park a year ago, left the road strewn with empty liquor casks and bottles. Put the Prohibition party in power and a presidential funeral would not be turned into a drunken debauch and the nation made to pay the bill. Put the Prohibition party in power and we would amend the civil service law so that no man could enter the civil service of our country who is addicted to strong drink. We would change the articles of war in both army and navy so that no man could enter the army or navy who is not a total abstainer, for drunken military and naval officers have brought defeat more than once to our army and navy. We would abolish the dram shop from the capital of our nation and change it from one of the most drunken cities of the nation to the most sober; prohibit the liquor traffic in our territories and place in the enabling act of every territory applying for admission into the Union, prohibition of the liquor traffic. When this shall have been accomplished, submit a constitutional amendment to the several states for their ratification, forever prohibiting the liquor traffic within our national domain, and our work will have been accomplished.

She says: "I do not see how there can be two opinions in regard to Iowa Prohibitionists. I have no arithmetic with which to estimate the mental caliber or the moral sense of any Iowa man who claims to be for temperance and does not stand by the Republican party." Is this a correct judgment to render on a man for not standing by the Republican party in Iowa, when in its whole history it has never uttered one word of personal sympathy for the prohibition cause, but on the other hand, repealed the prohibitory law, or modified it, on coming into power; deluged the state with wine and beer for twenty-two years, and then only gave the people a chance to correct the crime when they were whipped into it by independent voting. And when the people had secured, by a non-partisan choice, the prohibitory amendment to the constitution, a Republican supreme court, upon mere technical points, of the most absurd nature, struck down the amendment, and within sixty days the party has said to one of the assassins, "Well done thou good and faithful servant," and have renominated him to the place that he has dishonored.

If the N. W. C. T. U. in its coming convention in St. Louis, takes the backward step that has been asked, I would suggest that they change their badge from the white ribbon to the white feather.

At the battle of Chickamauga, brave old Gen. Steadman saw one of his regiments wavering under the terrible fire of the enemy and beginning to retreat, he seized the flag and shouted:

"You can go to the rear, but you shall not take this flag with you." If any of our leaders or divisions falter or break ranks under the fire of the enemy, they can retreat to the rear, but they cannot take with them the colors of our noble organization.

THE TWO PATHS.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

F. M. HOLMES.

CHAPTER VII.—THE SUPPER.

Not long after the occurrence related in the last chapter, Harry received a letter from Philip, asking him to a supper he proposed to give to a few friends on a certain evening in the following week.

Harry paused a while before accepting the invitation, for he was afraid that the sort of young men he should meet would not be those he would altogether care for; but after a time he decided to go. It would seem very unfriendly to refuse, and as Philip was now sufficiently in funds to pay for a supper, he clearly could afford to return Harry's half sovereign. Probably he would do so on this occasion, thought Harry. So he decided to go. In Harry's position half a sovereign was as valuable to him as many pounds to wealthier people.

When he went to Philip's lodging, however, he was surprised to find his friend out and no preparations made for any supper: but the landlady told him that "Mr. Gregory was very sorry, but he had to go out, and he would meet Mr. Somers at the corner of Repton street."

So Harry walked to the place appointed at once, and soon his friend made his appearance arm-in-arm with the dissipated Skipworth.

"Ah! Come on, Harry. We are going to have such a jolly evening!" And linking his disengaged arm in one of Harry's he led him on. Presently he whispered—

"I say; stow your teetotalism to-night, Harry. They will think you namby-pamby if you don't."

"Then I had better not go," said Harry, "for I shall certainly not give up that."

"Oh, don't go," replied Philip, "now you are here. It will look so queer. Ah, here we are!" and hastily leading him down a narrow passage he mounted the stairs at the end.

"Why, where is this?" asked Harry. "Surely the supper is not to be at a public house?"

But it was so, as Harry afterward found out.

Following Philip up stairs they soon entered a snug little room, which was full of tobacco smoke, 'mid the dimness of which three or four dissipated, but elaborately over dressed youths showed themselves.

The whole aspect of the place was so very uncongenial to Harry, moreover seemed so full of temptation—for by this time he had got to know pretty well what the bad habits of this class of dissipated youths were—that he resolved at onee to quit the house, and risk displeasing his friend. Hastily, therefore, excusing himself to Philip he walked out of the house, and when he got outside and saw the large windows of the gin palace he had left, and peeped through the swing door at the terrible sights within, he thanked God he had no part, no lot in the drinking habits which produce such results. There he saw the pallid faced gin drinker, with eyes deep sunk into cavernous sockets, and fingers long and lean like the claws of an unclean bird as they clutched the gin glass—sensuality seated on his wrinkled brow, and an idiotic smile wreathing his cracked and swollen lips. There he saw wretched mothers pouring the horrible liquid down the throats of their emaciated infants, making them dead drunk with the poison, and then drinking of the maddening draught themselves till they fought and swore, or giggled in maudlin mirth. Every holy and hallowed feeling seemed to be profaned and outraged in this licensed temple of degradation and vice. So he departed to his home, happy, indeed, at having escaped participation in habits which produced such results.

But how fared it with Philip? Being young at this sort of thing he was somewhat embarassed at first, and shook hands all round excitedly and nervously. His friends, being older, were more at ease. They were pleasant fellows enough, good natured and generous, but, alas! all addicted to wine, and this fatal fondness for alcoholic drinks led them into other vices. Philip had got into this set by reason of his drinking habits, and they were leading him to ruin as fast as an autumn leaf is whirled away upon the foaming torrent.

As soon as all the guests were seated Philip rang the bell, and the dinner was served. It was nice enough and did the landlord justice, except that he charged a fearfully high price for it afterward.

But it was in the matter of the wine that his "management" showed itself. "John," said he in a whisper to the sleek waiter after he had called him inside the door just after dinner had commenced, "John, we must get rid of all these tonight," pointing to a number of bottles ranged on the floor. "Mind you begin with these, and afterward, when they're getting a bit on, you can use these others"—winking his eyes slyly, and laying his forefinger knowingly against his nose.

"Right you are, sir," replied the ready John; "right you are! Prime(d) champagne, gentlemen; very cheap—only 10s. per bottle!"

His master grinned and retired chuckling to himself, murmuring, "Ah, that John is a witty fellow! Primed champagne it is, indeed. I don't know what the adulteration inspector would say to it. But there! we must live; and these young sparks won't know. Bless you, they are as green as the gooseberries their champagne is made of."

At first the company seemed to be a little dull and awkward. Speech hung fire. A few stale witticisms were repeated, but they fell flat. By degrees, however, the youths became brisker, and when the cloth was removed and the dessert came they laughed immoderately at the most trivial joke. Numbers of forgotten topics were started as subjects of conversation—things they had meant to talk of but which had slipped their memory until now.

The wine was passed faster and faster, songs were sung, or rather roared, and Philip tried to make a speech, in which he told them that they were all his dear, dear friends, that he would live and die with them, and that he—and that they were all jolly good fellows, and that this was the happiest period of his existence.

To see him with his handsome open face now flushed with wine; his curling hair hanging in wild disorder over his forehead; his pleasant eyes now maudlin instead of bright and firm; to see him thus staggering and drunken at the head of the table, brandishing a wine-glass and hiccupping out his foolish remarks, and surrounded by young men all more or less like himself, was indeed a sight to make angels weep and his parents curse the day that they ever permitted him to taste this dangerous liquor and contract this fatal fondness.

After a while the young men decided to go out, and each and all lighting cigars they staggered forth, making the night hideous with their stupid, drunken cries.

Philip, in his maudlin mirth, gave the waiter a sovereign for a shilling, and slapped the landlord familiarly on the back, telling him he was "a jolly good f'ler."

As they were going down stairs the foremost slipped and fell, and as they were all curled together arm-in-arm they all followed his example, and lay a confused mass at the foot.

The bruises they received were luckily not severe, and in their excited state they scarcely felt them, but after swearing a little in unison they stuck their cigars again in their mouths, and linking arm-in-arm, they reeled forth to make the calm night hideous with their stupid, drunken cries. Oh, detestable drink! that can so turn the strength and sense of the young to such mockeries of what they might be! A good creature of God, forsooth! Rather a bad creature of the devil. Drink, like all other perversions of God's good gifts, was surely manufactured first by the father of lies, and hails from below and not from above.

And as the landlord and waiter saw them go, the one chuckled over the large number of empty and adulterated wine bottles, the other over his tip.

"I shouldn't care to have their heads to-morrow morning," said the waiter, grimly. "They'll ache ready to split."

"And I shouldn't care to have their stomachs or their mouths either," laughed the landlord. "Lor! how hot and dry they'll be; full o' pain, too, after my champagne."

"Yes; they'll want several brandies and sodas to pull them together again, and that in it's turn'll make 'em more thirsty."

"Well, it's good for trade! good for trade!" said the landlord, softly chuckling to himself, as a smile overspread his fat, porky features; and he rubbed his fat, porky hands.

Philip and his friends experienced certain shuddering sensations, which were due to their plentiful potations and cigars, making one of the party declare that he was on the deck of a Channel steamer, and yell for the steward. Each in turn yelled for the steward, and embraced a lamp-post, thinking it was he. After getting over this disgusting difficulty, and finding they were not on board a boat, but in a certain street in the West End which shall be nameless, adjourned to a billiard saloon; and some of them took possession of a table and commenced to play.

Philip, who looked very white, and had not yet recovered from his unpleasant qualms, sat on a chair and watched the play; making, meanwhile, many absurd remarks in a low voice, which called great attention to him.

At length a gentleman, with a strange smile curling his lips and revealing his white teeth, came up to him and challenged him to a game.

Philip, who knew but very little of the game, accepted, and somehow won!

Then the stakes were doubled, and he lost. As he paid, the gentleman said: "We can play no longer tonight, as this is a public table, and others want to use it; but I shall be happy to see you tomorrow night, and give you an opportunity of recouping yourself."

"Oh! certainly, certainly," replied Philip; and departed. Unhappily he did see this man again, and many a guinea did he lose thereby, for he was a notorious billiard sharper, and further and further did he lead Philip on the downward road.

CHAPTER VIII.—DOWNWARD.

It was in this way that Philip's life now went on. Drink was fast becoming his god—the one chief good of his life—a pleasure compared with which all other pleasures were tame; the one thing which he desired and craved for with an insatiable and intolerable thirst that nothing could quench. Alas! this is the doom of all self indulgence. It brings its ever terrible retribution. To be constantly longing and thirsting, yet never satisfied—to be for ever whipping the jaded senses to obtain a so-called "enjoyment," tortured by the fire of never satisfied desires—this is indeed misery, and particularly the misery of the drunkard. It was to this terrible end that Philip was fast tending.

It was not often that he saw Harry. He continued to put off visiting him or writing to him from week to week, until at last he felt how thoroughly dissimilar their lives were, and he thought it best to leave him to himself.

"He is far too slow for me," cried Philip.

Harry had endeavored to renew their friendship, and had invited Philip to his lodgings several times; but, never obtaining any reply, he had at length desisted. And thus almost complete estrangement grew up between them. And perhaps it was as well for Harry that it was so; only I think that now his habit of total abstinence had become so strong and the principle so firmly fixed in his mind, that he would never have broken it.

He had been progressing well. Earnestness and attention to his business had procured him promotion, and he was now in a fair way to succeed well.

One day he was busy at his desk when a police constable came to the office and inquired for him.

"If you please, sir," said the man, "there's a prisoner of the name of Gregory wants to see you. He's got into a bit of trouble, and wants you to help him out."

"Gregory!" said Harry. "Why, I have not seen him for months and months."

"Very likely, sir; these sort of folks only know you when they wants you to help them," and he smiled.

Harry smiled also, but sadly. He remembered Philip as he was at school—a merry, bright eyed boy. However, he explained the circumstance to his employer, who granted him permission to attend the police court.

Arrived there, Harry found that Philip had been convicted of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, and this being his second or third appearance there the magistrate had fined him heavily—so heavily that Philip had not sufficient money to pay, and he wanted Harry to help him pay it. Philip was expecting a remittance from his father, and would give him an "I O U" for the amount, including that former unlucky half-sovereign.

Although Harry's good sense told him that it would probably do Philip more real good to have a fortnight's imprisonment instead of the fine, yet the wretched youth pleaded so hard, and the memory of their friendship was so strong' that he felt compelled, even against his better judgment, to lend the money, The fine was accordingly paid, and the two young men went forth.

"Now, Philip," said Harry to him firmly, as they left the police court, "you must sign the pledge."

"It would be of no avail," replied the other wearily. "I should not keep it a day. I could not live without stimulant."

"Oh! you must rouse yourself," answered Harry. "Don't give way to despair like this. Come, other men have conquered the appetite for drink, and you must."

"I can't, I can't. I have so long given way to the drinking habits of society that I cannot master my fondness for drink now. You remember the old line we used to repeat at school—

"Who will be free, himself must strike the blow," and that is just what I cannot do. I cannot strike the blow of total abstinence which alone could free me from the bondage of drink."

"Philip," replied Harry, "I say again, try to do so. I know something of what it will cost you. Do you remember old Dr. Sowerby's temperance lecture?"

"What, when some one had been drinking at school?"

"Yes."

"Oh yes, I remember. I never could think who the fellow was; but I now wish I had followed his example and signed the pledge. I wonder if he has kept it?"

"He has," answered Harry, solemnly. "I was that boy."

"You!" and Philip started back in extreme amazement.

"Yes, I was that boy. I have been the worse for drink, but, thank God, I have kept the pledge since that day. So I know something about it, Philip."

"Ah but that was when you were young, Harry. It is easy to learn to abstain when you are young, but it is altogether a different matter when you are older."

"I know, but it is not impossible, Philip."

"Too late, too late," wearily replied the young man. "Wherever I go there is too strong temptation. If I was to go to friends in the country I should find the same temptation there. Wine and beer are everywhere. You are always being tempted to drink. If I could get away to some place where there was no drink I might be better. It is like nothing else, it gets such power over you. Don't think I'm a drunkard because I want to be. I loathe myself when I think of what I am. I just recollect a little of what occurred last night. I remember being in a row in the street—some fellow had tried to cheat me at billiards, and I knocked him down and he knocked me down. A policeman picked me out of the gutter and took me a shameless heap of dirt and rags, to the police station. Home! I have no home, for everybody is afraid I shall rob them for drink. My brother offered me a room in his house, but I stole his baby's silver-mounted coral, and pawned it for drink; I stole my sister's jewels for the same purpose, and if you took me home tonight to your lodgings I should rob you, and stagger back in a most beastly state of intoxication. In fact, drunkenness is a disease, I believe, and the sale of the poison that induces and aggravates the disease ought to be prohibited or restricted, as are other poisons."

"You can talk like this, Philip, and yet you cannot learn to abstain?"

"No, no, too late, too late! I tell you, you must learn as boy to abstain. Bring up a child to abstain, and then he or she is all right, but let them learn to like drink, and —well, you see what I am!"

"And where are you going to stay tonight?" asked Harry abruptly.

"I don't know—anywhere. But I wanted to keep out of prison, because it's near the day on which I receive an allowance from my father. He sends me money once a month—just a little to keep me from starving—and the day will soon be here now."

"Well, now, come home and stay with me. Let us make a desperate effort, Philip."

With a faint, weary smile the young man consented, and, calling a cab, Harry drove with his friend to his lodgings.

CHAPTER IX.—THE END.

For some days Harry kept so strict a watch over his friend that he actually prevented him from taking any wine or strong drink. But it was only by keeping him absolutely under lock and key. He was, in fact, locked up in Harry's sitting-room. With the same weary smile he acquiesced in all the arrangements made for him.

But it was quite evident that this state of things could not continue, and Harry was sorely exercised in his mind as to the best course to pursue. Unless Philip was kept under constant supervision, it seemed that he must give way.

The difficulty was solved, however, in quite an unexpected manner. After receiving the remittance from his father, and duly discharging Harry's debt, he exhibited great restlessness and uneasiness of mind. He now had the power of purchasing drink, and he longed to exercise that power.

Oh! who shall adequately portray poor Philip's craving for drink! Every nerve in his body cried out for the accursed stimulant; the air around seemed peopled with horrible shapes which gibbered and gibed as he moved along; he flushed with heat as though he was in a fiery furnace; anon he was convulsed by horrible cold shiverings, as though he were plunged naked in the snow. All these terrible feelings he thought might be stopped by one glass, just one little glass to steady his nerves!

When, therefore, a message came from his brother, inviting him to spend a day with him he felt relieved. It would be at all events an escape from the room where he had passed so many weary hours, and which seemed to him now almost like a prison by reason of the wretchedness he had suffered therein.

Harry saw him depart with great regret. He was beginning to be hopeful for his friend. "But I could not refuse to let him go to his brother's," thought he, "and if he is wise and has locked up all wine and spirits, Philip may yet escape temptation." Thinking thus, he departed with Teddy to his office. The boy now accompanied his elder brother, by whose influence a post had been found in the same business. But when the evening came Philip did not return. Being uneasy about him, Harry called at his brother's and the curt answer was that Philip had gone and left no message! Harry continued to inquire, but to no purpose. Philip had quite disappeared.

One evening about a week after this, as Harry was sitting at tea and enjoying his paper and crisp muffin after his day's work was done, a hasty rap came at the door.

"Mr. Somers is wanted, please, by a man who is dying —he says he's a friend."

With a terrible fear chilling his heart, Harry hastily prepared to accompany the messenger. They went along many streets, some of which were quite unknown to Harry, until at last they halted before a wretched house in a wretched street near the Seven Dials. Descending the rotten stairs, they came into a cellar, and there, by the feeble light of a dim candle, he saw Philip lying on some loathsome straw. Near him stood his brother, and an old woman who was giving him brandy by spoonsful.

"Philip! Philip! old fellow! don't you know me?' and Harry bent tenderly over his friend.

Philip grasped him by the hand, but said nothing. He only gazed up at Harry with his sunken, glazing eyes.

"Come, cheer up, old fellow. I will take you back to my place and get you round again."

"Too late, too late. There was wine at dinner I took some. That one glass turned me crazy. It made me mad for more. They would not let me have enough. I stole his clock, pawned it, and escaped here that I should not be found. I was mad, I think. I drank till I could drink no more, and they threw me out into the street—too drunk even for a public in St. Giles's. But I am sober now. I know what I am saying."

"Well, well, you shall come with me and get right again. Keep up heart, Philip."

"No, I cannot keep up. I am going to die, and I want to die. What is the use of being alive?"

"But oh! Philip, remember Him who said, 'Father forgive them!' He prayed for His enemies even, for He was so loving and tender, and He will forgive you. His love passeth all knowledge."

"Too late, too late, Harry! Do you remember Dr. Sowerby—who warned us against the sunken rock? I laughed at him then, but I am wrecked on that rock. It's getting dark! Hold my hand, Harry—so kiss me Harry. Good-bye." And as his friend bent over to kiss him, Philip Gregory fell back—dead. He had played with the fiery drink so long that at last it had been his ruin.

Oh! you who are tampering with the evil, and drinking, as you say, in moderation, is it nothing to you that such scenes as this occur almost every hour—that tens of thousands year by year stagger into the drunkard's grave, having been made drunkards by reason of the drinking customs of society, which you encourage? Oh! rouse ye then, and especially you young ones, before whom the world stretches as a fairy palace, and resolve, for the sake of Him who gave Himself for you, that you will at once and for ever forswear the use of that dangerous luxury that causes the utter ruin of so many souls! You will never regret the resolve, and you will lose nothing by it; on the contrary, you will gain health, wealth and happiness.

Remember, the tale I have told you is no fancy fable. It is taken from actual life, and the scenes I have described you may possibly meet with. How will you act? Will you play with fire and run the risk of being ruined? or will you refuse to have part or lot with those evil habits that are the curse of our country? Learn to abstain for the sake of others as will as for your own sake, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

DEAR LITTLE CHILDREN:—I have seen and heard several things lately that may interest you. One of those that I have heard is about a society of little girls, away off in New Hampshire, who it seems to me ought to belong to our Prevention Army. They are thirty-four in number, and they call themselves The Union Mission Band, their object being to get money to establish a reading room in this New Hampshire town of Rochester, so that the young men may be kept away from the saloons. One of their ways of raising money is by selling a pretty little monthly paper which they publish, and which is called Missionary Echoes. I think they are very wise in their generation, and brave too. Just to think of publishing a whole paper!

Then I have heard something else which is rather funny. It is Mr. Daniel's (the Prohibition candidate for vice president, you know) little verse on voting. Here it is:

"I'd rather be mum,
And always dumb,
Than pray like some,
'Thy kingdom come'—
Then vote for rum."

Ask your father what he thinks abont it. It isn't so very good poetry, but it has a real solid truth in its jingle. Then I have seen something lately which I think you would like, and that is Miss Colman's temperance book cover. I wish I could put one on all your school books. It is made of good, stiff paper, and has a place for your name, but almost all the rest of it is covered with facts and verses about temperance, so that as you run to school you could get quite a bit of temperance gospel into both head and heart, by reading as you run. These covers are one cent a piece, and Miss Colman sells them at 72 Bible House, New York city. Next week we shall have no talk together, as the convention at St. Louis has spoken for all the space of THE UNION SIGNAL for that issue. And by the time that I come to you again we shall have a new president of these United States—whom do you think it will be? CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

A BOY who attends one of our Sabbath schools went out in the country the last summer to spend his vacation —a visit he had long looked forward to with pleasure. He went out to help the men harvest. One of the men was an inveterate swearer. The boy, having stood it as long as he could, said to the man, "Well, I guess I will go home tomorrow." The swearer, who had taken a great liking to him, said: "I thought you were going to stay all summer." "I was," said the boy, "but I cannot stay where anybody swears so; one of must go, so I will leave." The man felt the rebuke, and said: "If you will stay I won't swear," and he kept his word.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Nov. 2.] Fourth Quarter, No. 5. [1884.

Topic: THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

LESSON TEXT: I Kings 8: 22-36.

GOLDEN TEXT: Behold the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee. I Kings 8: 27.

TIME: 1005 B. C.

PLACE: Same as last lesson.

1. A king on his knees, glorifying the hand that had exalted him is a subject not only fit for the artist, but for the thought of the rulers of today. The acknowledgement of God's mercy is forgotten in the hour of triumph, and the fashion of its public recognition has yet to be inaugurated. It is not difficult, however, to discern in the signs of the times, that a day is coming when in republican government, the people, who are the true rulers, will insist upon a recognition of the Divine leadership, and of dependence upon God.

2. All God's promises seem too good to be true. This fear often seizes us as we are on the edge of claiming them. It seemed to come to Solomon in all the glory of God's house, lest after all, the Lord would not dwell in very deed upon the earth. This settled, however, he quickly passes on to the belief that no earthly temple can confine Him who fills the universe. There is danger of defining God, which is the underlying principle of idolatry, and there is danger of so extending His personality as to exclude all idea of entity, which is Pantheism.

The truth is between these points. God is spirit, but spirit is substance. He whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain is nevertheless in every humble heart to bless it by His abiding presence. A temple is not too magnificent for Him nor a child's heart too small.

3. The temple was to be the real mercy seat of the nation. Sin and its consequences—pestilence and drouth were here to be remitted and removed. God's house was to be an object lesson. A foretaste of the new and living way whereby we come to God.

Solomon's prayer is a perfect picture of how we may bring our sins and their consequences to God. Sometimes we say that God can and will forgive sin, but that we must suffer the consequences. Solomon did not think so when he prayed for the removal of pestilence brought on by forgetting God. Shall we who have Christ for our intercessor be less believing than he? By Him who is the way, we can come to God as confidently as did Solomon saying, "When we plead this name, then hear Thou in heaven, Thy dwelling place, and when Thou hearest, forgive and give us relief from the results of our sin."

A BIT OF RETOSPECT.

Among the stories that have delighted childhood in many ages, is one of a forester whose "greenwood" mate, for some bold outlawry, had been imprisoned in a strong castle tower, and for whose deliverance the wit and energy of this faithful friend were severely taxed. At length the helpful impulse took practical shape, and tying a long silken thread to an arrow, he bent his bow and shot both arrow and thread high up into the narrow window of the tower. One end of the silken thread trailed upon the ground, the other was in the hand of his friend. He fastened the trailing thread to a hempen cord, the cord to a slender rope, and the rope to a heavy coil of stout cable. The prisoner in the tower drew gently on the thread till the the cord was in his hand; then a little stronger pull brought up the rope, the coil, and at last the cable, with which he soon set himself free.

Ten years ago when the organization of crusaders and their sympathizers took place in Cleveland, Ohio, their effort was in manner, at least, like that of the ingenious forester. The prisoner in the castle of intemperance was to be reached somehow. Organization was simply to the end of his deliverance. The loving impulse was supplemented by woman's ingenuity and the silken thread was soon made fast to the arrow of gospel temperance. It reached the narrow window of the prison-tower and found a hand outstretched to receive it. The strands of silken fibre seemed spun out of the hearts that waited so prayerfully for the answering pulsation of the prisoner's hand as he held fast the hope of deliverance. Steadily and bravely he drew upon its slender strength, while down below, the workers grown braver with this success were braiding the strong fibers of awakened and enlightened public sentiment into a cord that should in its turn bear upward the stouter rope, wound together from the strands of prevention, education and organization. The prisoner's courage grew as he drew in one after another, these sure prophecies of escape. But the rope in his hands is not yet strong enough to bear his weight. He hesitates to commit himself to its slender possibilities. As he waits, hesitant, a cheer from below reaches him. The busy workers have found a new ally. They are twisting in with the three-fold line he holds, a tractile wire. They are giving the triple strength of local, state and national prohibition to the heavy coil at their feet. His quickened energies lay hold upon its heavy weight and with a mighty purpose, born of a heavenly hope, he slowly drags upward the means of his deliverance.

Ten busy, fateful years are they which have wrought in this fashion the heavy cable which had its frail beginning in the silken thread of woman's ingenuity. Our eyes look back not to our small beginnings, but to the heaven sent impulse, large as humanity, tender as mother love, and determined as eternal right. Looking forward we see only the fulfilment of promise. "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass, and as thy day so shall thy strength be."

"All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children."

"Whosoever shall gather together against thee, shall fall for thy sake."

"No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment, thou shalt condemn."

"And the work of righteousness shall be peace: and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever. And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation and in sure dwellings and in quiet resting places."

"Trust ye in the Lord forever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength."

TO THE STAY-AT-HOME SISTERS.

DEAR SISTERS IN THE HOMES OF THE NATION: We are not unmindful of your labor of love, its self-denying, its patience, and its prayerful waiting. We are very sorry that you are kept at home, when your hearts are with us in the great convention. We mourn your absence in an assembly characterized by that unity of the spirit which is ever the atmosphere in which they live, whose minds are stayed on God, and whose hearts are bound together in His peace. We desire to make up your loss to you in so far as we are able, and have therefore arranged to faithfully report every address, speech and discussion, publishing the same in a double sized number of the THE UNION SIGNAL next week. Our stenographer who takes this heavy burden upon herself voluntarily, and our assistant editor who aids in the transcription, fulfil their task largely for love of the work and the workers. The paper will be both telephone and microphone. Your ears shall not be wearied, your heads shall not ache with the constant strain of nerve and muscle all attent to catch the words and keep the threads of discussion, but all the same there shall come to you even the murmurs of applause, and the pen portraits of those whom "having not seen, we love."

Give us credit, dear friends, for thus planning for you and your pleasure, and if there may be some stay at home sister not blessed with the weekly visits of THE UNION SIGNAL and its news from all along the line, please share your joy with her by sending for an extra copy of the convention number, that it may fill the largest mission of which it is capable, and for which it is lovingly designed.

Ever your friend,

THE EDITOR.

A PROGRAM FOR THE DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER.

Mrs. M. M. Clardy, Missouri's gentle and prayerful state evangelist, sends this program as a suggestion for Oct. 29, the day of fasting and prayer:

At five o'clock in the morning make your prayer to God in secret, that He may reward you openly. Matt. 6:6. "Long before day" Jesus prayed, and let us also follow Him in intercession. Let a bell be tolled once in six minutes to remind our people how often the soul of a drunkard passes into eternity. Let the bells of the churches ring every hour to stir to prayer all, in workshops, homes, depots, in the fields and in the stores.

The following is suggested for church services, which should have a new leader each hour. The people should have the privilege of coming and going at their own convenience.

9. a. m. Review of God's help in former times. Exod. 15:1–22; Judges 5:1–31; Psalms 18:2, 1; Chron. 22:1–30; 2 Chron. 32:21–23.

10 a. m. Confession of National sins. Isaiah 1:1–25; Dan. 9:1–19; Hab. 2:1–20; Matt. 23:1–39; Rev. 18:1–24. Licensed murder and robbery, Esther 3:8-15.

11 a. m. Plea for forgiveness of national sins. Gen. 18:16–33; Ex. 32:9–14; Jonah 3:1–10; Esther 4:15–17.

12 m. Vision of deliverance. Gen. 50:24, 25; Ex. 3:1–10; Josh. 5:13–15; 2 Kings 6:13–19.

1 p. m. Blessings of Obedience. Deut. 26:12–16; Gen. 18:19; Josh. 1:7, 8.

2 p. m. The bondage in Egypt. Taken from THE UNION SIGNAL of Oct. 9.

3 p. m. Woman's duty. Judges 4:4-24; Esth. 4:16; Prov. 31:1, 4, 5, 8, 9.

4 p. m. Service of praise and thanksgiving.

5 p. m. Doxology and benediction.

7:30 p. m. Union meetings in churches with song, scripture, prayer and testimony.

THE Boston W. C. T. U. at its last annual meeting, where an an unusually large attendance encouraged the workers, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we are profoundly grateful for the great increase of prohibitory sentiment throughout our country, and for the party, which in the providence of God, has been raised up to promote it.

That we declare our loyalty to the National president, Miss F. E. Willard, in the stand she has taken, and reaffirm the resolutions adopted at the Detroit National Convention of the W. C. T. U., which is as follows:

Resolved, That we will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of Prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

"Falter who must, follow who dare, and may God defend the right."

Resolved, That the members of the Boston W. C. T. U. greatly appreciate the privilege of receiving the greetings of our sisters of the Pacific coast, through their noble co-laborer. Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, and thank her most cordially for her stirring and eloquent words to us during her sojourn in our city, and that we return our greetings in the words of scripture, 2 Chronicles 32:7, 8.

Resolved, That we extend to our retiring secretary, Miss E. S. Tobey, our hearty thanks for her services in the past, and that we pledge to her our support in the new position to which she has been called, as president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

THE Christian Mirror publishes an answer to Rev. T. H. Tabor's article on "Passover Wine," published in THE UNION SIGNAL of Sept. 4. The Bible wine controversy is not one in which we care or feel obliged to engage, believing that the moral argument for the use of unfermented wine at the communion is the really practical one in this day and age of the world. Nevertheless, in the interest of the whole truth, we shall ere long publish the reply of the Mirror, also the chapter on Bible wines, from Dr. Field's Onios.

THE Massachusetts W. C. T. U. changed active presidents at its late convention. Miss E. S. Tobey, of Boston, steps into Mrs. Livermore's responsibilities and Mrs. Livermore is made honorary president. Her relation will still be an active one, and her interest is unchanged by position. The pleasant happenings are not all in the west, as the beautiful bronze clock and mantel ornaments in Mrs. Livermore's pretty parlor at Melrose testify. The cathedral chimes ring out twenty-four times a day the love and gratitude of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. to its retiring state president of national reputation.

BY the kind favor of its editor, Dr. T. D. Crothers, we are in possession of a complete set of the Journal of Inebriety, for the year 1884. It will be put into a bound volume at once, and make a valuable addition to our editorial library.

Captain Deborah's story of the little mission band has a sequel which I happen to know and therefore give. Senator Blair, the band's own New Hampshire senator, and everybody's who is interested in the temperance war, was appealed to for an article for their little paper, Missionary Echoes, and instead of an article sent them a generous gift, and his pleasant encouragement in these words:

These thirty four little girls will do more good than many of us who are charged with public trusts in conspicuous places, and I hope they will run and not be weary in their well doing. The evil is everywhere, and the big girls as well as the little ones better be looking pretty sharp after the young men, or the saloons will get more than their share of them. What an awful murderer rum is!

The way W. C. T. U. women are "watched" in these days would be a caution to evil doers. Here is Mrs. Mary F. Shields, Colorado's "never-say-die" president, rejoicing in a chronometer of the newest pattern, the gift of her splendid constituency. This, in addition to the well-timed women of Iowa.

Mrs. Kepley thinds that it ought to be known that the price of Dr. Baer's book on Alcohol, is between $5.00 and $7.00, and not $9.00 as has been said once.

People who say, and I am sorry that they do say it, for it is as untrue as ever falsehood can be made, that the Prohibition party is but a "Democratic annex," should read this woman's and womanly letter, even if it does say some very good things about the paper to which I contribute so regularly, but for which I am not responsible:

I must have two copies of THE UNION SIGNAL because I cannot spare the one I have, long enough for the man of the house to read it, in his place of business, to those voters whom he thinks it must convert to prohibition.

The last number is read to all comers and goers until the next one comes. They are literally baptised in tears that fall as I read, proud, grateful tears, that the best paper ever issued in any land, is the expression of the heart of true womanhood.

In the issue of October 10, Mrs. J. T. Foote, has perfectly voiced my exact convictions. My husband says—(What woman can resist quoting that household oracle?) My husband says that he believes that these women are directly inspired from God. He is himself, a part of this answer to prayer for voters, and he has had "the courage of his convictions" to come out of the Democratic party, (where he is an office holder), to the Prohibition party.

A delegate to the National Convention received the following tender and pitiful appeal in a package from her dressmaker. It was unsigned but there was an unmistakeable trace of its authorship in every line.

Go to the convention in the faith of a St. John election in 1884; to me it is tying the power of the Lord up, to speak of defeat. For nearly a quarter of a century he has been entreated, by hearts and homes made desolate by this evil, and the homes where this living death still abides. See in you grand women of opportunity, the answer to their prayers. Give them, then, who stay at home and wait, all the helpfulness possible. As I think about it God will do wondrous things if we don't retard His chariot wheels.

Captain J. F. Linscott, the temperance evangelist, has published a little song book for use in his meetings. It is a "blue book" that will be widely circulated and pay his advertises a good premium. He has filled its outside pages so full of "ads." that he can afford to, and does give it away wherever he goes.

I am astonished to hear from an apparently reliable authority that The Voice while advocating prohibition policy and St. John, heads its column with Republican electors. If true, "make a note on."

Law and Order is the name of a very creditable new temperance journal. It is, as its name implies, the organ of the law and order leagues of the land. Wo worth the day that demands them, but well worth the day that supplies the dreadful demand.

Editors, authors and philanthropists of a certain stripe are busy just now writing open letters to the W. C. T. U. in national convention assembled. In this way a good deal of campaign literature gets free circulation and nobody is harmed, nor indeed, much the wiser.

The Milford Enterprise speaks by the column, as well as "by the card" of the high character of the New Hampshire convention held at Milford last month. Mrs. New Hampshire Knox also comes in for a very just degree of commendation. This is enterprise.

The Iowa women took time by the forelock, giving it a very suggestive witch, when they followed National copy, and printed the President's address and the reports for distribution at convention. Order and good arrangement are one half the battle in assemblies of the W. C. T. U. Convention order.

For real picturesque presentation of very immaterial things, commend me to Mrs. Davidson's account of the Illinois Convention in the Fulton Co. Democrat—her husband's live prohibition paper, which is taking that Democratic prohibition county right over into St. John's ranks. She writes with the spirit, and with the understanding also.

A question comes from Indiana—one of whose W. C. T. U. sisters asks: "Has the National W. C. T. U. chosen a flower for its very own?" No, dear sister. It has been working so busily for fruitage it has not yet had time to cultivate anything just for the blossoms' sake. When these "Wars of the Roses," all fragrance and sweetness, are over, and the white lilies of peaceful prohibition are broidered on our banners, then we will choose. Until then we are "Love in a mist."

Miss Mattie Yates, the graceful organizer of Y. W. C. T. Unions in Illinois—is—no more. She ceased to be, on Tuesday, Oct. 14, when she became Mrs. L. W. McMahan. The Illinois' W. C. T. U. was at the wedding by proxy—i. e., a basket of flowers.

* * *

Mrs. Merriwether's, (Tennessee), offering to the National is a set of carbuncles, costing thirty years ago $150, the gift of an old friend long since dead; also her oldest daughter's christening cup and spoon, given her twenty-eight years ago by her god-father. "O, what a gathering of the treasures that will be." ON DUTY.

COLORADO.

The fifth annual convention of the Colorado W. C. T. U. met in the Baptist church at Pueblo, Sept. 17, 18, and 19. The church was carefully and tastefully adorned by a profusion of flowers and mottoes. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. McNeil, president of the Pueblo union and replied to by Mrs. K. D. H. Thompson, of Longmont. Mrs. S. F. Grubb, national superintendent of work among foreigners, was present and gave an address on the "Object and Work of the W. C. T. U." which brought out many new points of interest and was well received and appreciated. Mrs. Emma Malloy, accompanied by Mrs. North, of Leavenworth, was present and gave a very fine address in the opera house on the evening of the 18th, which made deep impression on the people of that city. She has given addresses at various points in the state since and attended the Wyoming convention at Cheyenne on the 23d and 24th. There was a pleasant episode that enlivened the routine of business on Thursday forenoon. Mrs. Annis, of Greeley, arose and asked that the business be set aside for a few moments and in a few well chosen words presented Mrs. Shields with a splendid gold watch with the monogram "M. F. S." on the outside and on the inside the inscription, "Mary F. Shields, our honored president, from the Colorado W. C. T. U. 1879–1884."

Mrs. S. was completely taken by surprise but recovered herself enough to express her thanks for this renewed manifestation of the love and sympathy of the sisters in this cause.

On the last evening a large reception was given by the ladies of the Pueblo union to the convention at the Fifth Avenue hotel. The spacious parlors were filled with delegates and citizens of the place, and toasts and music were the order of the day, or rather the night.

This closed the fifth convention of this young state. It was harmonious and smooth and the reports showed progress in all lines of work. The resolutions were strong and vigorous in fervor of the new Prohibition party and St. John and Daniel and full of faith in the final success of our principles.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mary F. Shields, Colorado Springs; vice president, Mrs. M. F. S. Pitman, Denver; corresponding secretary, Mrs. R. D. H. Thompson, Longmont; recording secretary, Mrs. M. L. Palmer, Boulder; treasurer, Mrs. J. R. Hanna, Denver; president first district, Mrs. Hattie Wilson, Golden; president second district, Mrs. S. F. Chamberlin, Leadville.

Special mention should be made of the courtesies shown by the proprietors of the Fifth Avenue hotel who almost surrendered the house to us. Gave the use of their parlors for our committee meetings, and in every way made us feel that we were not only guests but friends. This is a temperance house and can be commended to the travelling public as the best house in the city in all particulars. Mrs. Sperry, who took charge of entertainment, is a host and did much toward the success achieved. X.

CALIFORNIA.

PASADENA.—A little girl surprised me the other day by coming to make me a visit. I asked her how it happened she had come to see me. "Why," she replied, "you said you spected me to come to see you before a great while, and I thought this was before a great while, so I came right along." I promised Mrs. Babcock, of Illinois, who came out here for a little vacation, and worked harder than the rest of us do when school keeps, that I would write you a letter sometime, and I think this is sometime, so I'll write it now.

Our union is one year old. We have forty members; eight gentlemen, honorary members, and thirty-two ladies. All but sometimes six and sometimes twelve of the ladies ought, in fairness, to be called honorary. But we desire to have more of these members and not less of them, or, perhaps I should say more of them as well as less of them. Some of the truest-hearted temperance women we have in the place can seldom or never answer present to roll-call. But you can well believe the place is not lacking in good temperance grit when I tell you that the Good Templars, now a rushing society of eighty members, held on their way when they were obliged to hang regalia on chairs to represent the officers.

During the winter it not infrequently happened, especially at the beginning of a meeting, that all the officers would be present, and only one private member. That member happens to be my best friend, or worst enemy, time must decide, and I was painfully reminded of Artemas Ward's regiment, forty-nine officers and one private, whom they eventually drilled to death, that I resolved to forestall anything of this kind by drilling the officers, and by the time summer came along we were frequently all privates and no officers. Men fear—some men fear—to allow women to vote, apprehending that they will wish to hold office. In our society we are threatening to elect gentlemen, the ladies are so reluctant to fill the offices. Their reluctance, however, does not hinder them from filling them well. We are well officered, but poor health compels our beloved president to resign. We have for secretary a good doctor who does not dose her patients with "liquid perdition" and call it medicine.

We have no saloon—at least none that goes by that name—but the amount of liquor that is sold as a medicine is enough to stagger the sick.

There are some three hundred voters in Pasadena. Even our enemies concede that one-third of these are Prohibitionists. Two-thirds of them are on a road which will take them into that party if they do not stop traveling it.

Perhaps a little incident will give you an idea of our Band of Hope: A little fellow who visited the Band one day gave his verbal report to his mother. "You know, mamma, papa used to belong to a Band of Hope, and now he smokes every day, and some days he swears; but I tell you what it is, if you belong to that Pasadena Band you can't drink, nor smoke, nor swear, not even after you grow up." After a silence he added thoughtfully "And I don't believe you can even steal."

RHODE ISLAND.

TENTH ANNUAL MEETING AT PAWTUCKET.

The tenth annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. began its session on Wednesday, Sept. 26. There were present at this time more than one hundred, and the number was steadily increased until the formal opening of the convention, a good audience for the first session.

The front of the platform was filled with growing plants and flowers tastefully arranged; around the gallery front were bright new United States shields, each bearing the name of one of the unions in the state; under them were banners of different colors, each bearing a text of scripture appropriate to the cause and the work of the union, as for instance: "I entreat thee also, help those women," "The Lord is our lawgiver," "The Lord of Hosts is with us," etc. Over the president's chair was the motto of the union, "For God, and home and native land," flanked on either side by banners upheld by seraphs, the one banner bearing the legend, "The Bands of Hope shall rule the nation—Look out for us, we will vote for Prohibition," and the other bearing the text "Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work is pure and whether it be right." On the gallery, directly opposite the platform was a large banner bearing the legend, "The home against the dramshop," while pending beneath it was a shield, having on it the words "Y. W. C. T. U.—Our Future—Young People—Juvenile.

Mrs. E. O. Phinney, president of the Pawtucket union, bade the convention hearty welcome. In her response, Miss H. B. Luther, president of the Bristol union, suggested that as Pawtucket was the largest town in the county, it must possess the largest hearts of any town in the county.

Rev. Dr. C. W. Tomlinson was invited by the president to address the convention, and spoke briefly, speaking highly of the work the union has done and is doing, adding his welcome to the convention and its work, speaking earnest words in favor of the cause of temperance, and predicting that when this convention meets in 1890, it will meet under a union which has taken a step in advance, a union of states under the leadership of a great moral sentiment, the prohibition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

The convention was then addressed earnestly by Miss Abbie D. Monroe, of Bristol. The first hour of the afternoon session was devoted to a Bible reading by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, her subject being "Gaining Dominion." A paper prepared by Miss Phebe Jackson, first vice president of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., who was unable to be present on account of illness, gave a very gratifying history of the work of the Rhode Island union from its organization in 1875 to the present time.

Mrs. Mary Gulliver, Mrs. Sophia Little, Mrs. S. G. Clough and Miss Emily Clark, of Burrillville, who assisted in the organization of the Rhode Island union ten years ago, were present, and by request of the president made brief, interesting and encouraging remarks, interspersed with reminiscences, at the close of which the congregation joined in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Mrs. E. S. Burlingame, corresponding secretary, presented her annual report. The report states that every union but one reports temperance literature circulated; all but three or four report temperance instruction given in the public schools, or that efforts are being made to that end; all but a few report articles furnished to the press; more than half of the unions have regular organized societies for children, and nearly all the others have done work for the benefit of the children; with the exception of two denominations, a very large proportion of the churches use unfermented wine at the communion table; a deeper interest has been awakened in the department of prisons and jails; more has been done in the direction of influencing legislation than in the previous years of the union's existence; all but one union report petitions circulated, and other work done in this direction; more work than ever before has been done in the evangelistic department; this is the first year that the union has been so well represented at the fairs, having had booths at the state fair and all the county fairs but one; all the unions have held more or less public meetings. There are now in the state 42 unions (of which 9 have been organized since the last annual meeting), with with a membership of 1,153; the number of juvenile unions is 20, with a membership of 1613.

Mrs. Jennie Allyn, treasurer, reported receipts, $2,038.69; expenditures, $2,033.80, leaving a balance on hand of $4 83.

A memorial service was then held, conducted by Mrs. G. F. Martin, president of the Providence union.

The exercises of the evening session opened with a Bible reading by Mrs. H. W. Smith, who took for her subject the conflict between Goliath and David, drawing the parallel of Goliath as representing the giant of the liquor traffic, and his armor the armor of the law, while David she considered as a type of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She made the application with wonderful felicity, and closed with an appeal to all to join the union and take part in this great conflict, in which victory is sure for the right.

In her annual address, Mrs. J. K. Barney, reviewed the work of the year; recommended the establishment of a new department, that of "Relation of Intemperance to Labor and Capitol," with relative statistics. This, in some states, has been made an important power in influencing employes to demand total abstinence of their employes and the facts presented, with the financial question involved, have led many of the capitalists to the firm stand for prohibition.

She also recommended the holding of temperance institutes in various places, where several unions could be grouped together; that hygiene and heredity be made prominent, and these gatherings be emphatically training schools for our workers.

Among the encouraging results of the work, in the past year, Mrs. Barney noted the enaction by the general assembly of the law providing for scientific instruction in the public schools in hygeine and physiology, with special reference to alcoholic and narcotic poisons, Rhode Island being the fifth state to place such a law on her statute books.

After giving a brief sketch of the progress of the labor for constitational prohibition the past year, Mrs. Barney said. In Rhode Island, last winter, the first step was taken toward the enactment of constitutional prohibition, by the vote of 53 yeas to 8 nays in the house, and 31 yeas to no nays in the senate, in favor of the submission of such an amendment to the people. The friends of the movement looked hopefully to the action of the next legislation, and girded themselves for the work when the question should come for decision to the ballot box. It is now said that through failure of the notice of this not reaching one or more towns in season to be included in the warrant for the town meeting, that our work is invalidated and is all to be done over again. In order that we may act intelligently in this matter, and to provide against a disappointment similar to the one experienced in Iowa, a committee from different temperance organizations have sent a letter to his excellency Gov. Bourn, asking him to ascertain from the supreme court the exact status of the movement. In my own mind I have no doubt but what we must go back to the beginning. "What will the woman do about it?" has been asked by friend and foe. "Do!" answered one worker, "why, we shall circulate petitions again, for we enlisted for the war." Dear women, if we face another year of petition work, do not be disheartened. We take it up under many advantages over our previous efforts. We understand more thoroughly the work we have in hand, feel more deeply its importance, can answer questions concerning it more intelligently, know better how to manage our forces, and, thank God, stand each year nearer the goal of our hopes and expectations, for history and faith both teach us that in God's plan failure as well as triumph, work out final success.

The lack of means have hampered and crippled us during the last year. Much that was in my heart to have done for the superintendents in aid of their departments, much of aggressive work in unoccupied fields, has not been accomplished because we had not sufficient funds to compass it. Shall we curtail our present expenses, withdraw one of our workers from the field, place increased responsibilities on officers already overburdened, let weak and feeble unions, which have been organized at greater cost of prayer, effort and pleading than can be estimated by any mere money value, for lack of watchful care and nursing, die, or hold on to the life which seems utterly unworthy the name? Shall we, whose work has made for Rhode Island a name to be desired by other states; shall we, as we face the plans which must necessarily hinge upon this question of finance; shall we, with this great work of constitutional prohibition before us, and with all the possibilities stretching out from God's promises to those who "go forward," shall we say "We dare not undertake anything beyond what we can see and grasp?" If this is so, God help us, for at this decision we cease to walk by faith and have naught to guide our footsteps but our own imperfect vision. Oh, my women, for whose courage, bravery and faith I have so many times thanked God, shall we not rather "bring all the tithes into the storehouse,"—tithes of time, prayer influence and money, and shall we not prove Him who is our God, and who has sounded out the "Go forward."

The second day was devoted to reports of superintendents of departments, all of which were very interesting, and indicated advance all along the line.

The address of the evening by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, on "Constitutional Prohibition," was full of interest and of good points—an address characteristic of Mrs. Foster, that is saying all that need be said. At the conclusion of her address Mrs. Foster was presented with a beautiful bouquet, the gift of the Pawtucket union.

The third day's session opened with an interesting experience meeting of one hour, led by Mrs. J. K. Barney. An interesting incident of this session was the presentation to Miss Cassie Smith, by Mrs. Barney, of a bouquet for Miss Lois L. Smith, detained at home by severe illness, to which Miss Smith feelingly replied.

The election of officers was the principal event of the morning. Mrs. J. K. Barney was re-elected president unanimously, but declined the honor. Appeals were made from different parts of the hall to her to still serve the union, "Only one year more," "We sha'n't know how to exist without Mrs. Barney," and the like words, but she assured them this was no hasty action but the result of much thought and earnest prayer, and she must decline. Mrs. E. S. Burlingame, of Providence, was elected president and Miss Susan Kenyon, of Pawtucket, treasurer. Mrs. H. D. Walker was chosen corresponding secretary, but declined to serve, and the matter was referred to the executive board.

Mrs. Barney was made honorary president for life of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., and a beautiful bouquet and lovely floral crown were presented to her, significant tokens of the esteem in which Mrs. Barney is held.

In the afternoon, after the adjournment of the convention, the executive board held a long and important meeting, at which plans were laid for the work of the coming year, and much business transacted.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt spoke to a crowded house at the closing session Friday evening. A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. J. R. Trafton and choir of the Park Place Congregational church for music furnished during the convention, and the exercises were brought to a close by the singing of "Waiting for the Dawn," and the benediction by Mrs. H. D. Walker, which closed the tenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. in Pawtucket.

MAINE.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The convention of the Maine W. C. T. U. at Gardiner, was the best one ever held, and how could it be otherwise with such a galaxy of stars as Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Mary Woodbridge, Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens and Mrs. Pearsons from Nottingham, Eng.

A pleasing incident of the convention was the introduction at the close of one of the sessions, of Mrs. Green, the president of a colored W. C. T. U. of Wilmington, N. C. Mrs. Green is a colored woman of culture and refinement, once a slave. In well chosen and eloquent words she described the temperance work in the south.

Later in the week I saw her at the railroad station in Augusta, holding in her hand a brilliant bouquet. "I have been up to pick some flowers from the garden of our next president, and shall carry them to North Carolina," she said.

The work taken up at the convention was wholly in the line of the coming campaign for the constitutional amendment, and the grand result that gave a majority of sixty thousand for Prohibition on the 8th day of Sept., was largely due to the women of Maine. Miss Willard and Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens gained many votes through their convincing arguments. One man, after hearing Miss Willard speak to a vast audience in one of our leading cities, said: "I shall vote for the amendment because I am ashamed to vote against it after hearing that woman, but you can't carry it."

Mrs. Pearsons gave a powerful sermon the first afternoon of the convention, from the text "She hath done what she could."

As Mrs. Pearsons is thoroughly English in speech and style, when in the course of one of her vigorous and enthusiastic sentences she used the word "gumption," her pleased listeners smiled significantly as if to say, "That Yankee word just suits her energy and force of character."

Some amusing little incidents are connected with our recent victory.

A certain town within my knowledge was expected to cast a majority for the "nay" vote, and the temperance people were circulating the "yes" votes to all who would carry them with continued and persistent effort, but were greatly surprised when the amendment was carried three to one.

The next day the reason for this unexpected triumph was explained, for quite a number of the "intelligent foreign population who think a woman ought not to vote because she doesn't know enough, and wouldn't go to an amendment meeting to become familiar with the issues, having never considered the negative side of the rum question, voted 'yes' interpreting it 'Yes, we want rum.'"

It is a blessing, sometimes, that votes count whether there is any principle behind them or not.

MICHIGAN.

Ottowa county W. C. T. U. held its annual convention in Spring Lake Oct. 1, 2. Although not much progress has been made during the past year they all seemed determined to take new courage and go forward.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Portland, president of the Fifth district, gave a stirring address the last evening to a large audience. Several subscribers to The Union Signal were secured, and they pledged to send for 100 copies of The Issue of To-Day.

Mrs. J. M. Wheeler, State Cor. Sec.

Grand Rapids.—I have to report one more triumph for the cause of temperance. At the recent fair held here under the auspices of the Western Michigan Industrial Society, which was in all respects equal to, and in some points finer than the state fair, no liquors of any kind were sold on the ground, no wheels of fortune were allowed, and it was pronounced by all to be one of the most quiet and orderly fairs ever held here. One man started a saloon just outside the ground, but was promptly arrested by our energetic Sheriff Kinney, his place cleaned out, and he bound over to the circuit court.

The W. C. T. Unions, we now have seven, furnished warm meals, to the entire satisfaction of the people, and the fair authorities, winning many compliments, and may we not hope friends to the cause. The W. C. T. U. treasury was replenished to the amount of about $175. The attendance was the largest in twelve years, 30,000 people being on the ground one day. This was gratifying in the extreme, as it disproved the statements made by some before the fair, that to exclude liquor and wheels of fortune would prove disastrous, and make it a financial failure. The society is satisfied with the result, as their receipts more than met their expenses, and say the same rules will doubtless be enforced next year.

The women are in earnest here and are working in full sympathy with the National Prohibition party.

Literature is being distributed in large quantities. I have just sent Mrs. Smith's circular letter to all unions in the state, of which there are now 212, and I trust they will be heeded, and the work for "God and home and native land" receive a new impetus in "Michigan, my Michigan," as our loved president would say.

Mrs. J. M. Wheeler.

CONNECTICUT.

We find at this late day, that a grand temperance mass meeting in the interest of no license held under the the auspices of the state Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Hartford, Sept. 10, has not been reported. But it is not too late now to inform our friends through the columns of The Union Signal, of our doings in Connecticut.

The meeting was held in the opera house, the stage adorned with the national flag, our motto, "For God, and home and native land," and beautiful flowers. Though the day was excessively warm, the audiences were large, attentive and interested. At 9 o'clock, a devotional meeting was held conducted by Mrs. Buell, the parable of the talents was read, and by the remarks and prayers all seemed impressed with the feeling, that to consecrate all our talents, were they one or five, to the dear Lord for His work in the temperance cause, was a duty and privilege. Mrs. S. B. Forbes, our state president, through all the warm day, introduced the speakers and performed the duties of the place with her accustomed ease and grace.

The convention was opened by an earnest introductory address by Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Hartford, followed by a brilliant, telling one by Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan, on the "American home and the American saloon." Miss Willard followed, but as there was but a short time remaining, evidently reserved her fire for the evening address.

In the afternoon, the house was filled with an eager, interested audience. After the reading of the scriptures and prayer, by Rev. S. B. Forbes, of Rockville, Col. Bain was introduced and gave us one of his inimitable addresses. Mrs. Pearsons, of England, followed in a stirring appeal for no license.

One pleasing incident of the afternoon was the introduction of Mrs. Jewett to the audience, widow of Dr. Charles Jewett, formerly an earnest temperance worker and lecturer of our state. As the silver-haired lady approached the front of the platform, the whole audience arose to do honor to one of Connecticut's most earnest temperance men, and show their respect to the dear lady who bore his name. Mrs. Jewett replied pleasantly in a few words to the welcome and respect shown her.

In the evening Miss Willard gave a grand address on "Prohibition," holding her audience enrapt until after 9 o'clock, when Mrs. Lathrap wound up the day's doings with words that sent the people to their homes with new thoughts of these stirring times and of the duties devolving upon each one. Col. Bain and Mrs. Lathrap have followed up this mass meeting with a no license campaign, to the delight and profit of many audiences. Connecticut is moving on in the right direction.

Fairfield county also held a convention at South Norwalk, Sept. 16, Mrs. E Palmer, president of the county, presiding. The day was one of pleasure and profit, we trust. Some very earnest and encouraging reports were given of work done in the several towns of the county, and a dear German lady moved all our hearts by her account of the work she was doing among her own people. Our pocket books were moved too, and we gave gladly and generously of our means, that the German work might be prosecuted more vigorously. One pleasing feature of the convention was the presence of three of the clergymen of the town, who gave brief, interesting addresses, and by suggestions and pleasant encouraging words, cheered the hearts of the ladies and sent them on their way rejoicing.

The claims of The Union Signal were presented by Miss E. A. Landfear, of Mendin, resulting in eleven new yearly subscribers, and over twenty for two months, for our delightful organ of the W. C. T. U.

In the evening Col. Bain spoke to a large audience in the opera house, who were delighted and moved by his stirring appeals.

E. A. Landfear.

West Winsted.—We have again licensed our beautiful town to sell rum. Yes, I say we temperance people are to blame in a great measure for the defeat. We feel like humbling ourselves and hanging our heads that we are obliged to have a town licensed that has in days gone by, been noted for its temperance record. Would to God that we had the ballot that we might cast it on the side of no license. Then not alone would we pray, but vote also.

M. A. P.

OREGON.

Oregon City.—An informal meeting of ladies of Oregon City was held in the Congregational church Friday afternoon, Sept. 12, for the purpose of forming a W. C. T. U. Mrs. A. R. Riggs, president of the Portland W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Chaplin Stubbs, superintendent of evangelistic work, and work among sailors and soldiers, of Oregon, conducted the meeting.

Mrs. L. C. Driggs, was elected president; Miss E. S. Latometh, first vice president; Mrs. Laura Pope, corresponding secretary; Mrs. E. M. Rockwood, recording secretary; Mrs. A. M. Porter, treasurer.

A public meeting was held in the same place in the evening and addressed by Mrs. Riggs and Mrs. Stubbs.

The spirit of the meeting was earnest and encouraging, and we trust the cause of temperance may be promoted by this banding together of the women. But remembering the words of the King of Israel, "Let not him that girdeth on the harness boast, as he that putteth it off," so we will wait for the future to tell what good we may do.

Mrs. E. M. Rockwood, Rec. Sec.

OHIO.

Cincinnati.—Please give place to the following resolutions, unanimously adopted at a recent meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Smith and Nixons.

Whereas, We members of the W. C. T. U., of Cincinnati, recognize the call of God to separation from all evil and are deeply conscious of our responsiblity to Him concerning this greatest of all evils, and not desiring to occupy a doubtful position on the subject in this community, therefore,

Resolved, That the principles underlying the National Prohibition party, deserve our warmest approval, and that having already given ten years service to the object sought to be attained by it, we are prepared to serve another ten, if necessary, or until prohibition of the liquor traffic is secured.

Resolved, That we welcome glady this new ally, that we feel an honest pride in the men whose clear perceptions of right, and whose Christian courage have led them to take this step, that we have hope in a party that acknowledges allegiance to God, and proposes with His blessing to free our beloved land from the curse of drink.

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the resolution passed by the W. C. T. U. at Detroit, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That we will lend our influence to that party by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect our homes.

Resolved, That we endorse the resolution of the Prohibition party, calling upon all Christian people to observe the 29th day of October as a day of fasting, humiliation and confession before God, on account of the misery and crime resulting from alcoholism.

Resolved, that the noble record of our standard bearers, St. John and Daniel, entitle them to our earnest sympathy and support, and furnish ample assurance of their continued fidelity to "God and home and native land."

Mrs. Lucy M. McKenzie, Sec.

NEW YORK.

After a large and enthusiastic two days' meeting at Genesee, N. Y., during which Miss Narcissa E. White, of Penn., addressed us, the convention passed the following resolut ons:

Whereas, The Democratic party in its platform openly declares itself opposed to the principle of prohibition, and the Republican party refuses to recognize it, and has treated the requests of the W. C. T. U. of the United States with silent contempt, therefore

Resolved, That we the representatives of the W. C. T. U. of Alleghany county, New York, will favor with our sympathies and our prayers that political party that has the courage to do right regardless of circumstances, and to declare itself the open foe of the curse that brings nothing but sorrow, shame and misery to so many wives, mothers and children throughout our native land.

Resolved, That we lend our influence and encouragement to the St. John clubs in our towns and co-operate with them whenever invited.

Resolved, That we recommend the furnishing of refreshments at the polls at the town elections.

Resolved, That we recommend our local unions to use the course of readings, suggested by Miss White, and prepared by our national convention in order that we may inform ourselves and be able to carry on this work more understandingly and successfully.

Mrs. J. R. Freeland, Sec. pro. tem.

ARIZONA.

NOTICE OF ANNUAL MEETING.

The first annual meeting of the territorial union of the W. C. T. U. of Arizona will be held at Phenix, Nov. 13 and 14, 1884. By order of the president.

Mrs. A. D. Adams, Cor. Sec.

Prescott.—The reports of officers and superintendents of departments given at our late annual meeting were very satisfactory. Those of the superintendents of press, temperance literature and juvenile work, were full of interest and encouragement. A Band of Hope of 30 members was reported. Officers for the ensuing year are, president, Mrs. Hazeltine; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Bowers; treasurer, Mrs. Wells; Mrs. Peters was appointed agent for The Union Signal. C.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Warren County.—Has just held a grand campaign mass meeting. The court house was full long before the hour of meeting and the audience was composed of the muscle and brain of our town. Meeting opened with prayer by Rev. S. Parsons. The glee club sang, "When Christians will vote as the pray." Mr. Bucklin, chaplain of the Franklin Reformatory Home for Inebriates, was introduced and said he "appeared as one who had felt the grasp of the monster rum, but had been saved by the power of the Almighty, through the agency of the Franklin Home * * * and felt it his duty to do what he could to stop this evil." He was listened to with deep attention. The glee club then sang, "The River of Prohibition," when Samuel P. Godwin, president of Franklin Home, followed in a soul stirring speech, moving his audience to tears as he related the success he had witnessed in connection with his work of reforming inebriates, and concluded by giving his reasons for voting for St. John and Daniel. Mr. Godwin addressed the gospel temperance meeting in Belvidere, on Sunday afternoon, in a thrilling manner. The reform club room was literally jammed and the best order prevailed.

A St. John club formed in Oxford and one in Little Oxford through the efforts of ex-Judge Monon.

Dover.—September 24, a Prohibition flag was unfurled across Blackwell street. Owing to the death of a prominent citizen, the booming of cannon was dispensed with. Meeting opened by singing of "Coronation" by the girls of the choir. Prayer by Rev. Mr. Herd, "Golden grain" sung by a full choir. Address by Rev. Mr. Hater. Singing. "God speed the right." Speech by Rev. Mr. Herd. Singing, "America." A speech by candidate for sheriff received with hearty cheers. Singing, "Trusting the Lord," and "It will be better farther on." Thus closed a Prohibition mass meeting reverently and prayerfully. Surely the good time is coming right along.

NORTH CAROLINA.

MRS. MARIA UPHAM DRAKE AT ASHEVILLE.

How seldom the name of the "Old North State" greets the eye in the pages of The Union Signal! This is partly owing to the fact that North Carolina has been so backward in becoming organized, but not wholly so, for much has been done which has not reached the ear of the public. Pencil points have not been sharpened as they should have been.

We have held our second state convention at Asheville in "The Land of the Sky." We cannot tell of our interesting excursion to this lovely place, of the royal hospitality and unsurpassed kindness of the citizens of Asheville, or of our interesting convention, but can only speak of the central figure and spirit of the convention—Mrs. Maria Upham Drake.

She delivered three lectures on three successive evenings. Her subjects were varied but converging upon the one central point. They were full of history, were logical and scientific, closing with irresistible appeals to our people.

Mrs. Drake is an orator of the Anna Dickinson type and her eloquence will not fail to thrill the most intelligent audience. Mary C. Woody.

MISSOURI.

CONVENTION OF FIRST DISTRICT.

The second semi-annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the First congressional district will be held in the C. P. church, Kirksville, Oct. 28, 29, 1884. A fine program, including addresses by Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Miss Rose Phillips and Dr. Bessie Cushman, is announced.

Knob Noster.—We have just closed the fifteenth month of our existence, and a word or two in regard to our status, as a union may be acceptable. Our union of sixteen members, has had a hand to hand conflict in some matters. We have gained some new members; have lost some by removals and otherwise. We take in our union eight or ten copies of The Union Signal. Two sent to my address are circulated and then placed upon the table of Y. W. C. T. U. reading room, these two copies being paid for out of our treasury.

During our existence as a union, we have had as lecturers, Mrs. Hoffman, (our state president), twice; Mrs Laura Fixen, twice. Mr. Holt worked with us one week. Remonstrances against saloons have been circulated until we have no dram shop saloon, but we have three gallon houses, and drug stores to contend against. We circulated petitions for compulsory education and in the meantime have, after some months of quiet but p ersistent effort, succeeded in getting permission to put temperance lesson books in all of our public schools including the school for colored children at a cost of about $40. In the school for colored children we put Miss Colman's catechism which had been used in teaching our Band of Hope, now formed into Cadets of Temperance, regularly equipped, with spears etc.

We have distributed much literature in public places, as well as to individuals. Our headquarters, the Y. W. C. T. U. reading room, is comfortably fitted up, but as yet only moderately supplied with reading matter, such as we desire. A number of entertainments of different kinds have been given by the societies. Both are free from debt, and a little money in each treasury. We expect to work at the polls on election day, and also to have our Cadets of Temperance in the field on that occasion. Mrs. Millie C. Gilbert,

Cor. Sec. and Supt. Press Work 5th Cong. Dist.

Monroe City.—Our W. C. T. U. has been very timid in reporting its work, but I have summoned courage to report one item.

Father Hagan, president of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, and a resident priest of Chicago, is a native of our county, almost of our town. As such, and because of his reputation as an orator, our citizens were anxious to hear him on the temperance question. Our union invited him to lecture, asking that the proceeds might be given to a sick and needy widow living near his old home. Father Hagen kindly accepted, even paying his own expenses from Chicago and return. It is seldom that so much enthusiasm has been shown. A large crowd from town and country gathered to hear their old friend and comrade, after fifteen years of absence in this and foreign lands.

In forcible language and clear logic Father Hagan showed the evils of intemperance, its extent, power, etc., and then emphasized the remedy, total abstinence, in a way which we trust left an impress on many whom we have never before been able to reach or influence. A nice sum was realized for the widow.

Our union felt Father Hagan's kindness in coming so far and freely, the more because we are in our membership entirely Protestant. But we have taken fresh courage and feel that in this war with King Alcohol all other differences should be forgotten.

We have no saloons in our town, but can any one give us helpful advice as to closing a gallon beer shop?

Mary Burnham, Cor. Sec.

Carthage.—The second semi-annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the Thirteenth congressional district of Missouri convened in the M. E. church of Springfield, Greene county, Wednesday, Sept. 24.

A good delegation was in attendance; sessions were very interesting and instructive. Mrs. M. E. Robinson gave a fine address on "Scientific Temperance Instruct on in Our Schools." Judge Ritchey spoke of erring sons, which caused many eyes to fill with tears. Miss Constable, of Pierce City, read a paper on "Temperance Literature and Union Signal Work." An address on "Heredity and Hygiene," by Mrs. Dr. Smith, of Springfield, and Dr. Fannie Williams, of Joplin, both of which were requested for publication. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. Dittrick, of Springfield; the response by Mrs. Anderson, of Pierce City. Rev. W. H. Campbell, of Carthage, made the principal address of the first evening. A paper on "Press Work," prepared by Mrs. Storrs, state superintendent of press work, was read by Mrs. S. R. Foster, also an article on same topic by Mrs. Shoemaker, of Pierce City. Paper on "Scientific Temperance Instruction," prepared by Miss Rose Phillips, state secretary, was read by Mrs. Clara Hoffman. A discussion upon finance and the needs of the district, opened by Mrs. S. R. Foster, resulted in pledges from unions amounting to $107. The last evening we were treated to the finest temperance address we ever listened to from Mrs. Clara Hoffman, state president, who also sandwiched in many good things throughout the convention, which was pronounced a success.

Resolutions were passed committing us to prohibition and woman suffrage. Mrs. S. A. Case, Dist. Sec.

Maryville.—The W. C. T. U. of Nodaway county, have just held their first convention in this place, Miss Belle Downey presiding, assisted by Mrs. M. Dorr, county president. We open all our exercises with Bible reading, singing and prayer, fully realizing where our great strength lies.

The first thing taken up was the best way of conducting meetings. This was discussed at some length. Miss Jennie Newby spoke on relations of temperance to the church. Her remarks were plain, forcible and to the point. The address of welcome, by Mrs. S. Powell, was responded to by Mrs. Belle Downey. Then the audience listened spell bound for an hour to the grand, noble, soul-stirring words of Miss Newby. Thanks to Rose Phillips for sending her just when we needed her so much.

Rev. Lucius Hawkins delivered a lecture on "Prohibition" the second evening. His address was clear, earnest, and convincing to all who are not persistently wedded to party politics.

Convention adjourned to meet again in October next, at Hopkins, to hold our annual county convention, exact time to be specified hereafter.

Mrs. Belle Custer, Rec. Sec.

Pierce City.—Our union numbers fi ty, all for St. John for president, and Dr. Brooks for governor. Dr. Brooks spoke in our town Sept. 20, to a large audience He made votes as well as friends, by his earnest and expressive address. We have a Prohibition club of 41 members. Two ladies of our union, went to the country last week, and did some temperance work, obtained twenty signatures to the voter's pledge and gave out 163 papers; most of them were The Issue of Today. The W. C. T. U. carry on a temperance Sunday school distribute between two and three hundred temperance papers every week, and are hard at work obtaining signers to the petition asking the legislature to enact laws requiring temperance scientific instruction in our public schools. Our principal work is with the children, believing them to be the hope of our country. We observed Oct. 7, as a day of prayer and felt we were blessed in doing so.

Mrs. H. C. Shoemaker, Supt. Press Work.

Huntsville.—Last Sunday night Mr. C. J. Holt closed a short series of temperance meetings here after organizing a W. C. T. U., a Band of Hope and a Reform Club. Our town has about two thousand inhabitants and four or five flourishing saloons, that have wrought us woe, want and ruin enough, we think, and by God's help we now hope to redeem our town ere long. A hall has been rented, a reading room will be at once established, and our work will move steadily on.

Mrs. Mary Taylor, Cor. Sec.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston.—Whereas, The Boston W. C. T. U. at its annual meeting held on October 13, 1884, unanimously adopted the following:

Resolved, That we are profoundly grateful for the great increase of prohibitory sentiment throughout our country, and for the party which, in the providence of God, has been raised up to promote it.

Resolved, That we declare our loyalty to the national president. Miss F. E. Willard, in the stand she has taken, and reaffirm the resolution adopted at the Detroit national convention of the W. C. T. U., which is as follows:

Resolved, That we will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes. "Falter who must, follow who dare, and may God defend the right." Therefore,

Resolved, That we hold out our hands to the women composing this organization with sympathetic gratitude, and give thanks to God, that they will stand with the Massachusetts Women's Christian Prohibitory League for the Prohibition party, that, when all other political parties are recreant to the demands of home and humanity, can seek as much protection for our boys as is granted to sheep and pig iron.

Adopted October 16, 1884, by the Mass. W. C. P. L.

E. M. H. Richards, President,

Mary O. Stevens, Secretary.

NEBRASKA.

The following resolutions were adopted unanimously, by rising vote, at the meeting of the state W. C. T. U. in Omaha, October 13.

Resolved, That this state convention do most highly appreciate the action of the Prohibition convention of the state of Nebraska, held at Lincoln, September 11, 1884, endorsing the work of the W. C. T. U. as effective, and bidding it God speed, the same being sustained by a rising vote: also that we cheerfully render all possible service to the political party in our state, which furnishes the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

Resolved, That believing the present Prohibition party furnishes that embodiment of principles we pledge to it our influence and support. Conscious that we do not possess the law-making power and feeling our need of the same, we would urge that all honorable, means be used to bring about the time when we can vote as well as work and pray to protect our homes.

ILLINOIS.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE NORTHERN ILLINOIS CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

Resolved, That we recognize the prohibition movement either by statutory enactment or constitutional amendment as being the only available means in the present attitude of contending social, moral and political elements by which the tide of drunkenness and consequent crime and misery can be stayed; and hence we pledge our hearty co-operation in the movement in all our social, religious and political relations, by our deeds as well as our words, by our votes as well as our prayers.

Resolved, That we bid God speed the work of the W. C. T. U.

W. B. Lincott,
H. H. Stowe,
J. L. Towner,

Carlinville.—The hearts of our temperance workers were greatly cheered at our union temperance meeting Sunday evening Oct. 5, by an address from our Presbyterian pastor, Rev. W. H. Hillis, on "Are we ready for Prohibition?" It would take too much space to give you all he said but after showing clearly that all other methods had failed he made this most positive declaration. "The party that declares against prohibition must go down, the party that ignored it would meet a like fate, and the party that adopted it must eventually succeed," and thus he prophesied not by any political sagacity but by the word of God.

We greatly enjoy our union servicess. Our ministers are committed to the work and are in hearty sympathy with our union work, as was evinced by their voluntarily proposing to take a collection for our benefit at each one of our union service. Our work is only limited by our faith and confidence in God. S. S. Hunter.

Mackinaw.—On September 7, a W. C. T. U. was organized here by Mrs. E. E. Orendorff, with a membership of 24.

Earnest temperance men and women present gave it hearty encouragement and the pastor's remarks gave no uncertain sound. The officers are president, Mrs. Etta Puterbaugh; secretary, Emma Lines.

Mackinaw has her second year of anti-license. There was not a temperance man who would qualify for office in town, so the Prohibitionists agreed to support the old party ticket if the town board would banish the saloons which they promised to do. The last to leave was a German. The board asked him to stay. Mr. Puterbaugh, a rich farmer and strong Prohibitionist, said to the store keeper who was a member of the board, that he would set up a store and undersell him and to the lumber merchant who was another member of the board that he would set up a lumber yard and undersell him if they did not make the German saloon keeper leave, so the German had to go.

Marengo.—The W. C. T. U. of Marengo had a tent during fair week and provided refreshments in the way of sandwiches, baked beans, pies, doughnuts, tea, coffee and lemonade. The profits, which amounted to a little more than a hundred dollars, will go for the benefit of our reading room and other local work.

Through the influence of our W. C. T. U. women all intoxicants, including cider, were kept out of the fair grounds, and the universal testimony of our business men is, that never before was so little drunkenness on our streets during fair week.

Soon after the fair one of our merchants accosted our president and said he felt that it was due to the efforts of the W. C. T. U. women that our streets were kept so free from disorder and drunkenness, and our local paper, the Marengo Republican, said, "The W. C. T. U. had the control of the eatables and drinkables and there was a reign of sobriety never before equalled during our fairs."

Peoria.—The reports given at the recent annual meeting are most encouraging.

The committee on evangelistic work reported devotional meetings about 200. This included the regular gospel meetings on Tuesday evenings, the Thursday meetings, Sunday evening meetings during a great part of the year, with meetings at the workhouse on Sunday afternoons. The superintendent of juvenile work reported earnestly and encouragingly for that branch of the work. Mrs. E. C. Ely, for the flower mission, reported it to have continued at work to some extent during the year, but more largely during the summer months, sending out every Saturday to many sick beds bouquets, each bearing a text of scripture and greeting from the W. C. T. U. The committee on membership reported 200 pledged members, while the visiting committee and that on distributing temperance literature had not been idle. Much courage was felt in entering upon the new year and a great increase of interest is hoped for from the coming state convention. The result of much of our work is written in renewed lives and happy homes.

The treasurer reported total receipts $2.046.73, expenditures, $1,994.62.

Mrs. Tyng, chairman of committee on coffee and lunch rooms reported receipts, $3.800.18, expenses $2,932 84, profits, $867.34.

Patronage was reported encouraging and steady in spite of hard times.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Miss Hood and Miss Gilbert will be absent from headquarters next week at the National Convention.

—Mrs. L. S. Rounds has the month of November filled with engagements. Dates are now being arranged for in December.

—Rev. W. T. Stowe has prepared a lecture upon the advantages to be derived from the introduction of temperance into public schools. Unions will do well to secure his services. Apply at headquarters for dates.

—Illinois will seat 28 delegates in the National Convention. Four state officers, three superintendents of departments, the president of the W. T. P. A. the editor of The Union Signal, eighteen delegates and one delegate at large.

—All superintendents of Bands of Hope who have not reported their names and names of their Bands will please do so at once, to secretary at Headquarters, 161 La Salle street, Chicago; a list of such names is to be published in this year's report.

—Miss Hood desires to say in response to numerous and urgent inquiries that the Band of Hope Manual, published by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association is now ready, that she "can recommend it unhesitatingly as just what Band of Hope workers have so long and earnestly desired. Do not fail to order a supply at once." See publisher's department, page 13, for full description and price.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

There are now twenty-two local W. C. T. Unions in Colorado.

The women of the state W. C. T. U., at their late convention, gave Mrs. Shields, their president for five years, a gold watch.

The Central W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis, at a late meeting, voted to take a share of stock in The Union Signal. "And yet there is room."

The W. C. T. U. of Lompoc, Cal., petitioned the county board of education to adopt text book on the physiological effects of alcohol and tobacco, and the prayer has been granted.

The union just organized by Mrs. Dr. Morris, of Buffalo, at Akron, N. Y., starts out as all well regulated unions should, with The Union Signal to help it keep house.

The Hon. W. H. Goodale and wife were in attendance upon the Homer district conference, recently in session at Lisbon, La., in the interest of the W. C. T. U. and and succeeded in organizing a union at Lisbon. At several points hereabouts Mrs. Goodale has been faithfully at work of late, organizing unions.

On Sept. 12, eight ladies from Holden, Mo., W. C. T. U., in company with the district president, visited Kingsville and organized a W. C. T. U. Only eleven members were enrolled that day, but as they were all earnest Christian women they used their influence for the cause, and the next meeting reported a membership of 19. Mrs. Judge Fryer is president, and Miss Hannah Miller corresponding secretary.

A W. C. T. U. for Garrett county, Maryland, was organized at Oakland, on the 27th inst., with the following officers: President, Mrs. Rev. Benjamin Ison; corresponding secretary, Miss A. The Governmental Liquor Traffic, a most able article showing the partnership of the government in the liquor business, also extracts from the Internal Revenue Reports giving the exact amount of revenue derived from distilled and fermented liquors for each year from 1863 to 1883, the Raster resolution,—the propositions of Messrs. Blaine and Logan, with other facts of interest. Specially adapted for general circulation. Price 40c. per hundred, postpaid.

Now ready, Band of Hope Manual and Text Book. It contains twenty-four lessons, twelve for pupils of the grammar school grade, and twelve primary lessons. Besides these it contains opening exercises and notes and anecdotes illustrative of the lessons, in addition to full instructions for organizing Bands of Hope. The lessons have been submitted to and have passed the inspection of a committee of eminent physicians, which ensures their scientific accuracy.

The two grades of lessons have been prepared by Mary B. Willard and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. Mrs. Crafts is a primary teacher of national reputation, and these lessons are in her best style.

They will be issued quarterly, price 5c. per number. All Bands of Hope should be supplied with them.

New Pledge Card.—We have issued a new and very handsome pledge card, printed in two colors, price 60c. per hundred postpaid. Just the thing for W. C. T. U. workers to carry. In single and triple form. We also keep in stock Murphy pledge cards and ribbons, Band of Hope Badges, sample 10c. National Drink Chart, price 10c. Leaflets, etc., for distribution. Handsome lithographs of the Prohibition candidates, price 25c. each, the two for 40c. postpaid.

Miss Frances E. Willard has written an article entitled "The National Prohibition Party, or St. John vs. the Demijohn," which ought to be widely circulated by all friends of the third party movement. In leaflet form price 50c. per hundred, post paid.

The W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land," should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

PYÆMIA

Is the most virulent form of blood-poisoning. Less speedily fatal, but not less certainly so, is the vitiation of the blood of which the first symptoms are Pimples, Sties, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions. When the taint of Scrofula gives warning of its presence by such indications, no time should be lost in using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the only perfect and reliable medicine for the purification of the blood.

SCROFULA

Is a foul corruption in the blood that rots out all the machinery of life. Nothing will eradicate it from the system and prevent its transmission to offspring but Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I WANT AGENTS TO SELL THE MISSOURI STEAM Washer

And to intelligent men and women of good character will afford a liberal chance to test it before paying, and return at my expense if not satisfactory. It works on a new principle, and is, by common consent, the only washer worthy the name.

The Omio Furniture Co., Omio, Ka., write, "We did two large washings in three hours. We cannot say enough in its praise. Send six at once. We took the orders yesterday."

Mrs. S. E. Jordan, Harrold, Dak., writes, "Have washed everything from a lace collar to duck overalls. Does its work perfectly. Send 6 more at once."

Jac. Neumann, San Antonio, Texas, writes, "Am here to get the last 12 Ship 24 more at once." Mrs. Bettie Barnett, Central Grove, Miss., writes. "It has surpassed my most sanguine expectations."

Parker & Lewis, Nelsonville, O., write, "Ship 25 more at once. Mrs. Lewis will order again in a few days," and that's the way hundreds are writing.

This is no "penny-wiggle jim-crack," and no "penny-wiggle" agents are wanted, but men and women who amount to something, and want business, are invited to send for illustrated circular. J. WORTH.

Signal Notes.

The drink bill in Philadelphia amounts to $1,000,000 more than the entire rental of the city, and the retail is $23,000,000.

It is said that every member of the Illinois bar both drank and gambled when Judge David Davis first joined it. He having made up his mind to do neither, has outlived them all.

There are 11,000 saloons in Berlin. The result of this "important industry" in Germany according to the Cologne Gazette is, that 10,000 persons die annually of delirium tremens.

"Economy, Pa., has had no saloon or liquor sold during the past fifteen years, and in all that time there has not been a single arrest for any cause. Verily, prohibition prohibits crime."

Dr. Baer, of Berlin, declares that in the German states persons in a state of intoxication perpetrate 46 per cent. of all murder; 64 per cent. of all cases of manslaughter; 74 per cent. of all cases of personal injury; 60 per cent. of all cases of rape, and 75 per cent. of all other crimes against morality.

The liquor sellers of Brooklyn, N. Y., had a procession recently; the Black Maria, the penitentiary wagon, which had taken its cargo in as the procession came along, followed in its rear for about a mile very appropriately.

The London Lancet the highest medical authority on the globe, and an exceedingly conservative journal says: "Alcohol, as a general therapeutic agent, is being subjected everywhere to most suspicious treatment by physicians and by boards of guardians alike. It has still friends who think it indispensable either to preserve health or to cure disease; but the wisest physicians show themselves chary either on taking or recommending much of it."

The Chronicle says: "King Quaco Duah of Ashantee" is dead, and in honor of his funeral 300 of his subjects have been killed. We do things differently in this country." To keep our president in power (alive) we employ a whisky guild to kill 100,000 of his "subjects" every year; if he dies, we have a grand congressional $30,000 drunk at his funeral procession. Ashantee is only about twice as large as San Bernardino county, and in slaughtering 300 people now and then, it copies our mixed Christian and whisky civilization, as well as can be expected.

One of the commonest arguments in favor of the system of licensing dram shops, is the large revenue derived from it, which the state can then turn around and expend in supporting its paupers, its insane, its criminals, and other objects of pity, mainly made such in consequence of the omnipresent temptation of the open grog shop. To this reasoning, St. John says: "Granting this to be true, I insist that we have no right to consider the question of revenue at a cost of the sacrifice of principle. All the revenue ever received from such a source will not compensate for a single tear of a heart-broken mother at the sight of her drunken son as he reels from the door of a licensed dram shop—Ex.

During the last gubernatorial campaign in Kansas, Gov. St. John was to speak at Leavenworth. Before leaving his home and family at Topeka, in the after dinner hour, his thoughts and words were of the life to come; and he said: "I believe if God were to call me to-night I am ready to go." He soon left for his appointment, and was met by an escort some distance from the city, which was also his body guard to the same point upon his return after the meeting. Upon leaving him they expressed their joy that he was in safety, saying: "We have suffered great anxiety, as your life has been threatened by the enemy." To their surprise he took from his pocket a letter of threat received by him three days before, and said: "Had it been accomplished, I might have done more for the cause than I can do in the flesh. I did not think of breaking my engagement."

HER FIRST MISSTEP.

A lady—if appearances and costly garments indicate social position — attracted attention on Fifth avenue, New York, by staggering along with a baby in her arms. When at last she fell to the sidewalk a woman rescued the infant and sent for a policeman. The unconscious mother was locked up in the Fifth street station house. The child, a beautiful one, jumped up and crowed when placed on the sergeant's desk, and seemed equally pleased when an agent of the society for the Prevention of cruelty to children arrived to take care of him.

The mother, looking pale and sorrowful, was next day brought up in the Essex Market court. Baby was also there, playing with a big policeman's whiskers. The prisoner, in a low voice, gave her name, age (she is about twenty two years), and residence to the justice.

A well dressed young man whispered to Judge White, "She is my wife; it is her first misstep; it will never happen again, Judge."

"You seem to be very respectable people," said the court, after the story had been told, "how did it happen this time?"

Hesitatingly, and with great embarrassment, the lady replied: "I hardly know how it happened. I never drank a drop before in my life. I went to pay a visit to a friend in Jersey City on Monday, and she made me drink two glasses of wine. I came over the ferry all right, but when I got out of the cross town car my head went round, and—but, thank God baby is safe."

Tears began to choke the fair prisoner's utterance. Her husband's arms slipped lightly around her, and he said:

"Can she go, judge?"

"Yes," answered the court. "She has been terribly punished, I feel very sorry for both of you."

Then the couple stepped down; baby was once more placed in its mothers's arms, and was almost smothered by her tears and caresses.—New York Herald.

THE majority tor the Canada temperance act has already reached 20,588. The proposal is already being made that the next step to be taken by temperance workers should be a request for a plebiscite on on the question of prohibition. The people of Canada do not want any legislation on the temperance question that is not progressive legislation. The results already attained show that the country would sustain a law of total prohibition, and when parliament meets it will have before it a practical demand for such a law—a demand that must not and will not be ignored.

WM. C. Todd, of Atkinson, N. H., has given $1,000 to found a scholarship at Dartmouth, of which no one who uses intoxicating drinks or tobacco can have the benefit.

BLAINE has got above voting on small, insignificant questions, such as saving men from a drunkard's hell, and wives and children from the poor house. He only votes on national questions—Sheep!

MR. JAMES C. YOUNG, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, president of the North Western Loan and Real Estate Investment Co., offers some choice investments to our readers. He can give figures from which handsome profits can be realized. His financial standing is beyond question, and we cordially recommend any of our friends who desire to invest large or small sums to communicate with Mr. Young.

BOOK OF THE DOG.—We have received from the Associated Fanciers, 237 South Eighth street, Philadelphia, a copy of their Dog Buyers' Guide. It contains a finely executed colored frontispiece; well drawn engravings of nearly every breed of dog, and all kinds of dog furnishing goods. We should judge that the book cost to produce a great deal more than the price asked—15 cents—and would advise all our readers who are interested in dogs to send for the book.

Facts and Reasons.

Effects Produced by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and by Nothing Else so Perfectly.

It strengthens and invigorates sufferers from enervation, languor, weakness, and mental depression.

It has an almost magical effect in curing eruptive and cutaneous disorders.

It eradicates from the blood the taint of that terribly destructive disease, Hereditary Scrofula.

It expels from the system the baneful poison of Mercury, which is as serious as that of Scrofula.

It purifies and regenerates the life current polluted by the corruption of contagious disease.

It stimulates the secretory organs, effects the removal of all impurities from the blood and makes it new, rich, and pure.

It restores health to sufferers from thin blood and impaired vitality.

It saves, by its thorough purification of the blood, from Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and Tubercular Consumption.

It cures Scrofulous affections of the Liver and Kidneys, and their symptoms, Jaundice and Dropsy.

It cures Scrofulous Catarrh, Itching Humors, and the purulent Sores caused by Scrofula.

It clears and improves the complexion.

It neutralizes the poisons left in the system by Diphtheria and Scarlet Fever, and restores the debilitated patient to perfect health and vigor.

It is, in short, an unfailing remedy for all disorders arising from impurity of the blood, where such disorders have not become so deeply seated as to be beyond all human aid.

Advantages that AYER'S SARSAPARILLA Possesses over all Others.

It is composed of the most efficacious alterative, diuretic, and tonic drugs known in pharmacy, among which are the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Stillingia, and the Iodides of Potassium and Iron.

It is a highly concentrated medicine, scientifically and honestly compounded so as to secure to it the highest degree of activity and perfect uniformity.

It has received the hearty endorsement of the leading men in the medical profession, who recognize it as a standard pharmaceutical preparation, and prescribe it in their practice.

It contains no poisonous minerals or other dangerous drugs, the use of which for temporary effect in the many crude and cheap mixtures sold as alteratives, produces effects on the system often worse than the diseases they are offered to cure.

It costs no more than any other, but would still be the cheapest blood-purifying medicine in the world, even were its price three times greater, since it is the only one that does "real, lasting good."

It has been before the public for nearly forty years, and has constantly grown in popular favor, both at home and abroad, until there is hardly a place in the civilized world where it has not a host of friends, made so by its marvellous cures.

It has been used in, and approved by, at least 4,000,000 families in the United States, and 7,000,000 throughout the world. Women have especial reasons for commending it.

It has proven its potency in curing obstinate, deeply-seated, and long-standing diseases caused by vitiation of the blood. It must not, however, be expected and is not claimed that a single bottle will cure such cases; but patients should persevere in the use of this remedy until a radical cure is effected.

It is the only blood-purifier that has won [illegible] retained the confidence of the people [illegible] countries, where such medi[illegible] required.

[illegible] of its class that sailors, as [illegible] my faith in — and they are right.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Education through the eye is a large factor in all modern teaching. Vice has always used this powerful agency, alluring to the scenes of dissipation within by means of an attractive exterior.

The flood of vicious literature, so debasing in its influence, invites perusal through attractive illustrations.

This power is being turned to a better purpose as Christian people have become aware of its efficiency.

A notable example of this is seen in the publication of an attractive paper, containing full page illustrations and entitled "ILLUSTRATED TEMPERANCE TALES."

This monthly sheet is admirably adapted for scattering among the masses, for Sabbath schools, for gospel meetings and for all ages. Its illustrations [illegible] act the eye.

[illegible]s incidents, stories, etc., touch the heart. Supplied at one cent a copy, it has found a circulation of many thousands. If not among its large list of subscribers, send for free sample copies.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 42. CHICAGO, OCTOBER 30, 1884. $1.75 PER YEAR.

THE resolutions of acknowledgement to the citizens of St. Louis are by mistake omitted from our own list. Also one memorializing our departed workers, and another recognizing the high value of the work done by the national and other organizers in the south and west. A warm tribute was paid to all.

"'Impedimenta' to the rear," was the answer of the most prominent man in the country, to a lady who was pleading in most graceful fashion for a recognition by statesmen and rulers, of the womanhood of the country. Whatever we may think of his knighthood, it will be hard to recognize his kingship.

AMONG those friends and wellwishers who were introduced to the convention were the venerable Rev. Dr Post, so long and so dear a pastor to the First Congregational church of St. Louis, and the Rev. Bishop Bowman, of the M. E. church, whose benignant face shows little trace of age. The greatest regret was expressed by all who have known his loyalty to the temperance cause, that the Chancellor of Washington University, the Rev. Dr. Eliot, was too ill to speak personally the kind words which he sent by letter. He is one of whom a very honorable political opponent says, "He has had the good fortune to be always right on all the great questions of the day."

WE are glad to be told on the authority of Mrs. Florence Savage, of the Akron (Ohio) W. C. T. U. and Hon. Ferdinand Schumacher, of the same place, that Governor St. John instead of going to Akron by a Sunday train arrived there on Saturday evening, and that no excursion trains came to Akron on that Sunday; also that had Gov. St. John not been the Prohibition candidate no one would have considered his Sunday speech there other than a good temperance sermon. Our Oberlin correspondent was misinformed, of course, and in these days of misinformation, should not have written as she did from hearsay, but only on personal knowledge.

SEVERAL conventions were in progress in St. Louis while the W. C. T. U. were gathered there in national assembly, and the interchange of friendly delegations was very pleasant. The Woman's Missionary society of the Christian church was first to send its fraternal greetings and its representative proved to be one of the crusaders of 1873, and was warmly welcomed, The National Association of Wholesale Druggists, cordially received our representative, Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, who gave them our greetings and our petition that by all means in their power they would aid the temperance reform, and in return received their thanks and expression of sympathy and co-operation.

ST. LOUIS is a city of that sort of hospitality which we used to call southern, but which in nine northern cities has been so bountifully exercised toward the W. C. T. U. that there is no longer an equatorial line in this sort of good fellowship. Each delegate thought her own kindly offered home the nicest and pleasantest; Dr. Wilson's unfailing courtesy, both personal and ecclesiastical, as pastor of the church which so generously received us, will not be forgotten by any, while with some of us the happy memory of a week in the rarely beautiful home of Gen. and Mrs. Henderson, will long abide and light up the days when it is not so easy to be at the same time, true to principle and faithful to friends.

WE trust that we are only pardonably late this week in getting out the large edition of a thirty-two page paper. It has involved more labor than a double number of ordinary character would have done, as the thread of a continuous narrative must not be broken, and to carefully connect the stenographic report has required vast patience and unusual time. It is hoped by all who have labored to make it presentable to our readers, that an old law of mechanics is hereby fulfilled, and what is lost in time has been gained in power.

Some have taken our invitation to send in names for the convention number a little too generously, in that we seemed to say to them that such copies would be free. It will be readily seen however that the great expense of this issue should not fall too heavily upon the Woman's Temperance Publication Association, and we doubt not that those readers who wish to give friends the pleasure of reading all about the convention will not hesitate to invest a nickle in the gift.

ON Friday afternoon Mrs. J. Ellen Foster very clearly set forth the aims and claims of the National Temperance Hospital and Medical College Association, in explanation of the circulars scattered about in the pews, and in furtherance of the execution of the plan. She showed that though not under the control of the National W. C. T. U., it was officered and engineered by W. C. T. U. women, and would, when established prove a source of reliable information as to the value of alcohol in American medical practice, and an instrumentality by which medical education may be reformed and made to accord with the latest scientific developments of the alcohol question. She stated that the trustees, among whom are Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, Mrs. Foster herself, Mrs. E. N. Peters, of Michigan, and others, were now raising money wherewith to begin the enterprise by renting a house in Chicago equal to the accommodation of some twenty patients and practically demonstrating the theory on which it is founded. A good impression was made by her remarks, and the undertaking seemed to be favorably regarded by all who listened.

USUALLY we can head a column of convention notes, "Humors of the Convention," but not so this year. Never were a body of women gathered in representative assembly so profoundly impressed with their responsibilities and duties; never was the W. C. T. U. more prayerfully waiting upon God than during the sessions which committed their influence to the third party movement; never were they so far from the sins of haste, impulse and presumption. There never were fewer bon mots of the humorous order; never so little witty comment. Besides the feeling of awe which over shadowed these conscientious souls, as they faced a new and solemn issue, there was the tender thought of "the other side"—those who differed from the majority, and there was no pleasantry so innocent as to be tolerated by the convention if it were at the expense of the opposition, composed of sisters well-beloved. Never has the spirit of the society been more surely tested, nor more triumphantly vindicated.

Nor do we speak of sweet and sisterly consideration as exemplified only by the majority. All who will read carefully the transcribed utterances of the convention, will agree that neither side of the controversy which was so finely carried on, has any monopoly of the good behavior. The utmost good nature and generosity prevailed in all the difference of opinion and its expression The fairness of the rulings was unquestioned and the triumph of numbers (nearly four to one) was in no wise paraded or obtruded in the after-part of the session. Let us thank God that our beloved organization has again demonstrated at once the wisdom of its "Do everything policy," the truth of its foundation principle "first pure, then peaceable," and the fitness of its unvarying motto, "For God and home and native land."

THE cry of "Solid South" has little terror for the W. C. T. U., who know nothing but "a solid country against the liquor traffic." The twenty-five or thirty southern delegates who sat with us in convention, whose hearts are as our hearts, whose hands are firmly and lovingly grasped in ours, are as earnest Prohibitionists as any. We have no other "Shibboleth" than the natural expression of a mother's heart—"Save my boy"—and this like the love that prompts it, is the same in all lands. The politicians who have tears only for the woes of the negro in the south, and deaf ears for the cries of women and children in all sections, who are beaten and shot down by brutal, drunken men, remind us of an old cartoon of Nast's—wherein Mr. Sumner is pictured as walking on one of the streets of Washington, and, meeting a little colored girl, gives her a penny. A white child comes along directly after and looking up into the face of the noble man of somewhat one-sided philanthropy, says piteously, "Pleath thir, give me too a penny. It ain't my fault that I ain't black."

Yesterday morning, in Georgia, a man crazed with drink, shot his wife and then his wife's sister, killing both. If the victims of this dreadful curse had been negroes, and the animus could have been tortured into a political one, the entire country would have resounded with the cries of outraged republicanism. Brethren, when will you lift up your voices in behalf of the tortured and murdered ones of your own household?

MANY will be interested to know that the response to the call for articles to sell at the national W. C. T. U. convention, at St. Louis, was not very general, but fully as much was realized from the sale as could be expected. There was no regular sale of articles, as it was forbidden by the rules of the church where the convention was held, and the articles were sold in a very irregular way, between sessions of the convention. The following is a list of the articles, and the prices for which they were sold. As there were several difierent ones in charge of them, at different times, it may be that some article has been overlooked:

ILLINOIS.—Sofa pillow from W. C. T. U., of Lincoln, $7.00.

INDIANA.—Four souvenir cards from Mrs. C. Foote, South Bend, $1; diamond ring, unknown, $10.

KENTUCKY.—Louisville W. C. T. U.: Six photographs of George W. Bain, $3; two pieces knit lace, $1.55; tidy, 50 cents; pincushion, $1.25. Louisville Y. W. C. T. U.: Decorated cards, $3; book marks, 75 cents; decorated sachets, $2; shaving case, 50 cents. From penitentiary: Hair chain, $2.50. From persons unknown: Three fancy bags, $1.75; pen extracts, 55 cents.

MICHIGAN.—Baby cape, Mrs. C. H. Johnson, $1.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U.—Eleven engravings of Miss Willard from Miss Anna Gordon, $2.75; apples [illegible] grapes used in decorating the church, $5; cash contributions.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Mrs. Ellen M. Watson, $1; Mrs. J. G. Strong, 20 cents.

NEW JERSEY.—Mrs. Derrman, $5.

The five dollars received for the fruit was given to the national treasurer as well as five dollars sent from the superintendent of fairs in Iowa for that purpose, this the first being cash contribution to the National W. C. T. U. from the State and County Fair department. A few articles still remain unsold and may be had on application to Mrs. J. R. Nichols, Indianapolis.

I. EVOLUTION OF HOME.

Beloved Sisters of the White Ribbon Army:—Once more the magnetism of a mighty thought, the compulsion, of a profound conviction draws us together. Were I asked to define, in a sentence, the thought and purpose of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I would reply: It is to makethe whole world HOMELIKE. Some one has said that "temperament is the climate of the individual," but home is woman's climate, her vital breath, her native air. A true woman carries home with her everywhere. Its atmosphere surrounds her; its mirror is her face; its music attunes her gentle voice; its longitude may be reckoned from wherever you happen to find her. But "Home's not merely four square walls."

Some people once thought it was, and they thought also that you might as well throw down its Lares and Penates as to carry away its weaving-loom and spinning-wheel. But it survived this spoliation; and, when women ceased to pick their own geese and do their own dyeing, it still serenely smiled. The sewing-machine took away much of its occupation; the French and Chinese laundries have intruded upon its domains; indeed men, by their witty inventions, are perpetually encroaching on "woman's sphere," so that the next generation will no doubt turn the cook-stove out of doors, and the housekeeper, standing at the telephone, will order better cooked meals than almost any one has now-a-days, sent from scientific caterers by pneumatic tubes, and the debris thereof returned to a general clearing-up establishment; while houses will be heated, as they are now lighted and supplied with water, from general reservoirs.

But though Eli Whitney with his cotton-gin, Elias Howe with his sewing-machine, Froebel with his Kindergarten, and ten thousand more inventors, have encroached on woman's former avocations; they have not degraded, but have ennobled woman's home.

All invention is but the triumph of brain over brawn. First the world had to be governed by natural forces, afterwards by those that are spiritual. If matter is the greatest fact, spirit is the greatest factor; and the balance of God's plan asserts itself once more when woman, for whom man has subdued the savage world external, comes tenderly to his rescue, and helps him to subdue the empire of his own passions and put to rout the legalized temptations that haunt his footsteps everywhere.

As women we are fortunate in belonging to the less tainted half of the race. Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson says that but for this conserving fact it would deteriorate to the point of failure. A bright old lady said, after viewing a brewery, distillery and tobacco factory: "Ain't I thankful that the women folks hain't got all that stuff to chew and smoke and swallow down!" It behooves us to offset force of muscle by force of heart, that what our strong brothers have done to subdue the material world for us, who are not their equals in physical strength, may be offset by what we shall achieve for them in bringing in the reign of "Sweeter manners, purer laws."

For the world is slowly making the immense discovery that not what woman does but what she is makes home a possible creation. It is the Lord's ark and does not need steadying; it will survive the wreck of systems and the crash of theories, for the home is but the efflorescence of woman's nature under the nurture of Christ's gospel. She came into the college and humanized it, into literature and hallowed it, into the business world and ennobled it. She will come into government and purify it, into politics and cleanse that Stygian pool as the waters of Marah were cleansed; for woman will make home-like every place she enters, and she will enter every place on this round earth. Any custom, traffic or party on which a Christian woman cannot look with favor is irrevocably doomed. Its welcome of her presence and her power is to be the final test of its fitness to survive. All Gospel civilization is radiant with the demonstration of this truth.

"It is not good for man to be alone." The most vivid object-lesson on history's page is the fact that his deterioration is in exact proportion to his isolation from the [illegible] of woman's pure companionship.

[illegible]ved friends: To my own grateful thought, the sacred significance of our work and our annual re[illegible]ons lies in the fact that we occupy the outer circle in this tremendous evolution of the Christian idea of home. Ours is a high and sacred calling. Out of pure hearts, fervently let us love God and humanity; so shall we be Christ's disciples, and so shall we saf[illegible] follow on to know the work whereunto we have been called and no true mother, sister, daughter, or wife, can fail to go in spirit after her beloved and tempted ones as their adventurous steps enter the labyrinth of the world's temptations. We cannot call them back; "All before them lies the way." There is but one remedy; we must bring the home to them, for they will not return to it. Still must their mothers walk beside them, sweet and serious, and clad in the garments of power. The occupations, pleasures and ambitions of men and women must not diverge so widely from each other. Potent beyond all other facts of every day experience is the rapidly increasing similarity between the pursuits of these two fractions that make up the human integer. When brute force reigned this rapport was at zero. "Impedimenta to the rear" was the command of Cæsar, and the rule of every warrior—women and children being the hindrances referred to. Crusaders waved their mailed hands to ladies fair who were shut up in mighty castles for protection.

Today there is not a motto more popular than that of the inspired old German, "Come, let us live for our children;" and as for women, "the world is all before them where to choose." No greater good can come to the manhood of the world than is prophesied in the increasing community of thought and work between it and the world's womanhood. The growing individuality, independence and prestige of the gentler sex steadily requires from the stronger a higher standard of character and purer habits of life. This blessed consummation so devoutly to be wished is hastened by every prayer you offer, every hymn you sing, every loving errand of your willing feet and gentle hands. You are the true friends of tempted manhood, bewildered youth and every little child. Your steadfast faith and loyal patient work are the mightiest existing factor in woman's contribution to the solution of this Republic's greatest problem, and have their final significance in the thought and purpose, not that the world shall come into the home, but that the home, embodied and impersonated in its womanhood, shall go forth into the world.

In presence of the American saloon the American home is like a shorn lamb to which no wind is tempered. Evils by their excesses tend to their own cure, and this paramount evil of our time has stirred that deepest instinct, the love of mother hearts. This is a force which in nature contradicts the theory of survival of the fittest, since in her determination that degenerate offspring shall survive, the mother, in every realm of being, freely pours out her life. Blessed instinct which lends its tender pathos to the lowest orders of creation and glorifies with ineffable loveliness the records of humanity! I have no fears for the women of America. They will never content themselves with remaining stationary in methods or in policy, much less sound a retreat in their splendid warfare against the saloon in law and the saloon in politics. The tides of the mother's heart do not change; we can count upon them always. The voice of Miriam still cheers the brave advance, and all along the line we hear the battle-cry: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

II. SCOPE AND RELATIVE POWERS OF NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

A national society must deal with national questions. For example: In the state we have superintendents whose business it is to see that state Sunday school and other associations are addressed in the interest of temperance. In this national society we have a superintendent who, while she helps the states, is specifically responsible to look after the National Sunday school convention and other national gatherings. We have always cherished this ideal, but have been slow in measuring up to it, because the states were so inadequately organized, and so far from systematic in their methods, that national superintendents had to devote themselves to the work properly belonging to their assistants in the states. Let us hope that this convention may be signalized by the truly national scope of its plans, as befits its name and opportunity. In earlier years we asked each state president to report her locality; now we get the national outlook from the reports of our superintendents. Then we had done practically nothing as a national organization; now, we begin to grasp the grandeur of our calling, and study our departments, not as in the past, with almost exclusive reference to states, but, leaving each state perfectly free to select among our methods those adapted to the degree of temperance evolution it has attained, we press forward to our grand destiny as a union of states, whose outlook embraces the Republic as a whole, and whose aims, methods and spirit are nothing less than national.

To fill successfully this high and heavenly calling, we must have a clearer definition of the duties devolving upon each officer and superintendent. We must also know more accurately than heretofore the relative powers of the executive committee, the general officers and superintendents. Up to this time there has been almost nothing decisive as to this important correlation of forces, and it will be, in my judgment, the most important duty of the eleventh convention patiently to make this study and work out a clear and practical conclusion. Permit me to give you, as my contribution to this investigation, the results of my own thought, experience and consultation.

1. The convention itself, with its duly constituted delegates, is the only source of power. Its members come, by state election, directly from the White Ribbon ranks, and afford our most perfect means of knowing the needs and wishes of our wide area and constituency.

2. The executive committee, made up of the five general officers and the presidents of states, territories and the District of Columbia, is, in the intervals of the convention, the responsible power.

3. The general officers (president, corresponding secretary, recording secretary, assistant recording secretary and treasurer) may exercise all the powers inhering in their respective offices and such others as may be delegated to them by the executive committee.

I have thought that a mid-year meeting of the executive committee, held at headquarters, would be to the advantage of our work. It certainly would be so if practicable, but a strenuous effort, made last year winter to convene the committee at Indianapolis, in presence of an exigency as extreme as will be likely ever to arise in our society, resulted in the presence of seven out of forty-eight—barely a quorum. The distance and expenses involved in such a meeting are great, but I hope you will give the subject of this mid-year session your careful consideration.

Next in order comes:

4. The Superintendents of Departments.— During the past year there have been thirty-four of these. No definition has ever been given of the duties or prerogatives of our superintendents beyond the "aims" of our "Annual Leaflet," the work of preparing which has been assumed by the president and corresponding secretary, but was never authorized, and is without significance save in the way of suggestion. Beyond the implication in by-law I (article II,) that national superintendents are entitled to vote in this convention there is no allusion to their powers or duties. The superintendents are a comparatively recent creation of the National W. C. T. U., the office having been authorized at Boston on a recommendation from me in 1880. If my memory is correct, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, then corresponding secretary, suggested this arrangement in place of the cumbersome old-fashioned "standing committees," which had prevailed until that time. I am sure we are unanimous in the opinion that the change was one of great significance and value, our superintendents having been universally beloved and honored.

I am sorry to report that several departments have been practically vacant during the year. We must choose our superintendents with greater deliberation and care. Breadth and comprehensiveness of view, and a firm grasp of the situation, combined with special adaptation and tireless energy, are essential to success in this most lofty and honorable position. It is our duty to put only vigorous, efficient and willing workers to the fore in charge of these great interests.

The development of our departments into the national character for which they were intended should be the chief thought and purpose of the year to come. Last year I suggested an amendment to the constitution (offered by Mrs. Stevens, of Maine), by which our superintendents would become members of the executive committee. Upon discussion there have been so many difficulties suggested, that I prefer not to express an opinion on the subject here.

III. THE DEPARTMENTS OF WORK.

1. Organization.—The year 1883 is believed to have been the first in which any temperance society held a convention in each state and territory, but that immense work was wrought by the zeal of our organizers. It has been repeated in 1884, or will be before Christmas. After this year, each state W. C. T. U. will have sufficient vigor to arrange its annual meeting without special help from the national society. Among the territories, Dakota, Montana, East and West Washington and Wyoming are already so "way-wise" that their annual meeting is a fixed fact as well as an attractive one; but New Mexico, Arizona, Utah and Idaho specially need our fostering care. Mrs. Shields, of Colorado, did us excellent service last year, and Mrs. Sarah M. Perkins, of Ohio, is now planning a trip in the interest of these territories in all of which we have White Ribbon women of unexcelled devotion. Miss Henrietta G. Moore, besides a most successful trip to the south, has worked along the Northern Pacific road to Puget Sound, and is now in Oregon. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt has made long and fatiguing journeys through California, Oregon, Washington Territory and Nevada, and goes in November to the Sandwich Islands. Mrs. Foster's tour of the Pacific coast was of great value in the development of prohibition sentiment and organized effort for prohibitory law. Of Mrs. Chapin's arduous and extended labors we have the sequal in the unequalled enthusiasm with which the women of the south are taking up the temperance work. Their zeal and victories this year have been our most vivid reminder of the crusade fire in 1874. Trips to the south have been made by our beloved Hannah Whitall Smith, accompanied by Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson; by Henrietta G. Moore, who seems adapted to that work, and whose return is cordially invited; also by Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, of Brooklyn, besides Miss Anna Gordon and myself. The workers to the manner born have also been more active than ever before. With the example of such leadership as Mrs. Chapin's this will be growingly true. In Kentucky, Mrs. George W. Bain, of Louisville; in Tennessee, Mrs. E. L. Saxon, of Memphis; in Louisiana, Mrs. Wm. H. Goodale, of Baton Rouge; in Texas, Mrs. Jennie Bland-Beauchamp, of Denton; in Georgia, Miss Stokes, of Atlanta; in Florida, Mrs. Gwynn, of Jacksonville; in Virginia, Mrs. Rebecca Wilson, of Lincoln; in West Virginia, Mrs. Jane

C. Johnson, of Parkersburg; all have wrought as never before to build up the dyke of prohibition between the saloons of their section and its homes. In the middle and western states organization has made great progress, as will be seen by the report of our corresponding secretary, whose watchful eye and ready pen survey and map the whole great field. Unusual activity has prevailed in the department of work among foreigners, as will be abundantly testified by Mrs. Grubb's report, and Mrs. Frances Harper has been as earnest as she is gifted in building up her department of work among colored people of the north. Mrs. Chapin will tell us of the great interest manifested by them in the south, and the readiness with which they co-operate with the white people in securing local prohibition, whenever our society makes an earnest endeavor to enlist their votes. Perhaps we have hardly appreciated the peculiar significance of the drink problem at the south, where an ignorant, undisciplined race, long held back from temptation by the laws that prevailed in slavery time, was suddenly left free to patronize saloons and became the prey of politicians glad to pay for their votes at so many glasses apiece. Incalculable danger to life, property and the sanctity of home could not fail to result from this change, and the south has a more imperious motive to work for temperance in these dangers that thus environ it than we can well imagine.

2. Preventive.—The department of heredity has made admirable progress under Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett. The institute held in its interest at Lake Bluff, in August, was the high water mark of its kind. Its spirit was so scientific, its method so unexceptionable, and its range of expression so lofty, that the most critical were conquered. A Journal of Heredity is soon to be issued by Dr. Burnett, as the exponent of this department, which in its possibilities undergirds all others. It will take the form of a scientific quarterly, and should be read in our local unions.

3. Hygiene.—Our superintendent, Mrs. Dr. Kellogg, is with her husband, editor of Good Health, a magazine which deserves the interest of every White Ribbon worker in Ameria. Mrs. Kellogg held a national institute in Washington, D. C., last spring.

So strongly am I impressed with the importance of this department, that I urge upon our delegates the importance of holding an institute of heredity and hygiene at every convention, county, district and state. Nothing will do more to commend our work to the good sense of the people than our evident comprehension of the supreme relation which nature and nurture hold to the success of the temperance reform, to which legal enactments and political parties are but the hands upon the dial-plate of progress, indicating how fast, how far and how irresistibly the hidden wheels and springs of educated sentiment are impelling the people onward.

"According to law" is truly the method and philosophic explanation of God's great universe, so far as we can spell it out, but His own laws of inheritance and health are as much more vital than our man made laws, as He is greater than ourselves. Indeed, our laws, so far as they are excellent, are but the statements of our endeavor to fall into line with His. Let us then magnify these two magnificent departments, in which we study God's own methods of procedure; His beneficent laws of cause and effect. The blessed word, "Health" once literally meant "Holiness," and that means wholeness; for disease and sin alike are fractional conditions—one of the body, the other, largely through the body, of the soul. Equipoise, as of the compass in the binnacle, is the only normal relation of our being toward God and His laws; adjustedness, harmony—these are the high, pure, happiness giving rewards of conformity to His will, who in nature and grace formulates that will in laws as changeless as His own being.

"My will, not Thine, be done," whether uttered by violating a law of health or spiritual holiness, helps to turn Eden into a desert, but "Thy will, not mine, be done," in matters of diet, as well as discipline, helps to turn the desert into Eden, and make Gethsemane the gate to heaven.

"Who sweeps a room
As for God's laws, makes that and the action fine," sang George Herbert. O may these "deeds of week-day holiness;" this reverent study of those habits in life which relate to the diet, dress, cleanliness, ventilation and exercise that will make the physical estate of humanity more normal, attract our thought as the sun draws the tides of the sea.

4. Educational.—The story of this great department can be fittingly told only by its superintendent, whose heroic work this year forms one of the brightest pages in our annals. New York has wheeled into line, and henceforth all educational institutions receiving public money, must systematically teach the effects of stimulants and narcotics upon the human organism. Text books have been issued in harmony with this requisition, and the school children of that great commonwealth are conning the pages where God's sacred laws, "written in our members," are recorded for their forewarning and defense. The National Educational Convention, at Madison, Wis., the largest ever convened, invited our representatives to speak upon this theme, and adopted resolutions pledging us its powerful co-operation. Hon. Thomas W. Bicknell of Boston, president of that convention, in his annual address, uttered this golden sentence:

"The giant evil—yea, crime—of our day is intemperance. Compared with it, all other vices and crimes are but its infant children. The great reform of our day is temperance. Compared with it, all other reforms are born of its healthful and omnipotent generation. Two persons stand at the threshold to protect the incoming generation from becoming an easy prey to the devourer of health, happiness, hope, life and heaven. The natural protectors of our youth are the parent and the teacher, and the home and the school are the citadels for their defence. Formation, not reformation, is now the educational watchword which woman has proclaimed as the signal to be sent to all her allies in the world, and the two words—WOMAN and TEMPERANCE—each the symbol of the true and the good, shall be forever united. It is a marvel to many that this new gospel of teaching the children the laws of health, of chastity, of purity, of hope and of temperance, should have such a remarkable spread and meet with so general acceptance; that legislators in town, city, country, state and nation should listen, hear and legislate to protect childhood from the ravages of RUM, and that a literature should spring up as by magic from a hitherto sterile intellectual soil."

A summer training school for scientific temperance instruction was established at Martha's Vineyard this year, by Mrs. Hunt, under the auspices of the National W. C. T. U. Many teachers were in attendance, and able lectures given by a leading professor of Michigan University. I hope some action may be here taken to perpetuate this school and to establish another at the west. I am earnestly hoping that some of our most gifted speakers may make a specialty of aiding Mrs. Hunt to address all the leading colleges for young men, as well as our women's colleges, upon this subject. The field is too vast for any one speaker to compass it, and these lectures ought to be given at least annually in these centers of educational influence, and followed by the effort to organize a corps of total abstainers among students and professors.

5. Sunday School Work.—Miss Kimball should be congratulated on the hearty co-operation given by the International Sunday school convention at Louisville, where our efforts to bring the subject forward were seconded so ably by the local workers, notably by Mrs. Carrie A. Leech, president of the Y. W. C. T. U. A resolution was adopted with emphatic cordiality, requesting the International Lesson committee to furnish quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course. I am informed on good authority that this being a request and not taking the form of positive instructions, the committee, created though it was by the convention, will not comply. It remains for us to continue specific efforts along this line and to do our utmost to induce Sunday school publishers to instruct the lesson commentators to furnish such lessons quarterly at least, upon the passages selected by the International committee, who themselves admit that there is abundance of material to be so used in the scripture selected, but decline to designate it as a temperance lesson. We pray that they may yet do this, because of the great effect on public sentiment thereby certain to be secured, and the fact that if they did so, the lesson would come with authority, and writers for Sunday-school periodicals and lesson helps would then be sure to supply the material that teachers need.

6. The Juvenile Work has grown in efficiency this year for the simple reason that more time and attention have been bestowed upon it. Mrs. Hammer's Leaflet of suggestions is most helpful, and has been widely circulated. Organizations have multiplied more rapidly than usual, but some of the states are still lamentably backward. It has been thought by some that the organization of the "Look-up Legion" including not only the triple pledge, but broadening the basis of the organization so that "general moral horticulture" (as one expresses it) should be included, would made the society more attractive by introducing greater variety. I confess I would be glad to see this tried.

An illustration will help to emphasize the significance of this department. The Colorado potato bug was ravaging America and advancing upon Europe, when the German minister of public instruction hit upon an expedient which effectually protected the Fatherland; he had bronze imitations of the baneful insect distributed through all the public schools, with the words: "Kill them! they take away our food." May we be equally wise to set the children at work killing off the worms of the still; our food supply would then cease to be prostituted to base uses, and our country would be free.

I would include in the pledge total abstinence from all stimulants and narcotics, and teach the children not only the reasonableness of this resolution, but train them as young patriots in the simplest principles and methods of our government and the sacredness of obedience to law.

A magnificent field, white to the harvest, awaits any woman who will come forward and devote her energies to the work of a national organizer among the children. Miss Anna Gordon has done this on a broader scale than any other, and the results have rewarded her efforts beyond what would have been possible in any other department, but though her heart is more than willing her hands are too full for this great enterprise.

7. Temperance Literature.—Our faithful superintendent, Miss Colman, has branched out in many new directions this year, all of them practical and excellent. Her report is always specific and replete with interest. I will not anticipate its contents. There is one wish always in my mind when I think of our literature department, and it is that we might broaden its scope so as to make it include the best now being published by the states. Every phase of the work should have its leaflets—prohibition and home protection should be set forth in all their varied and progressive phases; courses of reading should be provided, and parliamentary usage attractively elucidated. It should be the tool-box of the W. C. T. U., where at the smallest possible cost every needed improvement might be obtained. Illinois has set the National a grand example this year, having published, as I learn by Miss Hood's report, one hundred and fifty-eight thousand pages, at a cost of but $737.81. I am not finding fault with our national department—it is what we make it—but I ask you to devise liberal things this year, and to remember this must be the strong arm of the service if we are to win.

8. Influencing the Press.—Probably no department has gained more rapidly than this, under the management of Mrs. Esther T. Housh, of Vermont. Her "Bulletin" has flown out far and wide, giving definite form to the work of her state superintendents, and bringing the news, methods and thoughts of the national society prominently forward. If earnest work, freely performed by a gifted woman, whose head and heart were already full, is to have its meed of recognition, then ours will be warmly given to the editor of The Woman's Century.

9. State and County Fairs.—Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols has nobly magnified her office, as her report will show. Never have we moved forward so rapidly to the capture of these great holiday gatherings of the people, as under her wise and gentle management. To bring temperance ideas and practices in contact with those who congregate at these autumn festivals, is of the first importance, also to make systematic efforts to secure the enactment and enforcement of laws against the sale of intoxicants upon the grounds. I wish we might encourage the "temperance harvest home" introduced by some of our auxiliaries, as a plesant feature of our work, not only in rural neighborhoods, but in towns and cities, where no better object-lesson could be placed before the people's eyes that the wholesome grains and luscious fruits of the earth designed for food, but by a false political economy and detestable avarice now so often worked over into drinks that destroy the home.

Mrs. Nichols will present her plans for a W. C. T. U. bazaar at the New Orleans exposition, for which I bespeak your interest and help.

10. The Young Women's Work.—Is enlisting unusual interest this year. Owing to the loss of her blessed mother, Mrs. Barnes has been unable to give as much attention as usual to the department which she has admirably conducted since its organization. But I have found in the state convention, more time given to the young ladies than in any previous year, and I suggest that hereafter on our national program, an evening be assigned to the young ladies, the exercises to be conducted by them throughout. They are to be our successors, and their training must begin. We have had to forge our own weapons and to learn the manual of arms upon the battle-field. Happily this will not be so with them, for they will enter with the hard-worn heritage of our experience. The snowflake of the first gray hair has fallen on some of our foreheads within the last decade; its gleaming drift is sifting fast upon the brows of others. We are the veterans. Gentle grirlhood will march onward to our places if we but give the signal. Let us not fail them and they will stand by us.

11. The Flower Mission.—This has gained greatly since our last meeting. The saintly woman who from her bed of pain sends loving messages from ocean to ocean, has such a place in all our hearts that we can refuse her nothing. Miss Jennie Casseday, of Louisville, leads all our noble band of superintendents in the personal sacrifice that glorifies her work. What wonder that her floral embassies have penetrated so many prisons in the year past, bearing their tender scripture passages fragrant of the patience and the love of God, to those who thought themselves forgotten? Among our thirty-three departments I will mention but one more; our dear Jennie Smith's

12. Work Among Railroad Employees.—What two women could do, this has been done by Miss Smith and her friend, Miss Adelaide Sherman. To seek and save the lost has been their constant care, and the fruits are seen in such replies as these given to the railroad magnates who inquired into the work: "Well, sir, we used to spend our time cursing, now we sing gospel hymns;" or "The saloons got all our money, now it goes to the old folks at home." A blessed work is theirs, the every-day evangelism of the street. The common people hear them gladly. But they need coadjutors in every state and town. I fear our good women have merged this work in their general evangelical lines, which were the beginning of all our manifold endeavor. Railroad men are a peculiar class, made so by their special avocation, and work for them must be a specialty. Sisters, think of this. I hope Miss Smith may appoint a meeting at which those who are willing to go home and start this branch of work may gain the suggestions that they need. She will also plead for some attention to the train boys, a most neglected class, who are now appealing to her for help.

While on the subject of evangelistic work, let me quote to you the words of Judge Pitman, of Massachusetts, a leader in the Prohibition party:

"It is no chance association which leads to the cry, 'Down with the Sunday laws and liquor laws in so many parts of the country. The traffic wants the day; it wants the Saturday night wages; it wants the opportunity and temptation to drink on the day of rest.

It has the day in Europe; it covets it in America. It will have it unless the political power of the traffic is broken."

I believe we should appoint a superintendent to co-operate with those noble men who have organized what might well be called a society for the "Preservation of the Christian Sabbath." Surely this blessed work ought to be a part and parcel of our own.

IV. "THE UNION SIGNAL."

On this subject I am prepared to speak with enthusiasm. Our weekly list of subscribers numbers nearly thirteen thousand five hundred, which is the high water mark of success in the long history of our national organ. It is to-day the most popular temperance journal in existence, and has abundantly justified the hopes of its friends. Our editor, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, and our publisher, Mr. Charles E. S. Fielden, are specialists in their departments, and have steadily grown upon the board of trustees, to whom they have proved themselves invaluable. Mrs. T. B. Carse, president of the board, is carrying our debt of $2,000 on her individual security. I am confident that if she could make a trip to the state conventions the indebtedness would be cleared away by the taking of stock in shares of $25 each, by local unions, payable in fifteen months at quarterly instalments of $5 each. This method is so gradual that few unions would deem it burdensome when compared with the advantage of part ownership in the paper and the right of a vote on its policy and all other questions in any wise re'ating to its affairs. When I mentioned to my sisters, last year, the burden some of us were carrying for the "Hayes Fund," they promptly lifted it, and that interest will never again be presented to our convention. This has been a year of unusual financial prosperity. I am confident you will not leave your noble friend, who has so long stood by our paper with splendid fidelity, to go home with its burdens still weighing heavily upon her shoulders, but by pledging stock for your states you will lift them at once and forever.

V. FINANCE.

In the twenty state conventions on my itinerary for this year, I have thus far urged the plan of finance so successfully conducted by our Indiana sisters; 1st, become incorporated, so that you can hold property; 2d, issue shares of stock of five dollars each, payable at the rate of a dollar per year, to be sold to any who will buy. Some will take one share, others several. This stock will declare a dividend of honest hard work done by means of it on earth, and will be paid back with illimitable compound interest in heaven. It should be offered for sale in all W. C. T. U. audiences, and by good and true women who make it their business to place as much of it as possible. Payable at a dollar per year, it furnishes a sure basis to go upon in future plans. This method is equally applicable to all branches of our organization, from the national itself to the smallest auxiliary and if carried out with business-like energy and persistence, will relieve the embarrassment which we have so long bemoaned.

VI. A HOME OF OUR OWN.

It is high time that our unions everywhere should have headquarters of their own. It is essential to those states that would take first rank, and imperative to the success of the national W. C. T. U.

We must have a building to accommodate our national officers, our paper and our departments of work. I have rung the changes on the need of a more vigorous policy in this direction until I know not how to put the matter in a new light. Last year I outlined a plan for the earnest recommendation that you consolidate the New York office with the office of The Union Signal, and make Mrs. T. B. Carse superintendent of building fund. If you desire it we will do our best to secure a fund by application to wealthy men and women, this year, and to put the enterprise prominently before the public. I do not believe the cause can be better served than in this way, and now that so many are in the field organizing for us, I will gladly devote a year to help furnish a local habitation for the society we love so well.

VII. TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

Mrs. Throop, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, has been urging for some time past the more perfect organization of our W. C. T. U. She thinks we should from the first have made township organization the unit, aggregating these local unions into counties, these into districts, these into states, and these into the National W. C. T. U. This is the only missing link in following out the political subdivisions that men have found convenient and desirable. She also urges each local union to be incorporated, so that it can hold property and prosecute infractions of prohibitory law. Without taking time to argue these points I bring them to your notice for state action and suggest their recommendation to our auxiliaries.

Let me urge you to make the report on resolutions and plan of work a special order, and to put the time not later than the third day of the convention, that we may have opportunity for full discussion; may know what we want; say what we mean; and having taken our position go home prepared to report it accurately to our constituents.

VIII. WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

Letters have been sent out to the leading missionaries of Christendom asking their advice and co-operation as to the best methods of initiating this great enterprise, which will require years for its fulfilment. Representative leaders of the women's boards have been conferred with, responses show good will and interest, but action must come from our own ranks. The next step I would suggest is the designation of leading speakers, who shall be empowered to present an address from us to each of the women's missionary boards during the coming year, asking the appointment of one of their number on a general committee of conference, whose report shall be presented at our meeting in 1885.

A reconnoisance of the field is essential to success, and I am glad to announce that Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, one of our ablest and most trusty superintendents, has already arranged to visit the Sandwich Islands, and hopes to go thence to Australia, India, China and Japan. For the necessary funds for this enterprise we must look to a few wealthy friends, chiefly on the Pacific coast. In working up this enterprise we must carefully study the adaptation of methods to varying climates and nationalities, no less than to prevailing habits of brain poison. One of the best results to be attained by this broader generalization will, perhaps, be this: That all stimulants and narcotics will finally be included in our pledge, as alike the enemies of that sacred instruments of thought, the human brain.

This great endeavor to belt the world with the organization whose keynote is gospel temperance, can have no basis so sure as a union of Christian womanhood in prayer. That is its truest precursor; its happiest harbinger. I have grieved to notice that the noon hour of prayer, bequeathed to us by the crusade, is falling into disuse. Let me affectionally urge its observance at all our meetings and conventions by our individual members. This "recollectedness" at the day's most busy hour, will make us no less "fervent in spirit" than we are "diligent in business," "serving the Lord" so steadily that every day shall be to us one of the "days of the Son of Man." I hope that this convention may emphasize anew the noontide call to prayer, and that Thursday afternoon, which in the years just following the crusade was generally observed by a concert of prayer, may be anew dedicated to that object, our local auxiliaries, so far as possible, meeting on that day, and systematic efforts being made to secure its observance as a time of prayer by women, for the overthrow of the poison habits of all lands.

By co-operating in this effort with the Woman's missionary boards, this can be done within the next year.

IX. OUR PROMOTED SOLDIERS.

We miss two faces here today—among the most familiar in time past. Mrs. L. B. Barrett, of Boston, who died on the 24th of May,— was founder of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U , one of our most successful auxiliaries, and its secretary from the beginning. Last year she was the chairman of our committee on credentials. We have all read in The Union Signal the tender tribute of her life-long friend, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore. No woman of all our host was ever more faithful or efficient in the place to which she was called than Mrs. Barrett.

What shall I say of "Mother Hill," who was President of the first W. C. T. U., of Newark, and who in her 82d year has left us? Always until the last convention, to which she did not come, it was "Mother Hill" who was memory and conscience to us, holding up her watch as the noon hour drew on, calling us to prayer, and often leading us in that strong, deep voice. Our hearts did safely trust in her; she was the stuff out of which martyrs are made. To me she is a "treasure laid up in Heaven." We have lost also our first superintendent of the department of heredity, Mrs. Mary A. Griffith, of Pennsylvania, one of the selectest spirits I have ever known, whose pure and radiant face will always live in my memory; whose beautiful pen was dedicated to whatever is lofty in thought or august in virtue. Of all whom we lovingly mourn this year, in national, state and local unions, it may be truly said that they were lovely and pleasant in their lives; that they "allured to brighter worlds and led the way."

X. OUR NATIONAL MEMORIAL.

I need not give a history of the national memorial for prohibition. Its annals are familiar to you all. It is not generally known, however, that your president and recording secretary successfully used their influence to secure a postponement of the Pittsburgh convention until after all the others had been held, that the dominant parties might first be approached and given an opportunity to stand by the cause of home versus saloon. It should also be made a matter of record, as indicative of growing liberality toward women, that we found them among the delegates and speakers of the Greenback convention, and that your representatives, were invited to speak before them, also that Major Burke, of New Orleans, assured us of a courteous hearing in the Democratic committee on resolutions; but we had no heart to avail ourselves of the opportunity after asking the Republicans in vain, when Senator Blair secured a hearing for us there. You know that as the outcome of the Pittsburgh convention, where our memorial was warmly welcomed, your general officers carrying the pledge of the Detroit resolution "lent their influence" to the Prohibition party, and that a large majority of the state unions have endorsed their action.

XI. THE TWO NATIONAL MEASURES.

I believe if we attached an educational test to our plea for the ballot, the women of the south would soon accept it as a temperance weapon, and that the two national amendments to be sought, are one outlawing the liquor traffic, and as its correlate, another giving enfranchisement to women. The study I have made of these living issues during the hot debate of this campaign, has committed me unalterably to national movements for these great objects, as the only consistent method of our national society. The enforcement ballot of this nation must, in the nature of the case, be woman's, for while men will never by non-partisan vote, give constitutional prohibition, they will at once break into partisan camps on the vital question of enforcement, while women, who as a class, are free from the appetite for drink, will vote almost solidly to elect officers who will make the law, not a dead letter on the statute books, nor a power feebly and capriciously applied, but a firm and steady force to hold in check the arch-enemy of their homes and tempted loved ones.

XII. "GOSPEL POLITICS."

Dear sisters:—By the laws of spiritual dynamics this has been one of our best, perhaps because one of our most progressive, years. Stationary pools and people tend toward stagnation. The most senseless of proverbs is that about the rolling stone that gathers no moss. What does it want of moss when it can get momentum? The stone cut out of the mountain that rolled on until it filled the whole earth is the emblem of every God-sent force. You cannot limit, stop or stay its progress. "Hands off," is the motto of a wise conservation in presence of a power like that. The law of progress is the law of growth.

It is no new thing for us to "lend our influence" to a party. Practically, we have never done anything else. In local elections we have prayed, talked and circulated literature for the side that favored no license, and we have done nothing more than that now, save to accept the courtesy of an invitation to sundry state and one national convention; courtesy we should doubtless have accepted from other parties, save for the very good reason that it was not proffered! How many hundred letters I have filed away from our members saying: "By dint of hard work we elected two temperance councilmen, we failed to secure Mr.——for mayor by only a few votes;" or, "we have elected a majority of the city council;" for, although not voters, our women ally themselves so thoroughly with the party that takes up the cause of prohibition, that they always say "We." The same is true of states, for even in the constitutional amendment campaign there must always be a party to submit the amendment, and after it is gained, a party to enforce it, so that except in the brief interval during which it is before the people, the whole Genesis and Exodus of constitutional prohibition is a party measure, as no one knows better than our sisters from states which have either attempted or achieved this form of legislation; hence the W. C. T. U., if it would work at all for legal measures, must do so by "lending its influence" to a party.

The same rule holds in national movements; and when our great society, deliberating upon its duty at the Louisville convention two years ago, and last year at Detroit convention, adopted a resolution to "lend its influence to that party which should furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles," it but acted in its national capacity, as its state auxiliaries and their branches had been acting for ten years. It introduced no innovation but walked by the same rule, and minded the same thing it had been doing in its slow, sure progress since the crusade. That the justice, propriety and logical necessity of such action should have been questioned, not in the quietness of those conventions, but in the storm of this campaign has inexpressibly surprised me, and I am confident we have but to wait patiently till "the mists have cleared away," when the universal verdict will be that we did right. In the view of criticisms made upon us by some of our friends, it has occurred to me that if the now dominant party had been declared by us that "best embodiment" our partisanship would not have seemed so virulent. Alas for human nature: the test is still apt to be, in politics as in religion, that orthodoxy is "my doxy" and heterodoxy "yours!"

But let us be of good cheer; the 4th of November is not far off, and at its close the galling cross-fire of harsh criticism will suddenly cease; the storm cloud will be lifted and the W. C. T. U., along with the rest of American christendom, will settle down to that "manifest destiny" of quiet routine work which characterizes it everywhere "after election day."

As a national society we could not act in view of Republican efforts for prohibition in isolated states, as Iowa and Kansas; nor yet in view of Democratic, as in Maryland or Tennessee; but we had to act from a national point of view. Each party had refused to submit the prohibition amendment in most of the states, and its bid was for the liquor vote, which is difficult to hold, rather than for the temperance vote, which is easy to conciliate. We found matter for reflection in the fact that party lines were so strictly observed in the Ohio election last fall, that although on a "fair count," a majority of all the voters declared for prohibition, they elected on the same day a legislature friendly to the liquor traffic; thus showing the feeble grip of prohibition without a party back of it.

The first act by which our National W. C. T. U. indicated that it was measuring up to national, as well as state prohibition, was the resolution offered by Mary A. Woodbridge, at Washington, in 1880. Senator Blair had just addressed us on that theme, giving the argument in brief, when we adopted the following:

Resolved, That we attest our approval for Senator Blair in his noble stand for temperance in the hall of our national congress, and pledge ourselves as soon as possible, to roll into the senate a petition of one million names, for an amendment to the constitution of the United States, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic liquors, fermented and distilled.

At Detroit this resolution was reiterated, with what result you know. But while we have failed to redeem our promise, "'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis, 'tis true," our minds have been clarifying constantly, and I believe the majority of our sisters now perceive the necessity and duty of working to secure a prohibitory amendment to the national constitution.

The argument may be reviewed more vividly by illustration. Uncle Sam owns a farm; it is divided into thirty-eight fields, leased by his nephews, while he has nine new fields besides the home garden, under his care. The use of bitters by the hands is the great curse that afflicts Uncle Sam's farm. It makes the hired men lazy, unhealthy, and many of them criminals. Three or four of his nephews have declared they would not allow this wretched drink to be either made or sold in their fields, have held a meeting of all their tenants and agreed to keep out this nuisance or die in the attempt. They have gone about this with so much pluck and determination that they would actually have kept their fields comparatively free, but for one thing, viz: Uncle Sam has a different theory about controlling this dangerous drink. He says: "It is a great evil, but I will make of it 'a great beneficence.' In the first place, we shall always have these bitters made and sold; you may set that down for a fixed fact. Farmer John sends it across the water, and I shall let it in, but not till he has paid a heavy tax. That will go a good ways towards supporting me, and make your rent less. Then, since they will make this stuff anyhow, I will just let it go on in my nine new fields, and on my garden spot, and you must not mind if I have it carted through your fields on the way to my own; besides, I'll let 'em make it under my own eye, in places set apart for that purpose right in the fields next yours, where they haven't this fanatical rule that you have about not letting it be made or sold. Then, in my own garden patch I'll make special arrangements not to have it sold unless each man that keeps it pays so much right direct to me. If they'll do that, I'll let it come straight into my own house with the big dome.

But Uncle Sam's nephews are not so stupid as the old gentleman imagines. They reply: "Now see here, so long as you give a writing to the men that make these bitters, telling them they may, and taking ninety cents for yourself to every twenty cents they get for all their trouble, so long will you want this drink made and sold. Don't you see that you are the great bitters maker yourself? Why, you have become so avaricious that you actually hold in your own hand the key to every bitters manufactory on the big farm. and put your men there to watch by day and night, so that you shall be sure to get your share. You even tell the bitters man what sort of a building he must put up, and make him give you a bond for the building, and you lock up his materials for making the vile stuff, not however until he has bought and paid for them under your eye. You stand there and weigh and measure and make sure that you know just how much he manufactures, and then you shut it up tight and put a watch dog at the door so that nobody can go in or out without your knowing it. Then when the man sells a gallon, you take four-fifths of the profits. If he sells to another man that works the stuff into some other kind of drink, you make the last man pay you $200 for this privilege; if he sells it at wholesale you charge him $150; if he sells it out to our hands in small quantities, $25. Then by doing this you make it next to impossible for us to keep the stuff out of our fields. It is so handy to smuggle across the line that we can never keep the abomination out altogether, do what we will. When you cart it across it is so easy to let a keg drop off here and there.

The fair thing for you to do is, to go out of partnership with the business yourself, and then to send word out into the territory of your nine distant fields that they can never have from you such a lease as you gave us in the thirty-eight older ones, unless they promise never to let the bitters in."

"Besides," continued these go-ahead, anti-bitters men, "as your rules now stand, you come into our fields, and if you find a man convicted of selling, you make him pay you so much, so that he gets a sort of permit from you that makes it harder for us to convict him of his crime. I tell you, Uncle Sam, we don't propose to stand this thing much longer, but to send a lot of our men to your garden patch and make you do us justice. We are on the war path for that very thing. We've picked out our leaders and counted up our men, and will be along quicker than you've any notion of to turn the bitters out of your big house and clear it up generally.

"Then we'll fix those nine fields so they'll never have a bitters factory or a bitters shop. We'll notify Farmer John across the way that he's got to shut up shop as far as coming over to your farm with his products is concerned; and then we'll proceed to draw up a writing and get all your thirty-eight nephews to sign it, promising never to allow this bitters business to go on anywhere inside the boundaries of the old farm, because, if it's made at all, some of the hands are sure to get hold of it."

In the arena of national prohibition we shall fight our hardest battles and win our most substantial victories. Nothing will alarm and anger our opponents like our efforts in this field, because no effort less direct aims a blow so decisive at the very vitals of their trade.

Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, has made a more careful study of national prohibition, and with better opportunity to learn, than any other student of this subject in the nation, and he thus sums up his opinion:

For more than half a century, the working life of more than two generations, gigantic efforts have been put forth by noble men and women, by philanthropists, by statesmen, and by states, to restrain and destroy the alcoholic evil through the operation of moral suasion and by state law. Public sentiment has been aroused and public opinion created, and at times, in my belief, it might have been crystalized into national law had the labor been properly directed. But it has failed, as it will always fail, so long as we save at the spigot and waste at the bung, if I may borrow an expressive smile from the business of the enemy. The temperance question is in its nature a national question, just as much so as the traiff is and more than slavery was. It is waste of time to deal with it only by towns and counties and states. All possible local effort should be put forth against the liquor-death everywhere. The yellow fever should be fought in the by-ways and hospitals, by the physician and the nurses as well as by the quarantine of our ports and the suspension of infected traffic by national law; but the enemy will forever come in like a flood, unless the nation, which is assailed as a nation, defends itself as a nation.

How shall this be done?

What the temperance reform most needs is unification of effort, nationalization. Samson was not more completely hampered by withes than is this giant reform by the geographical lines of states; and if its supporters would but use their strength, they would at once find their natural arena circumscribed only by the national domain

By concentration upon the enactment of a national constitutional law. The nation can act in no other way than by law; and now there is no national law for the removal of the alcoholic evil. On the contrary, we have seen how, by guaranteeing the importation and transportation and permitting the manufacture, the national constitution is the very citadel of the rum power.

Existing parties cannot, in the very nature of the case, take up this question. Not to this end were they born; not for this cause did they come into the world. Upon this issue the voters who compose them are irrevocably divided. Twenty years ago Governor St. John and Senator John Sherman voted one way. Now the latter champions the brewers' cause, and the former is prohibition's standard bearer. Party enclosures must be broken down, that men who think and vote alike may clasp hands in a political fraternity where the issue of today outranks those of yesterday or tomorrow. A friendly editor uttered his word of warning to us in terms like these:

"There is any amount of political lightning in the air, and if you are not careful a bolt will strike the W. C. T. U." Whereupon our brave Mary T. Lathrap replied: "Women who have been fighting Jersey lightning for ten years aren't afraid of the political kind."

Let us clearly define our relation to the movement: It is the same as the Good Templars, whose chief officer, John B. Finch, is chairman of the executive committee of the Prohibition party. The Good Templars as individuals may be component members of the party, but as societies they lend their influence, their good will, good word, and if any society shall so choose, their good work, to help advance its fortunes. We do the same, no less, no more. As a national society we could only lend our influence to a national party. Could we consistently decline to do so after its acceptance of our memorial, whose prayer had been everywhere else denied? Frankly to ally itself with this movement will not injure any state auxiliary in its effort to secure constitutional prohibition. We shall be respected for our consistency, and feared because of our influence, by party leaders who know our power to reduce their majorities. Iowa's example should not be lost upon us. The prohibition vote there was confessedly the precursor of the constitutional amendment. It is the one form of prohibition that politicians dread. Where a man's ballot registers his plea, party leaders must pay it respect. One candidate who incarnates our principles is of more political value to our cause than ten thousand signatures to a petition. But great petitions are great educators of the people, and have always been followed by new party alignments. A Prohibition candidate is like a lightning rod; he draws the electricity of public sentiment on the question of which he is the exponent. Embodied issues are sure to condense public thought. What strife of tongues rages around the Prohibition candidates today, and what definiteness and force is given to the movement by their personality! President Julius Seelye, in Massachusetts; David Preston, in Michigan; Samuel D. Hastings, in Wisconsin; James B. Hobbs, in Illinois; John Brooks, in Missouri; how sharply defined are these heroic figures whom the people cannot choose but see! And those brave champions yonder in the thickest of the fight, John P. St. John and William Daniel, how loyal to them, in this hour of trial, are the hearts of our temperance women! This cause will grow until we have no more a solid north against a solid south, but rejoice in a non-sectional majority solid for prohibition. It takes a great cause to move a great people. Protection for the home is that cause, and America that people.

Let me quote the language of a recent address to the Brewers and Maltsters' Association of New York, by its president. Having spoken of Maine, Kansas and Iowa, he says: "Happily in New York we have little to fear so long as this question remains a state issue. But I should feel that I was neglecting my duty as president of this association did I not call your attention to the influences that are striving, with a patience and industry that we might well emulate, to make the question of prohibition a national issue, and to urge upon you the necessity of exercising the same care in supporting candidates for national offices, as you do in reference to state candidates. Let us be fully alive to [illegible] day."

I have seldom seen a statement so pointed [illegible] the need of a Prohibition party as the following [illegible] Hon. C. C. Bonney, of Chicago, president of the National Citizens' League. He says:

"There is nothing more astounding in American history, from the treason of Arnold to the murder of Garfield, than the neglect and refusal of the officers charged with the enforcement of the laws and pretection of the people, to enforce the acts of thirty state legislatures for the restriction of the worst evils of the liquor traffic and the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants to the young, who are regarded, under our system of government, as not having the judment and discretion requisite to protect themselves. The statement that hundreds of liquor saloons are found whose chief business consisted of sales made to minors, staggers human credulity, but it still stands uncontroverted, the blackest accusation yet made against the civilization of our age.

The fact of non-enforcement being admitted, philanthropy, patriotism and justice demand that its cause be discovered, made known and removed. The task is not difficult. The secret of the non-enforcement must be sought in the relation of the liquor traffic to the public authorities whose duty it is to take care that the laws be obeyed. It is readily found in the actual or supposed political power of the persons engaged in the liquor traffic. They command a certain desperate, reckless and servile vote—a vote that obeys orders and asks no questions. They cast that vote against all candidates for public office who do not favor the liquor traffic; if no candidate is so opposed, in favor of that one who is most favorable to it. Hence, candidates who feared or believed that they could not be elected without the saloon keepers' support, have made the pledge necessary to secure it, and in fulfilling such pledges have sacrificed the public welfare and left unpunished the creatures who, by the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors, thrive on the ruin of the young. That such bargains for political support constitute the vilest form of bribery and corruption need hardly be said, for no other political infamy could surpass that of a practical surrender of the souls and bodies of children to the saloon keepers in return for their votes."

Republicans and Democrats must throw a sop to that Cerberus of perdition, the saloon; must be half-hearted in their allegiance to our cause; must pander to the liquor men who, under the spur of self-interest, are sure to desert if the party does not consider them, rather than conciliate the temperance men on whom they can much more confidently count to stand by them, even though the petitions of women (as in Illinois) are rolled into balls and tossed derisively from hand to hand by legislators under the dome of the capitol. For these parties are made up of elements which, while practically harmonious on the issues of the past, are utterly discordant on the issues of the present. Hence, it is only by reviving the past that they can hold together at all. They are political armies recruited upon a muster-roll at the head of which the word prohibition was not written, and how can we expect them to take up our cause save in a few exceptional states? No army ever yet did effective service when its soldiers were utterly disagreed as to the standards to be carried, the leaders to be followed and the issues to be fought.

When the party that was called into being to save the union applauds the playing of "Away down South in Dixie," at the convention called to choose its presidential candidate, we may well say it is a ghost and not a campaign issue that is paraded by campaign orators who dwell upon "a solid south." Such music I listened to in the Chicago Republican convention, and knew it to be the knell of the great organization I had once loved. In my own state that party's leading organ, the Chicago Tribune, plainly says: "Prohibition must be prohibited in the Republican party;" and its speaker in the house said: "The pestiferous prohibition element must be weeded out of our party."

[Miss Willard here digressed from her manuscript to say: "There have been many loving words spoken to me by women who sit here, and I have said to those who were in the house, and who are not taking part in the present discussion, as sisterly words as I knew how to give. In that splendid convention in Iowa two weeks ago, Mrs. Aldrich, its president, had not to say such a word as this to me, 'Please don't speak a word about this pet hobby of yours.' They said I might say all I wanted, and anything I wanted, and I did say all I wanted. One of Iowa's loveliest women, sweet Anna Malvin, came gently forward, and taking my hands in hers she told me how often she had prayed for the success of my work and how she had taught her children to ask God to keep me safe in all my wanderings. She said: "If you lived in Iowa you would see this question as I do, just as living in Illinois you see it differently from us," and saying these sweet words, she gave me a beautiful basket of flowers. As we stood there side by side and hand in hand, I thought to myself. "O if we could so tenderly disagree up here in the intellect, we shall certainly agree here in the heart, and we shall go on." And in response to her beautiful words and gift I could only say to the audience, "Behold the amenities of politics. This is gospel politics."

Dear Sisters: We must stand by each other. As the plot of this great drama thickens, our motives will be more rigorously questioned, our utterances scrutinized, and our reputations sharply assailed. Side by side, shoulder to shoulder we must move forward, with no break in the ranks, no aspersions, no careless, harsh or cruel judgments, but the tenderest and most persistent endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit, if not of method, and above all the bond of peace. Let the criticising world see plainly that concord has the right of way in the W. C. T. U.

In all the turmoil of these toilsome days in which motives of which we never dreamed are foisted on us, words [illegible] spoke attributed and deeds we would spurn as [illegible] the law of kindness still dwell upon our [illegible] of a loving forbearance keep our hearts [illegible] me give you the sweet words my mother [illegible] speak as the talismanic charm to still my turbulent spirit in girlhood days: "Hath any wronged thee? Be bravely revenged. Slight it and the work's begun. Forgive it and 'tis finished."

Permit me also to give you golden words spoken by one of the clearest philosophic minds of our own or any age. They may cheer you in this battle-hour as they have strengthened me:

"Whoever hesitates to utter that which he thinks the highest truth, lest it should be too much in advance of the time, * * * must remember that while he is a descendant of the past, he is a parent of the future; and that his thoughts are as children born to him which he may not carelessly let die. He, like every other man, may properly consider himself as one of the myriad agencies through which works the great first cause; and when that cause produces in him a certain belief he is thereby authorized to profess and act out that belief. . . . Not as adventitious, therefore, will the wise man regard the faith which is in him. The highest truth he sees he will fearlessly utter; knowing that, let what may come of it, he is thus playing his right part in the world."

We are slowly but surely attaining to the grandest mastership in all the world, mastership over our own sprits. The noblest figure of contemporary history is Gladstone, England's governmental chief, because with the people ready to mob him one day and worship him the next, he holds right on his way, quietly and patiently, but dauntlessly true to his convictions. God has set the W. C. T. U. for a grander confession and defense of the faith than we have dreamed as yet; one which would blanch our cheeks, perhaps, and make our hearts heavy with fear, could we to-day know all that it involves. But if we are true and tender-hearted, holding fast the hand of Christ, we shall be equal to the emergencies as they arise, no matter how perilous or great. Let me give you De Tocqueville's words for a motto in 1884: "Life is neither a pleasure nor a pain. It is a serious business, to be entered on with courage and in a spirit of self-sacrifice."

TABULATED STATEMENT.

Here let me sum up suggestions in the order given, and add a few not referred to in the body of my address.

1. Carefully define duties of all national officers and superintendents; also powers of executive committee.

2. National institutes of heredity and hygiene.

3. Summer training schools for W. C. T. U. workers and, as a department of these, a training school for evangelists. [N. B. The new version of the Old Testament reads—Psalm 68, verse 11: "The Lord gave the word; great was the company of women that published it!"]

4. Addresses to young men and women in colleges and seminaries.

5. "Look-up Legion" (a "Chapter" of this in connection with National W. C. T. U.) Pledge to include all stimulants and narcotics.

6. Broaden the literature department.

7. An evening for young women's work at next national meeting.

8. Railroad work to be emphasized and special effort made to enlist train boys.

9. Stock to be taken in THE UNION SIGNAL to lift debt for which Mrs. Carse is responsible.

10. Plan of finance by taking stock in National W. C. T. U. work.

11. A building fund to be secured, that we may have "a home of our own."

12. Consider advisably of township organization. Prepare form of constitution for each grade of W. C. T. U. and request corresponding secretary to furnish these forms free, also blanks of all kinds used or needed in our work. (Blanks to be paid for.)

13. Appoint representatives of W. C. T. U. to present World's W. C. T. U. and prayer union, to all Women's Foreign Missionary boards. Emphasize day of prayer (Thursday) in each week, and noon hour in each day.

14. The following new superintendents seem to me to be needed: Superintendents of a course of reading and study, to make local union meetings more interesting. [illegible]ss Rulison, of Michigan, suggested.) Superintendent [illegible] department of faith culture (see Iowa's memorial). [illegible]s. A. M. Palmer, of Iowa, suggested.) Superintendent of efforts to prevent Sabbath desecration (co-operating with National Reform Association). Superintendent of building fund for national headquarters. (Mrs. [illegible]. Carse, of Illinois suggested,) Superintendent of [illegible]connoissance for World's W. C. T. U. (Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt suggested).

15. Superintendent department of health.

a. In the interest of such a department, the W. C. T. U. can avail itself of help from the women physicians and scientists who are too much preoccupied to give direct help in our work unless through the regular channels of their profession.

b. Additional departments are not an additional expense to the National W. C. T. U., and no existing department includes the work which could be accomplished through a department of health.

c. Object of this department would be to appoint women on all boards of health, physicians if possible. Seek to secure the services of women to lecture in all girls' schools throughout the country upon physiology, anatomy and the dignity of womanhood. This department would help to place on school boards women whose business it should be to prevent the competitive system of marks, examinations, etc., to be used indiscriminately without regard to the temperament or constitution of the child, and to design and carry out better health measures for school children than those now in use.

Superintendent suggested — Mary Allen West or Dr. Bessie Cushman, or both.

Centennial of Temperance Reform.—Rev. Dr. Dorchester, of Massachusetts, who has made a careful study of the beginnings of this great reform, traces it back to 1785, and to an address by Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, the most eminent physician of his time, and a signer of the declaration of independence. As the precise date of its publication is unknown, I have hoped that the greatest epoch known to temperance annals, Dec. 23, the crusade date, might be signalized in 1885, by Anglo Saxons everywhere as the centennial anniversary of the temperance reform.

Mrs. Greene's Book.—Mrs. E. G. Greeene, president of Vermont W. C. T. U. has prepared a manual for the the W. C. T. U., which she calls "The Pathfinder." So many of our workers have desired such guidance in the wilderness of inexperience, that this book, compact, comprehensive and correct as is its information, will find what it deserves, a ready sale. It is published by J. N. Stearns, 58 Reade street, New York, at 25 cents per copy.

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL SESSION

OF THE

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The eleventh annual session of the National W. C. T. U. opened at St Louis, Mo., 9 a. m. on Wednesday, October 22, in the United Presbyterian church, corner 19th and Morgan streets. The church, which is commodious and of favorable acoustic properties, was finely decorated with sheaves of grain, urns of fruit, flowers and plants. The walls bore the shields of the various states, while on each side of the pulpit were tablets bearing the legends—

Constitutional Prohibition in Kansas and Maine.

Statutory Prohibition in Vermont and Iowa.

Scientific Temperance Secured in Vermont, New Hampshire, Michigan, New York, and Rhode Island.

On the platform were the national officers and the presidents of southern and northern California, who were for the first time in attendance upon the National Convention.

The devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Clara L. Roach, president of the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia. The president called the convention to order and addressed the body for a few moments. The roll of general officers, presidents and superintendents, was called. It was decided that the chairman of each delegation write in full the names of the delegates with residence, also the names of superintendents from her state. The minutes of the several meetings of the executive committee were read and adopted as follows:

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE SESSIONS.

MORNING MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, OCTOBER 20.

After solemn and delightful devotional exercises led by Mrs. E. S. Burlingame, president Rhode Island W. C. T. U., the committee was called to order by the chairman, Miss F. E. Willard. Moved and carried that the president's annual address be delivered on Wednesday a. m. and that Miss Willard speak after the address of welcome and response thereto, in the evening.

By common consent Mrs. Buell was appointed to confer with the local committee on newspaper notices.

For the relief of the president it is requested that during the session all communications to her pass through the hands of Mrs. Buell or Miss Pugh as representatives of the Business Committee.

Mrs. Dr. Gordon, of Massachusetts, Mrs. Dr. Lyons, of Louisiana and Mrs. S. H. Reed, of Illinois, were appointed a committee on Memorial Service.

The Executive Committee recommends the following ladies to act as credentials committee: Mrs. C. B. Buell, Mrs. Anna Bain, Miss Anna Gordon.

Mrs. Buell was requested to return thanks for the very kind invition to the ladies of the convention, of Mr. F. W. Crumden, "to use the Public School Library and reading rooms during their stay in the city," and of Prof. Halsay C. Ives "To visit the St. Louis Museum of Fine Arts."

A letter was received from Mrs. Hobart, president of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., announcing her detention by reason of illness, and the corresponding secretary was desired to convey to her our sympathy and regrets. A recommendation for the amendment of article IV. of the by-laws was referred to the committee on revision of constitution.

Moved and carried that the Committee rise till two o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

Devotional exercises led by Miss E. S. Tobey, president Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

Minutes of morning session were read and accepted. Miss Greenwood, of New York, was appointed to co-operate with the local committee on public meetings. Moved and carried that the corresponding secretary, after counsel with the local committee of arrangements, take charge of the literature from the National Temperance Publishing House, and make such provision for their sale as may seem well.

Moved and carried that the committee on revision of the constitution be invited to sit with the executive committee at half past nine a. m. Tuesday The committee rose at 4:40.

MORNING MEETING EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, OCTOBER 21.

Devotional exercises led by Mrs. N. H. Knox, president of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. The chairman called the convention to order.

By motion, which was carried, the state presidents retired to select convention seats for their delegations, which it was decided should be done in alphabetical order. By motion of Mrs. Lathrap an informal conversation ensued on revision of the constitution.

Moved and carried that the committee rise and convene at 2:30 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Devotional exercises led by Mrs. E. G. Greene, president W. C. T. U. of Vermont. The committee was called to order, Miss Mary Allen West in the chair. A Sabbath evening meeting for young men was considered. By motion the question was referred to the committee on public meetings, with recommendation that Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California, be the speaker. Mrs. E. G. Greene and Miss E. S. Tobey were made a committee on W. C. T. U. badge.

Mrs. M. J. Aldrich, Mrs. J. M. Wheeler and Miss Elizabeth Gordon were appointed a committee to secure orders for the National minutes and subscribers for the convention number of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Mrs. Lathrap moved that each state president appoint one from her delegation whose duty it shall be to send to leading editors in her state daily papers containing reports of convention, also the President's address, and such other material as may be thought helpful to our work, each state to bear its expense. After a lengthy discussion on the organization of the resolutions committee a communication was sent to the committee on revision of the constitution.

Mrs. Shields moved that the stockholders of the Woman's Publication Association be permitted to leave the convention on Thursday afternoon at three o'clock to attend the stockholders' meeting. Carried. A communication from Dr. Dorchester was read and referred to the general officers. It was recommended that national superintendents arrange for meetings to be held with state superintendents at one o'clock each day of convention.

Mrs. Hoffman moved that Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California, and Mrs. M. J. Pearsons, of England, be made honorary members of the convention. Carried. Mrs. Clara Roach moved that Mrs. Mary J. Robinson, Florida, be made a member of the executive committee and the credentials committee be requested to enroll her name among the delegates to the convention. Moved and carried that a room be set apart for the exhibition of the souvenirs of the National, which shall be the charge of young ladies.

The committee rose.

It was moved and seconded that the executive committee be the plan of work committee. Carried.

Mrs. P. T. Brown and Miss Martha Hathaway, presidents northern and southern California W. C. T. Unions, were introduced to the convention.

Miss Belle Watson, of Pennsylvania, and Miss Nellie Seward, of St. Louis, were made pages of the convention.

Resolutions committee was appointed as follows: Arkansas, Mrs. Mary A. Cornelius; California, northern, Mrs. P. D. Brown; California, southern, Miss M. Hathaway; Colorado, Mrs. J. S. Sperry; Connecticut, Mrs. J. G. Parsons; Dakota, Mrs. H. M. Barker; Delaware, Miss Margaret S. Hillis; District of Columbia, Mrs. Clara L. Roach; Florida, Mrs. M. J. Robinson; Illinois, Mrs. Mary B. Willard; Indiana, Mrs. J. R. Wood; Iowa, Mrs. M. C. Calanan; Kansas, Mrs. J. Jay Buck; Kentucky, Mrs. Robert Watts; Louisiana, Mrs. J. J. Lyons; Maine, Miss S. Ellen Jackson; Maryland, Miss Jennie Smith; Massachusetts, Miss Elizabeth Gordon; Michigan, Mrs. Norman Bailey; Minnesota, Mrs. L. P. Williams; Missouri, Mrs. Dr. E. Jones; Nebraska, Mrs. E. M. J. Cooley; New Hampshire, Mrs. N. H. Knox; New Jersey, Mrs. Anna M. Hammer; New Mexico, Mrs. Ada M. Morley; New York, Mrs. H. A. Perrigo; Ohio, Mrs. L. H. Uhler; Pennsylvavia, Miss N. E. White; Rhode Island, Mrs. Jennie Allyn; South Carolina, Mrs. Frank Walter; Tennessee, Mrs. Lide Merriweather; Texas, Mrs. H. S. Hathaway; Vermont, Mrs. Esther T. Housh; Virginia, Mrs. R. D. Wilson; West Virginia, Miss A. Taylor; Wisconsin, Mrs. S. P. Bradish.

The president appointed the following ladies as a finance committee: Miss Esther Pugh, Ohio; Mrs. J. R. Nichols, Indiana; Mrs. E. A. Mickle, New Jersey; Mrs. Goodale, Louisiana; Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, Illinois.

Mrs. Foster moved a suspension of the by-law requiring a committee on courtesies, and that the committee be dispensed with, the whole convention acting as such committee. Carried.

Miss Mary Allen West called attention to the women's missionary societies in session in this city, and expressed a desire that fraternal delegates be sent from this convention to each.

Mrs. Foster was appointed to take our greetings to the Woman's Christian board of missions, and Mrs. Lathrap to the Presbyterian board.

Mrs. Aldrich, of Iowa, moved that special thanks be expressed by our delegates to the Christian Woman's Missionary society for their fraternal greeting through Mrs. Wallace, their delegate—the first received by the national W. C. T. U. from such organization. The president's address was then given.

The practical suggestions of the address were referred to the committees on resolutions and on plan of work, and a rising vote of thanks was given the president, Miss Hathaway, of southern California, putting the motion. The devotional hour was then observed, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, the appointed leader, taking the text as given on the programme. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," (John 8: 32), Mrs. Smith spoke as follows:

I have been thinking there are three kinds of truth.

First, the truth about ourselves; then about God; next, the truth about our fellowmen and our relations to them. And first, as regards the truth about ourselves I am reminded of the story of the three Johns—the John he thought he was himself, the John his neighbors thought he was, and the John God knew he was. Now it is very essential we should get down to the John that God knows, not the one we think ourselves, for the heart is very deceitful in regard to ourselves and not the one our neighbor knows, because he don't know much about John. We need to know the truth about ourselves, because I believe if we could once settle down to what is the fact, that there is no good in ourselves, we would be saved a vast amount of trouble over ourselves. The Bible says, "In me (that is in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." Then give up at once trying to find any good thing and go to the Lord and see what He thinks about you. Oh, dear friends, while the sight of our own badness is very uncomfortable, when we get to know the sight that God has of our badness we become comfortable again, for we see that He knoweth our frame and remembereth that we are dust, and He has us in hand to make us good. Then, you say, "I am in the Lord's hands, and He can make something out of nothing, and the responsibility is upon His shoulders and not upon me." And then you realize that all you have to do is to abandon yourself to Him. We are only a lump of clay, and to fashion the clay is the potter's business, not the clay's; there we hand ourselves over to the potter. We women in this work must have our minds at rest about ourselves. I think the greatest trouble is about ourselves. This big self comes in and says, "I am afraid of the truth; it will hurt my reputation,—I am afraid this person will not pay me sufficient attention; always something about ourselves. Until we see the truth about ourselves we never can get ourselves right. I suppose if we could get the idea right here, and now, that we were only good enough to be trampled under foot, we would come nearer the truth than we ever have before. We must find out that it is our privilege to be trampled under foot. We must get it ground into us, that we are the offscouring of the earth; and then nothing can hurt us. I cannot tell you how much it has helped me to get this idea that we are called to suffer reproach with Christ. I do hate self. I want to get it out of me. Do you not, dear sisters, have more bother with your own miserable self than anything else. I believe if I were to call for a show of hands the majority of your hands up would show it. Imagine some one saying, "How full of self she is." Why, I would rather be snubbed every minute in the day. We hate to have any one tell us of our faults, and yet we will want them to do it if we really want to get rid of self. We would rather take a great snub and swallow it down and get the benefit of it than to be full of self. Laughter.) While I believe in faith, I also think the Lord uses means, and the very best medicine to cure self is a bottle of snubs. If you are having that medicine to drink, dear sisters, just drink it down and thank the Lord. (Applause.) People think if they cry and are sick all night over something they have done, and feel bad, that is humility. It is not humility; it is sin. Real humility asserts itself and says, "Why, I was wrong; I have been treated just right. If I have any object here it is to get this big 'I' out of the way. We are so brought up from our earliest childhood to think so much of ourselves. We are like the prodigal son, when he went home he didn't think of his father's love, but it was all self—he wanted to get something to eat, and he had such an utter ignorance of his father's feelings that he expected to go to work like a hired servant. We are brought up with such foolish notions. We are taught that unless we are good God won't love us. There never was a greater lie put in any one's mouth. What kind of mothers would we be if we didn't love our children because they happened to be wrong. And then we are told God forsakes us. There never was a greater mistake. The moment that you believe that God forsakes you, you believe in an unfaithful Creator because He would not be faithful to his children then. And this brings me to another thought—"Know the truth as it is in Christ Jesus." Christ is the full revelation of God, and anything else is a half revelation. Suppose I was an inhabitant of another planet and came here and begun to ask about things, and asked if mothers loved their children, and you would reply, Yes. Suppose I saw at that time a mother holding the child while the doctor was vaccinating it, and I saw the child struggling to be freed from its mother's grasp, and crying out against such treatment, I should go back and say, "No, they don't love their children." But it would be a mistake. I only saw the mother for a little space of time. That is what the Old Testament is. We see things as they are there for only a space of time. We go and wrestle and struggle in prayer to get anything out of God. Is that the way children get anything out of their mothers. We sing,

"Lord I hear of shower of blessings, Let some droppings fall on me"— as if He would not allow them to fall unless we asked Him.

I want you to know God. I want you to know that never a mother or bridegroom, never any human love that we could conceive of — the utmost love and self-forgetfulness can do any more than give us a little faint glimpse of the love of God."

The clock showed the hour of twelve and a moment of silent devotion followed by prayer by Mrs. Dr. Gordon, of Boston, closed the devotional exercises.

It was moved and carried that the executive committee prepare a memorial to the association of wholesale druggists in session in this city. Notices were given, the temperance doxology was sung, and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Dr. Simeon Gilbert, western editor of the Congreyationalist.

adjourned till 2 p. m.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Exercises were opened by singing "Jesus Lover of My Soul."

Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. A. M. Palmer, of Iowa. Minutes of morning session read and approved. Mrs. Lide Merriwether, of Tennessee, and Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer, were appointed a committee to take charge of souvenir fund.

Reports of superintendents being in order, Mrs. H. W. Smith, superintendent of evangelistic work was first heard.

It summarized the work of the year as being the most aggressive of our history; included the circular letter sent out by this department to "Women of gifts, graces and usefulness, published in THE UNION SIGNAL, and supplemented it with the following instructions:

I. You must belong to the Local Woman's Christian Temperance Union nearest your home. If you do not already belong, you must join it. If there is no union near enough, you must form one. All necessary imformation as to the best way of doing this can be obtained from the Corresponding Secretary of your State W. C. T. U

II. You must work in connection with this Local Union long enough for them to become thoroughly acquainted with you and your method of work. You must then get their Evangelistic Superintendent and their President to sign the enclosed endorsement, in the place for local signature.

CERTIFICATE.

This is to certify that the bearer,——, of——, is an acceptable Christian worker in the Evangelistic Department of the WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION, and is endorsed by the President and Evangelistic Superintendent of the Local Union to which she belongs, in—— —— ——

—— ——President.
—— ——Evangelistic Supt.

Endorsed by the Superintendent of the National Evangelistic Department.

Endorsed by the Superintendent of the State Evangelistic Department.

III. You must then send this to the Superintendent of the Evangelistic Department of your State W. C. T. U.

It will be her business to make herself sufficiently acquainted with your work to be able to add her endorsement to that of the Local Union. If your State has no Evangelistic Superintendent, the State President or Corresponding Secretary must act in her place, and give you her signature to the enclosed certificate.

IV. The certificate thus signed must then be forwarded to me for my endorsement and signature, when it will be returned to you to be used in your work, and your name and address will be published in THE UNION SIGNAL as one of our accredited workers.

Mrs. Smith asked that each woman keep an account of every gospel meeting held, number of consecration meetings, pledges taken, and saloon visits made. She need not be compelled to say whether they are good or bad, but how many. "I want every woman," said she, who will promise to keep that account next year to raise her hand (large show of hands). The following questions were asked:

Mrs. Palmer, of Iowa: To whom shall they report?

Mrs. Smith: To their own local union.

Mrs. Palmer: There has been a great deal of good work done in Iowa that was not given to the state superintendent. I do not know what to do, I confess, in relation to this matter.

Mrs. Smith: Mrs. Palmer says she did not get any notice from me in June. I sent one asking how many blanks for reports they wanted for their state. Probably it did not reach Mrs. Palmer. But what we want is, that every woman shall report to her own evangelistic superintendent how many meetings she holds herself.

Mrs. Denby, of New Jersey: I want to ask a question for consciences' sake: Is not this directly in opposition to what you taught us this morning in regard to keeping self in the back ground.

Mrs. Smith: No names will be mentioned. Dear friends, nothing will be said whether the work is good or bad. It is wanted to make history of our evangelistic work, and my own judgment is, that as a general thing self has to get out of the way in order to do that, and if any lady did find that it made her proud she ought to stop it. We keep a report of how many Bands of Hope are organized, and it is a grand piece of history, and we are delighted to get statistics and I think that difficulty of not reporting can be got over by recognizing the fact that there is no personal element in it.

Mrs. Delegate said: It is impossible for us to have a local union in some places, as the ladies belong mostly to sewing societies and other associations.

Mrs. Delegate: I am an evangelistic superintendent, and I must say my soul has shriveled up by listening to some of these reports.

The question I want Miss Willard to answer is this: One of the ladies thinks it will bring trouble if people come and ask for this endorsement when their state and local union don't want to give it.

I want Miss Willard to tell us how we can get sweetly over it.

Miss Willard: I think all of us have had experience in getting over that; there is always some kindly, zealous soul with more zeal than discretion and it seems to me that all in the world you can do is, with such tact and gentleness as you have, not to accede to the request unless it is for the good of the work.

Mrs. Burlingame, of Rhode Island: I would like your opinion in regard to this. One of the requirements in order to obtain a certificate is, that the person applying shall be a member of the nearest local union. Now, I have a case. A lady came to me and said: What would you advise me? Should I keep my membership in the state union and join the nearest union? I said yes, if you can retain your membership as secretary in the state union. Now, suppose that lady wished to apply for a certificate it would prevent her obtaining a certificate the fact that she was not a member of that state union.

Mrs. Smith: Ourselves are not like the laws of the Medes and Persians at all. In such case as that the recommendation of the union to which she belonged would do wherever she was.

The next in order was the report of department of efforts to overthrow the tobacco habit, Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, of Ohio, superintendent. It embodied the following resolutions:

1.—We would recommend a more thorough distribution of literature, much of it simplified to meet the capacity of the smallest child. Stringent efforts to remove the sale of cigarettes from the neighborhood of schools for little children.

2.—A persistent presentation of the triple pledge, securing the signature of boys, before the taste of the first cigar has lingered on their lips; strive to have boys excluded from smoking cars.

3.—We would also recommend young ladies' Union to have a separate anti-tobacco pledge,

4.—We would not advise presenting the tobacco pledge to men who are slaves to strong drink; save them from their cups first; this has come to us after ten years' experience in Gospel Temperance work, where we are satisfied that men who are now free from both vices, would not have given up either, if presented together.

5.—Hang the diagram representing the national expenditure for drink, tobacco, etc., in every school-house, Sunday-school room and prison cell in the land; it ought to be in every home.

A general discussion followed, with questions and answers. Miss Narcissa White, of Pennsylvania: I have in mind a very dear friend who is addicted to the use of strong drink, and at the same time is fearfully addicted to the use of cigars, and I have felt perfectly powerless to keep him from drinking. He has signed pledges again and again, and I have felt powerless to reach him any more while he is smoking, and almost every moment when he is not eating or drinking he is smoking. I want to ask if the two habits should be forsworn together.

Mrs. Reese: A friend of mine, years ago, gave up the drinking habit, was converted, but did not give up his smoking habit, and has not yet. I am satisfied that by and by it will be given up, but I am as well satisfied that at that time both of these habits would not have been given up. I am satisfied that he will not touch, taste or handle the cup again.

Miss Jennie Smith, of Md.: We have had some experience in this matter, and among our railroad men you cannot come with the tobacco pledge, but as a rule where we have a case that's addicted to the use of tobacco, and a change must be made there as well as in drink, we concentrate upon him and pray, and let the Holy Spirit do the work. But if we come at them, and they do it to please us, they go back to their habits again, but they become great workers when they reform from a sense of duty.

The department of hygiene reported by its superintendent, Mrs. Dr. Kellogg, of Michigan: After referring to the successful normal institutes held during the year at Battle Creek, Mich., Washington, D. C., Lake Bluff, Ill., and Olcutt, N. Y., the superintendent gave these practical suggestions. From the superintendent of hygiene, in Missouri, the following:

Extend the house-cleaning into the back yard and alley. Burn in the kitchen stove what cannot be eaten, allowing no accumulation of garbage. Condemn patent medicines, especially alcoholic preparations and "soothing syrups." Mothers, be intelligent and conscientious regarding food, dress, sleep, etc. Be able to instruct and assist your children in the formation of such habits as insure health.

Maryland W. C. T. U. reports a very unique affair styled a "hobby party," held in Baltimore. It was composed of young ladies, and the "hobby" was the subject of healthful clothing. The result was the formation of a permanent club of young women for the study of hygiene. Many of them adopted a more healthful dress, and all are much interested in the subject.

The highway of drunkenness is reached by many cross-roads and by-paths, and one of the broadest of these is entered through the gate of physical transgression. Whatever in any way impairs natural strength and vigor creates a demand for artificial strength, and whatever occasions this impairment of health, whether overwork, improper clothing, an impoverished dietary, the use of unwholesome food, or other neglect or abuse of hygienic laws, supplies the conditions and becomes the incentive to the use of intoxicating liquors.

The habit of using intoxicants is fearfully increasing among women. Various reasons have been assigned for this augmentation of the drink habit, but I feel very sure a prominent cause lies in the fact that so large a proportion of the women of to-day are sickly, nervous, or wholly invalid, worn with their domestic duties, the strain of social dissipation or other fatigues, and, desirous of "keeping up" because of the demands of duty or pleasure, they crave and partake of some form of stimulant to "tone them up." It may not be a pure stimulant; it is quite as likely to be some preparation containing only a certain per cent. of alcohol. The bitters, tonics and nervines so largely consumed at the present time are broad stepping-stones toward the habit of drunkenness. In matters of this kind one step almost unconsciously leads to another; but back of it all lies the root of the whole matter in the ill-health and its predisposing cause (so generally an unnecessary violation of some law of health), which creates an opportunity for the acquirement of the use of stimulants.

There is not a branch of hygiene but bears a close relation to our Temperance work, and I can but urge the need of more aggressive work in this department for the coming year. Let us gird on the whole armor and work for everything that will tend to lessen the power of the drink habit throughout our land.

Mrs. Freeman, of Michigan, (who was introduced as the mother of Miss Alice Freeman, president of Wellesley college.) We have not found it possible, in our experience, to get men to leave off drinking and keep their pledge unless they leave off tobacco, too. If they do not cease using tobacco they invariably fall. When Miss Smith spoke of railroad men I was reminded of travel on the cars. On the Grand Trunk railroad, en route to Chicago, we had just retired, when we smelled the fumes of tobacco. We asked the porter if it could not be stopped. He told us the gentlemen had a right to smoke in front. I told him we had paid for the right to have pure air, but we had to stand smoke all night. I want to know if this convention could not do something about it.

Miss Colman, of New York: I wish to inquire of the superintendent of that department if she has had any inquiries in regard to cases of young girls, especially young school girls, using tobacco.

Mrs. Reese: I have heard of young girls smoking cigarettes, all over the country. I have not heard of their smoking cigars or chewing tobacco, but I know of older ones who do. The habit is not confined to men.

Miss Willard: I suppose not in a sufficient degree to impress upon the audience that it is anything else than the exception.

Mrs. Reese: I think it is the exception.

"Hold the Fort," was then sung.

The report of the Department of Temperance Literature, by Miss Julia Colman, of N. Y. followed. After the reading of the regular report, the speaker said it had been suggested to have a cheap cover for school books on which printed temperance matter might be constantly before the scholar's eye. The suggestion was carried out and three different kinds of covers were now on hand with temperance literature.

The speaker said two questions had been handed to her to answer. With regard to the first, you will see the amount contributed. There is room for more. I could use more money. I was afraid we could not pay our rent this year and I would have to pay it myself, but at the last moment it was paid in.

With regard to this other question, whether we want better quality or more in quantity, I publish the best I can get.

The report of Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, superintendent of the Department of Heredity, was read by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith. After concluding the report Mrs. Smith said that men often discussed heredity as to horses, and took great interest in that subject, but of their own children not a word was said. It was for women to take up the subject. I am glad to say that my daughter takes a great deal of interest in the subject. In Vermont she spoke to about forty mothers every one of whom looked sick and tired out, and every one of them cried when the subject was presented to them in its proper light. Now let us thank God that he has opened our eyes to the importance of this subject.

Get books and read about it and instruct yourself and instruct your children, and do let us find out that God has laws that we cannot violate in this line without terrible suffering to somebody.

Miss Jennie Smith, superintendent of the Department of Work Among Railroad Employes, after giving her brief printed report, said: The question has been asked me how I got into these corporations. It is one of the questions I have answered here. Three years ago they told me it was perfectly useless for me to make any efforts to get into the Broad street station in Philadelphia, but by persevering and looking unto the Lord (for I said to one of the officers, if we have the Pennsylvania corporation to look to we never will get into it) we had a meeting there at which we had some twenty ministers, and only the day before yesterday I saw some of the permanent results that came from that meeting. Since that time we have held sixteen meetings on that ground where they said we never could enter.

A delegate asked whether the officials of railroads have co-operated by issuing any orders forbidding their employees from visiting saloons.

Mrs. Smith: One of the railroad officials issued an order that if a man missed his call three times by being in a saloon he would lose his position on the B. & O. R. R. I went to see an officer with a plea for restoration of a man, and he said No, that he would take no man back once dismissed from his employ.

The question was asked at what time it was best to hold meetings for railroad men.

Mrs. Smith: One of the most effectual hours is at noon, when we can get into shops or yards, for fifteen or twenty minutes.

When we have a series of meetings we have noon meetings and then a mass meeting at night.

Mrs. Gordon, of Oregon: There are thousands of men out there in the west in factories, and elsewhere, and I would like to know how to reach them.

Miss Smith: There is not a woman here who takes a train or street car for home who has not an opportunity to reach some man or woman.

Question: How do you deal with the question of Sabbath breaking?

Miss Smith: We are breaking that up. I have visited superintendents, and visited John W. Garrett just before his death and had a very satisfactory talk with him. I want to say that today the matter stands in the hands of two of the trunk lines. The B. and O. was the first to respond to the international assessment, and as soon as the other trunk lines are ready they are ready for action. It all hangs now upon the action of the New York Central. I had the promise of an interview with Vanderbilt but missed him by only five minutes of time. My friends, if it was not for this one barrier in the way, there are hundreds of men today who would take a stand for our Master before a week closes.

Rev. John M. Wilson, of St. Louis, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, in which the sessions of the convention were held, was introduced, and made the following happy response:

Miss President and Ladies of the convention:—My friend who introduces me, says that I am fond of a joke. But really this is no joke (laughter) to have so many kind and laudatory things said about me. However, you are all familiar with Miss Willard, and you can make allowance for the way she can touch up a story. I have simply to say that no thanks are due to me or my church for throwing wide our doors and inviting you in. What else could we have done? We would have been untrue to the traditions of our church; we would have been untrue to our own instincts and manhood; we would have been untrue to the gospel that we always try to preach here. We bid you God speed and invite you to come in with us. (Applause). To say we are glad to see you, ladies, expresses but feebly the feelings of our hearts. We are rejoiced, we are proud to have you with us. We simply say to you, be entirely at home, and, as they say in the stores, if you don't see what you want ask for it. (Applause.)

Mr. William Goodale, of Baton Rouge, was introduced, and spoke hearty words of promise, which he believed would be realized by women. The strength of Samson, he said, was not in his brawny muscle but in his flowing locks. He thought the victory over intemperance would be wrought, not so much by physical strength as by the silent moral working force of women. Mr. Goodale paid high compliment to his wife, to whose delicate tact, in leading him on, he ascribed his active interest in the cause of temperance.

By special request Mrs. Goodale was also introduced, the delegates wishing to look into the face of the woman possessing, and so successfully using, this greatly to be desired tact.

The southern delegation were then introduced, including delegates from North and South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Texas, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas and Kentucky, and the convention adjourned with the benediction by Rev. Dr. Wilson.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening session was held in Pickwick theater, Mrs. C. B. Buell presiding. At half past seven o'clock there was not standing room in the aisles, and the gallery was packed to overflowing. Hundreds, unable to gain admittance, returned to their homes.

After the opening devotional exercises the children of the St. Louis Bands of Hope marched to the platform, under the direction of Mrs. Leech, of Louisville, Miss McClees and Miss Anna Gordon, and sang the following welcome song, written and adapted to the tune "Battle Hymn of the Republic," by Miss Anna Gordon:

"FOR GOD, AND HOME, AND NATIVE LAND."

In the name of God our Father, do we welcome you tonight;
We are only little children, but we know your cause is right;
We have learned the precious letters that are on your banner bright,
The W. C. T. U.

CHORUS—Glory, Glory, Hallelujah,
Glory, Glory, Hallelujah,
Glory, Glory, Hallelujah,
Our cause is marching on.

For the sake of home we welcome you, white ribbon army true;
May St. Louis homes be purer for the work that you shall do;
Till the name that is more famous than the beer that now we brew
Is W. C. T. U.

CHORUS.

You are welcome to St. Louis in the name of native land;
From the north, the south, the east, the west, all working hand in hand;
Old King Alcohol must tremble;—for he cannot long withstand
The W. C. T. U.

CHORUS.

Now "For God, and Home, and Native Land," thrice welcome is our song;
We are all cold water children, won't that help the cause along?
Home protection soon is coming, right will triumph over wrong,
For God is marching on.

CHORUS.

Mrs. H. H. Wagoner, vice president of W. C. T. U. of St. Louis, delivered the first address of welcome. In doing so she recited the history of the St. Louis branch of the union. In conclusion she said: "We welcome you to our heart of hearts, and hope your visit among us on this occasion may be one of the most pleasant that you shall attend until prohibition shall be proclaimed throughout our entire country."

Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Kansas City, president of the W. C. T. U. of the state of Missouri, welcomed the convention to the central city of the great Mississippi valley in a speech of great eloquence.

The first response was given by Mrs. Mary B. Willard. [Our stenographer was unable to get more than standing room in the dense crowd that packed Pickwick theatre on this evening, save for the few moments occupied by Mrs. Stevens and Mrs. Lathrap, consequently these were the only speeches reported. Mrs. H. H. Wagoner's brief, but beautiful welcome for the city, Mrs. Hoffman's eloquent address on behalf of the state, and Miss Willard's setting forth of the temperance reform, socially and politically, are therefore unavoidably omitted. We may yet be able to publish them from the manuscripts of the speakers.—ED.]

The president then introduced Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California, who spoke as follows:

I have come from the far off Pacific coast. It is a land of fruits and flowers, but it is also a wine cursed state. In my city there are 35,000 places where drink is sold every day and night in the year. I come from a city that has 10,000 boy drunkards, not yet 18 years of age; 10,000 boys reeling out of their homes to help support the rum traffic. I come from a state that might be the grandest in the land; from a state of splendid possibilities, and I have come here to do what I can to make it better, to assist in securing a prohibitory law (applause). I would rather have it to say that I came from the sterile coast of Maine than from a state that boasts of wine as a product. Ladies have said to me, you talk of your land of fruits and flowers, of wondrous California with Yosemite and its Golden Gate, but we tell you, you are a wine cursed state, and contribute to trade that which wrecks our homes and our hearts. I will go back to my adopted state, and up and down that state I will go, and I will plead to the generous-hearted Californian, in the name of humanity, in the name of those we love, to suppress the wine traffic.

Notwithstanding we have liquor traffickers there we have some generous men. I could take you down Montgomery street, and across the street you will see a flag on which is written in letters of gold "St. John and Daniel," (applause). We are not afraid to show our colors. We are not afraid to vote there as we pray, because our homes are being weakened, our hearths are being desolated, and because our sons are going down to death and desolation.

I came from the Pine Tree state, where I went to work for the state that has secured a constitutional amendment with 450,000 clean votes. I saw that Mrs. Stevens had carried that great state for prohibition with only $800, $500 of which was given by Dr. McDonald, of California. I thought, why it takes barrels of money for men to run a political campaign in a state. They will surely need women to carry on a cheap campaign, (laughter.) We have in the state of California colonies where no liquor is sold. And of that came from the women. A woman has been at the bottom of everything that has been good. A woman here proposed to her husband to divide up the sheep ranch and give the temperance people a home (and when a pretty, good young wife says anything to her husband it has to be done.) Thus was formed the nucleus of a colony of 600 people. (The speaker here told how a saloon keeper finally appeared, and waved his license, and could not be persuaded to leave, but the women and children in a body moved upon him, and they run a rope around his saloon, and pulled it up root and branch. From that time forth there was peace in the community.) Now friends, I want to see a rope put around every saloon in this land, and we ask the men of this country to make their prayer their votes.

Our cannon is logic, our bayonets reason, and with God for our Captain we shall have victory. May each and every one who leaves here resolve that the liquor traffic shall be crushed out, and God will give us the victory.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap was then introduced. She said: My friends won't you please alight? I am afraid you are up in the clouds. Two years ago we went to beautiful Louisville. It was the first time we came to the southwest and I think the people expected to see women in bloomer costume, and green spectacles. But we didn't come that way. We had the neatest little traveling gowns and traveling bags, and had a beautiful home in beautiful Louisville.

When the National met in Detroit last year the men were so filled with love—the business men of the city—that they gave $120 the first night, the next time $150. Then when we came to the Opera House on Sunday afternoon, there were some men who could not express their love until they gave us their check for $100.

Coming here, I wanted to find out all about St. Louis, so I bought all the Chicago papers I could find (laughter) and one of them said that St. Louis was the biggest village in Missouri! Now, I think that is so. We have had one day of convention. If you were there when it was opened don't you think that the service was womanly, and when our beloved president stood up and read her address, don't you think she was womanly? If you were there this afternoon when these women told of the work that had been done among the children, among the railroad men, don't you think they were womanly? Now I want to ask you for money to go on with our work. What is the W. C. T. U. doing in this country? First, we went out after the drunkards. Christian people in the church said it was hopeless, didn't they? They would not allow us to have our reform meetings in their churches, for fear it would spoil the carpets. We comforted wives and brought back sunshine. Will you help us? Then we looked after the children, and organized Bands of Hope, and if you will put down your ears and listen you will hear the tramp, tramp, of 10,000 little feet. They are coming, and they are disciples of the W. C. T. U. Won't you help us to save the children? When one of the women goes out in the world and helps to win men back to sober lives, won't you help her do it?

We have lived to see one administration clean from garret to cellar because one brave, good woman was in the White House (applause). Won't you help us. Then we looked out over the country and we believed that this was a nation that believed in brain, in education. We went before legislatures, and finally five states had the education law in their books. Won't you help us? Intellect, culture, and scientific research, and all things beautiful and grand, lay their chaplet of truth down on the altars of the W. C. T. U.

Now you did think we were coming with umbrellas and green spectacles, didn't you? Don't you think we are a well bred, nice kind of people, after all? Don't you think Mary Hunt had better go on until she is 100 years old, until she gets those laws on all the statute books. Don't you think Frances Willard had better keep going up and down the country? Did you see our sisters from the Gulf states, and we waved our handkerchiefs, we were so glad to see so many? What makes us love each other? The one hope for home and fatherhood and motherhood. Won't you give us something?

A liberal collection was then taken up, after which Miss Willard was introduced and spoke substantially as follows: [Here the stenographer who was writing standing, was so jostled and disturbed by the crowd that he could not proceed.]

THURSDAY MORNING.

The attendance at the second day's sessions was very large. The church was crowded, and among the audience were noticed many gentlemen. At 9 o'clock the assemblage was called to order by the president, and the devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. N. H. Knox, of New Hampshire. Upon the conclusion of these exercises the following telegrams were received and read by the secretary and responses ordered:

SEATTLE, W. T., Oct. 22, 1884.
Miss Frances E. Willard Western Washington greeting. Campaign appointments forbid absence before election; hopeful.
MINNIE T. THOMAS, Sec'y.

LANSING, MICH., Oct, 22, 1884.
Miss Frances E. Willard, President W. C. T. U.: Stand by your guns, use giant powder. Hurrah for St. John.
ALFRED A. CRAGIN.

LANSING, MICH, Oct. 22, 1884.
The N. W. C. T. U., St. Louis: The Grand Lodge of Michigan, I. O. G. T. send fraternal greeting and stands firm for God, Home and Native Land.
MRS. L. SAUL,
E. C. NEWELL.
JOHN E. VANS.

DESMOINES, IOWA, Oct. 22, 1884.
W. C. T. U. National Convention Woman's Baptist Foreign Mission Society of Iowa, send greetings.
MRS. E. O. CAMPBELL, Sec'y.

VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 22, 1884.
Miss Frances Willard, President N. W. C. T. U. St. Louis, Mo.: All British Columbia and Puget Sound send greetings. A union was organized last spring at Coquimbo, Chili, South America.
HENRIETTA G. MOORE.

SAN JOSE, CAL., Oct. 22, 1884.
National Woman's Christian Temperance Union: San Jose Woman's Christian Temperance Union Greetings. Deut. 31:6.
M. H. FIELD, Sec'y.

A telegram of sympathy was ordered sent Mrs. Barney, of Rhode Island, detained at home on account of her own serious illness.

On motion of Mrs. H. W. Smith, the receiving and answering of further telegrams was left with the secretaries that the time of the convention might not be taken up.

The report of Mrs. S. F. Grubb, superintendent, Department of Foreign Work followed: Mrs. Grubb reported that as the head of that department she had distributed 30,000 pages of German literature in the states of Wisconsin, Connecticut, Indiana, Arkansas, New Jersey, Iowa, Texas, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Delaware, Colorado and several territories.

The work among the Hollanders in Michigan has been placed in the hands of Mrs. Van Olinda, who has been working for several years in conducting a column for temperance in a Holland paper published in Holland, Michigan, Die Gron Wet, since 1879, and in Die Holland, another Dutch paper, for two years. She is doing excellent work in translating for three papers, and thus sending temperance literature to these people all over the United States. There are 58,000 Hollanders distributed over the different states, most of them being in the northwest. There are thirteen weeklies printed in the Holland language in this country. Of the New England states but one, Connecticut, has a state superintendent.

Some earnest work has been done in Pennsylvania, where the German population is 168,426. Georgia and Texas are the only southern states having superintendents. Missouri, according to the census of 1880, has 106,800 Germans, and 4,517 Scandinavians. Last June Mrs. H. B. Roberts was appointed superintendent, but the work is too new to report any great results. Six local superintendents have been appointed and much literature has been distributed by both state and national superintendents.

Illinois! Dear old Illinois! Always in the lead (in whisky as in many things else) is our banner state in this department. She has 235,785 Germans, 65,414 Scandinavians and 8,526 French. Mrs. Kepley reports that she has "Sent out 1,000 circulars recommending Hofer's tracts, which resulted in 18,000 of them being put into circulation. Published 1,000 manuals for the use of workers, which were sent all over the United States to every state president and superintendent. Illinois has five German Unions organized by Mrs. Skelton; has donated $110.54 for work this year; paid full amount pledged to Der Bahnbrecher; has a number of eminent German Prohibitionists.

Wisconsin leads the van as being the most German of all the states in proportion to the number of inhabitants. Her percentage of foreign born in 1880 was 72.5, showing that only 28 per hundred of the inhabitants in Wisconsin are of American parentage. They have 184,328 Germans and 60,284 Scandinavians. Miss Miller, of Madison, is state superintendent and is an earnest worker. They have sent out temperance literature, keeping some points in Milwaukee supplied with it; have expended quite a large sum of money in tracts and lectures.

The work in California is progressing favorably under the able and indefatigable labors of Mrs. H. N. Harris. She feels that temperance literature in Spanish is of first importance, and its preparation has occupied much of her thoughts: Mrs. Skelton is also doing excellent work. Minnesota, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, New Mexico, Arizona, are interesting fields. Active work has been done in them and the arrangements being made promise far more.

In May I visited Chicago and conferred with Miss Willard, and the committe on publication concerning an official organ. We cannot carry this department on without one. I was informed in Chicago that at a meeting of the committee, it was decided that if ten states having the largest German population would pledge $175 each, a family newspaper could be published by the UNION SIGNAL Co., under the care of the N. W. C. T. U. These states were New York, Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Michigan, Iowa, Indiana and Minnesota. Ohio, Illinois and California had already given this pledge. California did not belong to the ten, but with characteristic generosity she took up the burden, and Connecticut also with $50. Since then I have labored faithfully to secure the rest; Missouri pledged her share in June, and now Minnesota has raised $100, and Mrs. Hobart thinks they will make it $175.

A suggestion was made to the executive committee that the work among Indians hereafter constitute a separate department, and on motion of Mrs. H. W. Smith, of Philadelphia, it was unanimously adopted.

Mrs. C. B. Buell, of Connecticut, the corresponding secretary, made her annual report, giving a brief history of the organization of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and its work for the past ten years. It referred to the organization at Cleveland, O., during the crusade in November, 1874, and spoke at length of saloon visiting as a substitute for gospel meetings. Under the head of "Work for Children," it is said that a compulsory temperance education law in the public schools was provided by the statute books of Vermont, Michigan, New Hampshire, New York and Rhode Island. It spoke of the education of the masses, legislative work, influencing the social classes, educating the laboring and criminal classes, and treated at length of the foreign population, organization, summer meetings, the tenth anniversary, Chautauqua meetings and memorials. The recommendations made by the report were:

1. That the headquarters be continued at New York. 2. That the corresponding secretary be allowed a sum as salary for a clerk which will be sufficient to secure the service of a person qualified in every way for the work of the office. 3. That a local advisory board be allowed headquarters to which shall be committed all the detail of business pertaining to its local needs; that this board consist of ladies whom the corresponding secretary shall nominate and the executive committee confirm. 4. That meetings under our auspices be held at every summer camp ground both east and west, and that our ladies be invited to speak and be paid for their services from the national treasury. 5. That all literature pertaining to the department of organization and the conduct of local unions be placed in the charge of the corresponding secretary and issued from headquarters.

Miss Esther Pugh, of Ohio the treasurer, read her annual report, which showed that the total receipts for 1884 were $7,886.42, and the expenditures $6,581.40. The largest items were $1,157.85 for the Hayes bills and $1,355 for printing bills. The annual dues amounted to $3,357.26, the decennial offerings $2,583 09, and the Hayes fund $282.50.

Mrs. G. Clinton Smith, of Springfield, Ill., reported regarding her new book, "Women in Sacred Song," which she was requested to prepare. Mrs. Smith said that 2,500 hymns have been accepted, and as many rejected; 130 pieces of sacred music are included. The book will be ready to deliver some time in the month of December, in time for the holidays. The prices range all the way from $3.50 $9.00.

The usual devotional service was led by Mrs. H. W. Smith, who said she wished to talk on the subject of chariots, taking as her text: "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels; the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place."

Mrs. Smith said: Now if we turn to the third chapter of Canticles, ninth and tenth verses, we get a description of what these chariots are made of. I want to say that God's chariots are paved with love, because I am going to show that sometimes they do not look as if they were paved with love. How did Joseph get to his chariot? If you will look back into history you will see that the road to it led to imprisonment. They cast him in prison, sold him in slavery, cast his name out as evil, and every bad thing was done to him that could be done. That was Joseph's road to God's chariot, and he would never have got there but for that road. He had to be taken there by this means in order to come to this chariot, and the point I want to make is this, that God's chariots are not a bit like the human chariots, that God's chariots are nearly always invisible to the mortal eye. If you will turn to 2 Kings 6: you will find the lesson that I want you to lay hold of to-day. The king of Syria wanted to take the prophet Elisha captive, "Therefore sent he thither horses and chariots, and a great host; and they came by night and compassed the city about, and when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold a host compassed the city, both with horses and chariots." He could see those chariots. They were not God's, "and Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray Thee open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

That is the sort of chariots in which we are concerned. God's chariots will carry us to places of glorious victory. I speak about this because we temperance women are concerned in these chariots every minute of our lives, and they mean, as I believe, that God is on our side, and more than that, he has close to us the chariot that is going to carry us to heights of victory. But we cannot get these except in God's chariots. They are always invisible to the mortal eye, I believe. That is they do not look to mortals like chariots; they look like defeats, enemies, sufferings, disappointments, misunderstandings; they really are chariots, and if we will get into them and use them as chariots we shall be carried to wonderful places. I have not the shadow of a doubt that if our eyes could be opened today we would see this room filled with horses, and chariots of the Lord. Don't let us lay down in the road and be crushed to death, but let us get up into them and if we will the same thing will happen to us that happened to Elisha.

He suddenly saw the chariot of God and he got in and was carried up to heaven. Now, I believe these chariots of God always carry us. We shall not have a translation up into the real sky, but we shall have that which to me is a far grander translation, that translation above the low earthly plane, that grovelling plane, where everything hurts and everything is unhappy, up into heaven, to Christ Jesus, where we shall ride in the high places over all those things. Just as if we actually saw the chariots here, and I want to make this so plain that you shall all get in today. Everybody will try to drag you out, they will say mean things about you and misunderstand you and abuse you perhaps. Never mind if they do, it is a chariot to you, use it and take a ride to your grand place. Now, dear friends, you can do it if you take it as the Lord's chariot. That is the only way. If you think of it as man's chariot, of course no one wants to travel on it; but if you think "The Lord gave me that hard time, that lack of attention, that abuse," if you will take it as the Lord's chariot, you will get the grandest victory, you will get to the grandest places, you ever saw. There is no way of climbing to such places except in the Lord's chariots. Now don't pray the Lord to send a chariot, but, "O, Lord, open my eyes that I may see the chariots already provided," and every one of you will see them. May be your chariot is right by you on the seat, I don't know. A lady told me that she could not bear a certain lady who was asked to lead in family worship, where she was staying. She said when this lady appeared she began to ask the Lord to take her up and put her in the chariot, and after that she felt sweet towards her. Get in these chariots, the chariots of the Lord that are paved with love. No matter how they look they are paved with God's love for you, and God's love is the sweetest, softest, best place to rest in that any soul ever found. Now, I would like if there are some sisters present who could tell something about these grand chariots. I see Mrs. Pearne, of Ohio, I am going to ask her.

Mrs. Pearne: Mrs. Smith's remarks have been so suggestive. I called to spend the day with a New York friend. She said, "O, Carrie, I am so glad you have come, but my bird is dead. The carpenters were here and they frightened him to death." This bird was a very choice one, a beautiful singer, but there it lay on the bottom of the cage to all appearance, dead. At my suggestion. We hung him where he had received his fright and watched and waited. We heard a little flutter, a little song in the cage and I looked out and the little bird had hopped up on his perch and it was no more than two minutes before he was singing just as God made him to sing.. But he was singing just where he had his fright. I was thinking my friends, that when the power of the supernatural rests upon us we can sing just where we had our fright. Just where it was so hard to say "Not as I will but as Thou wilt." Thy kingdom come Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Mrs. Bottome: I have never used the word chariot. But while Mrs. Smith was speaking I thought of a colored preacher, who gave me a lesson from Elijah who went up in the chariot. You will remember that Elijah told Elisha that he was going to Jericho and Elisha said, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee." The colored man said that Elisha's soul needed Elijah's soul and never would be separated from him. He was told to go back. "No," the colored man said, "don't be separated. No matter what may be the circumstance, your soul helps my soul and I will not live without you, and the mantle fell on Elisha." But I am speaking of the conversation of this colored man. "Well," said he, "he went up in the chariot. I am so glad that there is one chariot, one little chariot, that comes at last for all the people of God, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ." He is the chariot that comes at last for every soul, and when we go up, we go up in that chariot.

Mrs. Smith: I find that it is best for me to travel in the chariot that I am expecting to go in. The only chariot I can travel in and be sweet when everything is untoward, is the chariot of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Mrs. Reese: The subject of the chariot brought tender recollections to me and I thought I would bring a thank-offering that the Lord has given to the mother's of Ohio, and all over the country to hear the mutterings of the thunder-tones against the liquor traffic. How cowardly I was when I first heard it, and how unwilling I was to get in the chariot, but I thank God that I got into that chariot, and I thank God that as we rode in the chariot that the Master rode with us, I bless God today, after all these years, in the presence of this company, that we stand upon the heights of answered prayer, and that the chariots of the Lord are still round about us,

Song, "Wonderful Words of Life."

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry: Mrs. Smith said that perhaps we would find our chariot right beside us. I thought it was true with me; the chariot was the Lord of Hosts, himself. I have been riding in the chariot of His own precious love, and His own spirit has been the power that has borne me forward. It is three years since I was in a National convention. These years have been years of discipline; they have been years of great trial, and yet as I look back over them I do realize that now the Lord himself has been bringing me on and taking me upward. The very idea of the chariot implies going forward. The Lord does not give us a chariot to sit still in, and abide in the same place, it must be on the move and the Lord's chariot will take us onward and upward. I am so glad that this temperance work, whatever it has done for the people of the nation, for the drinking men, or little children, I believe it has done more for the women of the W. C. T. U. than any one else. I thank God for my share it. I am so glad to be able to look you in the face. A year ago you sent me a telegram which I have carried in my Bible all the year. It has been a great comfort to me, and in December, suddenly in answer to the prayer of faith by the loved ones in my house, the Lord took me off my sick bed. My physicians had said I would never use my brain again, for any special work. My daughter had prepared to leave school to take care of me, and had written the letters which were to convey the intelligence, when on Saturday, realizing that if it were the Lord's will that I should remain upon my couch He would give me rest and patience. I said to myself it is not like God to keep me with this burden of work upon me and the inability to do it; and out of this thought grew the faith that enabled me to rise Sabbath morning, although I had not been able to rise for a long time. I rose from my couch, went to family worship, and have not been back since as an invalid. I believe I am well, and under the blessed moving of this chariot of the Lord I am here in your midst again, one of the Lord's company to do the Lord's work.

Mrs. Millie Gilbert, of Ohio: My mind was led to think of the more needy, the poor, the sick, as well as those that were longing to work for the Master.

For fifteen years I was one of these sufferers, and at last I thought if I could only see Christ I could be healed. I took for my text, God is unchangeable, and with Him there is no shadow of turning. I held to it for three years. At last when given up to death, at this time, in looking to God to see wherein I had failed, He made this plain to me. You have tried to exercise faith to me, but you have not trusted in me a minute. You have trusted in this remedy and that remedy, and at last a new climate, (which failed to help me). I did not talk with God then. He told me that in order for my lungs to get well, for me to be sound in my body, that I must place it in His hands just as implicitly as my soul was placed there; and in order to do that I had to give up every earthly aim; He would not accept any half way trust. My God to whom I had been praying was no larger than these other things. My trust had been divided. I prayed to God for strength to let go of every earthly tie. He gave me courage and strength to let go, and I was lifted into the chariot. Such a lifting up! It seemed as though I was placed in my Savior's arms. I thought I never desired any greater heaven than I was then in. If I could only stay there always! For a short time I forgot all about myself; I was carried away in a riot—such a heaven! My thoughts were soon carried back to myself by the strangest feeling, where al' the pain was; it was not a pain, but a soothing sense, but the strangeness of the feeling when coming over me. I said to myself "Am I living, or dying?" for I didn't know but the Lord was taking me to Himself, such a sweet waiting upon God to know what He was going to do with me. But I didn't care, there was no fear of death. After a few minutes this sensation went away, and it seemed as if such a deep breath went into my body. I had been in quick consumption. Such a breath! I had not breathed such a one for years, and the thought came—it didn't hurt my lungs at all. Then I thought perhaps God was healing me. I tested myself by turning and moving, but not getting up. After I was satisfied I was healed the Lord said:

"If you are healed arise and walk," and I arose and walked. That was nine years ago the first of September at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Mrs. Jones, of Philadelphia, spoke of a similar blessing.

Miss Tobey, of Boston: I thank God I have ridden in that chariot for nearly five years, in spiritual and physical difficulties, and can testify that it is a blessed chariot. If you knew it, the Lord Jesus Christ is the chariot in which you can ride over any difficulty for your physical needs. You know we ought to be in perfect health for such work as we have to do and there is no need of one of us having any sickness or suffering if we will abide in Jesus Christ. I know this is true; God has taught it to me in his precious Word and in prayer.

Mrs. Denman, of N. J.: I came to this convention and never in my life have traveled two nights and a day without great weariness. When I started the evil one told me to return home. I immediately said No, and I want to tell you that then and there the Lord rested me and took all the tired out of my body and I don't feel that I have been traveling at all. At the close of this service Capt. Kitwood, chaplain of the Bethel Home, was introduced and briefly responded: I am glad to say, dear sisters, that I am with you in spirit. The liquor curse will be swept from the land I believe. (Applause.) We have heard about the chariots of the Lord; they are moving onward and I expect to see the day when not a drop of liquor will be sold on the continent.

Mrs. M. J. Pearsons, of England, was then presented as a fraternal delegate from the British Woman's Temperance Association, and spoke substantially as follows: I hope to go forth from this convention wiser and purer and better for the thoughts that have been put into my heart. I may say on behalf of the British Association that there are thousands of women in my native land who if you could hear the echo of their hearts would beat with yours. I am happy to greet you in the name of the Nottingham branch. I wish you God-speed; success to you in the name of the Lord. It is not many months since I came to this country, but since I have come here I have seen a great deal of the magnificence of nature.

Before I came to this country I heard of women going out fighting for temperance. I was never more anxious to see Solomon in all his glory than to see and speak with one of these temperance women. I have felt that the temperance question would be a hopeless question if entirely in the hands of the men. I think men are not drawn by the magnificence of nature, nor are they drawn by God's goodness.

I was introduced in two of your cities as a foreigner. I don't consider myself a foreigner. I repudiate the idea. I told them I was not a foreigner, and that we always spoke of the Americans as our cousins. A certain class of people, under the guise of personal liberty, support a system of social liberty in your great west, by which the liquor traffic is sustained. Under the plea of personal liberty they license at your very doors the saloons that turn men into swine.

I think it would be a hopeless case if the morals of the people and the welfare of the country were left entirely in the hands of the men. Turning to my own land it seems to me that to reach the degraded, the fallen, the drinking classes, if they are reached, it must be by the enfranchisement of women. Some of us thought as we heard of your crusading, what kind of creatures must you be. We thought you must be something original in nature, intended for men, but by some mistake turned into women. I found, when some of them came to us, they were not women with short hair, and green spectacles, but as womanly and as intensely womanly as it is possible for women to be. When we heard of your work it drew our hearts, and we banded together. Eight years ago there was a convention on the subject, and six months after that they had a larger convention in London, and at these conventions we formed woman's temperance associations, which have spread all over our land. In some places they are doing their work gradually and silently as the snow falls on the mountain. And thus we keep to work to cause a spiritual earthquake, to trample out the seeds of intemperance

We women will not look back or turn back until we have secured the repeal of the obnoxious system of excise licenses, closing every saloon on the Lord's day. Now the mothers of England are trying to have a government to protect the homes and their children (applause.) Before I came they said to me, "Mrs. Pearsons, if you go to America you'll never come back." I hope to be in England at work before Christmas day, but I assure you, it is very hard to go. I have desired to remain a little longer with you, and I assure you it is all I can do to keep myself from loving Americans too well. When I heard your inspiring music I was so attracted by it that I almost forgot England. I had to get away in a corner and sing, "God save the Queen," and say, "Old England, with all thy faults, I love thee still." (Laughter and applause.) It is a wonderful country, this. I don't wonder you are proud of it. I just happened to be here the Fourth when with bonfire and cracker and squib. you celebrated your independency—ahem! (Laughter.) A gentleman said to me, "I have been here twenty-five years and to tell you the truth, I cannot bear to hear that Declaration of Independence read; you tell me if you can." I told him I did like it. When that wonderful Mayflower came over I believe I should have come along it I had been there.

You opposed taxation without representation. You know about the tea. But in every hotel I go to in America I hear them say, "Bring me a cup of your best English breakfast tea! I remember saying to Mrs. Buell, "I want to see Plymouth Rock." "Yes," she said, "and you must see Bunker Hill." I said, "I know what you want me to see that for, it is just to crow over your victories." If I had been in this country at that time. I would have put on my sword and fought in its behalf. The Earl of Chatham said, "If I was an American as I am an Englishman and I was asked to take up my sword in defence of my country I would never, never put it down again so long as there was a British soldier on the shores of my native land."

There is a system of moral degradation in the land and what we want men to do is to come up to the help of the women and by their votes carry out the spirit of reform and goodness which animates the women of the W. C. T. U. in this great work.

At the conclusion of Mrs. Pearsons' address the audience joined in singing "God save the the Queen," and convention adjourned with the benediction.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. N. H. Knox, of New Hampshire.

The report of Miss Jennie Casseday, superintendent of W. C. T. U. Flower Missions, of Louisville, Ky., was read by Mrs. Munnell of the same city. Extracts only are possible, a few being as follows:

An old German legend, entitled "The Creation of the Rose," runs thus: When the gates of Paradise closed on the first human pair, the angel of light seeing the anguish upon the faces of the exiles, prayed that their punishment might be less grievous. "I do not punish," said the loving Father, "I only discipline them that they may enter the Paradise of the Infinite." Then the angel grasped the rosy moon, and from it formed the rose which he threw upon the bosom of Eve, who, pressing the heavenly blossom to her lips in an ecstasy of delight, exclaimed, "He is no longer angry; this is a gift of his love; from its sweet perfume comes the odor of Eden and the breath of God." Thus the mission of the flower began, and from age to age hearts have been wooed and won to higher purposes through its silent influences. Realizing its power, the thought came to our superintendent like an inspiration, and our president, with her ready aptitude, caught the idea and placed this link in the mighty belt which will yet encircle the world.

The W. C. T. U. in nearly all the New England and middle states, has grafted on to its trunk this new branch. At least ten western states are engaged in the same work. Prison day was widely observed. The practical suggestions of the report are these:

1. I desire that superintendents be appointed for a term of years, because they grow to understand the work and are better able to carry it on.

2. That this work be not given up during the winter months, but that it really be prosecuted more earnestly; that the homes of the intemperate and neglected be cared for, and fuel, clothing and food be distributed when necessary.

3. That as far as practicable, the text cards used in the Flower Mission department be those which I have selected with special reference to this work, for they were chosen as the result of much experience of the needs of those to whom they are sent, and they have been singularly effective.

4. In all this work it is to be remembered and impressed upon the laborers that the object of all missionary duty is to bring men and women nearer to God, and to that temperance which is enjoined of God, and to this end no offering or charity should be given without adding the written word which may be found on the text cards.

Mrs. Hill, of Indiana, was then introduced and made a member of the convention. She is the only colored delegate.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, president of the Woman's Temperance Publication Asssociation then reported the financial status of that organization to the convention, as the publisher of the national organ, The Union Signal. The following encouraging facts were embodied in her report:

"The subscription list of The Union Signal has increased thirty per cent. Last year it numbered 12,110. This included both the monthly issue and short term subscribers. It was decided at our last annual meeting to discontinue the monthly issue and it was accordingly dropped in November last, we filling out to subscribers the unexpired term with the weekly edition. We have now 13,250 subscribers.

"In all the wonderful leadings of providence in the temperance reform during the past ten years, I know of none more remarkable than the wisdom that actuated the incorporators of The Signal, when some five years ago, in applying for authority from the state of Illinois, to publish a weekly temperance paper, they also included any other publications they might deem desirable. They also built better than they knew in naming the association the Woman's Temperance Publication Association (not of Illinois you see), but broad enough to take in the whole nation. In thus wording their application, they showed an intuitive perception which was almost prophetic of the coming needs of the temperance reform. They were not building for a day, but laying broad and deep foundations for a Woman's Publication House, that would meet the demands of the W. C. T. U., and the needs of the great work in the years that were to come, when a demand should come up from every town and hamlet for temperance literature suited to the peculiar wants of the W. C. T. U., and the western people, and that demand is upon us. We are not able half to meet it, because we have not the necessary capital to invest; we are, however, doing the best we can under the circumstances.

We have published during the year outside of our newspapers 350,000 pages of temperance literature, a stock of which we keep constantly on hand and for sale at our office, 161 LaSalle street, Chicago. We have just issued the first number of our Band of Hope Manual, and Text book, which is to be issued quarterly. It contains twenty-four lessons, twelve for pupils of the grammar school grade, and twelve primary lessons. They are prepared by Mrs. Mary B. Willard and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. The lessons have been submitted to, and have passed the inspection of a committee of eminent physicians, which ensures their scientific accuracy. This fills a long felt want. We also publish regular Quarterly Temperance Lessons for use in Sunday schools.

At the solicitation of many Prohibitionists we started a campaign paper, on August 23, called The Issue of ToDay. It is a four page weekly, and runs for twelve weeks, price 20 cents for the campaign. Ten thousand copies are issued weekly. It has fully paid its way. Our cash receipts for the year, not counting what we received from sale of stock, amounted to $24,306. The profit on this after all expenses are paid is $2,720. We have a capital stock of $25,000; $12,000 of it is paid up. We have a loan of $2,875, thus making the capital invested $14,875. The net profit as you can readily see upon this amount is 18 per cent.

"The amount received from sale of stock during the year is $2,226; books containing each twenty certificates of stock, for sale in their respective states, were issued at the beginning of the year to twenty-three state presidents. Only a few of these have been heard from. Massachusetts, Missouri, and Illinois, each has sold its full quota.

"If the other twenty had done equally well, we could report to-day $10,000 in our treasury, or as good. This would wipe out our indebtedness and give us a capital of $7,000 cash in hand, to work on. If in our present cramped circumstances we have cleared in the past year 18 per cent. what might we not do if things were more favorable?

"There should be a more persistent endeavor the coming year, in all the states, to sell stock; each union should hold a share. This would give us a paid up stock of $125,000, and with a subscription list of 50,000, it would make the W. C. T. U. of this country one of the mightiest agencies for crushing out the liquor traffic the world has ever seen. Is this too much to expect? Surely not. With concentrated effort and our great constituency it could be done within a year. The following simple plan would, I am sure, insure the sale of stock to individuals, unions and districts, if properly presented.

"The Woman s Temperance Publication Association has a capital stock of $25,000. The shares are $25 each. They can be paid for (if not convenient to pay the whole amount down) in five installments of $5 each, payments to be made either monthly or quarterly, just as the purchaser may desire. The stock can be owned by any individual member of the W. C. T. U. (no stock may be owned by a person who is not), a local union or a district, in which latter case it should be held by the president of the union or district in trust, and will pass to her successor in office. The union or district thus becomes a stockholder in the paper, each share of stock entitling them to one vote in the management of the paper.

"Some hesitate about purchasing stock, fearing that if they become stockholders they will be liable for the debts of the corporation. There is no danger of this according to the amended laws of the state of Illinois, under which our organization was incorporated. Said laws hold that the stock of corporations held by individuals is assessable only until fully paid up by the purchaser It may be asked, What gain is there to accrue from this outlay? Much every way. In the first place, as you no doubt realize, it is an absolute necessity to the success of our great and holy cause that we have an able weekly paper to properly represent us. The paper should not be owned by a few persons, but all the unions should have an interest in it to the amount of at least one share of stock to each local union."

This report was so well received that a large number of shares of stock in the W. T. P. A. were immediately subscribed, and the stockholders of the association repaired to the pastor's study for their annual meeting. Mrs. Carse, however, before leaving the room, presented to Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the superintendent of Scientific Instruction, a beautiful basket of flowers. Mrs. Hunt made an affectionate response.

Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, of New York, was introduced, and, after an eloquent speech, presented Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, superintendent of the work in the south, with a beautiful basket of flowers. Miss Willard did the same by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, assistant recording secretary of the union.

Mrs. Esther M. Housh's Decennial hymn was sung to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne." Mrs. Housh, as superintendent of the department for influencing the press, read a fine report. This showed nearly five hundred papers in the United States regularly supplied with temperance matter. A large number beside publish irregularly articles, editorials, etc. Mrs. Housh also sends out a monthly bulletin to newspapers not already supplied, in shape for clipping and republication. Her suggestions as to the demands of the department for the coming year were as follows:

1st. State superintendents who will make a study of this department and devote themselves to the performance of its duties.

2d. Intelligent comprehension on the part of the unions, of the demands of the work, and their part in it. No paper published where a union is organized should be printed without some sort of temperance truth.

3d. The secretaries of unions to forward names of local superintendents to state superintendents, and see that letters and circulars from such officers are answered.

4th. Every officer from the national down to accept no duty they do not intend, by the help of God, to perform, and not be found "napping" at the post, but "on duty" ever.

5th. State conventions to give the press department due place in their plans and counsels, to provide for the expenses of the state superintendent, and in large states to provide district or county superintendents, who can be acquainted with the papers, the people, and select the "right woman" for the work of the local unions.

6th. All state presidents and superintendents of national departments to please remember the National W. C. T. U. Bulletin is an exponent of the National Union, and important facts will always receive attention.

7th. More prayer; more knowledge; more faith; more labor; more patience; more perseverance; more money; more women.

Following this lively report, Mrs. A. M. Hammer, of New York, reported for the department of juvenile work, of which she is superintendent. From this it was seen that there a a thousand Bands of Hope under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., with their 100,000 children marching to the time and tune of "Tremble King Alcohol, we shall grow up."

The following were the suggestions: 1. Use prompt, energetic, systematized effort for the education of the children on the subject of alcoholic and narcotic stimulants. The need of the hour is instruction as to the dangers which threaten; such training as shall fit for life work; and thorough organization, a strength to those who are in it, an attraction to such as need it. The child in the nursery may be so taught the effects of alcohol upon the system, that he will ever after shun it as a poison forever at war with the man's nature. To quote our Miss Willard: "You can begin in your own home, in the lullaby song, the twilight story, the family pledge with line upon line, precept upon precept, to train your sons and daughters to be total abstainers." Let us instil into the soil God has given has given us, viz: the impressionable hearts and minds of the children, the seed of pure, true thought, and the result will be men and women valiant for "God and Home and Native Land."

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster read her report on the department of legislation. She believed that prohibition prohibited in Maine, and in Kansas it has been decided that the cities could not rebel against the state. In some places in Iowa there was defiance of law. The Scott law of Ohio was declared satisfactory to nobody. She pleaded strongly for woman suffrage. By consent Mrs. Foster's time was extended and a general discussion followed:

A lady rose and called attention to the fact that New Hampshire did not appear on the shield among the states having statutory prohibition, and stated that it had had it for twenty years. The president thanked her for calling attention to the omission and said that the shield should hereafter bear the name of that state?

Question: Why should not we have a seperate political party the same as other temperance organizations?

Mrs. Foster: I don't know of any other temperance organization that does.

Question: Is it not the greatest inconsistency for temperance women not to support St. John?

Mrs. Foster: I do not think it is, (laughter.) Do you want me to argue the question, ladies? (Cries of no, no.) Then I will only say that I think it is the height of consistency not to do it.

Question: How can you ask temperance men to vote for Blaine?

Mrs. Foster: Because it is the only way to keep Cleveland out of the White House.

Question: How can Mrs. Foster consistently advise us to be non-partisan and still talk for Blaine? (Loud and continued applause.)

Mrs. Foster: I do not advise you to be non-partisan. How a woman can be non-partisan at this time I do not see. I cannot, but I do advise that the N. W. C. T. U. in its organized capacity, pass no resolution concerning any political party, (applause.) Now, as to talking for Blaine, I never have said before what I have said today to any audience of any people, anywhere. I never have made a speech for Blaine; I never have said anything on the platform for the Republican party or Blaine, not anywhere. I wrote some letters as J. Ellen Foster. I distinctly said that in my official relation I could do nothing of the sort although I was superintendent of this department. I did not even do that until the organization had been declared to be partisan.

Question: Did you not vote in the convention at Detroit for a resolution pledging its influence to the third party?

Mrs. Foster: Never a shadow of such a thought passed my mind, that such a construction would be given to it. If I had, I would have protested against it.

Question: Mrs. Foster, what did you mean when you said if you were in any other state but Iowa, you would support the St. John ticket?

Mrs. Foster: I never said it anywhere, upon any occasion, to anybody. I have said, and say now, if I were in Illinois, and were a man, I think Mr. Hobbs would get my vote. I have said everywhere if I were in various states of this union, I think I would be likely to be flourishing around for a third party ticket.

Question: In a recent letter by you, and made public, you say: "The prohibition of the liquor traffic is not, either by the spirit of the constitution, or letter, a national issue." Why is not this a national issue?

Mrs. Foster: I have written lately in a letter to Mr. Stearns, who wrote me asking a similar question, answering something on this point. I have not the time to-night to show the limitations of powers between state and nation; but I will say that the prohibition of the liquor traffic is the greatest question before the American people to-day, and national prohibition is the very goal to which all our efforts are tending. And because I want it so much, because it is my daily thought, and labor, and prayer, that is why I am so grieved at the present political attitude; because I think the day is removed further on by this than it would necessarily be if the present action had not been taken. [Cries of no, no, no.] The question asked was, why is it not a national issue? It is a national issue, but not a political issue. I care more what you think of me—my heart does—than I do of the opinion of everybody outside of the W. C. T. U. But I will do as you choose in regard to talking.

Mrs. Lathrap: Mrs. Fosier says that the only way we can have constitutional prohibition is by securing constitional prohibition in three-fourths of the states. I want to ask Mrs. Foster, as long as this is our only road, why it is that she gave up constitutional prohibition in Iowa, and contents herself with statutory prohibition. Iowa has only to-day statutory prohibition. Why did you give up the struggle in Iowa, when you say that the only road to national prohibition is by states?

Mrs. Foster: I am only sorry that Mrs. Lathrap is not better informed in reference to constitutional prohibition in Iowa. You could get an army of 50,000 women any day to save to us our amendment. The only reason we did not ask for re-submission is that we have got it. I said before the people of this country, that which you did not understand, but Iowa women did.

When I wrote my letter I said: Stand by the Republican party of Iowa, with all the privileges of a "bad man's plank," and that means "scratch" bad candidates. Iowa knows it, too. I think Rothrock was nominated because our poor temperance people were down in the ditches, unconversant with our law. Men being mobbed in the streets, and women wiping blood from their husbands' faces; and these poor men did not go down, did not nominate the man that we wished they had. The party papers were against Rothrock, the strongest paper there said he ought not to be nominated.

Mrs. Lathrap: I want to ask Mrs. Foster this question. I want to ask if she considers that Iowa has constitutional prohibition today?

Mrs. Foster: I do.

Mrs. Lathrap: I want to ask if that fact is recognized in the United States of America, and if a count were being made of the states today—if Iowa would be counted as a state having constitutional prohibition.

Mrs. Foster: I would say that Iowa would be counted in today if a count of the states were made.

When the count shall be made for constitutional prohibition it will be by the hands of the legislatures of the states, and there is no legislature that could assemble in DesMoines, that could be sent there, that would dare to say anything else. It would work for constitutional prohibition. Iowa and Maine would today stand together on that question if the question were presented.

Mrs. Lathrap: I want to ask if the legislature of Iowa had the power to pronounce on constitutional prohibition, why is it that Iowa today is counted among the ten with statutory prohibition?

Mrs. Foster: It has constitutional and statutory prohibition. The only thing it is not contented with now is, that it has not driven every saloon out. What I wanted to say is this: I did not want to make any partisan allusions whatever, when I came to this convention. I shall tonight speak concerning constitutional prohibition, and my firm conviction is that it can be the quickest secured by non-partisan action

I will make no defence of any candidate, or abuse any. I shall go to the records of no party, but I shall make my arguments for constitutional prohibition as I have for the last five years. And now, dear ladies, I love every one of you, I trust every one of you. I am sorry for your judgment, but I commend your zeal. And the severest trial of my life is to stand before you and approve a doctrine which so many of you think is wrong, and the suffering I endure in doing it, only approaches the trial I had when I came out for woman suffrage. But no matter; in the years to come you will say "She was right."

The hour being very late convention adjourned without furtherdebate.

THURSDAY EVENING AT PICKWICK THEATRE.

Mrs. Clara L. Roach in the chair. The hymn "Rock of Ages," was first sung, and prayer was offered by Mrs. Roach. Another song, during which the overflow of people was accomodated in a lower room, to be addressed by Mrs. Molloy, of Kansas, and Mrs. Fixen, of Minnesota.

In the main audience the following program was filled:

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith was introduced and gave a Bible reading on the 46th psalm. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."

This tells the secret of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union work, and I want every one to listen to it as though we were telling to you from the faith of our heart, what it is that has brought us to the depths we are in. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble," not far off; not where we have to hunt for Him and perhaps not find Him, but a very present help in trouble. "Therefore," that is our great, grand therefore—that is the reason why we are not afraid of anything.

"Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." We are not afraid. If God be on our side, how can anyone of us fear anything that man or all the elements can do to one of us?

"There is a river the streams whereof make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. God is in the midst of her." That is the truth of that, "She shall not be moved; God shall help her and that right early."

I want everybody to remember that is the truth, the secret about this Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that God is in the midst of her and that God will help her and that right early; and that anybody who opposes the blessed work that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is trying to carry on, will be found fighting against God.

"The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved! He uttered His voice, the earth melted."

Only let God speak and then what difference does it make about the ragings, "The Lord of hosts is with us." We emphasize the present tense of the verb. Not will be, but the Lord of Hosts is with us.

"The God of Jacob is our refuge. Come behold the works of the Lord what desolations He hath made in the earth. Be still and know that I am God! I will be exalted among the heathen. I will be exalted in the earth. The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge."

In the fifth verse it says, "God is in the midst of her." When any of you have seen a great steamer coming along your river, you know that the secret of power in this steamer is all to be found in the steam engine that is right in the midst of her. The same with the ocean steamers, you remember at the Centennial Exposition, that which made all the machinery go through Machinery Hall was that great Corliss engine in the midst of it. You will all remember that when that engine was started all the wheels of the machinery all over the building went. Nobody seemed to make them go, they seemed to go themselves, but the secret was that there was a connection made with that great engine in the midst. Now in our Woman's Christian Temperance Union work the power is this, that God is in the midst of her. We used to think in the old days that God was only where we were preaching and singing, and when we came out of the meeting, and stopped preaching and praying we got God out of us. You will remember that Corliss engine worked all the machinery, and now we used to think that all God was in the midst of us for, was to knit stockings or do something at home; but we never dreamed that God would work us out by His machinery in any public line.

Just the same power was needed to do the machinery work as stockings, though the manifestation was in a thousand different ways. We began with thinking that if we prepared enough, and held enough meetings, and sang enough hymns in the saloons, and talked enough religion, we would get all we wanted, that they could not withstand our praying and preaching. After awhile we found we had to do something else; we found out what one of my children found out one time. She went to catch some fish, and took a tin cup to catch them, but she was disappointed. She came into the room and said, "Didn't thee say God said when you pray, ask for what you want and believe that you receive it, and you shall have it?" I said "Yes." She said, "I asked Jesus to let me catch some fish, and I believed He would, and He didn't let me catch a single one." I said, "How did thee try to catch them?" She said, "With a tin cup, of course." Then I explained to her she could not catch fish that way, and explained to her about the worms, and bait, and books, and she exclaimed, "O, I see. Worms is Heavenly Father's way." And we find we must use different sorts of worms from what we have used, and different lines and hooks, and some have gone on from one line of work to another, every bit of it operated by this truth, that God is in the midst of all. Not a step taken that we did not believe, in the depths of our soul, was in obedience to the divine command of God, and I want to be recorded here that the deepest and most solid conviction I have in regard to this work, is that that is the secret of it—God in the midst of it. I have done things I did not dream I would be called upon to do; I didn't think they belonged to woman's sphere, but I have found that everything belonged to woman's sphere that's going to help her protect her home. [Applause.] Everything that belongs to her children.

There is not a woman in this room who if she should see her child in danger, I do not care where it was, even if at the polls, (applause) she would go there and fetch it. Some say no political parties, but if you find that they are going to affect the welfare of our boys and girls we can't keep them out. We cannot do much because we haven't the vote, but we have the right to exercise our gift—the gift of influence. We are the queens of home. I have heard it said today that, "The hand which rocks the cradle rules the world." Yes, if the world would stay in the cradle (laughter). Therefore it is that we hope for a divine call, at least as individuals, whatever we may do as a society. As individuals to use all the blessed divine power of influence that God has given us, and, dear sisters, some of us have heard a divine call in the present condition of things.

God spoke for Himself, not for any association at all. We have heard it said that this is the divine opportunity for the women of the country to come to the front in aid of the new party which is "making for righteousness." This is a powerful party and on the side of reform. My eyes are open to see that God is in the midst of this movement. I say now I would rather be on the side of God and on the side of right than with the whole nation, [applause.] Take the stand on the side of God and every body has got to come. Now, some of us have heard the call of God. Some in this land and some in another land, but the blessed thing is, that while we have heard the call on our side, we don't want to say that no one else has heard it. We must recognize the fact that there are different stages and God speed them; let every soul act out its convictions and have the courage of its convictions. I remember they said once among the Quakers we were not as lively and bright as we might be, and they sent a woman to start us up, and she said that all the Quakers needed was a liberal dispensation of back bone, [laughter.] I think all we need is simply back bone stick to our principles. If we recognized the fact that God was with us, how strong we would be. God is in the midst of us, that is the reason nobody can get the last word with us. If there are any here who are not with us you do not know how strong we are. You think we are fanatics, perhaps, but it is not so, it is like Hezekiah The king never dreamed there was going to be that kind of a battle. He went there to fight the Israelites. But Hezekiah took that letter and spread it out before the Lord and kneeled down and said, "Now Lord overcome this enemy for me." The Lord said, "Go out and when you get there they will all be dead corpses." Now we talk, no matter what it is, talk opposition, etc., and we lay it before the Lord, and He tells many of us in secret that when we go out they will be dead corpses, [laughter.] "Anything for peace," says a woman. She will give up anything to have peace. But when we know that God is on our side, that God is in the midst of us, one with God is a majority.

O, if we could make the people of St. Louis recognize the might of Divine Power that is in our midst! You don't know what it is, dear friends, to have 100,000 women on their knees praying about something.

Can't you imagine there is going to come out of that mighty spiritual forces to pull down the strongholds of the enemy? Our enemy must reckon not only on us and and our strength (that is nothing) but on the strength of our God, who is in the midst of us, and upon the promise that the Lord is on our side and we are not afraid. The worst that can happen, the grandest thing that can happen is to be like our Master was. Never mind the evil, we should jump for joy and we should rejoice when we realize that we are called upon to share, if ever so little, what happened to our Master. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least," etc. We are willing to bear anything that comes to us. I beg if there are any here who shall hear the call of God tonight, who shall recognize that we are standing on principle, and that we are on the side of right, and the grand moral principles of the present age, all that is noblest in reform, all that is truest in home and tenderest in the mother's heart, all that is kindest in the mother's relation; by every motive of humanity comes to their souls, let them answer, "Here am I, Lord, send for me. Can I do anything? let me do it." O, may you hear that call.

I do hope that it may be a practical thing with you and that you may hear the call. It may look to you like a forlorn hope, but it is an army that is going to conquer for it has a captain that can never be foiled in battle. Throw away all considerations of time-serving, all prejudices and consequences, and fears of results and take your stand on the right, and, dear brothers, vote as you pray.

Now, you may say, "But I do that." Would you like to pray as you vote? Many would confess that they voted as they prayed. Will they vote such a ballot as they would cast in the presence of the Lord, Himself? Will your vote be a pure ballot, for a pure party, and a pure platform, and on the side of home and the boys?

Now, the talk between the parties is about "protection," wool and iron being protected. I do not understand much about that, but this I do understand, that unless we protect our boys and our homes it is not going to be much good to protect wool or iron or anything else. (Applause). I wish I could describe to you tonight how strong is the cry of mothers to save their children and what power is in your hands. You are the government —the government is not in Washington.

The government is in the hands of the people who vote and I entreat of you to let your voice be heard for God and home, and native land," and remember always that where the right is, there God is, and if God is in our midst (O, get that into you somehow) we never need fear, we never can fear, what man can do against us. This is enough, that God is our refuge and strength and not only ours, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union's, but yours—your present help in time of trouble. We have not any monopoly of God, and you may know just the same courage and divine power, in this matter with which His presence has filled us, and it may come to every dear soul of this audience if only they would, and eyes will be opened to night to see that this is a fact, that God is our refuge and strength. Say it whether you believe it or not, God is so.

The Bible only tells us facts, not theories or propositions, but facts (and everybody wants facts). I remember hearing Victor Hugo, of Paris, tell of a talk he had with his boy, when he was studying in the geography about America. The son said: "Father, if I had been Columbus I would not have taken the trouble to find America. "What would you have done?" said his father. "Well," he replied, "I would just have gone to the map and found it." Now, this is our map. They are facts, and I have told you some of them. I have told you in this enough facts to convince every soul to-night. Begin to see them, then. Yes, it is true that God is in the midst of them. Why, yes He is; I didn't know it, I thought I would have to go away to find Him. He is in the midst of us, and see if you don't wake up to-morrow morning a thousand times happier for it.

Recognize the fact that God will help us and that right early. [Applause.]

Mrs. Roach, in introducing Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, who was to be the next speaker, said: We have now the pleasure of listening to one who, during the past ten years, has given her thought and time, the best of her life, to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Those who have listened to her know how well she can plead the cause of Christ, and how she has plead in all the states for prohibition. It now gives me great pleasure to introduce to you, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster.

Dear sisters of the W. C. T. U. and friends: Ought the constitution of the state and the nation to be amended by the adoption of a provision forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all alchoholic beverages? That is the questiou I am here tonight to discuss. What is the constitution of the state? What is the constitution of the federal government? I use the word federal constitution for that of the United States merely because it is convenient. I think there are some objections to the use of this term. My attention was called to it just the other day, not upon political grounds, but upon other grounds; still, I have been in the habit of using the words constitution of the state and "federal constitution," and if you will allow me I will use it tonight. What is the constitution of a state? It is a setting up of great principles upon which the people are to be governed. It is a division and distribution of the powers of government as between the legislative, judicial, and executive branches. That is the federal constitution? It was at first a union of the states for mutual protection, the first articles of confederation being adopted hastily and in the then condition of affairs, not long answering the purpose. Soon after that it was amended, and the present constitution in effect was a mutual arrangement and agreement between the states, or between the people of the states, whichever way you best like to put it. It was the passing the exercise of sovereignty in certain specified instances, to the federal government. The constitution enumerates the powers which may be exercised by congress concerning the affairs of the people. Congress can exercise no powers that are not enumerated in the constitution. We will just deal with the states. We will then speak of the relation of the general government to the liquor traffic. Going back to the definition of a state—that the constitution of a state is the mutual arrangement or agreement between the parties of a state as to their mutual obligations. You inquire why the liquor traffic amendment shall be put in the constitution, for that is the thing we are after, and what we shall never stop talking about until it is accomplished. The colonies, as you know, being dependent upon Great Britain, received their powers from the king. They were powers conferred, not assumed. They were dependencies, not sovereignties. They received, they did not set up. But when, because of the aggression of Great Britain, they attempted to assert their independence, then these colonies decided that they were, and of right, ought to be independent states. Then, first, you heard the term states. Then they numerated great principles of government. These principles were such as our fathers had contended for in the country they came from, the principles of religious liberty, of trial by jury, free speech and free press.

At that time the condition of the country was very different from what it is now. The states were very different then. They were sparsely settled. This great country in which we live, the beautiful valley in which I live, were then the abode of the savage, and the rocks and mountains of the Pacific were not then as they are now. Then immigration came and resources were developed, and the whole character of the population was changed; and then, with the free school system set up all over the north, with the education of the children, and, most of all, with the preaching of ministers of the gospel everywhere, the people began to become intelligent, and the result of all this began to be felt in legislation, and so the laws began to be changed. Let me stop here a moment. I say the laws were changed. What is law? Law is the spirit and thought of the people, the ideas of the people put into constitutions and statutes. That is law. What machinery is in the material world, in the application of force, law is in the government in the application of the ideas of the people.

What is force? Force is a quality of matter that God gave it when he threw it out. It depends upon density, certain conditions, etc. You can't go through a stone wall because of force; it is the cannon ball that goes through you if you are in the way.

As we say in Iowa, where we use words to express not to cover up ideas, force is that which makes things get. (Laughter.) Machinery applies the force, it scoops it up and uses it. The watch is the adaptation of certain principles, the wheel, the screw, the inclined plane, the wedge. These are principles brought to bear in machinery by which force is applied. Take an illustration I have used for the last ten years. You go to build a house and you want a stone wall. You get the right stone for the wall, and you say to the hired man, "Carry that stone over there." He pries and pulls and nearly breaks his back, and you say, "Don't you know anything?" (and perhaps that is not all you say.) (Laughter.) "Get a crow bar," you say; he does so, and puts the fulcrum in the right place and uses his muscle on the other end and pries, and that stone rolls over and over where you want it. What moved the stone? The muscle in his arm. Why didn't he move it at first? He didn't bring his muscle to bear. He simply applied the force that was there before. I was riding over the Alleghany river the other day; they were raising a stone. It seemed to be raising without hands; there was a rope and a pulley at one side and two men were turning a crank. They applied force by means of this machinery and the stone was lifted. They could not lift it alone; but they could by the application of force. I said cranks are good things for some purposes. When I see the cesspools of intemperance and impurity I cry out, "Oh," if we had rope enough and buckets big enough to bail it out—that is constitutional prohibition. I said law is the embodiment of sentiment. Did you hear of that riot in this city the other day? A human being pounded with fists, and others standing around and looking on and not daring to interfere. And a quiet man came in and put his hand on the biggest one in the crowd and said, "You come along," and he went. Who was he? I don't know, but he had a star and you and all the armies of the United States were behind that star. That is crystallized sentiment; that is incarnate force; that is law. (Applause). It is the moral force through the machinery of law in government.

There is no power but moral power in the nation. How shall we get at it? that is the question. There is enough of it, but we cannot scoop it up. It goes to waste so dreadfully.

Don't you sympathize with that man who saw Niagara going to waste because he could not turn a mill with it? It is too bad, when the world needs moral force so much, that it cannot be utilized, that it should go to waste, and that almost breaks the hearts of our women who see it. We know you hate the liquor traffic, and we know you want it out of the way, but you don't succeed in getting it out. Why? Because the moral power in your breasts is not utilized or brought to bear. I know of no way by which the moral power of American citizenship can be brought to bear against a wrong that is entrenched in legislation, except through legislation, (applause). Now let us go back to the constitution, from which we started a moment ago. I say when the school house began to do its work, and the church, then the laws began to be changed.

The force began to be embodied in law and sentiment crystalized. What was the result? People became more enlightened and laws began to be changed. First, some little regulation in a municipality, then some improved statute in a state, then the constitution amended according to the truth that had been working in the minds of the people.

Take the right of free speech and free press. That was a question fought out before our fathers came here; they had contended for the right of trial by jury. Then the thought of religious liberty was changed into law.

You remember how in the early days they gathered tribute from the people by law, to build churches, etc., and then came the larger liberty, the more blessed light, which led people to think that contributions ought to be voluntary.

So in prisons. "I was in prison and ye visited me not," was whispered in the ears of many a Christian man and woman, and they went and found debtors incarcerated there, for what? For no crime but debt. At last constitutions of the states were amended in this respect, and there was no imprisonment for debt thereafter.

Whittier sang once of the old man dying in prison walls. "What evil hath he done?" The reply was, "Because God made the old man poor."

So of duelling. A year ago I went to the home of Henry Clay, at Ashland, and as an American woman I went to the tomb of that grand old statesman; and going to Frankfort from Ashland I came to know that every man that had taken his seat in that legislature had sworn that he had never fought a duel, or acted as second in a duel, else he could not have been sworn in the service of the state. And then I remembered that Henry Clay fought a duel once, and I said in my heart "If you should get up from your grave, and come to Frankfort, you could not be elected constable, because you fought a duel.

So with American slavery, that came so close to the city of St. Louis. You know how that was entrenched north and south; south in the cotton factories, and north where the cloth made out of the cotton grown in the south was used. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto to one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me," Christians pleaded to statesmen, and they said we can't, and were afraid.

Petitions were circulated, people were educated and legislation was effected; sometimes merely a compromise, sometimes a mere stride forward. Then the war, the terrible, terrible war! Then the emancipation proclamation, then down in the constitution was put an amendment that the color of a man's skin, or the kink of his hair, or the thickness of his lips made no difference as to citizenship.

Friends, as I go about and study the constitution of the different states, as I look in the constitution of the United States, I seem to be in a graveyard. Here is a mound and stone set up. What is it? Imprisonment for debt. There is another—trial by jury. There is another—the inquisition—men could not speak once, not as much as women do now. (Applause and laughter). Here is a very large pit that covers the biggest of all, what is it? The liquor traffic is going down in there, don't you see? When it is buried there shall be a stone and on it written, "No person shall sell or keep for sale intoxicating beverages." That is the way constitutions grow—don't you see? (Applause). Every state in this Union has as absolute power to prohibit the liquor traffic as has the inl dependent states of Europe. They may say there shall not be a drop sold. They cannot say there shall be no liquors taken across and through the state, because the general government allows liquors to be transported and says they shall have the right of way through a state which they must pass to their destination. Neither can a state prohibit the importation of liquors by an individual who desires to use them for his own purposes. The law does not come into his house, the old English law prevailing that a man's house is his castle. The law can come into your shop and say what you shall, sell for your buying and selling is a matter in which the state has a concern. If you choose to import beer or wine and set it down at your door in Kansas or Iowa the law cannot interfere, unless congress should put an embargo upon the importation of them. If then the state can prohibit, need I argue that it ought to prohibit? I reckon you must admit that. I hope so, because if I commenced to say that it ought to prohibit and so concede that it ought to prohibit, you will want to know why we want it by constitutional prohibition. Now, gentlemen, don't say she is shying from the main subject. It is common to go to trial on an agreed statement of facts. Parties litigant say, what will you agree to? They agree to this, and this, and they put it down on paper and they go to trial on that agreed statement of facts, it saves time, etc. Now, the larger part of this audience believe in prohibition. The only difference of opinion is, how to get it—what from—and you who don't believe in it, bear with me and persuade yourselves that it is necessary.

Let us inquire what are the benefits of constitutional law over mere statutes. What are statutes? I say the constitution is the original general plan of the government, its rule of the game, its out lying fence around the plantation, it's the stamping, ladies, of the embroidery pattern. Now what are the statutes? They are the fences that go in between, that divide the cornfield from the pasture, they are the filling out of this embroidery pattern. The statute is the umpire that puts the boy out that does not play according to the rule of the game.

A constitutional provision is the setting up of a great principle, a statute is the way to get a benefit out of it. The constitution says we shall have trial by jury. The statute says how we shall get it. The right is a constitutional right but the means and methods of obtaining it are statutory. What is the relation of the statutes to the constitution? (We are talking about states now.) Sovereignty anywhere must be operative. The king, you know, can never die. The little one, the heir apparent, as soon as the breath has left the body of the king, is crowned. Why? Sovereignty must go on somewhere, all the time. So in a free state, sovereignty is all the time operative directly in the voice of the people, indirectly in the people's servants—the legislature, the judiciary the executive. The people make the constitution and the legislature takes on certain functions of sovereignty, the judiciary others and the executive others. The legislature must make statutes in harmony with the constitution because the plan is the constitution. There can be no law higher than the people except the higher law, but there is no higher law in a popular sense than the people's will. Now the people put in the constitution certain things—not everything concerning a government. They might put in everything if they so chose, because the government is theirs, but they don't. Why? Merely from motives of convenience. There will be a great many different views on different things, and every man will have a pretty good idea of what he wants himself, but I don't think everybody would know everything, do you? If a man should rise here to-night and say he could make a constitution for Missouri you'd say he's a crank. Everybody knows a few things. They agree upon a few principles and they construct a constitution. Then what do they say? They say, now we will set up these stakes and they are enough to tie to. We are determined upon this and we will get a class of men to serve us in carrying out our will and make rules and regulations concerning matters we have not thought of. Just think of the dear men all over this country who are offering themselves in their congressional districts for the sacrifice, not to speak of the men who are so unselfish as to want to serve the nation at Washington. Being selected they sit down and think, think. What about? About the statutes, about the needs of the people that are outside of the constitution. They can make no statute that changes in the least the letter or spirit of the constitution. Think about that—the letter or the spirit. What is in the letter of the constitution is comparatively simple. If the constitution says concerning right of trial by jury that every man shall have it, the legislature cannot pass a law that shall undo that right. So with intoxicating liquors. The people can make a license law if the constitution says so, but suppose the constitution is silent, still a statute may prohibit.

Why has Maine had a statute for twenty years and has only just now amended her constitution? It is because the spirit of the constitution was defending that statute. The legislature says we have a great evil and we find nothing in the constitution that prevents us putting that evil down. Missouri says it is an evil and we will tax it and make it pay, nothing in the constitution to prevent and so they do. I believe you intend to have a legislature that will say that the liquor traffic shall be prohibited in Missouri. But you go to a legislature that is not convicted along this line and ask that legislature to stop the liquor traffic. You must convince every man that the spirit of the constitution that protects each individual is violated by the traffic that makes its assault upon each individual. If I could convince him that the spirit of the constitution demanded it, then I would get it. But if I didn't have to talk about the spirit, but could say that it is in the letter of the constitution that intoxicating liquor shall not be sold and that it is the duty of the legislature to enforce it, I would have him, because every man is sworn to enforce the constitution and the law. It is wonderful, too, how it changes a man's mind.

O friends, the dignity of a popular uprising. There is something magnificent about a popular campaign. It is magnificent, this one, but a campaign upon a question where no individuals are concerned is grander still. Take the constitutional amendment campaign in Iowa and Maine. Take the one in Iowa with which I am familiar. It was a clean, clear honest ballot, the one principle against the other. Can you think of anything grander than the agitation of the public mind; it is dignified, because the people having made up their minds do not soon change it.

Suppose New York state wants a liquor tariff law, and New York city goes to Albany and with money defeats the law. Suppose $500,000 is sent there; that much can be appropriated to advantage, and would defeat prohibitory legislation perhaps. But suppose that $500,000 were to be distributed among all the people of a state, then what? It would not go so far with each one. A man at home cannot be bought so easily as he can away from home. But don't you see how much more money it will take to defeat a constitutional provision than a statute? Not that any man in Missouri can be bought, but they say they can be in New York [laughter]. Then it gives us a chance to bring influence directly to bear upon a voter. To my mind the saddest thing in American politics is a lack of the sense of individual responsibility. A man shirks and shares his responsibility if he is an ordinary good man. His sense of responsibility is divided between his party and his representative and his circumstances, and somehow he divides the thing up until he does not have much sense of responsibility at all. But in a question of constitutional law, where it is brought directly before the people, men have to face the music. They have to say whether they will or not.

I came in while my sister was speaking of the earnest pleas of the women. The world has not reckoned much about that, but I reckon you will reckon on it in years to come. They will go home to every state in the union. It means so many women at home using their influence. Gentlemen, we are the wives of the best men in this country. [Laughter and applause.] We live in the nicest homes, we have the most blessed family circles. We have social privileges that God has given us here in this blessed America of ours, and it is because every woman has in her home an influence strong and effective that the manhood of the land is being goaded on.

In a question of constitutional law the woman element in politics is brought to bear, and the women element in politics will never get out of politics, never any more! Never! Never! [Applause.] I speak intelligently and advisedly, and with malice aforethought. And why? Because they will bring their influence directly to bear on their children. There is a woman in this audience to night who, as superintendent of the Bands of Hope of Iowa, led all the boys and girls of Iowa to an understanding of what constitutional prohibition is. She taught the boys and girls the catechism—something like this: What is a state? What is the union of states? What is the constitution of a state! What are statutes? Who makes the constitution? Who makes the statutes? What is a court? What does a court do? What do the good men of Iowa, and the good women of Iowa, want done on the next 27th day of June? She taught whole audiences of little children such questions, and there is not a constitutional lawyer at Washington or New York that could gainsay the grand political truths thus taught. Why was it taught? Because the father at home had to vote on that question on the 27th of June. Here is a question on the constitution: Who makes the constitution? The people. Who are the people? The men. I could tell you many instances where the children marched on the streets with their banners, and sang "God bless our native land," and took their bouquets and pinned them on those who voted right. Many a man wore a bouquet on that day who had never worn one before. One man pinned a bouquet on his flannel shirt, and it was missed. We were afraid he was going to cheat us. Did you vote right? Yes. Did you get a bouquet? Yes. Where is it? I am saving it for my woman, and he took it out of his pocket where he had put it. He said, "I was afraid I would lose it, and I wanted her to know I voted the way she wanted me to. Many a man who had always voted for the Republican and Democratic parties, that day voted for Bettie and the babies. Another thing, friends. There is a mass of voting population that goes like a flock of sheep—carried by the "bosses."

Now in a question of constitutional law. There is not any man who wants to be elected, so there is not any man spending money to gather up these masses; there is no political machinery about it. A man stands upon his honor. Drinking men by the hundred voted for prohibition in Iowa. I put a bouquet on a drinking man. I said, "Pat, will you vote it?" He had come for a ballot—he would not trust anybody else. He said, "Indade I will, it may not help me, but it may help some of the boys." So of the church of God—in that campaign in Iowa there was only one or two who were not actively engaged for that amendment. The churches were open to us Sunday and Sunday nights, and well they might be. They pronounced the woe of the scripture against the liquor traffic. They were for the endorsement of righteous law in civil government.

Again constitutional law is non-partisan. Statutes are partisan. They must be because legislatures are made up of parties. We talk about republican measures, democratic measures and fusion measures. What are those? We have to vote according to our parties. But in constitutional law it is not so. No party makes the constitution, but the people make the constitution, and the people are better than the politicians any time. The peopeople make constitutions, while politicians, partisans, make statutes. Let me illustrate this by the bill in Iowa. In Iowa the dominant party for years have had so largely the control of the state that it could vote anything it chose. It could have given us prohibition twenty-five years ago, clean and clear. And so we have pleaded and pleaded for entire prohibition, and when we have gone to our legislature we were told, "O well, the people don't want prohibition; you are fanatics; you are theorists, but the mass of our people don't think beer or native wines do any harm." We pleaded for prohibition, and we could not get it.

The Republican party in the state said, "It is all right. The principle is all right, but the people don't care so much about it, and really we think we had better not. We have a great German vote here, and if we do it the Germans will go against us."

Francis Murphy says: "The German drinks his beer, the Frenchman his wine, the Irishman his whisky, and the Yankee everything."

On the question of temperance the Democratic party always said it would not vote for it and did not. We always knew where it was. The dominant party nominated a man that was objectionable. He was an Illinois man, he was a good governor and courteous and did his work well as governor. but he was a drinker. The people said: "What will we do?" Organize a third party. Did they? No!! They organized a scratch. They merely took off the head of the Republican ticket and put in its place a grand, good, glorious old Quaker. The other members of the ticket were all right, the lieutenant-governor, judge of the supreme court and superintendent of public instruction. The governor was the only objectionable man. But this was a wonderful tonic, and pretty soon the dominant party asked: What do the temperance people want? Soon the dominant party passed a resolution that the question should be submitted to the people—not prohibition but submission. Was that cowardly? It is best to stand by the people under a republican form of government and in saying this question ought to be submitted to the people it was the grandest thing that could be said, and the people voted. When the vote was cast it was non-partisan wholly. Why? Because men voted as individuals and not as partisans. The dominant party had taken pains to say that it was for submission not prohibition, but when the people voted, then there was a change. You ought to have seen how soon they changed their minds on the question of prohibition. What did they say when they saw 30,000 majority for prohibition? The dominant party said, "We accept the verdict of the people. We accept the result of that election with its majority of 299,074 in favor of the adoption of the amendment so voted on as the expression of the will of the people in favor of statutory prohibition and without making any new test of party fealty, we recognize the necessity of party obligations which requires the enactment of public laws.

Was not that a clincher? "To this end the party is pledged." And now we have partisan politics in Iowa. Why? Because the people demand it. It was non-partisan before. You can't get the party until you have the people, (applause.) You should have seen our politicians change their minds. There were gentlemen who said formerly to me, "That is not a party question; we cannot touch it politically." We said "Yes, it is non-partisan," but just as soon as the vote came we said, "We have no use for a party that is not partisan." I remember a gentleman in Washington said to me, "You mean right, but you don't understand—we can't touch it politically." I saw him right after the vote and he had not yet recovered from the shock. I said, "You'll have to take it up politically now," and he said, "No; you'll have to let it go." The next time I saw him he was stumping the state for the amendment. I could not help saying something, you know, so I said, "Ah ha, ah ha!" He said, "O, you know, things kind of shaped so—you know we sort of had to." Of course, they shaped so; there would not have been any shape to him if he had not recognized that fact."

Another man, a gentleman in this convention, said that Republicanism in Iowa means (I don't say Republicanism in adjustable terms) "A school house on every hilltop and no saloon in the valley." Why did he say it? Because the people had said it. And another man, who would not touch prohibition with the tips of his fingers, said in a public speech, "In the dark days of the rebellion the poor slaves looked to the Republican party and they didn't look in vain," and everybody cheered. He said, "American labor looked to the Republican party, and it didn't look in vain," and every body cheered, and then he said, "Now the drunkards' wives, the drunkards' children, look to the Republican party and they will not look in vain." And that was the very man who said they never would touch the question, but he was enlightened by a 30 000 majority for prohibition.

John Smith.—do you know John Smith? (Turning to the Missouri ladies on the platform) I believe he came from Missouri, (laughter) but no matter, he subsequently moved to Iowa. I talked to John Smith; he was a nice man, temperate man, Sunday school man, pleasant, quiet, cordial, genial, sunshiny man. I called on him and said, "I am glad you are here, Brother Smith." He said, "I have been wanting to come for a good while, but I am here." I asked, "Will you vote for our bill? it is to close the saloons." He said he should like to because he was interested in every thing that was good. He said he was a friend of the women everywhere; he thought they were just the class to carry on this temperance work.

Did you ever hear that? Have you ever said that in a temperance campaign?

You may have been all right, but I don't think it is clear up. I don't think it is manly—I think it is manish.

But, John Smith talked that way. But after all that talk, after talking about the Christian women and the liquor traffic, and giving me many pleasant assurances, and taking my hand—O, the way that man held on to my hand! [laughter] a politician's shake is something you will never forget—and talked and smiled and smiled [laughter]—he didn't vote for my bill! Why didn't he? It was a great while before I made up my mind, and I have laid awake nights thinking about John Smith, and why he didn't vote for that bill. He wanted to, but he couldn't. His disposition was good; he told us we had his heart and perfect sympathy and support, and so I think we had. But he didn't vote for us because—Mrs. Smith has told us why—something was the matter with his back, and he couldn't rise to the situation when the time came around. But this was just his misfortune, a peculiarity of his construction. He represented the universal joint—the ball and socket joint. It is put in places in machinery where they want the machinery to go every way. [Loud laughter and applause.] It goes round and round, and prevents friction. John Smith had at the base of his spine a universal joint, and that was the matter with him. [Laughter.] It was just the way he was put up. He swayed and swayed, and didn't happen to be swayed around right when the vote was taken. I have not the least hardness of heart for this man; he could not do otherwise.

You remember Noah's ark with the cats and dogs and sheep for the children. They are nice things, but fall down easily, but if you prop them up they make very good cats and dogs. Just so with these men of the universal joint. But they are cheap, they look well when set up—but they fall down easily. They are good men, this John Smith kind—John is standing right now since the vote; he is standing up against the wall of the majority; he is not any better, but votes better. Why? Because the people are behind him. My faith in American manhood increases, and my man in politicians decreases, and I want to help coerce the manhood of the state. Old "Zack" Chandler used to say, (he is good political authority) "Just stir and rise with the tide and we will float." A great many men today are floating. Floats are necessary, good things to have in their place. But the people underneath, these are they with whom we have the work to do.

There is a philosophy about all these things. This popular movement has come at the right time. It is the people's age. Go along the railroads and see flower gardens on every side; note the public libraries, and see books for everybody. Go into the thousands of homes in the northwest and find cheap books everywhere; see pictures on the walls in everybody's home. O, my early thought used to be for music and art because we didn't have any pictures in our home. When I was a little girl I used to go to Boston, where my rich relatives lived and visit at their homes. I think it is a grand thing to have pictures of mountains, or a thought that flashes in the brain of an artist revealed on canvas, the dream of a Madonna.

I did not have the advantages of these glorious things. My father was a poor Methodist preacher who went around the country on a small salary and had a big family of children.

We had a few pictures at that time, in the "spare bed-room," (you know that spare bed-room which was in the north-east corner, off the front room?) Well, there was a picture that somebody gave to mother. It was a graveyard, a weeping-willow and a large white stone, and hung at the foot of the bed so that people could look at it the last thing. We had another, it was a "sampler" that my grandmother made; it had the full alphabet and a verse from Watts. And dear father had several certificates of life membership in the missionary society framed. Those were the pictures we had. It was not a bare home, O, no.

"I don't remember any one place more than I remember any other place, for we never had a home, but from pillar to post father went, bearing the cross of Christ and mother gathered up her children and followed.

There was no home sweeter than the home filled with the members of the family gathered around the fireside. If I had a dozen sons I would have them all Methodist preachers if I could. There is nothing so grand in all the world as to carry Christ's gospel.

I used to want those beautiful pictures that I saw in the great city, and I do now yearn for them, for the temperance tramp is not any better off than a Methodist preacher, so far as pictures are concerned. I sometimes subscribe for a paper and have a chromo. There are more ornaments in your rooms to-day than lords and ladies had in their castles not many years ago; more elegance in your homes than in the homes of the rich formerly, because it is the people's age for progress. And so it is the people's age for constitutional prohibition. Friends, you can't avoid the change. We plead for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and the effort can be made most successfully by non-partisan political action along the line of constitutional prohibition.

Now, about the nation. The general government controls the territories. What is the principle of federal control in the territories? The constitution of the United States gives to congress the power to close every single rum shop in all the territories, to walk into the territories and close every rum shop, but if it should do so, it would abuse the spirit of the constitution. Now, why? The spirit of the constitution has always been and ought to be to allow to the people of the territories the same liberty in the exercise of police power as the states have in the exercise of their police power. The territories may prohibit the traffic by virtue of their constitutions and their statutes. There is not a territory in the west that could not have prohibition to-morrow if it wanted to have it by the act of its own constitution and statutes, so that when we say that congress can abolish the traffic in the territories, we are saying what is absolutely true, but it would be a violation of the spirit of the constitution if it should exercise the power.

Dangerous doctrine! You carry it out and see. Gentlemen, why is it you say that congress ought to abolish polygamy in the territories? Because it is an offense to the Christian nations. It is a disgrace in Christian America that Utah should be allowed to nurse that ulcer. But when I say the same thing of the liquor traffic the larger part of the states say it is not so, and the territories say. "Do you expect us to be more righteous than you at home? This may shock you, it did me, but it is sound. Talk about wool. Congress has to deal with it because the states can't deal with it. It must be a national political question, though it is an insignificant question; a political question does not depend upon bigness or littleness; it depends upon its relation to legislation, not morality. The protection of industries is insignificant and incomparably small in contrast to the protection of American homes. But the one is political, and today the constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic is not a political question. Why? Congress must talk about free trade or protection; because state parties can't. The other is an infinitely bigger question, but one is a political question, and the other is not.

As to the power of congress over the District of Columbia and all naval and military posts, there is of course, no chance for difference of opinion. Congress has exclusive control, and could prohibit; it is the only power that can, and it ought to exercise this power.

I am laboring to make such a sentiment in the states that congressmen will not dare tolerate this shame at the nation's capitol. England's poet said: "We have no slaves at home, then why abroad?" With Maine, and Vermont, and Kansas, and Iowa united as a storm center, may we not soon hope to hear in thunder tones, "We have no liquor traffic at home, then why in the nation's common domain?" and the answer returned, "There shall be none within our power of prohibition; neither shall the poison be imported from foreign shores."

Concerning internal revenue laws touching the traffic, I have long believed and everywhere taught them to be in violation of the "spirit of law" which should harmonize as between state and state and between the nation and the states. I think their repeal is demanded by this "spirit of law" if there were not the higher and stronger claim that this revenue is "blood money."

Concerning the commission of inquiry into the alcoholic liquor traffic and the submission to the votes of the legislatures of the states of an amendment to the federal constitution, I have been honored as the representative of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in advocating before committees of congress action in harmony with these views. I shall continue to teach these truths everywhere, and expect to live to see them dominant. Some writer says, "Half the perplexities of men are traceable to obscurity of thought, hiding and breeding under obscurity of language."

I think confusion exists in the minds of earnest, God-fearing, liberty-loving people, as to the domain of legislative action within the circle of the operation of educational and moral forces. In individual character a man is the result of all influences brought to bear upon him, within the limitations of his powers of being. Legislation in a popular form of government is the result of all forces, physical, social, educational, financial, and moral, and of all limitations. All legislation in a Christian state ought to be in harmony with moral law, and within the circle of its operation, but that circle is much wider than the point of its operation or of legislative action.

Through the teaching of the school and the preaching of the gospel, and the charities and philanthropies—educational and moral—which are the result of these agencies, the minds of the people are being enlightened, and the circle of legislative action is widening. When knowledge shall fill the whole earth, and moral power be dominant in all souls, then shall the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.

Then the end shall come, and the government shall be upon His shoulders. I received a letter at dinner-time that has brought great comfort to my soul. It is from a man known all over this country; it is from a man whose words and songs are in the hearts of the people; whose voice is heard among us still, but will not long be heard. It is from John G. Whittier, and it reads:

"My dear Friend:—I am very sorry to have missed seeing thee when thee last visited New England.

"I feel a deep interest in the National Woman's Temperance Union, and have watched its successful course with approval and sympathy; but I have seen with regret a disposition to commit the beneficent organization to a course of action which would give aid to the party which has as a party steadily opposed the prohibition of liquor selling. I therefore entirely agree with the sentiments of the letter of my friend Dr. Hale, which I have just received in my evening paper.

"I hope the coming convention at St. Louis will make no rash movement in this respect.

"Honoring thy noble work in the good cause, and with great confidence in thy judgment and discretion, I am very heartily thy friend. John G. Whittier."

Do you wonder, dear friends, that my heart was stronger?

Do you say I ought not to have read this letter? I would not, neither would I have spoken a word, if you had not cheered for your candidates, state and national, if you had not stood here and declared the faith that was in you.

I came to this convention, and was not going to open my lips, but I represent a body of women all over this country, who do not speak here. Today our sister from Great Britain said in burning words, speaking of the old revolutionary contest, when the Earl of Chatham said, "The act of the British parliament does not represent the British people," I said, If this grand organization of Christian people that are here today, these women of whom I dare not speak lest you should call it extravagant praise, if these women in this body shall not be represented, then this body will not represent the people of this country any more than the British parliament represented the British people. The law says parliament can do anything that is not physically impossible. Every lawyer is familiar with it.

This convention can do that, but parliament didn't always represent the British people, and this people will not always represent the rank and file of the women of this country if they take partisan action.

Now, politicians who think as I think, don't you take so much comfort out of it. Some of you don't care a fig for prohibition, but my brothers you will come to it. You will! (Laughter.) Because prohibition this country will have, women will have it, and the manhood of the country will yet give us this reform.

May God aid His children, and forgive all our sins.

Mrs. Foster then made and earnest plea for a collection. Referring to Mrs. Lathrap's plea of the previous evening, she said: "If you gave to her because she asked you so eloquently, I want you to give tonight for the sake of the cause. I want you to give to the St. Louis women a collection. Not to these sisters who have come from the whole country over, but I want you men of St. Louis to help the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of St. Louis in the entertainment of these guests."

While the baskets were being passed, the following questions were asked Mrs. Foster from the audience:

Rev. Simpson Ely, of Iowa: Would Mrs. Foster have us vote for Blaine and the Republican party, or would she have us rally to the cry, up with St. John, and down with Demi-John?

Judge Baker, of Missouri: Would Mrs. Foster advise a scratch at this time, or the organization of a third party? It seems to me that if the principle is worth anything, it is worthy an organization. (Applause and cries of good, good.)

Mrs. Foster: I would like to answer (turning to Mrs. Roach) but am under authority.

Mrs. Roach: The hour is late. I will say to our friends who have asked these questions, that if they will attend the closing sessions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, they will hear this matter thoroughly discussed.

Quartette delighted the audience with another of their beautiful songs, after which the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Simpson Ely.

THURSDAY EVENING AT THE CHURCH.

The first business of the evening session was the submission, by Mrs. E. N. Peters, of the report of work among lumbermen. The report states: "The idea has generally prevailed that woodsmen were a hopeless class, beyond the reach of temperance and gospel influences, but through missionary effort in the logging camps and evangelistic work in adjacent towns, hundreds have been reclaimed from intemperance, and give evidence of hopeful conversion to Christ. Large numbers have been blest in such signal ways that there is no longer the slightest excuse on the part of Christians for holding aloof from this work, demanding their earnest consideration. While we are making mighty efforts, in behalf of soldiers, sailors, and colored people of the south, we must not forget that in many states the success of our cause is intimately connected with the evangelization of the woodsmen. Here is a field of work practically without limit."

Then Mrs. C. C. Alford was called upon for a report of the Hayes' fund, of which she is treasurer. Her statement showed that the indebtedness, which had amounted to more than $5,000, was fully paid; that $2,500 was paid to Huntington, the artist, and $500 for the photogravure plates. The sale of engraved pictures still goes on, furnishing apt texts for many a spoken and unspoken sermon from the walls of school, parlor or church, wherever it may be found

On motion of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap it was decided to mount one of the $5 Hayes pictures handsomely and present it to the Sunday school of the United Presbyterian church, with a silver plate suitably inscribed, as a slight recognition of the courtesies extended to the N. W. C. T. U. during the convention.

The president observed that she wished to make some remarks in regard to the picture of Mrs. Hayes in the White House at Washington. She understood that the fine æsthetic taste of President Arthur had been wounded by its unique frame. This frame was of oak and elegantly carved by amateur artists belonging to the Cincinnati school of design. It had cost $500, a sum which was raised by ladies of Cincinnati. It was the finest frame of the kind ever seen, but it appeared, according to report, that President Arthur was a little hurt by the inharmonious effect which he considered it produced. At the present time the picture was surrounded by a plain gold frame and it had been removed from a good light in the east room to the green room. President Garfield assured the speaker that the picture should hang in the east room and she thought that perhaps the convention would like to take some action in the matter.

Mrs. Butler, of New York, suggested that President Arthur might not be in the White House next year.

The president (with a sigh): Perhaps it is best to see what transpires. (Applause.)

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

Mrs. L. E. F. Kimball made a report of the Sunday-school work accomplished. In the course of the statement she says:

We give thanks manifold that the following resolution was passed almost unanimously at the great international Sunday-school convention held in Louisville last June:

Resolved, That this convention recommend the international lesson committee in making out its next series to provide temperance lesson subjects quarterly in its regular course.

The victory, which was of God, did not happen. It was organized, planned for, wished for, prayed for persistently.

This result makes us a World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union in very deed, for it touches England and France, and other countries across the sea.

The following states have put themselves on record by passing resolutions at their state Sunday school conventions, asking the International Sunday school Lesson committee for the provision of quarterly temperance lesson subjects in the regular course: Iowa, Minnesota, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Colorado, California, New York, Connecticut, Georgia, Maryland and West Virginia.

Quarterly temperance lessons have been published for 1884, as for 1883. These are prepared by distinguished men and have been extensively used with great satisfaction. The superintendent in one of our largest states writes that in some places these lessons are considered the best in all the course. Rev. Daniel Dorchester, D. D., will prepare the lesson for December, and we hope large orders will be sent to The Union Signal office, 161 La-Salle street, Chicago. There will then be eight lessons.

The following questions were then asked:

Isn't it time to bring politics into the Sunday schools? Miss Kimball: That depends upon our definition of politics. Defining it as the science of government and government as the conserving of the best welfare of the governed, the protection of the weak and poor and ignorant, we think it the wisest thing we can do to bring it into the Sunday school. Just because politics have not been brought into our Sunday schools and churches is our country, designed of God to be the Messiah of nations, desolated and degraded by the liquor traffic and its attendant evils. I believe we shall have redress from these evils when we do teach in our Sunday schools the duty of each individual to the community, the state and the nation in regard to securing righteous law in accord with God's law and a government in harmony with divine government.

What relation has scientific temperance instruction to the Sunday school? Miss Kimball: Just the relation that science has to the word of God. Science is the handmaid of the Bible. It illuminates Bible truth but can never take its place. We must have "Thus saith God." For the religious education of our children we must have temperance teaching based upon God's word.

Is there not danger of losing the scholars of our foreign population if we made a specialty of temperance in our Sunday school? Miss Kimball: It is always safe to do right. In Chicago in the beginning of our work this question was repeatedly raised, but today there are a multitude of Sunday school children of our foreign population belonging to our Cold Water Army and marching under our prohibition banner. God has wonderfully blessed our mission schools that have had the faith to enter upon this work and there is a coming German vote that will have to be won in some other way than by the liquor traffic or the party that washes its hands clean of prohibition.

Miss Kimball gave strong facts from her Chicago Sunday school work in support of her statement.

The next paper on "National Organization," was a very exhaustive resume of work done by Miss Sarah E. Perkins, of Ohio. It detailed the scenes and incidents in organizing societies in Ohio, Kansas and Pennsylvania. Some of them were highly amusing, eliciting bursts of laughter that subsided when she told of the devil's ingenious devices for furnishing whisky to men in Kansas by means of revolving wheels. Pennsylvania was accorded the palm for organizing the greatest number of unions, 180, during the year. Ohio was credited with thirty-nine county organizations, and with contributing more money to the cause than any other state

Mrs. Shields suggested the propriety of the national body paying more especial attention to the work in New Mexico and Oregon, both of which were represented in the convention. Several ladies expressed a similar opinion, and hoped these new fields would be given more care.

Miss Willard said that she understood that Missouri, Kansas and Illinois had each organized about 100 unions during the past year, and that the grand total of unions numbered 6,000. These figures were, in her opinion, below the actual number. New York was credited with having 120, and New Jersey twenty-six organizations, while Monroe county, New York, was hailed as the banner county in America, numbering 800 members.

The business of the evening closed with the singing of a hymn and prayer.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Mrs. Dr. Boyle, of St. Louis, conducted the devotional services which opened the third day's morning session, after which Mrs. E. Green G. explained the nature of the Pathfinder, the guide book to the work of the W. C. T. U., ordered by the national convention of the union held in Detroit last year, and compiled by herself:

THE FRANCHISE.

Mrs. Z. G. Wallace submitted a report of the department of franchise which stated:

There are hundreds of thousands of women waking up to a sense of their responsibilities as citizens, who, from the standpoint of woman's rights, would never have asked for the ballot, that are now demanding it for God and home and native land, Never before have they occupied so prominent a place in a presidential campaign. As the days go by they become more and conspicuous elements in current political affairs. Never before have they so numerously, freely and forcibly expressed their political convictions and interest. It is only another evidence of that law of progress and development stamped by God upon humanity, which must continue to work until we all come to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ—self-poised, self-governed, knowing no allegiance, no law, no sovereignty but that which we owe to the Word, which in the beginning was with God, was God and became flesh, and dwelt among us. If the truth shall make us free, than we shall be free, indeed.

Eleven states, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Minnesota, Maine, Massachusetts, and Kansas are all committed to woman's ballot as a temperance measure.

There was no work which we ever did in Indiana for suffrage that educated public sentiment and our legislators so rapidly as our asking them for presidential suffrage.

Let every state legislature be asked this winter to grant women, by statute, every form of suffrage not expressly prohibited by its state constitution.

Miss Willard said that Mrs. Governor Wallace was the first woman to stand up in the W. C. T. U. and contend that women should have the right of the ballot.

Dr. J. R. Brown, editor of the Cumberlrnd Presbyterian, an honorary member, was introduced and said that he was present when Miss Willard captured the first audience at Nashville in favor of women. I want to say I have for many years stood in the front rank of this work and I sometimes flatter myself that my paper has even led the religious papers of the United States in this specific work of prohibition. It is uncompromisingly in favor of this measure, and our forty or fifty thousand readers are very nearly unanimous in the same belief, and we have great encouragement for this work. We hope during the next session of our legislature to get a bill through to submit the question in Tennessee. I am confident that when that occurs we will carry the state by a handsome majority. Tennessee has prohibition today as I honestly believe. I would like exceedingly well, when that question comes up if you can come down there and help us. We would like to have you hold your next meeting in Nashville and give us the benefit of your presence. It would rejoice us exceedingly. Thanking you for this opportunity, and assuring you that the good work is going on energetically and enthusiastically, I bid you God speed in your noble work. (Applause.)

Mrs. Irvine, a delegate from Mississippi, was also introduced, and said, I appear as alternate for the regularly appointed delegate from Mississippi. I can say that God is with us in our state. He is raising up noble men to stand with us in this grand work and I have, from the National Temperance Banner, statistics as to how prohibition has increased in our state in the last four years. I will not take time to give them now. I am glad to announce that Miss Willard is to be with us on the 31st. of this month in our state convention, and I am happy to say that from all parts of the state the cry is, "Miss Willard, Miss Willard, have her come to us." I will state, too, that Miss Wadsworth was in our town two years ago, and we organized a local union there and appointed the wrong person president of it. But that error is now corrected. Though we have not done much that the world has seen, there has not been a day when we have not done something and prayed to our Father for aid. O, we are coming on.

Miss Willard: It was nothing new to learn that they got the wrong president again.

Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a new worker "For God and home and native land," on being introduced, spoke as follows:

Perhaps I may be called young in the ranks of speakers and I am too abashed in the presence of this assembly to take your time but I will give you the impressions that came upon me as I looked for the first time upon the National convention this week. My feelings at that time could not be expressed except by the sacred words of scripture. "How unchangeable is Thy judgments and Thy ways past finding out."

My mind went back to the time I was looking forward to this—the organization of the Christian womanhood of this land. I remember, it seems to me only a few years ago, when I stood in a missionary convention, and I remember how my enthusiasm was wrought up and how I longed to go, and tell the story of the cross, and as I looked down my Savior said mildly and sadly, "My child, not yet." I went out where I could look into the clouds and said: "Why did'st Thou give me struggling longings without the power to execute them." And then I said, "I believe it is the prophecy of what is coming." I went back and it was but a few years before the call came. All the while God was working to answer that prayer of mine, and today I feel that this organization is the body for which our enthusiasm is the soul, and I say, "Thank God."

We have two great bodies; one the missionary society by which we reach the heathen, and the other is the organization through which our nerves run out all through this land and all our heart-beating blood can go out to every part of it. I did long to go to heathen lands and I wondered that I had no call, and when the call came to go into the work, I said, "I know what God meant. He wanted me to help Christianize my own land, and help make it the Christian nation of the world, standing before all nations, reaching out by the grand influence of example into all lands. A lady said to me, "When I first went to Japan I was sitting lonely in my room and thinking of the New England hills and I wishing I could only see something from that far away home," and what do you think was the first thing she saw out there in heathen Japan. Along the street came a wagon and in that wagon was a keg labelled "New England Rum." She said she went back and hid her face in disgrace.

We hope to bring the moral life of this land as an example to use over there. They say over there, "We do not care for your religion because your example is bad." I tell you the Christianizing we have to do is to show them how the "Sermon on the Mount" can call them to a Christian land. I have just one message to announce to you. As I stood listening to our great legal champion until my heart went out with such gratitude and homage that I felt I was going to be guilty of idolatry, I said, "O, women, let us be careful if we are going to do the work of lifting up the moral life of this nation. We can only do it by the lifting up of our own moral characters. If we go to idolizing the women who come to the front, then just in that proportion will our women go down. Back of every nation and speaker must be a great moral power. That is the hope of this organization. (Applause.)

On motion, it was decided to fix the price of the national minutes at 15c.

The election of officers being the order of the day, it was first necessary to get the number of votes to which the assembly was entitled. The corresponding secretary read the list of delegates and officers present. Besides these each state was entitled to the votes of absent delegates; the national superintendents present were voting members also, and each of the four state officers, whether present or absent. The votes of absentees are cast by delegates present, on a pro rata basis, in case of difference of opinion in the delegation. On this basis, it was found that the convention would poll 341 votes.

Mrs. Aldrich, state president of Iowa, was called to the chair and the election of a president proceeded, not however till after a half hour of earnest prayer, conducted by Mrs. H. W. Smith. Mrs. L. O. Robinson, Indiana; Mrs. Roach, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Bateman, Ohio; Mrs. M. J. Pearsons, England, led in prayer and Miss Mary Lowe Dickinson read a beautiful original poem, on "Rest in God."

The following ladies were appointed by the president as tellers: Miss Helen Hood, Mrs. M T. Hidden, Mrs. C. C. Alford, Miss Julia Willard, Mrs. E. J. Phinney, Mrs. Bourne, Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Mrs. Cairns, Miss Margaret Swayne and Mrs. Fields.

The result of the informal ballot was soon declared as follows: Whole number cast, 341; Miss Frances E. Willard, 327; Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, 10; Mrs. T. Lathrap, 1; Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, 2; Miss Mary A. West, 1.

The announcement of the vote was greeted with more than the usual applause, after the subsidence of which Mrs. Foster, of Iowa, moved that the informal ballot be considered the formal one and that the secretary cast the vote for Miss Willard. This was carried unanimously and then Mrs. Foster was deputed by the house to escort the president-elect to the platform. Mrs. Foster scarcely needed the authorization, for she was already half way down the stairs before the motion was carried.

As Miss Willard entered the church the delegates rose en masse, and the ladies for the first time during the convention became wildly enthusiastic. They cheered and waved their pocket-handkerchiefs, the Chautauqua salute, and did everything but shout to demonstrate their unbounded satisfaction. These manifestations of rejoicing were followed by the singing of the doxology.

The scene was at once inspiring and tenderly affecting, and even before Mrs. Aldrich, the temporary chairman, and Mrs. Foster had made their presentation speeches, tears were silently dropping. Miss Willard, stepping forward quietly with a blue shawl thrown over her shoulders, and, in a slightly trembling voice, acknowledged her election with the following remarks, at whose conclusion nearly every eye was dimmed, some sobbing aloud: "You cannot tell how much this means to me, this power of the grace of God to make us all agreed when we have so many different opinions. I did not expect this. I say it honestly. There is an old coin of some old classic land which has on it the image of an ox on one side and a plow on the other and above is the legend: "Ready for Labor or for Sacrifice."

I came to this convention with that same spirit, ready for anything that might be. Oh, sisters, when I awoke this morning at five o'clock, there came thoughts of my early girlhood years—a girlhood spent on a lovely Wisconsin farm, no neighbor within a mile. I used to ask my mother then: "Will we never live among people mother?" And now I want to say what I have not said to any one before, not even to my dear sister, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, who has stood by my side these years so good and true. It is this, that I used to read these lines of Tennyson when I was fourteen years old:

> Make me feel the wild pulsation that I felt before the strife,
> When I heard my days before me and the tumult of my life.

I used to think in those days that I would have a tumult, that my years would be full of work. Many a time I liked to go out into the silent corn-field, where the growing grain seemed waving a psalm to God, and lift my hands to the blue sky and say: "God, behold my hands," and then when I was alone again I would say: "It must be that these empty hands shall be clasped by the Father of my spirit." O, pray that I may be a true woman; a good, a sincere, a more humble woman. It breaks my heart to see these tokens of love."

During her remarks her voice grew very tender and her face strangely radiant. When they were ended, the secretary read some changes of program, and the time being after one o'clock, the convention adjourned till afternoon.

It may be said here that each noon a choice bountiful lunch was served in the lecture room of the church by the ladies of the various churches of St. Louis—a different denomination serving each day. The work was done so silently and so systematically that a hint of the culinary preparations below, never reached the audience room above. Various committee meetings together with the lunch, completely filled the noon hour and gave less opportunity for social intercourse than women who meet but once a year would desire and enjoy.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The first work of the afternoon was to finish the election of officers. The informal ballot for corresponding secretary was as follows: Mrs. Buell, 283 votes, Mrs. Woodbridge 17, Miss Hood 7, Miss Pugh 1, Mrs. Foster 3. Mrs. Buell's election was made unanimous and she was led to the front of the platform and said a few words showing her appreciation of the handsome vote of the convention. The next to elect was the recording secretary, and while ballots were prepared and written, Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indinanapolis, superintendent of the work in connection with state and county fairs; reported what had been done in that direction during the year in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania. Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, Illinois, Indiana Iowa, Ohio, Tennessee, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Kentucky, Southern California, Louisiana, Dakota and Oregon. In every instance where the union had been represented at a fair it had elevated the moral tone of the occasion and increased the attendance.

She enlivened the time spent in the slow counting of ballots with some very amusing and witty reflections on the work of women in the kitchen preparing "vittles and drink" which we were not able to get accurately. The formal ballot for the recording secretary was unanimous for Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, of Ohio, who said in acknowledgment:

Mrs. Woodbridge said, You have heard the glorious words from our silver-tongued, golden-hearted president. It is useless for me to add a single word. I think year after year as you choose me for your secretary, that it must be the last. During the last month God has spoken to me as He has never done before. And when it seemed to me as though I were coming down to the very door of death, the one thought was not of home, for it seemed to me that was all right to leave, but I could not bear to part with the dear W. C. T. U. feeling that there was any difference among those I loved. Today, there has come into my soul that peace which comes only to those who trust in God, and as I have looked out with eyes that seem to have been spiritually touched, I have seen the same light in your eyes, and I know the Lord Jesus has come to your souls as to mine. I pray you, let us ride in the "Chariot" during the coming year, and it matters not whether we be here or beyond. They who stay and they who go will together join in praise and thanksgiving unto Him who hath redeemed us forever and forever. I thank you.

Mrs. Woodbridge then made public choice of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, as her assistant, and as one who had worked faithfully by her side for many years Mrs. Stevens also spoke feelingly of the relation between herself and the convention, and in strong, sensible words assured its members that she would not count it a hardship to serve them. While the ballot for treasurer was being counted, the following letter was read from the Rev. Dr. Eliot, chancellor of Washington university, St. Louis, who was detained from attendance in person by serious illness. He said that he had hoped at some of the meetings to express himself more fully than he had yet had an opportunity of doing on the temperance movement, and especially in opposition to the whole liquor license system which is now working ruin all over the country. No words could exaggerate the amount of evil done by the general and habitual use of intoxicating drink. Among all classes of society, rich and poor, refined and vulgar, educated and ignorant, religious and irreligious, native and foreign, male and female, it was an omnipresent and abiding c use of evil. No appreciable good came from it. Everywhere it was the destroyer of domestic happiness and purity, undermining the best influences of religion and education, corrupting and controlling every political party, converting sober workmen into paupers and criminals, demoralizing our police and criminal courts and reaching up to the highest judicial tribunals, filling the work houses, asylums, hospitals, jails, penitentiaries, divorce courts, and orphans' homes with its victims.

It was not an exaggeration to say, and it could be proved by the most careful and impartial scrutiny, that at least three-fourths of all the social, moral and financial evils under which the community now suffered might be traced directly to the habitual use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, and to the dramshop license system by which that habit was created and promoted. And yet the Christian pulpit, Catholic and Protestant, was comparatively dumb. The churches, including clergy and church members, were comparatively idle. In comparison with the enormous greatness of the evils contended against and the vital urgency of the case, they were idle and dumb. By their neglect the evil went on increasing, and thousands upon thousands went down to a degraded death—dead morally and spiritually—before the death of body came. If they permitted those things to be, without the most earnest protest, and without their most zealous efforts, both by example and precept, to prevent them, were they not responsible before God for the result? In conclusion, Dr. Eliot expressed his hearty sympathy with the excellent work of the union and assured them of his sincere prayers for their continued success.

The tellers announced the election of Miss Esther Pugh, of Ohio, as treasurer of the N. W. C. T. U., and Miss Pugh therefore thanked the convention in fitting but simple words.

The Rev. Dr. Post, of St. Louis, was then introduced, and briefly expressed his sympathy with the work of the union.

Mrs. Mary B. Willard, chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, submitted the following resolutions:

1. Believing that the standard of total abstinence will continue to be lowered until every member of the W. C. T. U. interprets it as entire abstinence from the personal use of all intoxicants save medicinally and mechanically, we will exert our influence to enlist all women, and especially young ladies, to assist us in maintaining the principle of unqualified total abstinence.

2. We believe that the increase of total abstinence sentiment depends not only upon a knowledge of the scientific principles on which it is based, but upon a greatly enlarged evangelistic work, inculcating the doctrines of gospel temperance in all classes of society, among miners, firemen, printers, railroad operators, street car employes, policemen, telegraph operators, postmen, soldiers, sailors, lumbermen, train and news boys; and we commend this phase of effort to women of consecration and gifts, both within and without our ranks.

3. Since the sanctity of the Sabbath lies at the foundation of the commonwealth, the influence of our organization shall be earnestly, consistently and everywhere given in behalf of its right observance, and of the enforcement of all laws designed to guard it from desecration.

Adopted unanimously by rising vote.

4. We believe that the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages, is the natural outcome of a thorough understanding and practice of total abstinence principles, since it cannot be wise, nor safe, nor right to manufacture and sell as a beverage that which it is unwise, and unsafe and wrong to use as a beverage.

5. Of all the evils which the liquor traffic has forced upon this, or any country, we think none are more repulsive to thoughtful Christian people than the system of license, and sad to say men are not wanting who for financial returns eagerly receive these unhallowed gains, forgetful that Infinite Justice ages ago recorded its woe to them that build a town with blood.

6. Believing that high license has had a fair trial in several states, and has utterly failed to mitigate the evils or to regulate the traffic, as a body of Christian temperance women, we repudiate any part or lot in this iniquitous business, and will strive in all proper ways to influence all citizens to overthrow a system based upon a bargain for souls.

7. Because the education of the whole people as to the nature and effects of alcohol through the schools cannot be assured unless required by law, resolved, that we reaffirm our determination to petition the legislatures of our several states to enact laws requiring that Physiology and Hygiene, with special reference to alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics be taught in all schools supported by public money or under state control. It is further resolved that all text books on Physiology and Hygiene that purpose to furnish instruction in regard to the effects of alcohol and narcotics upon the human system which have the endorsement of the N. W. C. T. U., through their National Superintendent of Scientific Instruction, shall have the pledged influence of the organization to secure the introduction of such books in the schools.

8. While we gladly hail the legal enforcement of the scientific temperance instruction law in our normal and public schools, as shown in five of our states, and trust that others will speedily follow; yet where this is gained, that effort will not be relaxed in the formation of juvenile societies, thus bringing the children into temperance organizations and associations that will strengthen and fix the teaching of the schools.

9. We rejoice at the action of the International Sunday School Convention recommending the provision of quarterly temperance subjects in the regular course of study, and we pledge ourselves to continued effort to place before the children of the Sunday school the truths of Bible temperance.

10. We believe that the sin of intemperance and its prolific cause the legalized liquor traffic, demands more conscientious effort by the Christian church, and we ask that one entire day of the week of prayer be devoted to the temperance reform.

11. In consideration of the fact that the use of the wine of commerce in the holy communion which commemorates the dying love and sacrifice of our Savior, Christ, who gave Himself for us, endangers the permanency and efficacy of the pledge taken by reformed men, and in many cases proves a serious obstacle in establishing their reform and religious character, we record our solemn protest against its use, and reiterate the past actions of this body in reference to this subject.

12. Believing that heredity is one of the foundation laws of God, and that a careful scientific study of it will be a great help in advancing the temperance reform, we earnestly recommend that much attention be given to the subject, and that every individual who has in her possession facts bearing on hereditary drunkenness, shall faithfully record and transmit them to the Superintendent on Heredity.

13. Since right living underlies all permanent temperance reform, and that the drinking habit is often the result of the unwholesome diet of childhood, we recommend the more thorough study of Hygiene, urging all superintendents of this department to bring to the direct notice of mothers everywhere, the important truths of this many sided subject; we especially commend this study to our Young Women's Christian Temperance Unions

14. Believing in the great educating power of the universal press, we rejoice in the more favorable attitude of the newspapers of our country toward temperance, and their generous recognition of the W. C. T. U. as a factor of the world's advancement. We urge our auxiliaries in all parts of the country to patronize such papers as deal justly by the temperance question, and especially those edited and published by women in the interest of women and the home.

15. We consider it a cause of the greatest thankfulness and encouragement that The Union Signal has become a worthy representative of our beloved organization, and will sustain it with all our influence as a union.

16. As a society of women, we will do all in our power to uplift and improve the condition of all women classed as unfortunates, and believe that our practical sympathy for them should take the form of homes of reformation, protection and employment.

17. Since there is untold power in concerted prayer, we commend Thursday afternoon as the time of the regular meetings of the unions throughout the United States, and wherever unions are formed, looking to a general observance in our homes of the hour of twelve, at noon, as the trysting-time of the W. C. T. U.

18. We regard the enforcement of existing laws by the Citizens' Law and Order Enforcing Leagues of the country with sincere approval but await with hope the day when an extra legal force shall not be made necessary by official neglect.

19. While gratefully remembering many favors rendered our society by railway officials, we do most respectfully urge upon the management of our great roads, the abolition of the railway liquor traffic, and the more discriminating arrangement of its accommodations for tobacco smokers, so that women and children who desire and pay for pure air in the sleeping coaches shall not be annoyed by the too contiguous smoking room.

20. Since law is the expression of the average public sentiment, and but one half of this public sentiment has been expressed in law, we should earnestly work to secure the ballot for women in the interest of more efficient protection to themselves, their children, and their homes; action in this matter however, shall be discretionary in the states.

21. We refer to the history of ten years of persistent moral suasion work as fully establishing our claim to be called a non-political society, but one which steadily follows the white banner of prohibition wherever it may be displayed. We have, however, as individuals, always allied ourselves in local and state political contests with those voters whose efforts and ballots have been given to the removal of the dram shop and its attendant evils, and at this time, while recognizing that our action as a national society is not binding upon states or individuals, we reaffirm the positions taken by the society both at Louisville in 1882, and at Detroit in 1883, pledging our influence to "that party by whatever name called, which shall furnish us the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect our homes." And as we now know which national party gives us the desired embodiment of the principles for which our ten years' labor has been expended, we will continue to lend our influence to the political organization which declares in its platform for National Prohibition and Home Protection. In this, as in all our progressive effort, we will endeavor to meet argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, denunciation with kindness, and all our difficulties and dangers with prayer.

All were adopted save the last, discussion upon which was postponed and made the regular order for 10 a. m. on Saturday. The Convention then adjourned until 7:30 p. m

FRIDAY EVENING, AT PICKWICK THEATER.

Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, of Peoria, Ill., in the chair.
"To the Work," was sung by the audience.
Reading of scriptures, by Mrs. Hibben.
Prayer by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry.
Song by Miss Edwards.

Mrs. Tyng then introduced Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, of Brooklyn, who said:

Our safety lies not as so many think, in larger commercial prosperity, in greater intellectual training, or classic culture, but in the moral training of our children, in seeing that they are informed on the great question of the future. The great question of the coming century and of today is the social and temperance question. We must reverse our methods of thinking and instead of emphasizing the rights of the individual, we must teach and explain to him the duties of the individual to the home, to society, to the church, to the state. The great problem of labor and capital, of socialism, the great problems that cluster round the family, and the greatest of all problems, the problem of intemperance. These are the great questions for the coming generations, and they can be taught only through our public schools.

The cry to us along the line is to save the boys and girls. The youth of today will in ten years cast his ballot as he is enlightened.

A short time ago, I saw the opening ceremonies of the Brooklyn bridge. To the sounds of inspiring music there marched a company of 8,000 children. The blue sky smiled in sweetness upon them, the wind fluttered their banners, the birds joined in happy chorus, voicing the praise of their fathers' God, and as I looked upon that sight, I thought, "O, old crusaders, you are right, it is the little children that must capture, re-capture, the institutions of Christianity from the hands of the infidel, (applause). My faith rose exultant. I saw the great fields of the world must be met and conquered, and I cried aloud, "We have Christ and we shall conquer." [Applause.]

My sisters, let us not be discouraged because we cannot create public opinion in a day. Let the fashionable world laugh, let the cultured world sneer, let the political world pass us by as of no account; we have God and the little children and we shall conquer. [Applause.]

A solo, by Mr. Poindexter, "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord."

Mrs. Tyng then introduced Mrs. Mary H. Hunt as the leader in scientific temperance education, who could tell the audience how the victory was won in New York state. A suggestion from the local committee at this point revealed the fact that it was Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson who should be introduced instead of Mrs. Hunt who was to follow. Mrs. Dickinson, therefore came forward and said:

How sorry Mrs. Dickinson is that she is not the woman who knows all about it, and is going to tell you all about it, nobody knows but herself. There comes a stage in every public meeting when the audience desires a rest, and I think this audience has about reached the condition of a certain little boy, who at his Christmas dinner had reached the plum-pudding stage, and his grandmother asked what he would take next. Too full for utterance, he said he guessed he would "have to take bref." I don't wish to bring you to that [laughter]. That little boy was a relation, I fancy, of another little boy, who at the close of a sermon heard the minister put this question, "What more can I say?" The little boy responded from the depths of his little heart, but in a loud voice, "O pleathe sir, thay Amen!" I don't wish to bring you to that point, either, because the only feeling I have at this stage of your meeting is an amen, and an amen hearty and strong, from the depths of my heart, for the utterances, true or tender, strong or brave, that any of these, my sisters may have said, or for anything that they may say to you. Mrs. Hunt is going to speak to you tonight for the children. I am going to let some of the children speak to you for themselves by reading to you just a little echo of themselves. We have heard of the "Battle Cry of Freedom." Let me give you "Biddy Flynn's Fourth of July."

Here Mrs. Dickinson read the original poem which appeared in The Union Signal of August 7, 1884.

If Mrs. Dickinson should tell you the half of this wonderful work; if she should tell its statistical, its social, its moral triumphs, she would be entertaining, perhaps, but she would be taking the best facts of her sisters' statistics, the pith out of their stories, the point out of their wit, and stealing the sting out of their satire; she would simply be making a hash of that which has been so bountifully spread before you through all the week, and warming it up with the fervor of her own imagination, and seasoning it with her own sentiments, and serving it to you second-hand. If she fails to do this, don't think it is because it is of any failure to appreciate the grand cause in which we are engaged; it is only because she would have to tell you again and again what has been said so much better than she can say it. In this era of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, platform work has seemed to be a necessity, there has been need of a great deal of speech making, as well as of a great deal of praying and work that is not platform work; and the work and the praying go together, because, you know, "A not few women to pray, means a not few women to toil." Hands that are folded in prayer are not going to be folded idly after the prayer is done.

I am one of the women who coincide. You all remember, those of you who remember the district school, the committee who used to come in and torture the children at the closing exercises of school. You remember the man who said he had nothing to say, and then talked half an hour. And another who said the little boys were going to be presidents, and the little girls presidents' wives—things we found to be true!—and another said he didn't know how to begin, and showed us he didn't know how to end; and another that all he had to say was to coincide with what had been said before, and he went on until he coincided all his little victims into fidgets.

I am one of the women who coincide, who echo. Mine is only another voice to echo the infinite chorus rising from the heaven of hearts that are bravely and tenderly pleading with God for humanity.

Another solo by Mr. Poindexter.

Mrs. Tyng now introduced Mrs. Mary H. Hunt who spoke as follows: There was a story told me of three gentlemen, representatives of different portions of our country. One was a southerner, another a westerner and the other a man from Boston. There was a wager between these three gentlemen as to which could out-talk the other two. They were shut up in a room by themselves, and at the end of forty-eight hours the door was opened. The southerner was dead, the western man was just gasping his last breath, and the Boston man was whispering in his ear, (laughter.) My friends though I am from Boston I will try and not occasion a repetition of that.

There were men who upheld right principles two hundred years ago, and they have been revolutionizing the government. They logically reasoned that if it was right to worship in God's sight anywhere then why not here. They believed there should be no governing classes based upon comparative birth. Thus our ancestors came to doubt the divine right of kings. They went so far that they believed that so far as the citizen was enlightened, he would be capable of self-government, and further that the wishes of a majority of such citizens, outranked the will of a king. Then they shook off old King George and they planted a government upon this idea, the capacity of men for self-government; a government where majorities make laws that are eforced if popular and un-enforced if unpopular.

Now since July 4, 1776, this idea of our ancestors of the capacity of men for self-government has been on trial in these United States. It is the ideal government, it had been the dream of fanatical statesmen in all ages of human government. We call it liberty and under a government like this, if a majority want vice and crime punished, it is liberty for the rest, but when the sympathies of a majority are with crime such a government is on the high road to ruin. Sin destroys itself more surely in the individual than in the nation. No, not more surely; as surely in nations as in the individual. It depends then upon the choice of right by majorities. You say if our strength and permanency depends upon our choice of right then we must have the paths of right in the past. Would history bear us out in that? Not always. Heralded by roll of drums, on waves of battle, we have heard the voice of God in years gone by, as a nation.

We obeyed; we were obliged to; we could not help it, and what did we do? We liberated slaves who took the battle in their own hands. We took them on the national ship, and are trying them in self-government. Their failure is our failure; they are one of us. Not less than two generations ago we imported into this country more than 12,000,000 citizens from the old world, some very good ones. And good citizens we are glad to take, but if you are a good citizen, you will admit with us, that the largest share of these importations do not represent the highest ideal of mankind or citizenship. The latest importations from England are of this character, when they can not get them in at the front door they drop them over the fence into the back yard of America—Canada.

How about this idea of our ancestors—the capacity of men for self-government, with this un-reconstructed importation swelling the majorities. We have taken them on board the national ship with us, with our free slaves. We are in the same cabin—free slaves, naturalized citizens and native born Americans—and on the pennant floating from the mast-head, we see "Onward." If we are not capable of self-government, this ship goes down. No power on earth can help it. The very corner-stone is the capacity of the individual for self-government. They are coming in great numbers; 3,000 per day are going into Dakota, taking up our new wheat country in the Red River district; 19 dialects are spoken on the streets of St. Paul; Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati are German; and New England is very rapidly becoming New Ireland, with Boston for its Dublin. That is the reason we had Ben Butler for governor. (Applause.) There are some principles that are as good and pure today as one hundred years ago. One of these is this: where obedience in the past on the part of citizens has been surrendered to superior force rather than a yielding to the right of kings, it is best for the citizens or community. We have extended universal suffrage, and we have found ourselves in this situation: The capacity of men for self-government is on trial today before a jury, and this jury is on board this national ship, and it is made up of native Americans, ex-slaves and naturalized citizens.

Why? It is the people, and the jury is divided on this temperance question; six on one side with the brewers and distillers and saloon men; four on the other side, with temperance arguments, heaven-high, and one trying to spread his anatomy over the state trying to keep on both sides, and one won't vote. Now the majority make laws if they are popular. By no management can we reach a verdict until we get the jury together. A man used to say, "That is right, go to church, Mary, and pray for us both." He thought Mary's prayers would tide him over until he got to heaven's gate. They came before the gates of heaven and he knocked loudly for admission. In his dream, he saw St. Peter come to the gate with his keys and heard him ask by what right he expected to get in there. The man replied, "My wife, Mary, prayed for us both." St. Peter said, "Then, Mary, go in for both."

We must bring this jury together. We will interview them and see what they have to say for themselves. They are divided into classes, men and women; little children, infant baby hands signing the pledge. What! would I have your boy sign the pledge when he is not old enough to understand it? O, yes, my hearer, I would, and you, too, and he would keep it—and it takes the boys to keep it. The idea that youth are not old enough to judge for themselves in matters of this kind is foolish as it is absurd.

You are responsible, O parent, for the moral life of your little one. You are responsible to society and to God.

Now, these people are very positive people, but we must bring them together.

We will put the remainder of these Germans into one class, men and women. These are inspired with old notions about the family. There is a class of women in the land who believe on evidence, and if they are convinced, they are convinced all through and all over, and know why they are convinced, and their whole being is laid down in surrender to the truth they have seen.

Now, these people have been examining the position of these six Germans concerning brewers and distillers, and as they hear the evidence come in, they find it is all one way. Nothing can stand the test. They said, we cannot examine all lines of evidence. Suppose we were to carry out your notions how would we support the government, what would we do if we didn't have that $86,000,000, which was paid into the national treasury for the fiscal year ending June 1882? the brewers ask. Now, our temperance people knowing well that for every dollar paid into the national treasury, it costs the people $30 for taking care of it. Then you multiply that $86,000,000, by thirty and you get two billion dollars. What do you think of the expense of that? Our Germans never go over on that testimony.

Then look at the brewers, for He who spake as never man spake said, "They that follow me shall not walk in darkness."

More light has been coming in with golden beams on the brewers' dark business, and today we know sufficient to say that the brewers, business is paralyzing the nerves of our government. We add the testimony of science, telling us what these brewers are. The brewers tell us that their beer is liquid bread. We will take a glass of the best beer we can get. Liquid bread they say it is. And brewers, we are not dependent on you today, but our fathers were. And as we begin our analysis we find always a very great percentage of alcohol, and that alcohol is the charm of the beer, and it is the poison of the beer. We always find that percentage of alcohol, and also a very slight trace of hops.

If you are drinking beer for the sake of hops, you'll have to surround a large amount of it, to get your hops. You had better take hop tea. And then some barley malt will be found, and the rest is dirty water, worse than this Missouri river, (holding up a glass that sat on the desk), and the alcohol is poison to the brain. I say that every man who takes a little alcohol is doing himself an injury. He may live to be 80 years old. O, yes, but how about his boys? Alcohol is a very Shylock. It sits on the edge of the cradle and waits for its victims. John B. Gough said. "My father could be a moderate drinker, yea, but I only a gutter drunkard."

"No man liveth unto himself," and if you would study the laws of science as revealed by patient investigation, you will see the fingers of science held up in warning for generations to come.

Smoking! We have been drinking since the day Noah planted the vine, but within two hundred years we have added another habit. Why, the men of America are smoking, and smoking and smoking, one everlasting cloud of smoke. A breath of pure, untainted air is the rarest of rarities. The everlasting tobacco smoke is everywhere. Why are the boys of today tending to this habit earlier than ever before? Is it education? Yes, education in the blood, in the taint and trend towards stimulants. I think the heart of Infinite Pity is moved as God looks down upon children, especially the boys, feeling that restless craving for something that smoking only satisfies. Is it any wonder that the mothers of America are roused; that the mothers are convened here to ask, "What can we do to stem this tide?" We are asking of men and women to help sustain the laws of health and God's law, which broken come down with tremendous force upon the transgressor.

Looking over the six jurymen, who are they? The first one represents the lovers of liquor, men generally, and some women, and these are the moderate drinkers. Alcohol saps and undermines, the moral system takes the stamina out of character. These poor drinkers have weak willowy wills. Alcohol has paralyzed them. The moderate drinkers call themselves moderate drinkers. They wont dodge, they criticise you; they love the liquor. They don't want anything said against the object of their love.

Now, my hearers, and my sisters there is the point of the whole situation. When we have reconstructed that first class, the lovers of liquor, we can bring the jury together. Alcohol never lets up on its victim. He may pull away from his slavery but he drags a chain all his life; he never knows when his enemy may come upon him, like a strong man armed. It is one of the sad, solemn facts that these men and women drop out very fast; the lovers of liquor die rapidly; sixty thousand per year go down to drunkards' graves, over whom stands that awful warning. "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God," and that is our hope, that as they drop out we can recruit and fill their vacancies with better material. What class is composed of the men who buy and sell and get gain out of these things; distillers, brewers and saloon men. All they want is money. One was on trial and he said, "Judge, you can't stop rum selling as long as there is eight cents profit on a ten cent drink."

It is money they want, with 400 per cent. profit; all they need to start their business is a hole under the ground, a few barrels and bottles and glasses, for alcohol creates an appetite for more. Then comes the gilded saloon. How can we bring those young men over to us? You say the emperor of Russia could do it, and the emperor of Germany might do it, and you remember we are a government of majorities, and the constitution holds that law is embodied sentiment. Human law is the embodiment of human sentiment. "Good king, good law." Law in a republic is the sentiment of a majority of men who drop the ballot, and if a majority of men who drop the ballot are a majority against the liquor traffic, then we shall have control of the matter, and victory is ours. The sooner we realize that, the sooner will dawn the day of our deliverance. Under a government of majorities, when we have a majority, all will be right; if a majority love liquor, the law will reflect bad sentiment. Who is the third of the six jurymen? In one of our western states a lady said she joined the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and they made her secretary. "I went" said she, "to a meeting, and I put my name to the call. That day when my husband came to dinner he was in high dudgeon; he said, 'Mollie, if you go into that thing you will bring me into bankruptcy. Why,' he said, 'three customers came to the bank and said if your wife is going to manage those temperance people, we'll have to withdraw our deposits,' and they did." A gentleman said that it would be the ruination of business to antagonize this class. He was going to go for his own political interest. Now, if we could only bring a majority to reconstruct this first class, it would be a long way toward the goal. Who is represented by our next juryman? Two gentlemen from Portland, Maine, were on board a steamer going from Boston to New York; it was a wild, stormy night, and the steamer was leaking. These two men stood on the deck expecting to be drowned in the wreck. The two men were unlike in their position and principles. One was calm in all circumstances, and of steady faith. The other man was very overbearing, and a Democrat and a Universalist. His friend said to him, as they were standing on the deck and looking over the rush of waters, "I would give anything in the world if I was on dry land." "How much would you give," the other said, "of your money?" "Well," the Democrat replied, "all that a man hath will he give for his life." "Would you give up your Universalism?" "Yes, yes," he replied. "Would you give up your Democracy?" "No," he replied, "I would die first."

Now, that man represents the men who always go with their party, and if their party was to go down into Long Island Sound they would want to go there, too. If the party stands over here with the temperance party they come, too. Parties go just where the people go. If we could only reconstruct this first class, the lovers of liquor, and bring them over here to our four jurymen, so that we have a majority, the others would be all right. The parties follow the people. When we have a majority of men, I believe they will all be glad to follow us, and our party success is just in proportion to our reformation of the personal habits of the people. Our law should be in harmony with God's law. Prohibition, from the crown of the head to the sole of the feet is God's law written all over the living structure and we are in great peril when our law is out of harmony with God's law. We can get a practical law, and get it enforced, but to my thought it is entirely and constantly that class, the lovers of liquor, that we must reach. We must cut off reserves, and we are not ready to come to that yet, because we have not got the jury all over. Now, the fifth and sixth classes: It is fashion and custom, and ignorance, and then here is a man on both sides. During the late war, he said it would be a sixty days' dress parade. Soldiers went to war and on the eve of the surrender at the battle of Bull Run one of our congressmen went down to witness the conflict and he was the first one to bring back the news that our army had surrendered. As he stood there looking through the field-glass, he said: "I don't exactly understand this it seems to me things are getting mixed; it seems as though our forces were coming this way." And they came and said: "Run, run, the Rebs are after us!" Our congressman started off to go back. Some one said; "You coward, they can't beat us." He didn't go back. Presently came a cloud of dust, rumbling artillery, cavalry, men throwing knapsacks aside, and all going back. Our congressman ran too, and as he ran he caught his foot and fell with his face to the earth. A soldier stumbled over his heel and fell upon him. He thought he was the enemy, and said: "Now, my dear southern friend, can't we compromise this thing someway?" That is our juryman of the fifth and sixth classes—that is high-license. What can the women do?

Said a brewer; "O, the women, they beat Satan himself. They are worse than the Methodist church even. (That is our intention.) These women are everywhere; you put one of them down in one town and two pop up in another, and they never know when they are beaten." Does the mother ever know danger when her boy is in peril, or loose heart? It is the mother love back of this. She laid down her beauty, her talent, to that little bit of humanity there; she cannot help it. She could not do any other way. That is God's providence with the child. As it comes out of the cradle into manhood a mother's love and heart is called into this temperance work. It is God's providence not only for the child, but for society and country and for the coming of His kingdom. Yes, it is deathless mother-love.

Who is our last juryman? Some very good people are in that class. They say: "It is a good cause, but I am very busy; I am especially interested in art, and house decorations, and I really haven't any time, I am so interested in missionary work and all those things."

I have sometimes thought that the church today was too much interested in the conversion of heathen China, and not enough interested in the temperance question. It is the foundation question of our social reform.

Mrs. Hunt here gave a very full account of her efforts to secure passage of Scientific Temperance Instruction bills in New York and other states, dwelling especially upon the work in New York. She said that no one there expected that the bill could be passed before that legislature, but she secured its passage by going to the source of power, the people. She made a canvass of the principal towns of the state, and inspired the women of the unions to write letters to the different members of the legislature asking them to favor the bill. Petitions from home constituents were likewise sent to these representatives. The result was nearly every member was forced to vote for the bill. The result was a surprise to all, the bill passing by an overwhelming majority.

There are 1,500,000 children in the schools of New York—here are the reserves—here is the New York of tomorrow. If we can save these children, how quickly we will reconstruct the first class.

There are 8,941 teachers in the public schools there, and this law says that after the first of January next, no teacher shall be deemed qualified unless he or she pass successful examination in the branches specified in this bill.

We have a regular series of text books; we have them right here in your city. My friends, what will be the result of course of a effort in instructing the youth of the land? Ten years from today the men who are now drunkards will be in their graves; in ten years from today moderate drinkers will be in their graves; in ten years we shall bring out of the schools a trained and temperate army of young men. They will oppose alcohol; we shall have reconstructed that first class, the lovers of liquor, and a majority we shall have. We do not expect to save them all, but we can save a majority, and if we can save a majority, we can save the country. (Applause.) The brewers at their last congress said that Gov. Cleveland did wrong to sign that bill. Why did they oppose it? Because the brewers today are looking to the boys of today for their customers—their victims.

At the close of Mrs. Hunt's address, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, with inimitable grace, asked for a collection, which was liberally given, and the audience dispersed.

FRIDAY EVENING AT THE CHURCH.

A business session of the convention was also held on Friday evening. The first exercise after the devotional holy hour, was the report of Miss Mary C. McClees, superintendent of the Kitchen Garden department, who said: This is but the second year for work in this department, and as Kitchen Garden is a system which must be learned before schools can be organized, and the materials and preparations require money and time, the number of cities into which it has been introduced does not seem very large, but the work accomplished and the children reached by the training are most encouraging and useful. W. C. T. U. Kitchen Gardens are flourishing in Yonkers, N. Y.; Cleveland, O.; Louisville, Ky.; Baltimore, Md.; Oswego and Watertown, N. Y.; Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn.; Detroit and Manistee, Mich.; Wilmington, Del.; and Lexington, Ky. These schools are doing much to fit the girls of poorer homes for domestic service. Two girls from the Yonkers school have taken places in homes, and of one a lady says: "She is the best girl we have had in five years; not that she is so proficient, but what she can do is done so thoroughly and with such a willing spirit." The other maid had always spoken slightingly of domestic work, and looked towards the factory or store as a more "elevating" way of earning a living, but her knowledge gained through Kitchen Garden secured her a home in a handsome house in New York city, where she received high wages. Her father said "she would have known nothing but for the teaching of the young ladies."

In Baltimore the children were taken from the lowest quarters of the city—living in wretched places which could not be called homes, and the great good accomplished was in reaching the mothers through their daughters, and persuading them to attend Mothers' meetings.

In Minneapolis, the Kitchen Garden sustained by the Y. W. C. T. U., has been so productive of good among the poor that one of the Episcopal churches has offered, gratuitously, its Guild rooms, both for Kitchen Garden and Y. W. C. T. U. meetings, and the young ladies expect to enlarge their number of classes and teachers. Fifteen young ladies have joined the Y. W. C. T. U. on account of the Kitchen Garden, and all the children receive temperance instruction once a week.

The Y. W. C. T. U. sends out a beautiful card, giving plan of work for their Union, at the foot of which is the statement that "K. G. maids are furnished to wait at receptions." Minneapolis has also had a paid class. The St. Paul Kitchen Garden began with a corps of twenty-two teachers, and proved especially helpful in drawing into the Y. W. C. T. U. young ladies who were not previously interested in temperance matters. Several of the most fashionable and influential young ladies of the city offered their services in the Kitchen Garden, and one lovely girl has been faithfully drilling a class of poor children all winter, while others have had charge of a paid class. Miss Palmer says, "I am sure the children know thoroughly all we taught them." In St. Paul, as other cities, ladies of charitable associations have co-operated with them, and the Woman's Christian Association gave the young ladies the use of their beautiful hall.

In Detroit the training has been so successful that the head of the school says: "We could have found places for all of them, but only eight were old enough, and those we sent out, with the proviso that we should have them two days each week next winter. We have the most satisfactory accounts of their training."

The young ladies also commenced the training of a second class. Their exhibition was a great benefit financially, their profits being $500, and they received the help and patronage of the most influential citizens. They have been asked to teach the coming winter in the Home for the Friendless and other institutions.

Manistee (Mich.) Kitchen Garden started in February last, and in response to a call for 24 girls, one hundred appeared at the hall, and Mrs. Wheeler states "were turned away crying, so great was their desire to learn." They taught two classes, and the mothers were as interested as the children, often speaking to the teachers of the helpful ways of their little girls. The exhibition held in June brought the society sufficient to pay off all indebtedness, they having started with borrowed capital. The children received temperance instruction, though no pledges were offered. Six young ladies were added to the Y. W. C. T. U. through the interest in Kitchen Gardens.

In Watertown, N. Y., two classes, of twenty children each, were taught—one composed of girls of wealthy parents, the other a charity class. Of the former, a mother told me that in order to make the instruction more thorough, the class was divided and taken to two homes of the ladies, where the girls really made the beds and cleaned the rooms. They are said to be much more useful at home and more willing to help. These same little girls of the paid class gave a public lesson at the same time with the charity class, the former washing clothes, the other washing dishes. Mrs. Stevens, who is superintendent there, writes: "One of the girls, whose mother has been ill-treated for years by her father, has finally gone away and left her to keep house and look after the younger children. A friend tells me the house is much better kept than when her mother was home."

The St. Louis Knights of Hope, a finely uniformed body of men and boys, marched into the church at this stage of the meeting and were introduced to the convention, their leader making a strong St. John speech, and Miss Willard answering for the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Fanny J. Barnes then gave her report of the Y. W. C. T. U. work of the past year. One hundred and fifty unions have reported to the superintendent, and it is believed there are many more not reporting. Nearly every state has its Y. W. C. T. U. superintendent. The report made grateful acknowledgement of the services rendered this special line of work by Miss Anna Gordon, during the year, and the following suggestions:

From this time henceforth, and always, be it known to the national and state local officers and all the members of the W. C. T. U. everywhere, that this department is for adding to and strengthening the great sisterhood; therefore it may be done either by separate Y. W. C. T. Union, auxiliary to county or state, or by branch societies of the mother unions, or by committees, or by a local superintendent of young woman's work, whose duty it shall be to bring in this helpful reserve force. That being the case, we recommend a change in the clause of the National Leaflet, which refers only to separate Y. W. C. T. Unions. From not understanding the scope of this department, some states have failed to appoint a superintendent. The states and territories can no more do without this department than they can the juvenile. Work for young women is immediate and important; let us again urge the appointment of state, county, and local superintendents.

Where Y. W. C. T. Unions are auxiliary, we recommend that they shall have equal representation in the state and national unions.

Will the states choose some emblematical flower and text and report to the national superintendent?

Nearly all the lines of work recommended by the W. C. T. U. are being carried out or aided by the Y. W. C. T. Unions. While hoping they will continue, including the study of hygiene and heredity, let us never forget we are banded to wage perpetual war against the social wine drinking customs of society, and that the princess of the home must wed no recreant knight with sullied plumes. A white rose for a red rose if you choose, but each of equal purity and fragrance.

Mrs. Barnes gave a very sparkling extempore talk, which unfortunately could not be reported as our stenographer was engaged at the Pickwick theater meeting.

This day being the forty-first anniversary of the birthday of Mrs. Caroline Buell, the corresponding secretary, the lady delegates presented her with a purse containing $50, as a mark of their love and esteem. After solos by Miss Carrie Leach and Miss Anna Gordon, the convention adjourned until morning.

SATURDAY MORNING.

After the devotional exercises, a general introduction of new workers took place. The first was Mrs. M. A. Cornelius, president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U., who said: Dear friends, I am glad of these kind words of introduction from our beloved president. We have now several new organizations in Arkansas, formed by Miss DeVelling, a woman whom we have learned to love, and who to accomplish her work would go through the wilds of Arkansas, on a mule, if necessary.

Miss DeQelling was then called to the platform.

Miss Willard: Will Mrs. Molloy please come to the platform!

While Mrs. Molloy was coming forward, Miss J. P. DeVelling spoke of the work in Arkansas. It has been carried on in faith by all of us. I say it simply as a matter of fact, that I have not met heartier workers anywhere, but you must first reach them and interest them. There is splendid material there awaiting development, and we will try and develop it, with God's help.

Mrs. Molloy: Dear sisters, I thought as I have sat in the convention during these days, how much the love of these hearts is to the hearts out in the great fields of work. My mind went back to last year's convention, when after that Ohio campaign, having in three months made one hundred and fifty-six speeches, I laid upon a sick bed, almost at the gates of death, your telegram came to me like cooling waters to a thirsty soul. I shall never forget as I opened my Bible and read your cheering message, I said, "The women do care that I am working." I have worked all the year better for that. There seems to be some of us that God has called to walk in deserts, and it seems to me there has been very few oases in my life, but almost all desert, until I came into this work, and in spite of difficulties there have been no brighter or happier pictures on the walls of memory, than the faces of these dear sisters.

I have felt the tender pressure of your kisses on my lip, and your arms about me. I have been out at work in the world and and in the slums with a braver heart. I thank you for all the tender words of love you have spoken. I take up my work of the coming year with a braver heart for your kind words. I thank you especially, my dear sisters of Ohio, for asking me to be present at the convention because I know it comes from your loving hearts. I want to say that in Ohio, I received the grandest impetus of my life, when at the close of the campaign, I received this watch and chain, and on it says, "A token of Ohio's love for Emma Molloy, Oct, 9, 1883, In hoc signo vincit." In time we shall conquer all things. Yes, ladies in time we shall conquer. We must only be patient and if we should feel faint or weary on the way let us remember that is only a little farther on, and I want to ask Mrs. Pearne, of Ohio, to sing us that beautiful song, "It is better farther on."

Mrs. C. C. Alford then spoke in the interest of the Christmas Temperance Souvenir in course of preparation. I am speaking as a substitute for an invalid lady, Mrs. Geo. S. Hunt, of Portland, Maine. She thought of arranging some poems for the temperance cause, and having the temperance women to urge their book sellers in their homes to assist in getting them into circulation. The publisher, J. N. Stearns has promised to bring out this book if enough orders can be received to warrant him in doing so. Mrs. Hunt asks that after the first expense is paid all the profits shall go into the National treasury. The first edition will be 5,000, and if the publishers receive an order of 1,000 that will be sufficient to warrant them in going on. The book will cost about seventy-five cents and will contain beautiful selections from Longfellow and other popular poets, and it is expected that after the first thousand are sold there will be a profit for the National treasury.

Mrs. S. C. Downs, of New Jersey: I want to say in addition to this, that as soon as this souvenir volume is ready for the market circulars will be sent out to all the unions, and it can be ordered from Miss Julia Colman.

Miss Woodard: I want to say that the lady who has arranged these poems has put $50 of her own money into the enterprise. The hour fixed for the discussion of the resolution having arrived Mrs. Fannie Barnes, of New York, asked that, "Give to the winds thy fears," might be sung prior to the debate.

Mrs. Irvine, of Mississippi: That was the hymn that taught me to do this work.

Miss Willard: It was first sung by the crusaders in Hillsboro, Ohio, as they filed out of the Presbyterian church, Mrs. Judge Thompson at the head of the column.

The hymn was then sung as "lined" in the old fashioned way by Mrs. Bottome:

Give to the winds thy fears
Hope and be undismayed—
God hears thy sighs and counts thy tears,
He shall lift up thy head.

Through waves and clouds and storms,
He gently clears thy way,
Wait thou His time, so shall this night
Soon end in joyous day.

Far, far above thy thought,
His counsel shall appear,
When fully He the work hath wrought,
Which caused thy needless fear.

Prior to leading in the singing of "How Firm a Foundation," Mrs. Bottome said: I was on a sick bed not long ago, and the doctor said, "Here you have been singing yourself to everybody, and now you have no one to sing for you." In a moment I heard muffled drums and when that band of music reached the corner of our street they unmuffled the drums and it was the old tune, "How Firm a Foundation," and when they reached the corner I heard

"The soul that on Jesus doth lean for repose,
I will not, I will not, desert to his foes,
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never forsake!"

Now, friends, if you need it, He will send you a whole band to hold you up. Let us sing it and let us believe that invisible bands of music are around us all the time, whether you are travelling north or south in this marvellous work, and that God sends bands of music everywhere to cheer you on.

The hymn was then sung.

The resolution was then read by Mrs. Willard, as follows:

"We refer to the history of ten years of moral suasion work as fully establishing our claim to be called a non-political society, but one which steadily follows the white banner of prohibition wherever it may be displayed. We have, however, as individuals, always allied ourselves in local and state political contests with those voters whose efforts and ballots have been given for the removal of the dramshop and its attendant evils; and at this time, while recognizing that our action as a national society is not binding upon states or individuals, we reaffirm the positions taken by the society both at Louisville in 1882 and Detroit in 1883, pledging our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect our homes. And, as we know which national party gives us the desired embodiment of the principles for which our ten years' labor has been expended, we will continue to aid the political organization which declares in its platform for national prohibition and home protection. In this, as in all our progressive efforts, we will endeavor to meet argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, denunciation with kindness, and all our difficulties and dangers with prayer."

Mrs. H. W. Smith: We are intensely interested in this resolution; I am in favor of it. I never dreamed but that we would all go in for it. In Germantown we got out a St. John banner and turned our coffee-house into a temperance convention, and then we found out there was a difference of opinion. I would like to hear Miss Willard give one side and Mrs. Foster the other side. (Applause).

Miss Tobey: I wish to say that in my experience, I have never been quite clear in my mind as to its being best for us as an organization to take a stand with any political party. I voted for it at Detroit, not thinking we were pledging ourselves to a party, but I found afterwards we had done so. In Massachusetts at our late convention there was no definite action taken on either side of this question. I cannot come here as a representative of Massachusetts and take a stand on either side of this question honestly. I have sought divine guidance in this matter, and as I now look upon it, in the light of the action taken by the national convention in Detroit, I don't think we could go back on our position without giving aid and comfort to the enemy (applause). Therefore, I vote as an individual, not as the state president of Massachusetts, nor will our delegates vote as representing Massachusetts. I shall vote, under the circumstances, in favor of this resolution.

Mrs. E. G. Green, of Vermont: By adopting this resolution are we authorized to send delegates to political conventions? May I speak on that? Miss Willard: It is not germane to the resolution, but if consent is given she will speak to that. Mrs. Greene: I understand that we may do anything we choose as unions, and do anything we like except send delegates to political conventions.

Mrs. Wood: I would like to ask if Massachusetts convention took no action with regard to this resolution?

Miss Tobey: A motion was made in the early part of the convention, and carried by the convention that no resolution should be discussed on the floor, but referred to the committee on resolutions. The committee on resolutions was chosen by the chair, and the resolution was handed in endorsing the action of the state the year before, endorsing the principles of the Prohibition party: it was handed in, but came out endorsing the constitutional amendment, and urging that we should work for a constitutional amendment to that end. It was not brought up for definite discussion, consequently I am in doubt as to what action the convention would have taken.

Mrs. Jones, of Pa.: I wish to know whether we cannot enforce the rules to avoid whispering and talking in this convention. I say, let the speakers speak.

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, of Ill.: I understand that the question is upon adherence to the Detroit resolution. The fact that a political party has risen that has of its own free will, and by the command of the spirit which is within it, come to the standard that is uplifted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, seems to have brought perplexity to us, and the question is, Shall we retreat from the position we have taken, because a political party has come to our ground, rather than be charged by the outside world that is looking on, with standing by political parties?

We have taken our position as God has led us forward from the first. As an organization we had no more idea of what was involved in this work than the child in it's cradle knows of the secrets of human life. But God has led us by the spirit which He has infused into us, and it brought us to one position on the liquor traffic of this country, which is the absolute prohibition of this traffic, and we have been at work during all the years to build up in our homes, in the minds of our sons, among the reformed men, a majority that we must have, that the principle may triumph in this country.

From the homes, and Bands of Hope, and Sunday Schools, and reformed men, have come a cohort who say, they adopt the principles we have taught them, and are known today as a political party. That is a matter between God and them. No matter how the outside world and people who do not know anything about God, criticise the fact that this Christian army, under His instruction, and we with our divisions have come together. That is God's work, and it seems that the women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in this resolution are right there where God has planted them. (Cheers.) And the time has come that overwhelming majorities which must carry this question from hamlet to White House, all through this nation, touching every institution, and touching every office, are here, and it seems to me it would be a strange thing if the Woman's Christian Temperance Union should withdraw for fear of being entangled with a political party.

Mrs. S. M. Perkins, of Ohio: I hope this resolution will pass. In Ohio we are divided. Hundreds of unions are in Ohio; some of them say we don't want to work with a third party, and we don't want to lose them. We all realize the word of the old Testament, what Jacob said to Esau, that we must lead on softly for the children are tender. Nevertheless we are going to lead. (Applause). I spoke against this resolution when it first came up in Ohio, but I have had light since and I have changed. God asks us to take the right way and He is fully competent to take care of the consequences.

Mrs. Leech, of Louisville: In view of the fact that Kentucky endorsed the action of the national officers, I wish to have my vote for home protection go on record. I believe in fighting it out on this line if it takes the rest of the century. Mrs. Wilson, of Virginia: I hope this resolution will be passed, it is what we want in Virginia.

Mrs. Safford, of Pennsylvania: I think I can claim to have commenced this work among the first of the ladies of this convention, thirty-five years ago. I have left no stone unturned and I consider myself as earnest for the suppression of intemperance, as anyone on this floor. I see these ladies make a great distinction. We in Pennsylvania thought we were working as earnestly as any one in this nation and we think this will put us back in Pennsylvania (cries of no, no).

(Miss Willard: Ladies, free speech). I have heard ministers say it will put us back twenty-five years.

Mrs. E. G. Saxon, of Tennessee: There was a time in the history of the mother states that I think it is well to think of. A great party was organized to take their stand to free the negroes, and when they went up to sign their names, James Mott hesitated. His friends advised him against it because his prosperity would be checked by it. His wife was there, and she rose in the audience and said: "James, sign thy name—do thy duty." (Applause.)

Mrs. Aldrich: I want to ask if what we are to understand is that we are committed to aid a political party in the passage of the resolution which distinctly says that individuals are left free. I want to know what is committed to political parties by the passage of this resolution.

Miss Willard: The chairman of the committee will reply.

Mrs. M. B. Willard: I suppose it means in 1884 just what it meant in 1883 and 1882—lend our influence. The committee did not undertake to interpret it further than that.

Mrs. Aldrich: I do not think the chairman of committee gets just the thought I meant. What is the national organization committed to by this resolution that leaves individuals and states free?

Miss Willard: The states have interpreted that for themselves. Mrs. Aldrich is a strong state rights woman, leaving states free to take up the matter for themselves.

Mrs. Aldrich: What is committed?

Miss Willard: The chair would ask Mrs. Aldrich to explain what the distinction is. We have always taken it that we should act independently. We did not require Iowa to declare for it, and she didn't, but the national did, and I suppose it is the same in respect to this amendment, what I regard as the next evolution of it.

Mrs. Aldrich: It seems that in the passage of this resolution we commit something to the aid of a political party. I only wanted to speak on this, and my thought was that I wanted a distinct statement as to what is committed. Now what is a national organization, and are we afraid to do our own bidding? The president and vice-presidents making the executive committee, and each president of a state is an executive officer, and I want to know who the president of a state union, as a president of a state union, is committed to—what political party as a member of a national organization? I want an answer from the chairman as to what composes the national organization.

Mrs. M. B. Willard: I would only say this, that the resolution as passed at Detroit has been interpreted through the year by our general officers, and the committee did not feel that they were called upon to interpret it further, but to use in substance the same phrase in re-uttering the resolution. Consequently there is no definition further than has been given already.

Mrs. M. E. Shields, of Colorado: I want to say in behalf of the women of Colorado, that we have never drawn our inspiration from the politicians of that state. They say we are delaying the cause twenty-five years by our course, but nevertheless we do not follow them, but get our inspiration from a higher source. They have adopted a resolution there to support a third party.

Mrs. Cooley, of Nebraska: I have seen a beautiful picture as I have sat here this morning, and it came to my mind as a lady from Ohio was speaking. It took me back ten years, and I saw a grand procession of 1,600 boys wearing the insignia of the Band of Hope and carrying in their hands a banner upon which was written, "Look out for us, we will be men by and by." They are men today and their vote in Ohio last week shows that some of them have grown to be men, and I want to say that we must do nothing to encourage any one in thinking that we have gone back on the principles we have inculcated. Though we have divisions we are one in heart after all. You and I would fight shoulder to shoulder, and heart to heart to save our loved ones, and here we are at difference. I am terribly in earnest about this for the sake of my boy. He will vote one of these days, I suppose, and I want him to understand that the women of the nation stood solid for prohibition any way, (applause.) Friends, I would rather talk than be cheered. At one time the men of our land stood together wondering whether they had better send out a proclamation of liberty. There were some that were afraid. One of the men at that halting-time said, "We had better all hang together or we shall hang separately!" and, ladies, we are the daughters of these men.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap: From the action of the Louisville meeting we reaffirm the action taken last year at Detroit, which gives (reads from minutes of Louisville meeting, p. 28 after resolutions.)

If you have a record of the Louisville meeting you will find it on page 28, after the resolutions.

Miss Amanda Way, of Kansas: (Being asked if she was a delegate said, "I am a crusader and a delegate." Applause.) I think we have come to the test, we have talked prohibition and prayed prohibition 364 days of the year and the 365th day walked out and voted it down. We have been pleading it in every place possible for women, and now we come to the present position of affairs; shall we be true to our own instincts and natures or shall we hold on to the party that we have been co-operating with? We come to that, and I am sorry to say that women are tied to party as well as men; but the women are growing together and we shall all grow together in the near future. How do you know a man is a Republican? He may talk high protective tariff and yet on the day of election he goes out and votes the Democratic ticket; do you claim he is a Republican? No. The same with a Democrat. If he votes the Republican ticket is he a Democrat? No. How do you know a man is a Prohibitionist if he votes another ticket with a party that will be silent and say nothing and turns back upon us? Is he a Prohibitionist? No.

Mrs. E. S. Burlingame, of Rhode Island: I think it is the desire of a large part of the convention to go to our homes and our states, ready to say to them whether this convention takes a political position or does not. We say in the first part of these resolutions that "we refer to the history of ten years of moral suasion as fully establishing our claim to be called a non-political society." We cannot adopt that resolution without continuing that, without interpreting the action of the past year as non-political, otherwise our resolution is inconsistent with itself. [A voice—"It is!"] I cannot see how we can pass anything in which we say that we do not consider the states or individuals behind us, for we are not here as individuals, except a small portion of the delegates. We are here as delegates and are bound to represent the state behind us. Now then, if that is true that we are not, and we claim that we are not, and we establish our claim by our action, we can pass this resolution, then we will see that we will continue to aid the organization which declares for prohibition and home protection. We must have it understood that no political organization is meant, we cannot be consistent with ourselves in this resolution if that be true. Just the moment that another interpretation is put upon it, we are inconsistent.

The question is asked, What else are we organized for except to carry on this movement? I think there are superintendents here today who might have an answer to that question. Each one will be affected by the action taken on this resolution, therefore I must stand here and take a decided position. Some of us have been working hard in the interest of prohibition. What did it mean in a country town in Rhode Island last year, where a woman had to ride and ride to get 1,100 names to a petition to the legislature? What did it mean? It meant that the women of the state came to the legislature representing a number of Prohibitionists not allied to any party, and we took strength from all of those people there. Just the moment it goes out that we have taken a position, that we have connected ourselves with any political party, we have got to go home and explain. We shall have to stand together or lose ground. There is scarcely a political meeting of any kind in our state to which I have not been made welcome. I have been admitted to every ministers' meeting and other gatherings. Why? Because I came representing a non-political organization. I came representing a principle of prohibition which they agreed with, otherwise I should not have had entrance there.

Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge: I want to ask Mrs. Burlingame if the ballot has not been endorsed year after year by this society; if we have any of us suffered in our states because of our continued action in favor of the ballot?

Mrs. Burlingame: We have not suffered in the same proportion. There has been suffering in some of the states. The men have asked in some of the states what position we occupied, but it is not true that society is divided, that our brothers are divided as in political parties; and therefore the suffering could not be the same, because it came in a different way.

Mrs. Fannie J. Barnes, of New York: I come from the society of Friends.

We all agree to disagree, and so, dear friends, does not this society represent the sentiment in the states and what it should be in the country? They are the ones that commit us on this question. Is it not a beautiful thing that while the national society takes this position it is the states that carry it out according as they may see fit. I think if a majority vote for this resolution, we are defining our position clearly to the states as a national society, and go on as we have been year after year. I thing it is a grand principle, that we can come up to this convention and carry such a resolution, and yet so kindly yield to those who differ and not break our ranks, for we are marching towards the same goal.

Miss Narcissa White, of Pennsylvania: I don't intend to say anything at all, as Pennsylvania has been spoken for. I simply want to say that we, as delegates from Pennsylvania, will vote as individuals.

Mrs. Emma Molloy: A gentleman said to me, there is no precedent for an action of this character; the W. C. T. U. is taking the position such as no temperance organization has ever taken before. I told him we did not care for precedents, we are making history and setting precedents these days (applause.) There was no precedent for that occurence down by the Red Sea, but when the Israelites came to the waters of the Red Sea, they did not stop to see the barriers there, but stepped right in and God opened the way. I am glad that we, as the state of Kansas, have given to the world this pure-hearted, noble, brave St. John. We have come into this movement believing in its ultimate success. Not a brewer or distiller in America endorses the third party movement. Dare we say that we are not directly opposed to them? Years ago I heard a man say something that burned into my soul; "Find out what the liquor men in this country want; that is the thing I don't want." And this position I take today. What matters it whether politicians say it will put back our work for a century; Daniel has been in the lion's den before, but God took care of him. We read in the scripture that St. John was beheaded but not until all his work was accomplished, every word of prophecy was fulfilled. I want to remind the ladies that the Republican party platform was formed to please the distillers of this country, when they re-affirmed the platform of 1872 containing that Raster resolution.

I was coming down on the train to Atchison a few days ago, and a minister said, "I do not see how you can take such a position." I replied, "I do not see how you can take such a position." "You are standing upon the platform that indorses this Raster resolution." He said, "What is that?" I took it from my satchel and showed it to him and he said, "I never saw that before." Ladies, sometimes our ministers, that intend to lead us, are not as fully posted as they ought to be. I believe, dear ladies, that we will be glad in ten years from now that we spoke for the party that speaks for the homes. Will we be able to get any further legislation after taking this stand? I tell you we shall get better legislation when we take a stand for this principle. When we get the strength in our hands no party will slam the door in our faces, (applause.) In Kansas during the campaign, sad not our friends demanded boldly that the Republican party should put this in their platform I do not think they would have stood by us. We endorse the Republican party in the state, but stand by grand St. John in the nation.

Mrs. Slosson, of Kansas: Twenty five years of hard work on the ground of Kansas, gives me a right to say a word. I think we ought not to go back on our cause we are working for. I want to say that I want our state to be understood as personally going for St. John; politically there is a great division of opinion, and I protest against its being carried so far as to combine with the third party. Whatever the saloon keepers want we don't want.

Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge: Is not the W. C. T. U. of Kansas, pledged to this by its resolution adopted at the state convention?

Mrs. Slosson: It passed it by a majority, but there was a large outside pressure.

Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin of S. C: I joined this organization as a temperance organization, not to save parties. About parties and platforms we cannot all stand togethert My friends, Massachusetts and South Carolina canno. stand together; we perhaps never would. But upon a new platform for the defence of home we can stand. (Applause.) I spoke to a minister of the gospel this summer, and so did Mrs. Stevens, of California, and when we told him of the work to do for colored people, he said: "We would rather see every colored man die a drunkard than have the Democratic party come into power." I cannot join parties. Perish Cæsar, live Christ.

Mrs. Watts: I want to read the resolution passed in the last convention in Kentucky, held in Frankfort and endorsed by the executive committee:

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the course of the national officers in their interpretation of the resolution of the convention at Detroit.

Mrs. Rastall, of Kansas: I protest against the assertion that, "outside pressure" brought the Kansas convention to endorse the Detroit resolution. In 1883, the state executive committee had but one dissenting vote on this question, and in 1884 there was but one dissenting vote in the committee, while the resolution passed in convention by a large majority.

Mrs. A. H. Kepley, of Illinois: What I say is for our common good. It is usual to say in the platforms that "these principles," etc., etc., are necessary to the welfare of the country. Now the situation today in this convention, reminds me very much of the situation in Illinois when we aodpted suffrage, and those who were the strongest against it that day are the strongest for it to-day.

I know that to be a fact. It is strange to me that we are so afraid of politics. Now if our women will study the dictionary they will see that politics is the science of government and a political party is formed to carry out a policy of our government. If there is not a party organized it is not carried out. But women seem to be much afraid of political parties. Now, as a political party is nothing but an organization to carry out the science of government, why should they be so afraid of it?

Mrs. Clara L. Roach, Washington: I would like to speak on this subject. I hold in my hand a resolution that has caused me great pain of heart and many tears. Women who differ from each other have the same goal in view—the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and the establishment of Christ's kingdom on earth. Let me say, dear sisters, that ten years ago, in the very beginning of this work, I have longed for deliverance. I have taken joy in every advance made by the women of this temperance union, and I should be sorry to know that we no longer stand together, that we are political partisans. Let me say that the recent election in Ohio was a non-partisan vote. The feeling throbs at Washington. Year after year we have seen members of Congress representing all political parties, taking full stand for prohibition. On our platform last winter at our Sunday afternoon temperance meetings, we had members of every political party. Let me say that we are losing hundreds of Christian women on this very question. Let me plead that as we have stood together in the past on this platform, honestly desiring one thing, that we stand together now.

Miss Martha Hathaway, Southern Cal.: I will say that as we have never been represented in the National Convention before we had nothing to do with the Detroit resolution. We have concluded in our own state that by remaining non-political we can draw into our ranks earnest praying women who will work for us from all parties. That we may carry it four years from now, Mrs. Browne and I are doubtful. We doubt whether we can vote at all. But that is the situation we find ourselves in. We do not think we can vote as individuals here but we are glad to be instructed; we have come here to learn.

Mrs. C. B. Buell: I wish to ask the ladies of this convention if it is policy or principle upon which this national organization stands? [applause.] It seems to me that we ladies are afraid; we are cowards. We come up here and take a back seat and are afraid to go ahead, because—Why? Because down in our states the men and women are of different political parties, and the women who are not with us say, If you do so and so in your national organization, and give your influence to a third party, you will be defeated in your local and state elections, in your local and state measures. Now, ladies, I am not one who has been greatly scared in my life anyway, and I am willing to go back and be defeated in state and local measures, if in the long run we can have a party on the throne that will not only give us law, but give us enforcement of law. (applause.)

Mrs. Cusing, of Michigan: I don't want my name to go down to posterity, but I want it to go down in history that I voted for this resolution in 1884.

Mrs. C. B. Buell: It seems that we are not to wait until every state has passed a resolution endorsing this or that. We are plain and practical and ask other parties to come to us with their power. We are legislating not only for today but for tomorrow, for twenty-five year and fifty years, and for all time. We want to get law and measures that will affect us in the long run, and thu today get further on. We want enforcement of our law What has been the matter with prohibition in the state of Maine for the last thirty years? Why it has been heard all over this country that entire prohibition failed in the state of Maine because there has not been a party behind that prohibitory law, committed to that prohibitory law, and to put the screws down on the men who have tried to violate it. What was done in Ohio last year? A lady said that constitutional prohibition was carried in the state of Ohio. Why have they not a constitutional amendment? Because they were counted out, and who counted them out? (A voice, That is it.) Are we as temperance workers and mothers of boys who are growing up—are we always going to be counted out? (Cries of No, no.) No, we are not. We are going to build up an organization. We will try and lend our influence to an organization that will not count us out—when the time comes.

Mrs. Callanan, of Iowa: I wish my name to go down in history as against the resolution. May I present an amendment to the resolution?

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster: Has the Republican party in Maine said anything in its platform in favor of prohibition?

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens: Yes, it has, repeatedly.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster: And its enforcement?

Mrs. Stevens: Yes, I think it has in years past.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt: I could not let this opportunity go; I could not go back to my work, or leave myself unrecorded on this question involving, as I believe, the welfare of the children of this country without speaking on the question at issue. I have felt, never more than in the last twelve months, that I was standing between the children of our 54,000,000 people and the prince of the power of the air. The brewers declare that this national movement must be put down. Now when I go before a legislature to talk about this movement, the first question asked is, "Is this a partisan measure? is your society a partisan society? I believe you represent the Probibitionists, a third party movement." I always say, my face beaming with joy," "No sir, we are a great moral power back of all parties; we are the mighty force goading the people on; we are omnipresent." And the gentlemen says, "All right, that is good enough." One gentleman said to me, "This is a movement in the right direction; if you keep on this way you will bring us all to your feet." Ladies, it is our privilege to get these powerful factors in legislation. How many boys will come out of their schools today and come into their majority to vote? We will get this victory before another four years roll by. Are the voters in the majority today for prohibition? No, you have not votes enough, if you get them all, to elect St. John. Let us keep on continuing to do what we say here in the first sentence that we have been doing for the last ten years. We refer to the history of ten years of moral suasion work as fully establishing our claim to be called a non-political society.

We were a nonenity ten years ago—now we are a power all over this land. Why? Because we are making votes. Never turn on your force until you are ready. I have carried scientific temperance instruction through four states, and I never proceeded an inch until I have counted noses. Counting a party don't make votes. As your evangelist, as I have been called, I stand for the children. This resolution, if passed, will make my work almost impossible. If you had stood before legislatures you would better understand this. "Are you non-partisan? Then we will help you all we can irrespective of party."

If you send me to Pennsylvania, if you send me to Massachusetts, a representative of a partisan society, you are standing between your children and the educational policy which is making Vermont, Michigan, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, and New York, temperance states.

The convention then adjourned to 1.30 p. m.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

An amendment was offered by Mrs. Henry, of Illinois, to the resolution, to the effect that "while we will never fail to stand by all political parties that stand for us, we declare for national prohibition and home protection.

The song, "Bringing in the Sheaves," preceded the devotional service, which was led by Mrs. S. M. Perkins, of Ohio.

"Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord," was sung as a solo by Mrs. M. Coe Stewart, of Ohio.

Minutes of the morning session read and approved.

Regular order resumed in the discussion of the resolutions.

Mrs. Foster:. I suppose the resolution is the subject now before us. The question is not the propriety of political action in reference to the securing of prohibitory legislation. That is not the question. I believe in that. I hope you all do. The question is not the propriety of organized political action: I believe in that, I hope you all do. The question is not the propriety of women as women having political opinions and party spirit. I have political opinions; I have party spirit. Those questions are not before us. The larger part of what was said this morning related to those questions to which I can make no reply in five minutes. The question is what relation shall the W. C. T. U. take in relation to these parties? I object to this resolution in the first place because it is ambiguous; it does not declare what it means. It says that the national organization is committed to a certain party.

I want to know what the national organization is? It goes on to say that the states are not committed, and individuals are not committed. Take them both out, and you have left the general officers, the official organ, The Union Signal, and superintendents of departments, and that is all that is left. If we vote for this resolution you will authorize your general officers and superintendents and official organ to stand for the national union in an association with a political party. You will by that means make it the duty of your officers and the rest to aid a political party. How do you aid political parties? Circulate documents, make speeches, contribute money,—do everything except vote. So if we pass this resolution itmay will put work as superintendent of legislation with other superintendents, in co-operation with the national Prohibition party. It will compel all superintendents to do the same. If I do not do this I will be opposing the spirit of the resolution, and that I think would be very disastrous.

It is also ambiguous as the platform of free trade and protection; as Nasby says, "Very good for protection in Pennsylvania, but very poor where they grow corn." It is adjustable. That was the trouble with the resolution last year. I object to it on that account. Who is bound? The Union Signal and national officers are bound. What does this do? The president is empowered by the resolution, and she is justified in going to any state in the country and saying. "This is the national policy, you are not obliged to follow it." She can say, "You can go on and live up to it," but she can say at the same time "You are not obliged to." She could make headquarters at New York, or wherever they are into a prohibition headquarters, and she would be justified in doing so by this resolution. The treasurer could send out and solicit aid for a political party in money, just as she now does for the treasury of our union. It is all included under that word "aid."

Again, the official organ could become a campaign sheet, and would be justified in doing it, because that would be aiding the cause, and the stockholders would be stockholders in a political sheet, because their organ would be used as the organ of a political party. To that I object. Mrs. Hunt, going about for scientific temperance; Jennie Smith, a national officer,—nobody is kinder toward the railroad men, and the sooty faced engineer or railroad employe looks at Jennie Smith as the representative of a third party. If Mrs. Barney could be brought from the sick room giving assurance to those in jail, she could tell us something of the benefits of a non-partisan representative.

(The speaker had spoken six minutes, time was up. The time was extended by vote of the convention.)

Suppose you send delegates to political conventions, a delegate to that convention is bound by the action of that convention. I don't want any society to be held by the dictates of any political convention.

We have got to reduce the political functions of this country before they can be allied in their political organizations. The position has been taken here this morning that we are standing for a principle, when we are standing for a political party. I say I am here to stand or fall where the banner of prohibition banner leads. I do not stand or fall where the political leaders carry it. I see beautiful emblems in a great many places, but I do not always go where I see those emblems displayed displayed. I do not see any carried by the hand of this party, so I cannot stand there. If I did see it I would. I see before saloons the emblems of personal liberty, but I don't go with personal liberty men, who shriek "Liberty, liberty."

If we pass this resolution it will help every saloon man in this country. I don't believe it is in the interest of prohibition. I have studied this subject for ten years, and I take my position advisedly. I could give you the names of men who voted against prohibition, that are now shouting for it. No political party has the monopoly of working for God. Is the grip of party behind our action? I do not think it is, but I think the men of this country have a right to think it is. When we have our general officers, members of our committee, members of a great political party, it seems like it, although I know in the spirit that is not so, for our women are under the grip of conscience, and that is all, and that is the grip I mean now. We are non-sectarian, and we ought to be non-partisan. I do not believe the National Prohibition party is going to give us prohibition under this resolution, so I am against it. I have not any trinkets over there in that corner (pointing to display of contributions to the souvenir fund). Why? When these dear women were having their souvenirs put away, my home was being burned. I was left homeless, with nothing left as souvenirs, destroyed by the enemies of prohibition. You say we should vote as we pray. I pray for the election of James G. Blaine.

We should not imitate the methods of men. I would not say this, but you have said the other thing, and referred to the fact that Blaine did not vote for the amendment.

Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge: I would like to read Mrs Foster's former words on this subject and ask her to explain. (Reading from the National Minutes.) "We find further that the two political parties of the country in their national manifestoes are silent on the relation of the state to the traffic, though in some circumstances they may be construed to disapprove of prohibition, or insinuate against its rightfulness. These parties have in their state platforms distinctly pronounced against the right of the people to settle the question by popular vote. The National Prohibition party alone meets the question squarely on its merits and places at the head of its ticket, Hon. Neal Dow, etc. the very embodiment of prohibition doctrine."

Mrs. Lathrap: Whose words are those, and where spoken?

Mrs. Woodbridge: During the last presidential campaign in 1880, they were a part of Mrs. Foster's report to the convention at Boston. It is signed, "J. Ellen Foster, Chairman of Committee on Collecting information in respect to Temperance Legislation." And in 1881 at Washington, (reading) "In occasional instances one or more parties, with more or less zeal, championed the cause in Kansas, in South Carolina, etc. To what do the logic of events and the philosophy of things lead? Prohibitory legislation, national and state, can only be permanently secured through the agency of a political party, making this its central idea. We hail with thankful hearts such political organization in state and nation."

Mrs. Foster: Shall I explain? Those are my words and they sound very pleasant to me now. There is so much of it. It seems we have to begin and go back. I expected to see the then dominant party—I did expect to see it—inscribe prohibition on its banners, and that is what I as an individual am waiting to see, and this new party will put further off the day when you shall see it on the banners of a dominant party.

Mrs. Woodbridge: Does that explain Mrs. Foster's words?

Mrs. Foster: What were those words?

Mrs. Woodbridge: That the National Prohibition party alone meets the question squarely on its merits.

Mrs. Foster: It does meet it squarely on its issues. That is not the question whether the party that does meet it squarely on its issues is to be the dominant party. It does not, also, meet the other question, as to our relation to that party. That meets it squarely on its issues. It does not commit us to the party. I want to make it clear, ladies. Can Mrs. Woodbridge put a more pointed question? Let me say if I am to be questioned I must have an opportunity of answering.

Mrs. Molloy: I would like to say we don't want to arraign anybody here, but we seek for light, and I want to ask Mrs. Foster, (God knows I am sincere in this matter), if the party that endorsed the Raster resolution is the embodiment of our political principles.

Mrs. Foster: No, the Raster resolution was passed in 1872. It was not reaffirmed. The record of the party was reaffirmed, but the Raster resolution was not reaffirmed. Platforms are party records.

Mrs. Lathrap: What did Mrs. Foster mean last year when in her report she said: "Every temperance woman ought to oppose, by voice and influence, the action of any party which ignores or refuses to submit this question to the votes of the people."

Mrs. Foster: I do oppose it, but the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is another thing.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Michigan: I make the following motion: "Inasmuch as Mrs. Foster has spoken for fifteen minutes against the resolution, I move that the convention shall decide to whom shall be given fifteen minutes in which to speak in favor of the resolution; then any state that has not spoken on the question shall be allowed five minutes, and the resolution shall be then submitted to vote."

The resolution was carried and a season of prayer followed:

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap was chosen by the convention to occupy the fifteen minutes and spoke as follows:

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap: If I had my way, dear friends, I should not have been here at this moment. I purposely kept still this morning because I think it is a very sad thing for any two women in a debate like this, as Mrs. Foster said, to be pitted against each other. I do not know that I shall talk fifteen minutes in answering these questions.

I wish you would confine yourself in your thinking, very clearly to the realm in which you are. First, consider that the resolution passed, first at Louisville, and second at Detroit, committed us to no new mode of action. It is not possible in an organization like this, made up of women from all over the country, but that some sections should reach a conclusion before the rest. Such an hour as that came to us at Washington upon the question of woman's suffrage. Many of us were conservative; it was the first time we were divided, but the National organization itself voted to add suffrage to its lines of work, yet leaving to the states perfect liberty in carrying out methods and modes of the principles thus adopted.

Immediately the new work went on in some states, in others it has not been touched unto this hour. So I want you to see that when we passed that resolution we outlined no new mode of action, and we stand on the same ground of state rights, the right of methods in this, a we have in the past. Second, please to consider that w speak here today, not as voters, but as non-voters.

When men say we will use our influence in such and such a capacity, they mean they will make speeches, and go to the polls and vote as they use their influence, and furnish money. But we mean no such thing in using these words of the resolution. We mean, perhaps, what Mrs. Foster meant last year, when she advised us to give our "voice and influence against any political party whatsoever that ignored or refused to give us the prohibition principle in their platforms." We mean moral, social, religious, intellectual influence. We mean the kind of power that women are upon the throne of home and in society everywhere, and it is only in that way that we have been able to follow the white banner of Prohibition wherever it went. We are not speaking here today as though we go to the polls, and therefore we are in the realm of moral and social influence, when I say that If mean we should speak for, and pray for, and use the influence women have, for the party that is the best embodiment of the principle for which we have worked ten years. Now, in discussing this question I want you to see that we are not to be governed by any state view or personal view. The question is not whether it is going to hurt any superintendents that we have had in the past.

The only question that engages us is the question of the resolution. We have said we have been fighting for ten years, and we never meant anything less. We said last year that the logical sequence of the effort we were going to make, that when that test was made upon the political parties of this country, that when the Democratic, Republican and Greenback parties were distinctly asked to do this something we could not do for ourselves, and what we wanted done, that under that last, final test, we, the women would give the kind of influence that we as women have to the party that would give us the best embodiment of our principles. Our president went and stood before the national conventions and pleaded for us for womanhood, for childhood, for home. She said, "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union ask you, gentlemen, what embodiment of principles you will give us in your platforms?

The world knows the result. It was only when she reached Pittsburgh that she found a home for her memorial, that is the one party that satisfied us with their platform last year, and therefore we stand committed to yield our influence to that party that best embodies our principles. I do not speak of candidates; we are not in that realm, or what might come as a result; we are here standing by the principle. A brave company are fighting for us and the question is whether we will say God-speed, whether we are with one or the other. One word more; this is a logical conclusion for us because it is impossible for us to use a party that the brewers and liquor-dealers are using (cries of "That is so.") We are asked sometimes, Why don't you learn wisdom of your enemies? the liquor dealers do not organize a party.

We reply that the liquor dealers of this country have two political parties that are doing all they can for their interest and they don't need a new one. I was east a few days ago and I saw an account of a meeting of Germans in the interest of the Republican party, and a gentleman rose before that assembly of his brethern and said: "Gentlemen, I want to appeal to you not to break from the ranks of the Republican party. They have been in power twenty-four years and all that time they have done what we asked them to do. I want you to see that our brewing business has increased under the administration of this dominant party; therefore it would be the greatest folly to leave them."

Dear friends, we cannot give our aid and sympathy to a party of which the brewers can say that. On my way to St. Louis.

I saw in a paper that a reporter interviewed some leading brewers in Cincinnati after the election, the other day, and asked them why the brewers stood by the Republicans there, and they said they were perfectly with the Republican party; that the Republican party had worked for them the best they could, that they did not care for the Scott law, that they would just as soon have high license if they were made to pay it. And I say we cannot use, as an association, a party that is in the grasp of the liquor-dealers of this country.

There is another reason. No organization in this country yet meet as we meet, from the north and south, clasping hands as we meet in this organization. The south will never take Republicanism, the north will never take Democracy. There has come a time in this country when the political song of triumph should be just the same among the pine trees of Maine as among the orange groves of Florida; the same by the lakes of Michigan as by the golden strands of the Gulf of Mexico. We are those who will help to bring it. They say in Michigan we belong to the "Hallelujah party." Yes, we do. Hallelujah! (Repressed applause and waving of handkerchiefs.)

The roll of states was then called and those which had not been heard from in the discussion were guaranteed five minutes each.

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Maine: I am glad I can speak of Maine with much certainty. I am glad this decision of the W. C. T. U. of Maine, was made before the 8th of Sept. I refer to this because it will express the situation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Maieu, upon this question. We endorsed the Detroit resolution, which reads as you know, "We will lend our influence to that party by whatever name called which furnishes the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect our homes." The chairman of our committee on resolutions was the wife of a Blaine elector and no sweeter, wiser, gentler spirit was there among the women of Maine, and when she presented this resolution, she said that fearing the women did not understand the import of it, she hoped they would consider it gravely before accepting it, and it was passed unanimously. I am glad that it came before the 8th of Sept., because I consider that it was then passed in their quiet, calm and collected moments. On that day a great many of the Republican party—the party which has endorsed the principles of prohibition, who had acted with us and for us—did not work for us on that day. A great many worked against us; and one as you know, did not vote at all. As I said before, I am glad I can speak with no uncertain voice in saying that I am in favor of the adoption of this resolution.

Mrs. Cornelius, of Arkansas: I have not been instructed so I shall vote as my conscience dictates, and that will be for this resolution, for I consider it non-partisan. I shall vote for it provided it is not changed by amendment.

Mrs. P. D. Browne, California: I said this morning I dared not vote against that third party movement. I came to the meeting this afternoon more convinced than ever that while a third party is the right movement, we are wiser to keep politics out of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mrs. Coggins, Dakota: I am in favor strongly of the resolution.

Mrs. M. L. Wells, Indiana: Personally I must heartily endorse that resolution. I do not consider that we have gone forward one step. I stand just where I stood when I was converted, six years ago, in Illinois; and I think our state officers, a majority of them, stand with me. We have a minority that are not in favor of the resolution, so I endorse the resolution personally for myself, and for a majority of the delegation.

Mrs. M. G. Aldrich, Iowa: We are all in favor of prohibition, constitutional and statutory, in both the state and the nation. The question today with us is. Is it wisest and best for this national union, which is a non-political organization, which cannot be a political organization, to ally itself with any political party. We must utilize political parties in our own localities. Is it wisest and best for us to do that, as an organization, while allying ourselves with a National Prohibition party. I am opposed to it. It will hinder our work in Iowa, it will hinder your own work in your own states. I do not stand here to approve the Republican party, which endorsed the Raster resolution, nor the Democratic party. I stand here to express my hope that we will not ally ourselves with any political party, but that we will co-operate with any party where we can secure the advancement of prohibition. If the Republican party this year will put up a whisky man, and the Democrats put up a temperance man, we will help send the Democrat to the legislature. What makes a party? It is the men in the party; it is not the leaders. They say the king of England never dies. In one sense he does not, and in another he does. The man dies, but the power remains. They say parties cannot live forever. The ruling power of this country will live forever, whether Republican or Democratic, and we want the ruling power to use. If we go in to support the National Prohibition party, we lose the co-operation of the politicians in the states where the party is dominant whose co-operation we want in order to secure prohibition. In the south, I say, use your Democratic party. In the north, if the Republican party will give us prohibition, I believe in using it until we get something different. Don't say we are cowards. Don't say we do not know what we are about. We speak from a standpoint where we gained something by this non-partisan work. The submission of a constitutional amendment has changed the whole phase of the temperance question in Iowa. What we have done in Iowa, we say you can do in other states. Go to work and make your party show it can do what you will. You talk about parties. See what they have done. Three states have constitutional prohibition, and two local prohibition, and they are all the time doing better.

————, Nevada: Our state came instructed to vote according to convictions. I think we will all vote for the resolution.

Mrs. L. M. Boyce, Michigan: My mind has been running back ten years to the woman's temperance crusade. We started out in the light of God's spirit and teaching without fear of the world, and from that time until now we have been following the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night, and now in answer to our prayers God has raised up a great host, whose privilege and power it is to wrestle with the liquor party. How dare we after all our prayers withhold our co-operation? It is the outgrowth of our own prayers. Now we shall be blind and deaf to what God says if we should be still and don't go forward ourselves.

Mrs. Gallinger, Minnesota: We endorse the Detroit resolution.

Mrs. Irvine, Mississippi: I hardly dared to hope that I would stand before such a body, coming as I do from a far off state; but when the question comes up so strong, I think we should come to a right conclusion, if possible. I believe this party came from the prayers of our people. In our southern land, where our hands are more tied than are those of our sisters of the north, what have we done? Three times a day and evening have we come together or gone to our closets and prayed to God to raise us up men "like a flock" who would take a stand against the liquor traffic; and now to see this great body here divided! I am perfectly astonished that any one should think that this party is not an answer to our prayers (cries of amen, amen.) I have only to ask you, Will you unite with me once more in prayer?

(Offers a fervent prayer.)

Miss Jennie Smith, of Maryland: As a member of this convention I think I never in my life have had a deeper exercise on any subject than on this. Everybody knows where I stand—everybody, But, dear friends, we must take a firm stand as a W. C. T. U. We cannot compromise in the face of the opposing forces we have against us today. I remember Bishop Simpson's words, in speaking of this association: "No association has ever accomplished so much," he said, "as the W. C. T. U. with the means it had," and that no association had such a future as this if we did as well as in the past.

Now, dear friends, we cannot compromise with the world; we dare not do it. We are not so far apart but that if we only have a fair understanding with each other, all will be bright. It would never do for the resolution to go on the table. It cannot, it must not. For the sake of Jesus Christ, for the sake of immortal souls, for the sake of the cause we represent, can we not have an understanding in this matter? It does seem to me that if we could only have that amendment—and it is almost the same thing—and yet we want to stand in a body. There is not a woman here that is true to the temperance work, whose eye and aim and heart is not single to the hope of the future. Now do let us be united in this, and I for one have felt that if we could only have this—it seems to me that the amendment does not change any one thing, and yet it re-affirms our position. We want to stand united on this, that in 1882 and 1883 we re-affirmed our position then taken, and make it strong. We stand in the same place where we stood; it seems to me if we could only have a simple amendment, as for instance, "but as we now know which national party furnishes the best embodiment of prohibition principles, we will continue to aid the political organization which declares for home protection." I think the amendment offered would only re-affirm what we did in 1882 and 1883, and then we are on a firmer foundation than ever before, and yet do not say decidedly that we have committed ourselves to a party.

Mrs. Goodale, Louisiana: I can say that although we are uninstructed, we are favorable to the resolution.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Missouri: I have never in my life been so moved before. Mrs. Lathrap has clearly stated my position. I will not go over the ground she has taken but I wish to state, as I pass along, that we are taking in this national movement the position that our dear sisters in Iowa took as a state. They could not compel the dominant party to go with them until they brought out a third party, as they did in Iowa. I said that I am not able to answer legal argument with legal argument. I am not sufficiently well informed on legal points to do that, but I have a mind that is clear enough to see that we have always worked to that one point, prohibition. In localities, in states, in municipalities, we have stood for the party that has stood for prohibition. In Arkansas it has been one party, in Iowa another, but wherever it has been we have stood by the man and party (applause) that says "We will save your homes from the ravages of the dram shop," and I must say for my state that a resolution was passed almost unanimously that we do lend our influence to a third party. Then I wish to say that we have never before until this present year thought that we were committed to political action, but have always said we will support that party that will protect our homes. Why is our position any different today. As for me, "live or die, survive or perish," I must give my hand and my heart to this resolution.

Mrs. Holmes, Nebraska: I merely wish to say that we endorsed the Detroit resolution unanimously at our convention.

Mrs. N. H. Knox, New Hampshire: My own convictions, and both sides of my delegation, uphold me. At our state meeting the full resolution was passed, as follows:

Resolved, That we endorse the position of the president of the N. W. C. T. U., Miss Willard, in regard to the Prohibition party.

We are a courteous body, and we asked for a minority report, and this resolution was prepared by them, and it was so much ahead of the majority report that it was entered and combined with this resolution, without a word of change, and this is the resolution of the other side.

"We acknowledge with gratitude the sympathy extended to us as an organization of temperance workers, by the political parties of this nation, and we are looking forward to the time yet when all parties shall favor practical prohibition, and making prohibitory law constitutional.

Miss President, do you see I agree with my own convictions and with both sides of my own constituency?

Mrs. Seabrook, New Jersey: We feel that this tide of prohibition is upon us. We have fostered the child, we have prayed for its preservation. God heard our prayers. We have labored hard for it, and now it has come to its voting age, we cannot turn our back upon it any more than any other mother in this audience could turn her children out. We vote for the resolution.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt, New York: We had 168 delegates present at our convention, and a resolution was read very similar to the last one read, endorsing Miss Willard, and also endorsing the resolution passed at Detroit. It was adopted by an overwhelming majority. After we adopted it we sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Now we have heard of one thing that may happen should we adopt this resolution, but you cannot shake the confidence of a woman who went out eleven years ago into the saloons of Ohio to accomplish a mission regardless of what the world might say. Will the woman who marched to jail through the streets of Cincinnati and Chicago in 1873 falter now? No, I think not. The sentiment seems to be growing in Brooklyn. The other day in Grant street I saw from one street to another the Prohibition banner of the nation, and, dear sisters, the tears came to my eyes when I saw it, and a prayer rose in my heart. Coming home I found upon my boy's breast the badge his mother wore in the convention at Pittsburgh. Although in my heart there is a great love for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, yet, dear friends, if I had to choose today I would choose the organization that protected my boy and my home. What does all this mean—what have all such gatherings meant? You have kneeled and prayed over and over again for the suppression of the liquor traffic and here comes a young party; arrayed against it are two great parties which are rotten through and through with the liquor interest. Can the temperance women afford to be silent? I think not. And now way out on the battlefield of politics is this young giant you have helped to raise and it is a strong, lusty youth, and its name is Prohibition. It stands there with slings and arrows of opposition launched against it. It will go on to success and victory.

Mary Allen West, Illinois: I ask that the action of the Illinois state convention be recorded. We had 340 delegates and the spirit of the delegation was expressed by Mr. A. G. Tyng when he said "I have been in many conventions, but never in one where the blessed influence of the Holy Spirit was more manifest." We passed the following resolution:

While we recognize the fact that our organization is in no sense a political one, its members having no voice in the affairs of the nation, we would as a state society, and without in any degree disturbing local interest and harmony by such expression, heartily endorse the resolution passed at Detroit by the N. W. C. T. U. in regard to the attitude the temperance women of this nation should take in reference to political parties.

Mrs. Ada M. Morley, New Mexico: I have only one question to ask. This is the first time in my life I have been in a convention of women. I have lived always on the frontier, and perhaps I don't know my duty, but I know this is an awful question. For thirty-six hours I have been on the anxious seat. Now I will state my position. I am here in a dual position. I am here as Mrs. Morley, and I am here as a representative of New Mexico. As Mrs. Morley, I beg for a third party; but, am I Mrs. Morley, or am I simply the delegate from New Mexico, I cannot get it through my head.

Miss Willard: You are not certain of the attitude of your territory?

Mrs. Morley: O, no, I am not certain: we have Texans, and Mexicans and Indians out there, and I don't know what I represent.

Miss Willard: We are here to represent the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the place from which we come.

Mrs. Morley: I have nothing to report; we have no Band of Hope even; but I want to ask this convention, will they tell me, if I can vote here as my conscience dictates? For years I have wanted a third party. O, how the Republicans have whipped us in New Mexico. If you will allow me to vote for conscience' sake, I will vote for a third party.

Miss Willard: The chair is of the opinion that all delegations, including Iowa, will allow Mrs. Morley to vote according to her convictions.

Mrs. Morley: But I am not a delegate.

Miss Willard: We made you a delegate. Mrs. Morley will vote her own convictions; she can't help being a delegate for we have made her one.

Mrs. Morley: Then I am for the third party.

Mrs. Phinney, of Ohio: I cannot say as a good many others have said here that I came to this convention uninstructed. Ohio held its meeting in June; at that meeting it declined to say that it was non-partisan, but it also declined, with a good deal of emphasis to send delegates to the Pittsburgh convention. You can each put your own construction upon that action. It is doubtless the fact that some of our women have changed since that time. There is a difference among my own delegation, but they will bear me record that I have not interrogated them as to their position. Each woman must stand by her own conviction. We do no wire pulling. I have tried to ascertain who were the doubtful ones, but I want every woman to vote in accordance with her own convictions, (applause.) I wish to speak for those of constituency who are not here to speak for themselves. There are letters coming to me constantly, the writers stating that they do not want to be considered as belonging to any political party or as factors of the Republican or Democratic party or even of the Prohibition party; they don't believe it is right for a prohibitionist to be the adjunct of any other political party.

I also speak for the thousands of men belonging to the different parties, who have stood by us in Ohio. I want to call your attention to the fact that last year 323,000 men were placed on record as voting for the homes and children. More than 200,000 of them belonged to the Republican party, 100,000 of them were Democrats, and the rest scattering, and I want to recognize what they have done for us there. In the future we know we will have this question to grapple with, and we want all the light we can get. It was said that we differed in principle and policy. I don't think there is any difference in principle. I believe there is the utmost unity, and I believe every woman of us is a prohibitionist. It is simply a difference of opinion, of modes and methods, as to how to obtain the object. In the old slavery times, the colored man, as he sought the land of liberty, kept his eye fixed upon the north star, though a stranger to the land he was going to. Now I think every one of us recognizes that national prohibition is the goal, the north star in the legislative heavens, and we know as we travel we must travel through the states. We in Ohio expect to secure prohibition in our own state. If you pass this resolution, as I think you will, we shall feel that we must pursue that policy which we have pursued in the past to secure these ends, but I think we can be united in heart, even though we pursue these different methods in our several states.

Mrs. E. G. Saxon, speaking for Tennessee, also for Texas:

No one occupies a position more painful than mine. I am emp'oyed by a temperance club of Tennessee to speak on the subject of temperance. I am paid by that club. We have a St. John ticket out in Tennessee but I have not mentioned the name of St. John; I have not committed myself to either party. We want both parties to keep hands off this thing. Let us build up a party—the Prohibition party. I have not been committed, personally. Every one knows that I advocate the principles of the Prohibition party. We are working for constitutional amendment in the state, therefore I have to leave that party alone.

But it will bear letting alone; it is a growing party. We know that the other parties will not help us in prohibition there; I know them through and through. The crusade women heard their orders clear and distinct as any orders God ever gave, "Go out of the house of bondage. So let us see that we are on our path onward and upward, building a party that will defend the best institutions of America, protect our homes and save our children. You are today banded together as powerfully as anybody in this world because your foundation is the religion of Jesus Christ whose cause shall triumph through all the world. We can't go back behind our president and officers. This is my party—prohibition by states first; then by national constitutional amendment.

I believe the Prohibition party will be the power that will sustain the moral forces of the nation, and I hear the marching of the mighty army that is coming from all over this land.

We can go to work in our states in our own way and in no way conflict with this resolution. Therefore most heartily do I endorse it for Tennessee, but as the representative of Texas, I only speak for their president who votes for the resolution.

Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin: I feel as the children of Israel did when they had almost reached the promised land. O, we are standing almost there, but the pillar is going back, because we have not faith enough to go on. I represent the state of South Carolina; I have been a Democrat all my life, but we are going to be Prohibitionists, and by means of this organization we are going to change. Ladies, we are your southern cross. No doubt but we will have prohibition before you do. I don't believe the Democrats will have any other party but Prohibition (voices no, no). We have colored men and women, and we make them members of our organization, and tie a ribbon on them, and they make good members. We go a little ahead, but they will follow us. Now, we are not going to rally around the bung hole all the time, like the centennial barrel that had nothing new about it but the bung hole. I remember hearing about "war Democrats," but we don't want to think of those things. I could not be a Republican; no, I could not, Mrs. Foster. I come from the "Palmetto state." You must have heard of it in the revolutionary war. I believe I lost two ancestors at the battle of Fort Moultrie. This palmetto tree, you can hack and cut it, but you cannot kill it; at the top its green leaves always look up to heaven. So we have been badly scarred and scathed and trampled upon and ruined, but by this third party I believe we will be a happy nation, that the south and north can stand together, and for this reason I want this third party, so that we can stand together and not be pricked with thorns and bitter memories. Dear friends, you have fought for the colored man; he is not altogether free. In all the southern states we find that the party who need his services is the party which claims to have freed him. There is not a particle of politics in it; it is like a party we had. They wanted some married ladies to give it respectability—more elderly ladies, you know. These ladies went with their babies and the young ladies said, we will take care of the babies and let their mothers dance. Then they changed the clothes of the babies so that they all looked different When the ladies came up they were awfully mixed, and one carried home a daughter instead of a son.

One man says, "I go in for protection," and so do I; but suppose you heard he was protecting sheep and I was protecting homes.

Now, let us all straighten out and have the past of the Democratic and Republican parties out of our minds and how truly we will love one another. Hon. R. H. McDonald sends money to help Maine people, and our good R. G. Peters sent currency to help the southern states. Now let us straighten out and every one get her own baby.

Mrs. E. G. Green, Vermont: I would like to read the resolution adopted at our state convention.

Mrs. Greene here read the resolution of the Vermont convention endorsing the position of the national president with respect to political parties.

Delaware: My delegation will stand by the resolution.

Mrs. Peachy, Washington territory: We in Washington territory for the last year and a half have been organized into a union and have been meeting weekly and have put in our work and our prayers. When we read of our beloved president going before the different parties asking for a recognition of our principles, and being treated with silence we thought, "Lord what shall we do?" and then when the third party was organized and we read of its increased numbers we said then that the great party had come; this third party was in answer to our prayers, and then we went to work with renewed vigor. I come before you instructed to say that Washington territory is for the third party.

Miss Amy Kellogg, Wisconsin: I am very happy to say that Wisconsin is heartily for this resolution.

Mrs. Callanan, of Iowa: The resolution before us first says our ten years' history is sufficient to establish our claim that we are non-partisan. We are not different in wishing to follow the white banner of prohibition it is only the method of following that banner upon which we differ.

In the Detroit convention this resolution was subsequently passed, promising to support the party which furnished the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and that would assist us to protect our homes. I ask you what protection can be afforded to the home by a minority party? It is only the dominant party which can give you help, by whatever name called. In the north it is the Republican party, in the south it is the Democratic party. We could not do anything outside of the majority. It is idle to say that the Prohibition party is composed of good men. In our state a large part of the party is composed of liquor dealers and brewers (voices no, no). I do affirm this, knowing it to be true in my own state. Men who worked against our prohibition amendment are now working in the Prohibition party. As a matter of its being a good party, made up of good men, it is not one whit better than the other parties. And in proportion to the numbers of that party, we don't consider it quite as good. I wish to offer the following resolution as a substitute:

"Resolved, That in our political preferences, and the individual associations of all members of our union, the N. W. C. T. U. avoid partisan affiliation with political parties, even while co-operating with any or all of them to advance our cause of constitutional and statutory prohibition in the state and nation."

This substitute was lost by a vote of 193 to 39.

Mrs. Carse: As soon as the vote is taken, I move that we have a scene from the kitchen garden, enacted by some of our young ladies. Motion carried.

Mrs. Foster: I move that in taking the vote upon the resolution, that it be done by calling the roll of delegates, and each one vote aye or no, thus having an opportunity of putting themselves on record.

Miss Willard: The chair decides that the debate upon the resolution must now be closed, unless the convention desires to reconsider Mrs. Benjamin's motion.

Mrs. Hunt: I move then to reconsider Mrs. Benjamin's motion.

The chair was here asked if amendments were in order.

Miss Willard: The chair decides that amendments can be offered.

Mrs. Callanan: I offer the amendment proposed by Miss Jennie Smith, and desire it to go on record as the amendment of Mrs. Henry, of Illinois.

A vote was taken on this amendment and lost.

Moved by Mrs. Henry supported by Mrs. Lathrap and Mrs. Knox that the members of this convention will not ascribe any motives of wrong to any of the speakers of the convention in the debates of the day. Carried.

The vote on the resolution was then taken by roll call of members with this result; 182 in favor, 52 against.

Miss McClees, Miss Anna Gordon, Miss E. P. Gordon, Miss Carrie Leech and Miss Leech then came forward wearing dainty white caps and aprons and standing by a table set out with pretty china, gave an exhibition of the art of dishwashing.

Miss Gordon: We had a report on Kitchen Garden last night, but it was your president's express desire that we have an object lesson to show how to wash dishes and we have the dishes here but we will not have time to wash them all.

(Singing the song and washing the dishes.)

Washing dishes,
Suds are hot,
Work away briskly;
Do not stop.

First, the glasses;
Wash them well,
If you do them nicely
All can tell.

Then the silver
Must be bright, etc., etc.

Miss Gordon: Miss President, there is one more rule that Miss McClees has composed in poetry and we would like to state it as the opinion of the quartette:

There is still another rule
That we have been taught at school,
When we are asked out to dine,
Never taste of wine.

We must be polite and kind,
Yet with firmness should decline;
Drink only what is pure,
This is right, we're sure.

Mrs. Barnes: Miss President, I want to say that this set of dishes is for you. There are 161 pieces, of which these are only the samples. I want to say that when you rest yourself at the table and use these cups that cheer but not inebriate, that you remember every member of the N. W. C. T. U. We hope that we shall some day have the pleasure of dining with you at the White House. (Cheers.) May we have a drop of comfort yet for the sake of Auld Lang Syne.

Mrs. Wood, of Englewood, Ill., then read a charming poem composed for the occasion.

Miss Willard: I used to say I could not be surprised. (Laughter.) My dear girls tried me in school and I tried to get up such an effort at expression as would make them think that it was so, but I always had an inkling of what was going on. But then, at this time, even my own Anna Gordon has been chief in this conspiracy and not a hint of it. I cannot take it in. It is just like the W. C. T. U. to come here and invite us all to tea. We are all of one home, and all members of one family. At home, in "Rest Cottage," how pleasant it will be, three times a day, to have these dishes placed before me, (for I shall make mother use them whether I am at home or not, though she won't want to, but I can persuade her. I will tell her that it means that the women are here in spirit, and that their love follows us.) I cannot tell you what it will all mean. I never was much of a housekeeper; I was left handed, to begin with, and I could not learn to sew. I was delicate in health and mother thought I should be out doors a great deal; but I have a heart for home and I have always loved it, and so in other homes that have received me I have felt just like a sister somehow, and, as part of the household. I could not feel any other way. Why, I speak just as familiarly on the door steps to women who greet me, sometimes, as I do with those whom I have known twenty years. I could not help it; they have that touch of nature that makes the whole world kin. Dear sisters, I shall try to work for home as I have never done before. Perhaps some of us who are Protestant nuns (for I notice one lady calls me "sister-in-charge,") have a part in this gift. I believe Protestant nuns have the loftiest ideals of home, for it is purely ideal, and I believe they are as true to it as any who live. You know you are to weep with those who weep, but the blessed bond of the white ribbon has taught me to rejoice with those that do rejoice; and though I have no home in the sense you have spoken of, and never shall have, still I believe, beloved, that the sacredness of your own homes and your own loves, and the loves of your children, will shine on my heart so that I will be just as happy as the rest. God grant that we may lift one another's burdens. I feel that my life has been made so full, and rich, and sweet, and tender, by having received such a baptism of the spirit of love and the love of my beloved sisters, that I cannot find words to express to you my deep sense of appreciation of all your manifestations of that love.

This has been a day of days. I never know when we shall break loose next. I always think the last convention the best, but in this convention there has been such an effort to see on the other side, such sympathy, such harmony of action, that I believe it has hallowed even this place of prayer. God bless your homes, and I know that the twin cottages of my dear Mary B. Willard, and of mother, and of Anna, and the nieces and nephews I love, will receive His blessing.

Song, "Nearer to thee."

Convention adjourned till evening.

SATURDAY EVENING AT PICKWICK THEATRE.

This meeting was under the auspices of the St. Louis W. C. T. U., and was not announced in the convention program. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, Miss Lucia Kimball, of Chicago, presiding. Mrs. Sallie

F. Chapin and Mary T. Lathrap made stirring addresses. Our stenographer having returned to Chicago, we are only able to give you a few extracts from the latter, which Mrs. Lathrap has kindly furnished at our urgent solicitation.

The demand on the part of the people to hear the speakers in attendance upon the convention was so great, that the local committee arranged for an extra mass meeting on Saturday evening.

Pickwick theater was again filled with an audience whose interest had grown through the week, Miss Lucia Kimball president, and the address of the evening was given by Mrs. Mary L. Lathrap, of Michigan.

The following is but a synopsis of the address. Mrs. Lathrap said: We are here to talk of the final settlement of the temperance question, and when I say final settlement, I mean final settlement, because I believe the child is already born who shall see the closed door of the last legalized dramshop in this country.

In speaking of this settlement we do not mean that the appetite of every drunkard shall be controlled by law, or that all illicit manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks can be immediately crushed out. A century of wrong in the government and habits of a nation, may be followed by a century of results. What, then, is involved? When we speak of final discussion upon this question, we mean the settlement of the proper atttitude of government towards the liquor traffic. Today government fosters and protects the traffic; tomorrow, it shall prohibit and punish it.

Today, when the liquor system comes to judgment, the state and nation sits in the criminal docket with it, sharer of its profits and partaker of its crimes. Tomorrow this system shall be in the docket alone, and the state on the judgment seat. The attitude of government, then, is the thing to be changed. Such attitude is decided, primarily, by the people, whose voice is government; and, secondarily, by the policy of the party in power, modified as it is by the influences which control action in the interest of its own success.

In asking how this question is to be settled, we therefore desire to consider classes of citizens rather than political parties in their modified forms. As we approach it in this way we find three classes in population directly related to the final decision we wish to reach. First, the drinker who desires to perpetuate the present order of things to gratifiy his appetite. These drinkers are in two general divisions, the foreign born and the native born.

The foreign drinker is by education and habit on the side of his appetite against the wellbeing of the Republic.

He knows little, and cares less, about the style of our government because he has never had anything to do with making law, and has not learned that dissolute citizenship, at a debauched ballot box, is a worse calamity than a drunken monarch on a throne. He is also ignorant and careless of the problems of our civilization. He comes from a land one in blood and language, to a country made up of everything. Where nothing can save us but character and intelligence among the people, and with the dram shop striking at both, he uses his ballot in the interest of appetite.

The American drinker, more guilty than he, joins him. He knows our history, our problems, and our dangers, but says, with the foreigner, we will use our power in caucus and party, and our vote at a free ballot box to insure to ourselves the right to drink whenever and whatever we please—these compose the party of appetite vs. the republic.

The second class is made up of the dealers—and all who make money by it—the business. The dealer, in the present state of things can claim that his business is demanded; and therefore useful, legal, and therefore respectable; so they join heir patrons, and say they will use their influence in caucus and party, and their ballot to secure the right to manufacture and sell what injures others and benefits themselves—and they compose the party of avarice vs. the republic. These classes swing from one political party to the other. No principle is sacred to them, no associations dear, so they secure the perpetuation of their business because of the money in it. These two classes, in seeking to foster the present order of things, carry their interest into the realm of politics and use to sustain their cause the powers of legislation. In this realm they are to be met by the third class in the contest, viz: The sober citizen, whose life is free from the drinker's habit, and whose hands are free from the dealer's bribes. There are enough of these sober Christian, patriotic citizens to settle this question when it comes properly to the bar of their awakened conscience and the arbitration of a ballot from all mere party thralldom.

Why, then, is it not settled? First, the sober citizen is a man of convictions, and does not shake loose easy from the principles long ago espoused, and the ties entered into by the way of what he considered the truth. So the sober vote of the country is cast among all parties, and cast in favor of the present wrong attitude of government towards the drink curse, and is never massed against it.

2d. The sober citizen has been too long under the tuition of party organs, whose interest it is to defend the dram shop. The old lesson often conned runs thus. Men have always drank, and always will, have always said, and always will while the gains are so great; therefore prohibition must be a failure, and license is the best way to meet the problem. Because of this false position, the result of false education, and the other reasons named, the power of the sober citizen is not felt, and the curse goes on.

Certain well known principles mark the line of battle between the first named classes and the sober citizen.

First, The legalized dram shop and its results, lays the heaviest curse on the American people they have ever known, touching the nation at every point, morally, politically and financially, degrading the people and thereby degrading the government by the people.

This fact makes the settlement of the proper attitude of government towards the drink curse the greatest issue of today. This issue must be met by the people and settled at the ballot box, as a direct question.

Political parties are the avenues through which the people reach the making and the changing of law.

A political party which is divided upon any great question in which its own success is involved, cannot in the nature of things settle that question.

Now let us suppose that the honest sober citizen is aroused, and wants to put his vote between his country and the liquor traffic, the dram shop and his home, where shall he vote?

Perhaps he is a Democrat and he goes to that party asking the question "Will you give me an opportunity as a patriot to cast my ballot against the evil?" The Democratic party may point to the south and say, Don't you see there is more prohibition in the southern states through our party than at the north through the other, but he answers that is local policy, born of local needs, which demand from the dominant party these safeguards, and he again sharply demands, "What is the attitude of the Democracy towards the legalized liquor system?" The answer comes from every platform. "We are opposed to sumptuary and prohibitory laws which vex the citizen," and the sober patriot cannot get at his principles there.

He turns to the Republican party with the pressing home question, "Will you give me a chance to put my vote between the dram shop and my boy?"

The Republican party points to Kansas, Iowa and Maine, but in all these states although the legislatures which submitted the question were Republican, at the polls it was the peoples' question, and Democrats helped to the victory.

The aroused citizen pushes his query, What chance will you give me to speak my conscience on this great iniquity?

The Raster resolution of 1872, which brought to the Republicans the beer brewers' congress, the dumb, cringing silence ever since, which has held the beer interest, while the country has been stirred from sea to sea by the temperance reform makes reply. The party born for a great work in an hour heavy with destiny, gives the aroused citizen and father no chance to speak for country and home on this living question. Where shall he vote? Where but with the new party, set for the defence of these principles which involve a new attitude of empire toward the dramshop?

But why make it a national issue? For the reason that the national government holds the key to every dramshop and distillery; collects the lion's share of the profits; protects five thousand dramshops in the territories, two thousand in the District of Columbia, and eleven hundred in the national capital. It controls the importation and shipment, by sea and land of this spoiler of the home; issues permits to sell in prohibition states, and by thus becoming party to a felony, antagonizes the principle of prohibition and hinders its enforcement in prohibitory states.

Why build up a new party instead of seeking the required legislation at the hands of the one in power? For the reason that they have been asked to take this great question but refused, and while they have hesitated the liquor power has been growing stronger, more impudent, more aggressive, until the hour has come for judgment.

The best elements of citizenship, north and south, wait to be born again into a new party, that shall blot out sectional politics, and deliver a united nation from the curse of the legalized liquor system.

THE CONVENTION PROPER ON SATURDAY EVENING.

The evening session of the convention was held in one of the ante-rooms of the Pickwick theatre in order to afford an opportunity of cleaning the United Presbyterian church for the Sunday service.

Mrs. E. M. Watson, of Pennsylvania, reported the action of the committee appointed to secure a temperance day in the week of prayer.

The work to secure one whole day in the week of prayer, for the cause of temperance, commenced in Pittsburgh, January, 1878, and the formula was written by Miss Lizzie M. Guthrie, who died the next spring, on her way back to her mission work in Japan. Thousands of petitions have been mailed all over the world, and have been endorsed by general assemblies, synods, conferences, presbyteries, state temperance alliances, and Sabbath school conventions. Letters of sympathy and encouragement have been received from India, Japan, China, Turkey, Siam, Syria, Ireland, England, Scotland, and our own land.

Dear Brother—The synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church of America, in annual session petitioned the Evangelical Alliance that there be assigned to the subject of temperance a place in the program of the week of prayer.

The petition of the W. C. T. U., asking for one entire day for temperance in the program of the week of prayer, was unanimously passed, and directed to be officially signed by the officers of the Pittsburgh annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church—representing 180 ministers, and a membership of 34,600.

Dr. J. R. Mills, of Ohio, kindly presented the petition to the general M. E. conference in Philadelphia, last May, and it was endorsed without a dissenting vote.

Mrs. Watson confessed that she was distressed and surprised that Crusade women are so slow in adding this to other less necessary departments, and recommended very earnestly that state and county superintendents be appointed to work for the day of prayer.

WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Mrs. Chapin, of South Carolina, superintendent of Southern Work, spoke of the success of the cause in the southern states. Prohibition, she said, was a necessity for the south, now that the negroes had been delivered up to the influence of men that were degrading the race by cultivating among them a love for liquor. She could not understand how Republicans who had been abolitionists, could now vote against prohibition. The colored people were drinking terrifically, and they lived in places that could not be compared in any way to their habitations before the war.

Mrs. McLeod, secretary of this department thus reports the accomplishments of the past year; Mrs. Chapin has attended nine state conventions, addressed 550 meetings among both white and colored, obtained by personal effort thousands of signatures to the pledge, and at least three Sabbaths in each month reached the children in the Sunday schools.

In the educational convention at Spartanburg she made a most successful presentation of the need of scientific temperance instruction into the state schools, having secured the co-operation of the state superintendent, and there is every reason to believe that it will be introduced by act of legislature this winter.

She also attended the National Sunday School Convention at Louisville, and her voice was heard for the south in urging the adoption of the 13th lesson for temperance.

She has been influential in her visits to colleges in winning a large number of southern girls to enter the work, and in some institutions induced the young men to pledge themselves as total abstainers and temperance voters. At Emory College, Oxford, where the W. C. T. U. offers annually a gold badge for the best essay on temperance, she was invited, with Mrs. Sibley, of Georgia, to make the presentation. Her address to the students was, said Dr. Haygood, convincing in more ways than one, and must have proved to the students that "there was no such thing as sex in mind," for Dr. Haygood believes in woman's ballot for temperance.

She gratefully acknowledges to southern audiences the aid and sympathy extended by the true-hearted women of the north, east and west in their generous donations of literature, their written and spoken words of encouragement, and also the inspiration of the presence and eloquence of Miss Willard, Mrs. Hannah W. Smith, Mrs. Mary L. Dickinson, Anna Gordon, and Miss Henrietta G. Moore, of Ohio. The work of the southern department has been helped forward by the noble generosity of Mr. Peters, of Manistee, and his wife.

The southern co-laborers have, by their unfaltering sympathy and loyalty to the N. W. C. T. U., cheered and sustained, and she has no fear that the cause will languish which is advocated by such workers as Mesdames Merrick and Goodale, of Louisiana; Mesdames Sibley, Webb and Harper, of Georgia; Mesdames Beauchamp and Johnson, of Texas; Mrs. Lyons, of Florida; Mrs. Armstrong, of Tennessee; Mesdames Wightman and Walters, of South Carolina; and a host in Arkansas and Mississippi as well, who shine for their own beloved clime, differing only "as one star differeth from another in glory."

It was resolved to hold a meeting of the executive committee on Monday morning, and another session of the convention on Monday afternoon.

Mrs. M. Hunt then submitted her report of the department of scientific instruction in public schools. It stated:

We open this record of the work of the years 1883 and 1884 with the report that the school houses of five states, Vermont, Michigan, New Hampshire, New York and Rhode Island are the legal allies of temperance reform.

The children of 8,000,000 people, one-seventh of the entire population of our country, shall, the law says, be taught in the schools the effects of alcohol and other narcotics upon the human system. What a hostage for the future! The resolution this is sure to work in the habits of the coming men and women can hardly be estimated. A wise general in planning a conquest aims at strategic points.

After the New York victory Mrs. Hunt gave a tour of lectures, covering a month in Ontario Province, Canada. As a result of these labors, at the request of the people, Hon. G. W. Ross, minister of education, stated, "that in future, temperance would be a subject to be embraced in the public school curriculum." The tory of the search for publishers, of the wider one, for authors who could and would write what we want of the disappointments authors of rejected manuscripts, of the of wrath of publishers whose books could not be endorsed, of the critics, some wise and some otherwise, of the heavy burden of expense which all this has devolved upon the national superintendent, and much more that has come into this experience, would form an almost tragic chapter.

As results, we have now ready for school use, the Hygienic Physiology, by Prof. J. Dorman Steele, edited and endorsed by your national superintendent, for normal and high schools; and the Temperance Physiology for intermediate grades, prepared under the direction of this department, with an introduction and endorsement for scientific accuracy by Prof. A. B. Palmer, M. D., LL. D., dean of the medical department of the University of Michigan.

Hon. Justus Dart, state superintendent of education in Vermont writes: "I am very anxious to make the introduction of this study a success in our schools," and adds, earnest hopes for the most abundant success of the temperance work in our schools and homes.

Massachusetts, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Indiana, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Louisiana, California, Nebraska, Dakota are all working or the scientific temperance law.

Delaware, through W. C. T. U. effort, at the last meeting of its state board of education, adopted for exclusive use in the schools of this state, J. Dorman Steele's "Hygienic Physiology." This act makes the use of this book compulsory in all schools in the state where physiology is taught.

After an animated and sympathetic discussion of this report, the convention adjourned till Monday, p. m.

The Sunday sermon by Mrs. Lathrap, and the Sunday evening address by Miss Willard, together with the concluding sessions of Monday, will be given next week.

News From the Field.

ALABAMA.

This grand state never intended to be left, lost, or defeated, so right to the front, with her sister states, she is gloriously stemming the tide, which waits not.

Etowah county held her first county convention October 18 and 19, which proved a grand success. And after reading of the different state conventions and Band of Hope meetings in The Signal, I am stirred to say something of our own work. We are now busily engaged preparing for a fair to raise funds to carry on the work of organization of Bands of Hope, through the country. We (that is a number of us) have gone on at our own expense, and formed some twelve bands in our county, every trip costing us (transportation) from five to thirty dollars, owing to the distance, all of which was represented at our county convention. Will here furnish you the names and officers of each. The Keeling Band, superintendent, Mrs. Eliza Williams; president Attalla, Mrs. T. A. Wadkins; president Keysburg, Capt. McDuffee; president Hoke's Bluff, Mr. William Barnes; president Coat's Band, Mr. Sam Cowan; president Pilgrime Rest, Mr. Gay; president Baber, Mr. Hood; president Clear Creek, Mr. A. B. Wilson; president Gaines' Chapel, Major Colvin; president Walnut Grove, Mr. Revis; president Aurora, ——— ———; president Duck Springs, Capt. Beeson, are of the very best and most substantial people of the county. The state convention of the W. C. T. U. will convene in Selma on the 13th and 14th of November. We hope to have all of these new bands represented there. Another year of as solid work as the past, and Alabama will claim the laurel over some of her sister states. Should they not also be up and doing the work among the children, is decidedly the most popular in our state, and I doubt not is growing in interest as much as any else where. Many parents are brought out through the influence of their children, who could not be induced to active work through any other agency. Prohibition does prohibit. It has surely been well tested in our county; of course there are always some law defiers in every country, a few of which have had sore trials in our courts, for averring that "prohibition does not prohibit," and proving it by ruining these doggers called "blind tigers." Sick in bed will suffice as an excuse for this illy connected letter which I was prompted to write, after reading letters from other states to THE UNION SIGNAL.

Mrs. L. C. Woodruff, state president W. C. T. U., is attending the N. W. C. T. U. convention at St. Louis, the first time Alabama has ever been represented in the national.

MRS. IDA LOWE,
Supt. Juvenile Work, Gadsden, Ala.

PENNSYLVANIA.

WAYNE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The first convention of the Wayne county W. C. T. U. was held in Hawley, Oct. 15 and 16, presided over by Mrs. E. L. Stephens, of Hawley. The key-note of consecration to the work was struck in the very first devotional service, led by Mrs. Euslin, and was carried through the entire convention. Fifty-six delegates and visitors were present at the first session, the number increasing to 70 before the convention closed, besides being well attended by the people of the place.

Reports from unions and also township presidents showed all to be wide awake and active in the work, and many calls were made for help in organizing Bands of Hope and new unions.

It was advised by the president that in places where it seemed difficult to organize a union they should build a foundation by first organizing a Band of Hope. Eleven unions were reported, nine of them having been either newly organized or reorganized the past year.

Delegates were present from ten unions and the remaining union sent a very encouraging report. The first hour of the evening session was given to juvenile work and exercises conducted by Mrs. S. A. Brown of Ariel. She gave an object lesson on the wine-glass, also explained the method of using tracts in juvenile work. This was a profitable hour. Miss E. E. Underhill, of New York then gave a grand address to a large and appreciative audience.

Thursday evening: Mrs. J. T. Rodman gave a most lovely address of welcome which was ably and beautifully responded to by Mrs. P. J. Gates, of Ore gon township.

There was much to interest that we have not room to mention. At 4:15 a very interesting children's meeting was led by Miss Jennie Dart, of Ariel, assisted by Mrs. V. Sheldon.

In the evening we listened to another address by Miss Underhill which was a most telling discourse. No political parties were mentioned and yet the truth was so pointed it could not fail to find lodgment in honest hearts.

Thus closed our first county convention which surpassed the expectation of the most sanguine. MRS. E. L. STEPHENS,
Pres. Wayne County W. C. T. U.

THE Advance of this week, like the fair minded organ that it is, gives both sides of the political prohibition question. Dr. Herrick Johnson, and Dr. Washington Gladden speak reasonably, as well as strongly, for the "third party," while Rev. Dr. Williams and Rev. Dr. Ross argue for Blaine. The Advance, like THE UNION SIGNAL, ignores the Democratic candidate. "We never mention him."

HIGH thinking and right living are the aim of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, Dr. J. H. Kellogg, proprietor. Mrs. Kellogg is superintendent of the department of Hygiene in the national W. C. T. U. and was listened to with great pleasure at St. Louis by many who had never before heard or seen her. The Sanitarium is a good place to rest and to re-create the body and its habits.

"DRIVEN FROM SEA TO SEA; OR, JUST A CAMPIN

LIKE THE RUMSELLER, THE MONOPOLIST HAS BUT LITTLE REGARD FOR THE RIGHTS OF OTHERS.

"Driven From Sea to Sea; or, Just a Campin'," is a story written by C. C. POST, editor of the Chicago Express. It contains 30 illustrations, which are mainly ideal and character sketches. Mr. Post has spent much time and research in getting at the facts which it illustates. It first appeared in the Express as a serial, and attracted much attention by its startling exposure of outrages, carried on under the cover of law, but which amount to nothing less than legalized robbery. Many of the facts have been suppressed by the press through corporation influences, and are known to but comparatively few people. Fortified as it is with foot-notes, giving the facts upon which it is based, in a form that cannot be controverted, and which are now given to the general public for the first time, the story cannot fail in making a sensation and having an immense sale.

The eviction and killing of the Mussel Slough settlers by the tools of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., May 11, 1880. Facts suppressed by corporation influences.

Chaplain C. C. McCabe, D. D., Gen. Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, writes:

MISSION ROOMS, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.
805 Broadway, New York.

Somehow the book got hold of me and I could scarcely lay it down until I had finished it. From the very first sentence it held my close attention. It is the portrayal of the hopeless struggle of a working man against the might of corporate wealth. Would God it were a fiction, but the facts given in the margin prove that the story is true to life. If this book could have a million readers, it would help to make such crimes impossible beneath the Stars and Stripes. C. C. McCABE.

The eminent divine, David Swing, reviews the book in the Weekly Magazine, making it the leading article in that periodical. The article is too long to print in full; the following are a few extracts from it:

"If one would realize the comparative power of literary simplicity, one should read upon two consecutive days a novel of Bulwer or Robert Buchanan, and a novel by some such unpretending penman as the author of 'Driven From Sea to Sea.' The absence of many books and the presence of a leisure day compelled a rapid reader recently to pass through the pages of 'The New Abelard,' written by a high artist in London, and 'Driven from Sea to Sea,' written by a busy editor in Chicago. The reader expected to draw much pleasure from Robert Buchanan, and much less from the story by C. C. Post, but when evening had come, and the two books had been perfectly read, the Chicago pen had surpassed the famous one of London. * * The Chicago writer surpassed the Englishman in choice of a subject. * * When a novel selects an awful truth for its basis, it merits attention. * * In the American book the reader knows where to shed tears, and when he comes to the end he has no doubt whatever as to the lessons of value to be learned from the work."

Hon. B. F. Shively says:

"It is impossible to sufficiently commend your book. It comes like a revelation, and should, and doubtless will, cause a sensation deeper and more profound than that produced by 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' thirty years ago. The latter dealt with a system involving a clear and open usurpation of human rights. You have exposed the iniquities of a system involving a cunning and insidious but still more fatal usurpation of the rights of humanity. Your book should have been entitled 'The True Story of the Bread Winners,' for indeed such it is."

Gen. B. F. Butler writes:

In my travels in the cars, I have given the book full perusal. It is the most timely book that has been published. Its execution is very remarkable as a piece of bookmaking. It is not a work of fiction, but exhibits startling truths that are stranger than fiction in regard to the horrible defects in our system of land grants, and disposal and occupation of public lands that must arouse the people and Congress to the necessary remedies to protect honest and industrious settlers and their families from being wronged by land companies and land grabbers. I wish that a copy could be put in the hands of and read by every member of both branches of Congress. The second copy you sent by Mr. Plympton, I will send to the President with a note requesting him to read it. I think it will do the same service to the country in regard to the misuse of our land system that Uncle Tom's Cabin did with regard to slavery.

The Hon. George W. Julian, many years a member of Congress, and Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, after reading the story when it appeared as a serial, says:

"I have read 'Driven from Sea to Sea,' with an interest which never flagged for a moment. As a contribution to the 'simple annals of the poor,' it deserves a place by the side of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' and it cannot fail to bear fruit in the coming struggle between the organized rapacity of capital and the rights of humanity. It embodies suggestions in political economy, and hints at reforms, which will help wake up the people while appealing to their sense of justice and their sensibility to suffering. I have long felt the need of such a story, and am glad to find it so true to life and so well written."

Helen Wilmans, widely known as a writer, and formerly one of the editors of the Overland Monthly, says:

"The style is the most truly natural and unaffected of any novel that has appeared since the 'Vicar of Wakefield.' I believe it will come to be called 'The Great American Classic.' I have compared it most critically with the stories of our leading authors, and find it greatly different in every respect. The popular literature of the day seems elaborate and forced in comparison with this book. It may be in part, because the story is true, and the author knew it, that he told it with such an unquestioning appearance of truth. At all events, I never in all my life read anything whose every page and line and word carries such conviction."

Our Advertising Patrons and Friends.

To publish the complete report of the National Convention with the large amount of business from our advertisers, we have doubled the size of this paper, making it 32 pages, thinking this would accommodate all. We are sorry to disappoint so many of our advertisers as well as ourselves in leaving out for want of space two full pages of choice advertising. We shall in the future keep the advertizing department of this paper up to the high standard of the past, editing carefully all advertisements before allowing them to appear in the paper and we trust that we may continue to receive the esteemed and valued patronage of all first class advertisers.

THE largest type is needed in the age wherein people hear with their eyes. An object lesson in huge characters is the chart entitled "The Nation's Drink Bill," advertised on 3d p. cover. We can post that sort of literature on every street corner, and we ought. The W. C. T. U. takes hold of this important instrumentality by placing it in street-cars, depots and school houses and churches.

NEW PLEDGE CARD.—We have issued a new and very handsome pledge card, printed in two colors, price 60c. per hundred postpaid. Just the thing for W. C. T. U. workers to carry. In single and triple form. We also keep in stock Murphy pledge cards and ribbons, Band of Hope Badges, sample 10c. National Drink Chart, price 10c. Leaflets, etc., for distribution. Handsome lithographs of the Prohibition candidates, price 25c. each, the two for 40c. postpaid.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land," should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

OUR readers who are crowded for room in their dwellings and are in need of a neat folding bed that will be an ornament to any room cannot do better than order the Ross Table Bed, manufactured by the Foust City Furniture Co., of Rockford, Ill. Illustrated descriptive price list mailed free.

SPECIAL attention is called to the marked advertisement on page 28.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

THE DOVE OF PEACE.

A GEM OF BEAUTY.—An Exquisitely Engraved and Colored Dove floating on the wing, upon a deep, blue sky, which forms the background, and with every feather so carefully drawn as almost to deceive one into the belief that it is a LIVING THING OF LIFE. Upon this background, in choice lettering is the text, "MY PEACE I GIVE UNTO YOU" etc. Upon the coming light of the morning dawn which brightens up the foreground of the picture, in similar letters, is the text, "THE PEACE OF GOD WHICH PASSETH ALL UNDERSTANDING," the whole forming a perfect gem of art. Like all fine works its value consists not so much in its size 8x10, as in its beauty of detail, and it possesses the great advantage of needing no frame, being printed with a gold border upon a heavy card plate, so that it can be placed upon the table or mantel if preferred. If you want a choice ornament for your home, or a remembrance to a friend, especially to one in sickness or trouble, it cannot be equalled, either in beauty or price. REMEMBER IT CAN BE FRAMED OR NOT AS YOU PLEASE. Safely packed, we send it postage paid on receipt of Twenty-Five Cents.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 43. CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 6, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

BOSTON after doubling the price of its dram-shop license has increased their number. In the period from May 1 to September 26, 1883, 2,678 licenses were issue, while for the same period in 1884, 2,784 were issued.

FOUR young ladies were among the recipients of scholarships at the recent contest in Cornell University. Four young men also won. Cornell believes in equal honors and privileges, and the young women sustain the verdict grandly.

THE very zones are beaten by the W. C. T. U. Our geographies used to tell us that the temperate regions produced the greatest activity, but here is the North Carolina W. C. T. U., which held its session less than a month ago, and yet for two weeks has had its annual report in circulation, brilliant in yellow cover, clear in type and full of good matter.

AT an examination of applicants for West Point cadetships, lately held in the seventeenth congressional district of Illinois, eighteen out of the twenty-two young men applicants, were found physically defective! Investigation will probably develop similar facts elsewhere in this state and others. It is high time that we have a scientific education law, enforcing instruction in regard to health and its preservation, and dangers by the way.

THE Iowa supreme court has decided against Judge Hayes in the matter of the jurisdiction of justices in cases where the fine is $100 or less. Judge Hayes, in his zeal to frustrate the law, it will be remembered, held that the costs should be counted with the fine, swelling the amount to $100 in almost every case and so taking it out of the justice's court. The supreme court decides against such proceedure and aids the enforcement of the law by so much.

THE day for which all days were made—for surely one would think so, from the newspapers and speechifying of the past two months—has passed. The little matter of ten million votes has been attended to—and somebody is president—though at this writing nobody knows who. We venture to say that the only happy candidate tonight,—November 4,— is ex-Governor St. John—who knows he has done his whole duty, and who, having the courage to be defeated is not troubled thereby.

He has fought a good fight. He has kept the faith. Henceforth he is crowned in the hearts of his countrymen.

A COLORED boy landed in Chicago this morning from Iowa on his way to his "old Virginia home." He had worked there in a coal mine all summer and exhibited a bottle of whisky which he had just bought, as the first he had seen in five months. A gentleman to whom he offered it, refused the drink, saying, "Well now, weren't you better off without it?" and this was the knowing reply: "Look yer, boss, ef I'ded whisky out dar, I'd done spent all my money and coulnd't go down home to ole Virginny, nohow." Alas! for his wisdom so soon forgotten,—but bravo! for the state that protects negroes and white men alike.

"CALLED home while on duty," may well be the epitaph written over Lizzie Wallace's grave. In attendance upon the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. convention, at the railway station to meet a belated delegate, just from heroic effort and prayer with the landlord of her hotel that he might be led to give up his bar, what "chariot" could have more appropriately carried her on into the heavenly ministries. The shock of death by accident is left to those who are left here still to love her—but no earthly terror could fright a soul so brave, and no accident ever takes one out of God's loving care. She no longer needs our poor protection. But the poor baggage man who so nearly lost his life in the brave attempt to rescue her, has a claim upon every W. C. T. U. woman that will not be soon forgotten, we are sure. The Pennsylvania convention made up a handsome purse for the four little children for whom he can never care again as in the past, and any further contributions will be no doubt gladly received for them by the president of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., Mrs. Frances L. Swift, Allegheny, Pa.

THE torchlight processions of the past few weeks have been gorgeous with lanterns and regalia, and legends wise and otherwise, faces famous and notorious, have been seen by the light of lurid fires, kindled to make them luminous for at least once in national history: shouts and huzzas have paralyzed enthusiastic voices, and thousands of dollars have been expended in a way to give force to David's wonderful declaration, "Surely every man walketh in a vain show." The temperance legions have had no processions save those that went to the polls—but O, what a pageant they might have organized!

At the head, all the bloated, blear eyed drunkards, one hundred thousand of them, carrying the banner, "We are the real product of the 'perpetual resource'"; close behind might come the gaunt, famishing, hollow eyed women—another hundred thousand, bearing the legend, "If you can give us no sumptuary laws, you can at least give us bread." Then the little barefoot children, ragged, nervous, idiotic, vicious, starving, stealing—the drunkard's brood, half a million more, holding high aloft the warning, "We are to be America's citizens and rulers." O, friends, countrymen, Americans, would even such a sight awaken you? You sleep while facts and figures are thundered at you. You eat, drink and are merry, while the bell tolls off a drunkard's death every six minutes of every twenty-four hours of every three hundred and sixty-five days. Beware, O beware, lest the last of Egypt's plague shall be necessary to soften your hard hearts, and to open your wilfully blind eyes.

THE W. C. T. U. must ever deeply regret the necessity under which Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster felt herself obliged to resign the superintendency of legislative work. So hard was it to lose her from authorized leadership, that effort was made to change the nature of her department so as to take it from the possibility of political complication. This, being unsatisfactory to Mrs. Foster, a large number of those who had gladly voted for her re-election, were left regretfully to vote for the acceptance of her resignation. Her long years of valuable service, her manifold accomplishments, her loyalty to, and love for the organization, and above all her true and affectionate heart have made her not only a power to be respected, but tenderly beloved. Loving eyes filled with tears, even as they saw the necessity to receive her declinature. THE UNION SIGNAL has not hesitated to speak of her position as inconsistent with former utterances, and so it has seemed to us, but it has never believed her other than the true, loyal hearted prohibitionist, and fearless advocate of all she considered right. At one time we seemed to misrepresent her in repeating her remark that if she were "in Illinois she must inevitably be with the Prohibition party" without the qualification that this meant the state prohibition party and not the National—an omission which was far from intentional. If at any time the National organ has wounded her, the sword has been double edged, and pierced our own heart also. Love hurts sometimes, but carries no sting, and leaves no poison in the wound.

We have not lost Mrs. Foster. Her heart is as our heart, save on the one point of political affiliation. Her handwill be clasped asfervenly, and our faith will be as unbroken as in the past. God bless her always and everywhere.

"FROM HIS HEART."

MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS.

"For the Lord will not cast off for ever."
"But though He cause grief, yet will He have compassion according to the multitude of His mercies. For He doth not afflict willingly (from His heart) nor grieve the children of men." Lam. 3: 31-33.

"From his heart," so reads the margin,
God doth not afflict nor grieve;
O what comfort comes, and courage,
As these words I now believe.

Now believe! e'en while the sorrow
Pierces with its sharpest sting.
Waiting not for some tomorrow,
And the balm that time may bring;

But just now, while heart is breaking,
Every joy and comfort fled,
Even life I turn from,—clinging
Close and closer to my dead.

Then how precious just to trust Him,
As His "waves and billows" roll,
And to hear above the tempest
Jesus speaking to my soul.

Hear Him say He'll have "compassion,"
Though He cause me deepest grief,
"Multitudes of tender mercies,"
Bringing to my swift relief.

"From His heart!" how sweet the record,
Link it with "For God is love,"
Question not the wise "chastisement,"
It but leads to rest above.

THE ANNUAL SERMON

OF THE

National W. C. T. U. Preached in the United Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, Oct. 26, 1884, by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap.

The United Presbyterian Church was crowded to listen to the annual sermon, which in the absence of Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, of Brooklyn, to whom the service had been assigned by the program, was preached by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan.

Taking for her text the sixth verse of the fourth chapter of the prophecy of Zechariah: "Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit saith the Lord of Hosts," she thus addressed the audience:

Zerubbabel was a divinely appointed man, set to do a divinely appointed work, and yet from the outset he met with hindrance and discouragement, and sometimes seeming defeat. And let no worker with God for humanity expect a different experience.

There is a well defined battle going on in the world between light and darkness, good and evil, the kingdom of God and the kingdom of Satan; so whosoever goes afield to fight for the truth, will sooner or later feel the shock of the battle.

Three classes from the first, burdened the heart and hindered the work of Zerubbabel. 1st. The heathen, who were the open and old time enemies of the people. They remembered the days of Jewish prosperity and power, when God was among them, and their armies were never defeated. They remembered, too, when disaster came because of sin, and Israel was carried away into captivity. The heathen had rejoiced all the years in the decaying walls and the temple in ruins. But now it did look as if restoration was near. The prophet had no great human force behind him, but he declared his heavenly commission, and the company of brave toilers said that God was with them.

These heathen enemies were therefore open in their hostility. They used spear and javalin, and sent their deadly arrows at the workers on the walls. So the faithful builders carried the weapon of defence in one hand, and the instrument of labor in the other.

The second class, which hindered the work, were people who were half Jew, and half heathen.

When the tribes were carried away into captivity, a remnant had been left behind, and for these the strain of the years had been too much.

They had settled down among their strong neighbors, themselves poor and defenceless. So it came to pass that they went into trade with the heathen, doing the same business on the same principles.

Then they married in among them, setting up homes and families which were half Jew and half heathen. Because of their superior wisdom in government, they were elected to sit in the gates, as judges among these idolaters, until their worship even became mixed, so that in business, family, social, civil and religious life, these people were half Jew and half heathen.

This class did not come out in open warfare against Zerubbabel and his faithful co-workers; they did not seek their life, but when the enemy sneered, they joined the mocking crowd, and stood far apart in the hour of desperate need. The names of these half-hearted ones on the records of the tribes, the language of Zion was on their lips, but they were too much entangled with the enemies of God and of Israel to be on the right side.

The third class were the discouraged friends of the movement.

Among those left behind were some who had been true, some who had chosen poverty and weakness rather than alliance with the enemies of Jehovah; but they had looked upon Jerusalem in her glory; had seen the temple in its beauty, and with that memory strong upon them as they saw this feeble band lay the narrow foundations they could not be satisfied; and so the sound of their lamentations went up with the song of those who rejoiced.

It was in such an hour that God's message came to Zerubbabel. "Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit saith the Lord of Hosts." The circumstances and the message have many things worthy our attention.

When any great moral contest is waged in the world, these three classes thus represented always appear, and they comfrout us in the work of today. There are those who openly oppose, others whom family, business and political alliances make half-hearted and untrue, and those who are so appalled at the difficulties that they have no faith and no courage, and only give lamentations instead of praise.

We need therefore a vision of the unseen forces, in the contest; need to go out, by faith, into the measureless and the uncounted, for this victory is to be won like that of the prophet, by the power of the Spirit of God.

In espousing any cause we have but to decide that it is right, and that we are on the Divine side, then count always upon these almighty forces, which can never be defeated.

There are certain reasons worthy our reverent consideration why we need above all else the Spirit of God in this and all reforms.

First. It is the only power which can set any moral battle properly in array. It is not organization, nor eloquence, nor argument which calls with bugle blast to such a struggle. The sharpest conflicts of the world come first of all, in the human conscience, before they go afield and that close battle is set by the Spirit of the living God.

Second. Every reform which has divinity in it is based upon the value of the individual human soul. When Christ came into this world, He came not to build nations and civilize masses, but to save men, and He never allows anything to get in the way of that purpose. God does not care for the form of the church, for political organizations or for great civilizations, when they get in the way of this salvation. Since Christ conquered the world by dying for it, nothing can exist here except by His direct and official sanction. For this reason every power is swept down, that fails to recognize the fact that the supreme value in the universe is the immortal soul. This revelation comes to our blindness only by the teaching of The Spirit.

Third. No other force is known to the world which can take humanity at its worst, and bring it to its best, and this is what the Savior of men contemplates.

Suppose we had the worst man to be found this morning, wholly in our control. He is bad in his home, bad as a citizen, a danger everywhere. How is such a soul to be brought to its best? There are three kinds of power known to men which we can use for his reformation.

First, physical force. Let us bring him to this altar, and with the lash over his back, compel him to say our prayers, and pronounce our creeds of right living. Have we touched the real man? No, the soul escapes us free, and untouched as a bird in the air. Next try legislation, the effect of wise law in creating real virtue. Let the legislature of the state sit down and enact a special edict against every vice he has, or shut him away in a felon's cell. What has been done? We have only limited his power to go abroad, and left him all unchanged at the center of his being.

Last, try culture. Send him to the highest schools of learning, induce him to study, until in brain power he stands more than the peer of all about him. When this is accomplished he has been taught to blaspheme God in better English, and the sphere of his baleful influence has been widened, but in spite of force, legislation or culture, the regal imperial soul sits inside beyond the reach of outer forces, and says, "I think, I believe, I love, I hate, I will, I will not." And all your effort has not saved the man.

How can he be saved? You have seen a work like this performed: Such an one as he, has come to the place of prayer, with his wretchedness and woe. You did not see anything but the low-bowed form and the tears which trickled through his fingers. You did not hear anything but the long drawn sobs, and by and by the broken confession of sin, and its forgivsness by the grace of God; but at that point he turned a sharp angle in his life, the curses slipped away from his lips, making room for prayer and song, the old love light came back to home, and wife and children, and the man came into harmony with all that was best. What wrought the mighty change? The sweet, grand, old-fashioned Power of the Holy Spirit did it, where nothing else could reach the case.

Lastly, we as workers need this Power within us, for only through the spirit are are able to reach God and and men. True reform is the bringing of the Divine and human into harmony and we need to be able to touch both. If dependence is put upon human sympathy, love, method, or organization, there must be failures. Human sympathy grows weary, love falters before the repulsive forms of sin with which we deal, method does not reach the heart, and the tendency of organizatien is to secular rather than spiritual force. The necessity for the toilers in this great reform, is the changeless, tireless measureless power of Christ dwelling in us.

Pray for a new pentecost—on our workers, on the church which needs a clearer revelation of the truth, on our country, the government of which stands between God and the salvation of man.

Pray for this new baptism, because it is "not by might nor by power, but by My Spirit saith the Lord of Hosts."

SUNDAY EVENING.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD'S ADDRESS.

At the same church and to a crowded house, Miss Willard spoke in the evening, and the following is a synopsis of her remarks:

"DEAR FRIENDS—About sixteen years ago, in the long, slow watches of the night, I used to sit beside my father's couch and sing what comforted him more than anything else—

Rock of Ages, cleft for me.

"I remember on one night, when I saw upon his face a peculiar look which I had seen there but once before, and that was when my sister died—he said to me: 'God can change a man's mind, and what I wish now, most of all, is to depart and be with Christ.'

"God can change a man's mind, and only God can change this spirit of ours so that we can receive His truth and love it."

"And then for three-quarters of an hour this gifted woman pressed home upon her hearers, with a force and a directness peculiarly her own, acceptance of the Savior. Where did the world look for the evidence of Christianity? Not to the books, not to the carefully preserved records of the Vatican. These evidences were bound in human form. We are each like a leaf from the Bible. Let us remember that our everyday lives are going to build up or break down the faith on which is based humanity's deepest hope.

"Into the witches' broth all the ologies of the day are stirred. Voices widely at variance are heard from the pulpit. But if we come down to the central thought in every Christian heart we shall find that the question of Pontius Pilate is the great question of life. "What will you do with Jesus who is called Christ?"

"These answers are as various as when the question was first asked. Some cry, "Crucify Him;" others, "Release unto us Barabbas."

"Every heart that is normal and sincere must recognize that somehow there is a lack of adjustment between us and that great Father. Besides this taproot of sin, alienation from the Father, there are side roots branching out which we call sins. There are three facts which will make all confess the need of this adjustment.

"The first is pain, which in an hour might come upon the broadest shoulders in this house and make the strongest man the most miserable of creatures. There is the plowshare of bereavement, which cuts through living hearts. Dear friends, it seems the dictation of common sense to fall in love with a religion which grows dearer as life's sorrows come on. In the crisis of that hour, for which all other hours were made, I want Thy face, O Savior, with its beatific vision, to dawn upon me.

"Before the ideals which we form our fellow men are pilgrims, but the highest ideal finds its perfect amplification in Jesus. Majestic sweetness sits upon His brow. No man ever spoke like this man. Alone into this mystic world we were born. Alone out his mystic world w e go. What shall we say when in our loneliness there comes this Christ of Galilee to cheer us?

Long will live in the memories of that great audience the word pictures which Miss Willard drew of two great assemblages. The first, 80,000 people, was gathered in the Coliseum at Rome—plebeians in the lower tiers, patricians above, the vestal virgins in the snowy robes—to witness the rending by wild beasts of St. Ignatius, the disciple of St. John and the associate of Polycarp. The martyr's words rang out: "I am the grain of God, but I must first be ground by the teeth of the wild beasts that I may be bread fit for the Master's table." And now the cross which is lifted high over the ruins of the Coliseum dominates the world and makes it brother-like.

The companion picture was a scene in Moody's tabernacle at Chicago, with Moody himself, who had not the qualifications to admit him to the freshman class of a fresh-water university, dwelling on the words he loved so well, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." And the reformed men, rough, some of them, and unfit to go into almost any circle of society, joined in their hymns:

> The sins of my life have been many,
> The sins of my life have been more.
> I scarce can see from weeping,
> But I'll enter the open door.

Oh, Christ, what hast thou done? Thou hast come in storm and anguish and hast whispered, "Peace, be still." Beloved friends, the good old ways are good enough for me. Our fathers went to heaven by them, and we, by following in their footsteps, shall reach there too.

Moved by Mrs. Hoffman and seconded by Mrs. Lathrap that a department of effort to prevent Sabbath desecration be created, of which Mrs. J. Ellen Foster should be made superintendent.

That a department for work among Indians be created, with Mrs. J. C. McCabe, of Ohio, as superintendent.

Mrs. W. Woods, of Iowa, was made superintendent of the department of relation of intemperance to capital and labor, with relative statistics.

The following memorial from Iowa was read and deferred for such further consideration as its importance demands.

MEMORIAL.

The W. C. T. U. of Iowa, to the N. W. C. T. U.—Greeting:

Believing with our heart's might in our own state motto: "This is the victory, even our faith;" and desiring that the faith of the women of our unions may be cultivated and become a mighty power in the pulling down of the stronghold of unrighteousness, we memorialize the convention at St. Louis, asking that a department of faith culture be created. Adopted at state convention October 7-10, 1884.

M. J. ALDRICH, president.

S. B. MAXFIELD, corresponding secretary.

Moved and carried that one evening be set apart at the convention of 1885 for young women's work.

Mrs. L. S. Tobey was appointed home secretary for Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of the department of scientific temperance instruction.

The executive committee recommends that the convention of 1885 open on Friday; that superintendents be invited to meet the executive committee on Thursday afternoon previous, and the stockholders of The Woman's Publication Association hold their annual meeting on Friday afternoon as a part of the convention work.

That no mass meetings be held during the evenings of the convention days.

Moved and carried that there be but one address of welcome, and one response at our convention.

The convention rose to sit tomorrow at 9 o'clock.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, OCT. 27, EVENING.

Prayer by Mrs. Buell.

By common consent the few moments discussion was not recorded.

Moved and carried that Dr. Dorchesters request for a centennial anniversary of the temperance reform mentioned in the presidents annual address be endorsed.

The committee rose.

Mrs. Aldrich, of Iowa, offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in the adoption of the resolution expressing the sense of this convention in regard to the co-operation of the N. W. C. T. U. with the national Prohibition party as a means of promoting the cause of state and national Prohibition, we expressly understand and declare that the national W. C. T. U. superintendents are free as any other individual to give or withhold active co-operation with the national Prohibition party; that auxilliary state unions are also left free to give or withhold active co-operation with that party as hey may elect; that presidents of state unions are free to act with their own state unions although members of the executive committee; and that in active co-operation with the national Prohibition party, the national W. C. T. U., will only lend its influence to that party in the several states with the consent of the W. C. T. U.'s of those states."

Moved to amend by striking out the clause relating to national superintendents. Mrs. Burt moved to lay on the table. Caried, 41 to 25.

Mrs. Nichols moved that the convention as a national organization endorse the effort of the state and county fair department to secure a proper representation of the W. C. T. U. at the World's Fair at New Orleans. Carried.

Mrs. Aldrich, of Iowa, moved that the recognition of two state unions in one state in this annual meeting by allowing general officers from the two state unions of one state to seats in this convention shall not establish a precedent for allowing more than four general officers from any state and one delegate at large from a state to a seat in our annual meetings. Carried.

Notices were given, doxology was sung and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster pronounced the benediction.

MONDAY EVENING.

Devotional exercises led by Mrs. Hammer, of N. J., Mrs. Aldrich leading in prayer.

Minutes of the afternoon meeting and of the executive committee were read and accepted.

Mrs. A. M. Palmer spoke earnestly of a faith culture department.

The following motion was made and carried. The thanks of the convention are gratefully tendered to J. W. Chesborough, general passenger agent of the Vandalia line, and secretary of the St. Louis passenger agents; to R. T. Bryden, agent of the Trunk Line commission of New York; to D. T. Drew, representing the commission at the convention; also to the Missouri Pacific, Wabash, C. B. and Q., Illinois Central, Louisville and Nashville, Baltimore & Ohio, to Mr. C. M. Sheaf, superintendent Southern Division Illinois' Central, New Orleans, to the West Shore lines and other roads for courtesies.

Invitations for holding the next national convention of the W. C. T. U. were received from Philadelphia, Pa., Nashville, Tenn., San Francisco, Cal., Minneapolis, Minn. and Portland, Maine.

The invitation from Philadelphia was accepted with thanks to others from whom invitations were received.

Moved and carried that Mrs. Aldrich secure information concerning excursion to San Francisco in view of holding convention there at some future day.

Major and Mrs. Scott of New Jersey were introduced to the convention and the major pleasantly and briefly addressed the body.

Moved that the corresponding secretary have the minutes of the first three annual meetings printed and bound with the minutes of the remaining eight, and placed in the headquarters of the W. C. T. U. at the exposition in New Orleans. Carried.

Moved and carried that thanks be tendered to the ladies who furnished dinner at the Christian Home.

Mrs. Benjamin moved a rising vote of recognition of the patient forbearance of our loved president. Miss Willard made a characteristic, tender response.

Mrs. Clara Roach moved that a vote of thanks be extended to the secretaries and treasurer, and to Miss Anna Gordon. Carried.

The corresponding secretary was requested to send a note of loving regard to Mrs. E. J. Thompson, of Hillsboro, Ohio.

The convention closed with devotional exercises, the repetition of Scripture passages by the delegates, singing, "Blest be the tie that binds;" and prayer by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap. The convention adjourned by motion of Mrs. Denman, of New Jersey. Miss Willard declared the eleventh convention of the N. W. C. T. U. closed, and Mrs. M. J. Pearsons, of England, pronounced the benediction.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
Recording Secretary N. W. C. T. U.

RECORDS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A petition touching the fashion plates of the day to be presented to their editors signed by the general officers, by fashionable women and physicians, was considered and adopted.

The petition is as follows:

Publishers of ——— ———:

DEAR SIR: Knowing that the fashion in woman's dress which requires the constriction of the waist and the compression of the trunk of the body, is one which not only deforms the body in a manner contrary to good taste, but results in serious, sometimes irreparable injury to the important vital organs; and, believing that the existence of the widespread perversion of natural instincts which renders this custom so prevalent, may be fairly attributable, in part at least, to erroneous education of the eye, and the establishment of a false and artificial standard of symmetry and beauty, in our opinion, largely the result of the influence of the popular fashion plates of the day; we, the undersigned, most respectfully petition you that in the name of science and humanity, you will lend your aid toward the elevation of woman, to a more perfect physical estate, and consequently to the elevation of humanity, by making the figures upon your fashion plates conform more nearly to the normal standard and the conditions requisite for the maintenance of health.

Moved and carried that a training school be held at Faith Cottage (Miss Jennie Smith's home) Mountain Lake Park, Md., and at such other points as may seem practicable to general officers.

Mrs. Woodbridge was appointed superintendent of the inter-state convention at Mountain Lake Park.

Mrs. S. A. McClees was requested in her department of soldiers' and sailors' work to prepare literature suitable to postmen.

DAKOTA FOR SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE EDUCATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The meeting of the Congregational "General Association of Dakota" was held this year at Yankton, September 17-21. One of the questions on the program for essay and discussion was "Temperance Instruction in Public Schools." The thoughtful paper on this subject by the Rev. Lucius Kingsbury, of Canton, was followed by another on the same topic by Mrs. M. B. Norton, the latter by special request. The discussion which followed, though evidently all the members of association were in favor of such instruction where practicable, developed some unexpected differences of opinion. The right to force such instruction in schools where a majority of the parents are foreigners and opposed to it was questioned by one of the ministers, who is also a county superintendent of public instruction. Some of the members took one view of the case, some another. Among the outspoken utterances was one by the Rev. Edward Brown, of DeSmet, cousin to John Brown "whose soul is marching on." The ring of the hero of Harper's Ferry was heard again when his cousin declared "I would concede nothing to ignorance and vice!"

The publications of the National Temperance Society were said to contain untrue statements as to the nature and effects of alcohol, etc., and the charge distinctly made that this society "is run to make money." Dr. Gilbert, of Chicago, said that the publications containing the statements objected to had been withdrawn by this society, but it was replied that the society still published other works containing statements which science refuses to substantiate.

Miss Colman's "Temperance Catechism" was recommended by some but also objected to on the same ground of containing extreme and untrustworthy statements. Dr. Hooker's Physiology with an appendix containing instruction as to temperance hygiene was highly recommended. After this spicy and earnest discussion a set of resolutions was passed, heartily endorsing prohibition, and rejoicing in the victory for tempe.ance achieved in the Maine election, news of which has just been received. The following are the resolutions passed on the resolutions passed on the subject of temperance instruction in the public schools:

Resolved, That we cordially command the spirit and zeal of the W. C. T. U. and in view of great good they have done and the great good they may yet do, we respectfully ask them to study carefully the principles they endorse that they may lay no unstable foundations.

Resolved, That we believe the time has come for the instruction of the children of our public schools in the well established facts concerning the laws of physical life that are the basis of a true temperance reform; but in so doing we should be careful not to make use of manuals of instruction that are unscientific and untrue, such as some of those now before the public.

Mrs. E. J. Coggins, president of the Dakota W. C. T. U., was introduced to the association and her appeal for help and encouragement in the work, was granted a cordial and sympathetic hearing.

The Presbyterian "Synod of Dakota" is now in session at Huron. Mrs. Coggins has been freely granted all the time she wished, in which to speak of her before that body, and has received most respectful and generous treatment at its hands. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted as they were reported by the committee on temperance:

Ever feeling the importanco of clear convictions and well defined views on the subject of temperance. This "Synod of Dakota" does heartily adopt the deliverances of the several assemblies of the Presbyterian church, in the past fifty years, and endorse the action of the different presbyteries of which it is composed, and also highly commends the devotion and labors of the ministers and people in behalf of this cause.

In view of the fact that the Christian church and the cause of morality have no greater enemy than the liquor trafic.

And whereas there is no class of men more active, nor more daring than those engaged in the manufacture and sale of liquor, therefore,

Resolved, That this "Synod" enjoin every minister and elder to labor in every lawful way for the constitutional prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all intoxicaring liquors as a beverage.

And still farther, that this "Synod" having heard the cause of the W. C. T. U. as represented by their president at this session, heartily endorse their efforts, and recommend that every minister preach at least once a year on the subject of temperance, and take up a collection as recommended for the W. C. T. U.

Wm. J. Hill, Chairman of Com.

Mrs. Coggins has also visited this week the Methodist conference of Dakota, now in session at Mitchell, and the work of the W. C. T. U. has there received most heartily endorsement. The assembled conference is to give its Sunday evening to a grand temperance mass-meeting when they will "put in the 'rousements" if any have been omitted hitherto. So these three great bodies, on which so much of the moral welfare of South Dakota depends, have in the short space of two weeks placed themselves outspokenly and unequivocally on record on the temperance issues now before the public. We have yet to hear from other Christian organizations in the territory, and doubt not they will maintain substantially and stedfastly the same attitude.

Huron, Dakota, Oct. 11, 1884. M. B. N.

THE GARDEN OF THE LORD.

Dear Union Signal:—Shall I tell you a secret, dear Union Signal? The Euphrates and the Tigris no longer bound Eden. You have only to cross the backbone of New England, the Green Mountains of Vermont, and sit down in the lap of the White river valley to find an earthly Paradise. You must have thought you had stumbled upon Eden had you come in June when these softly rounded slopes were draped in living green, and every tree was the home of a singing bird.

Had you roamed the greewood then, and met by chance that Dante-of-the-Sonnet among birds, the wood lark, with his tender tones of "earthly passion to celestial love refined," you might even have thought yourself the first woman before the fall. But had you waited until now that the autumn touch of God has transformed the hills and dales of New England into a marvel of beauty, and could you step from your western sanctum into this land of delights, you would surely exclaim with us, "The garden of the Lord!" And yet there is not a flower in it. The very frosts that laid the asters low wrought this miracle; the drought that impoveished the springs added to the glory, until every mountain slope and wooded hollow is praising God in a rhapsody of color.

Here is a hill slope crowded with azalia bloom; shades on shades of pink and crimson maples, massed together and spiked with the deep green of the spruce and balsam. Yonder is a wooded rampart gleaming like burnished brass, as if all the goldenrod of the world were crowded there and intensified with sunshine. A turn in the road reveals a hanging garden—acres of forest trees transformed to massive cardinal flowers, sending up tongues of flame among the tender green of the poplars, that like a reminiscence of spring mingle softly with the impassioned color and subdue its fire. Follow the winding descent and enter the mountain gorge beyond. Rioting through it, a very river of splendor, are waves on waves of tropical hues, a floating garden, No gorgeous flower, no lavishly tinted fruit that has not its counterpart.

If your eyes weary of the exuberance of color, look deeper and read the poem written upon the rocks by the hand of onr God. To the spiritual vision only will this appear. You will need to go as Christ did, apart into a mountain, to get the beatific vision. Then shall you hear this thought of God breathed through these transfigured hills: "This beauty is the wine of my love. I have poured it into this hill chalice that you, my child, may drink from the cup of blessing! Listen! the poem is set to music, ineffably sweet, and tender, and now it becomes a grand forest hymn, every tree of the wood, even the roadside ferns, breathing out their hearts in adoration.

If you stay till sunset, you shall hear a nocturne of Chopin from the silver birches, their dying song. If you watch the mists lift in the early morning, you shall witness a color rendering of the "Hymn of Praise." And then as you listen, with your eyes, you will see a sunset sky from your own prairie land entangled in these treetops. The mountains have not companioned with the clouds in vain. They robbed the mists of their color sprites and imprisoned them in their leafy tops. How they dance in the glad morning, how they sigh in the twilight,—these children of the rainbow. When they are merry they promise to stay forever; but when they are sad they murmur, "This is not our home."

"Not our home." We too would not linger always even in Paradise; for this triumphal procession of the forests will end in a dirge of death, and this enchanting nook is not without its serpent trail. You, dear Union Signal, would speedily discover the slimy track, always to be found where prohibition has not slain the brood. Now, thank God, almost always to be found, close by the hydra-headed foe, Intemperance, his arch enemy, the W. C. T. U. Here it is—the valiant little union, small, but alert, uncompromising, and growing towards the light. Its leader, loyal to right, open-eyed, ready to wield the ballot or any other legitimate weapon of reform. Its constituency "marching on," and more than one member brave enough and true enough to prefer defeat with St. John and Daniel, to victory with the apostle of expediency. Ideas generate in an atmosphere and on a soil where grew an Ethan Allan. Said a Green Mountain boy of seventy summers but with no trace of winter in his heart, "I haven't thought much about these things before, the voting and all that, but I can see that if women had the ballot, we shouldn't have rum in R."

Fifteen years ago when praying in the barn, this son of the Puritans had a Pauline conversion. "There ain't folks enough in the world, sister, to make me believe that the light didn't shine in my face, as plain as that candle there," is his simply testimony. Ever since, his daily prayer has been, "More Light." What wonder that he sees the coming dawn for woman and prophesies its speedy advent. His son is a "twentieth century man," as gentle as a woman and as manly as a man.

There is hope for a nation whose rural folk are made of such stuff. There is hope for Paradise when Adam joins hands with Eve in resisting Satan's wiles.

STEREOSCOPIC TEMPERANCE.

Dear Union Signal:—We all have our "pet projects" and think that if our particular line of work was carried on persistently, that the day of the Millenium would soon dawn. This enthusiasm is well perhaps, and explains the "cause why," such an incredible amount of work is accomplished by our women in the thirty-three departments. Mrs. Stowell in a late issue of The Union Signal, writes charmingly of the open door for work in the day schools, and after some excellent suggestions of what might be done, enquires "Where are our committees on schools?" One year ago the New York state W. C. T. U. resolved themselves into a "committee of the whole" and went to work for the public schools and secured the introduction of a most important branch of study, viz., "Alcohol and Hygiene." Continuing the thought she says, "What band of women works at entertainments to procure books, maps and charts?" Indirectly this committee-at-large have been the means of furnishing the schools under state control the best of charts, far surpassing the famous Sewell's. At a meeting of the principals of the normal schools of the state of New York to consider how best this new branch of study could be taught, they resolved that they would recommend (aside from the text books), a series of stereoscopic plates, to be prepared at the state's expense, illustrating the physiological effects of alcohol upon the various organs of the human body. These are now in process of construction by eminent scientists, and each normal school in our state will be supplied with a set, and as the students go out from these training schools to teach the children of our state, they will carry with them the influence of these vivid and effective object lessons.

Mrs. H. A. Perrigo.

In Indiana, at a recent diocesan conference of the Protestant Episcopal church, a session was given to "Woman's work, and the promotion of methods for increasing her usefulness in the church." One who was there says: "It was very dull at first; for, although several papers were presented, written by women, yet they were all read by their respective 'rectors.' There were delegates in force from all parts of the diocese, but not a woman spoke a word. Finally, after a good deal of discussion by the brethren, a daring pleader for innovation (in the person of the rector of South Bend) arose, and told of a most inspiring convention he had attended, presided over and wholly conducted by women; and he eulogized its methods in the highest degree, finally suggesting that all that was needed in this case was to let the women take care of their own meeting, the bishop calling one of them to the chair. Instantly another one of the clergy sprang to his feet with the remark that his brother had done a strange thing, and that it was surely far from treating the reverend bishop with respect to ask him to vacate the chair, and pleading that the body 'move carefully.' But the dear old bishop followed with a glowing tribute to the growing power of women in all good works, and urged that the church conserve this power more and more. A motion was passed that the ladies take charge of the meeting, and the gentlemen retired in a body, so as to remove all embarrassments; thereupon Mrs. Julia E. Work, one of 'our own' W. C. T. U. workers, was called to the chair, and Miss Alice Vining, W. C. T. U. state secretary, though a member of the kindly Friends, and not an Episcopalian, acted as secretary. A good meeting was the result, and they planned wisely and well for the year's work, as the blessed women in the churches are doing all over the land."

☐The effort to secure National Prohibition is not intended to remove the police power now lodged in state governments, but is aimed at the co-operation of the national with state government instead of, as is now the case, a systematic protection of, and partnership with the traffic, in the very states which have outlawed it. As says Senator Blair:

"The constitution now interferes with the internal police of every state which may desire to banish liquor from its borders for the public good, by protecting every other state which sees fit to encourage the traffic in the production and transportation of this substance as a commodity of legitimate commerce, and compels each state to allow its importation in bulk from foreign countries and other states; and when once within the territorial limits of a state you can no more prevent its distribution through the dram shop than you can arrest the progress of the storm by a geographical line. The police powers of the states are thus really nullified or abridged in a most important, nay a matter of vital concern.

KING ALCOHOL.—A RECITATION.

MRS. M. A. SUTFIN.

Oh, this wicked old king
Is a hateful old thing,
And he's ruling our beautiful land!
His subjects are slaves,
He lowers and depraves,
Ah! he sins with a very high hand.

Oh! their bonds are so strong,
Like a chain or a thong,
And all too late they will learn
That a greedy old thing
Is this wicked old king,
And he wants every penny they earn.

In his dotage is he,
You all will agree,
For he staggers and reels as he goes;
And his vile, bloated face,
Has no feature of grace,
And he wears a red patch on his nose.

But the women today
Are working away
At a grave, for this monster of sin.
And some day, I'm sure,
With intention most pure,
They'll manage to tumble him in.

TWO ROOMS.

BY SYDNEY DAYRE.

"Such a pretty, pretty room!"

Little Miss Jessie walked in and out, admiring everything in it and thinking herself the most fortunate little girl in the world. And surely, if a cunningly fitted up room could make her so, she was so.

Blue, blue everywhere—just the shade of blue that matched her bright eyes and contrasted with her flowing curls, though, to do her justice, Jessie never thought of that, for she was not a vain child. She liked the dainty tinting on the walls and the knots of satin ribbon which held up the pictures, just as she liked everything else which was tasty and sweet, and she took delight in the mirror, not because it reflected her little self, but because it was so gracefully draped by soft gauze held up by a chubby little hand and arm. She used to fancy that the owner of the hand and arm was hiding behind the mirror, and might at any moment peep out at her with a merry smile, or drop down upon her the handful of gauze.

The little lassie sat down in a fancy chair and studied the bouquets on the blue carpet, then the delicate tracery of ferns and forget-me-nots on the basin and pitcher.

"Yes, everything about it is pretty, but—if I only had that picture to hang in it!"

Poor Jessie was already beginning to find out that few people in this world are ever satisfied. It was a picture of Christ blessing little children which she had seen in a store. She had been charmed by the expression of loving gentleness which the artist had thrown into the face of the Master and with the tender child faces which looked up to Him.

"I do believe it would help me to be a good girl every single day of my life," she said, shaking her head very gravely at the remembrance of the sweet thoughts which always came into her little heart at sight of the picture.

But mamma, when told of her great desire for it, felt that there ought to be a limit to indulgence even in the case of this her one little daughter.

"You have a beautiful room without it, dear, I have spent as much money on it as I think I ought to, and I fancy it will do you just as much good to try how good you can be without it."

Jessie thought this a much less pleasant way, but wisely made up her little mind to give up thinking about it. But just as she was beginning to find that she could take in the spirit of the beautiful faces very well by going round to take a peep at them on her way from school, her grandfather, who never could be brought to believe it a possible thing for Jessie to be too much indulged, one day pressed into her hand a roll of bills, whispering:

"Go and buy the picture, pet."

"Five, five dollars!" exclaimed Jessie, hugging him in great delight.

Mamma looked doubtful, but agreed that as grandpa said so it must be so. And Jessie put on her hat and placed her little purse in the very bottom of her pocket as she walked down the street to buy the picture.

"Pretty! pretty!" She heard a little voice just above her head and stopped to look up.

What a poor, pitiful little face it was she saw looking down upon her from an upper window!

"Did you speak to me?" she asked.

"Oh —" said the child, bashfully, "I was only lookin' at them pretty daisies on your hat."

"Are you sick?" asked Jessie.

"No, but I'm lame; I can't walk."

"Dear me! I'm coming up to see you. And without stopping to wonder whether mamma would think well of it, she ran into the entry up a flight of narrow stairs and into the open door of a room in which she found the little girl.

Such a room! Jessie's thoughts went swiftly back to her own as she looked around it. Bare, ugly and forlorn it was—without a single thing to relieve the dreary air of poverty and neglect. The child was lying on a comfortless looking lounge, drawn as near as possible to the open window, but the wind, which brought to Jessie's room the sweetness of the flowers and the song of the birds, here seemed heavy with the hot breath of the dirty brick-bound streets. She looked around almost in dismay.

"Why—haven't you any—pictures?"

"No."

"Nor any flowers, nor any books—nor any nice things?"

"No."

"Don't any body take care of you?"

"Yes, mother does, but she's gone all day washin'. She leaves my dinner for me and says. 'Be a patient little girl. Kitty,' and then she goes."

"Oh dear!" Jessie sat down with a kind of a desperate little sigh as she looked at the "dinner," a piece of bread which seemed to get drier and drier every moment, with a bit of fat pork beside it.

"Do you stay here all the time?" she asked.

"Yes' I've stayed a great, great while," she said wearily.

"Don't you get tired?"

"Yes, but sometimes I see nice things. The marketmen go by with their flowers and sometimes a bird sings. And it's nice to see you. You've got such nice flowers on your hat and nice ruffles on and such nice little boots!—and oh my!"—as Jessie took out her handkerchief, "such a cunning handkerchief!"

Jessie spread it out that she might laugh at the quaint little Kate Greenaway figures on it, and then delighted her beyond measure by spreading it for a table-cloth under the poor little dinner.

"I'll come and see you again," she said, and went home without once thinking of the picture.

She told her mother all she had seen, and ended with:

"Now, mamma, why does God give me such a nice room and such an ugly one to that poor little girl? Why do some people have so many nice things when other people don't?"

Mamma patted her earnest little face.

"You might almost guess, I think, Jessie. Don't you think the dear Lord must have sent the poor among us that we may have the chance of being kind to them?"

"Oh, mamma, I wish you'd fix up Kitty's room just as you have mine. Couldn't you?"

"No, dear, I have no money to give away just now."

"Nor I," said Jessie, sorrowfully. "I have only this that grandpa gave me for the picture. Of course I couldn't take that, could I? Because I want the picture so badly, you know, mamma. But then, dear me!—that dreadful room of Kitty's!"

Each of these observations came after long pauses of deep thought, and then mamma left Jessie to think it out by herself. An hour later she came and leaned against her mother's shoulder.

"Mamma, would my twenty-five dollars make Kitty's room look like mine?"

"Not exactly, Jessie, but very bright and pretty."

"Well, I want to do it."

And having once decided, Jessie could not let matters rest until her charming plan was carried out. A plot was formed against Kitty. She was told that her room must be cleaned, so one bright morning she was carried into a neighbor's house and the work of transformation began. A paper of Jessie's own selection covered the unsightly old walls, making them look as if roses and lilies and pinks had been piled to the very ceiling. Then a checkered matting went on the floor and a few pieces of light furniture came, a pretty little bedstead with springs taking the place of the old lounge, and Jessie was always allowed to believe that her money had bought it all.

Lastly she brought from her own room two or three tiny pictures, a vase with flowers and some books. And then Jessie playfully blindfolded Kitty's eyes as she was carried home.

"Where am I visitin' now?" she said, looking about her in wonder as the bandage was taken off. "And when am I goin' home?"

"It's your own room, you dear little thing!" And Jessie hardly waited to see the glow in her eyes and the color which rose to the white cheeks as she kissed her and ran away.

"I'm glad—I'm glad—I'm glad!" she whispered to herse'f as she went to her room that evening feeling it full of a sweeter delight than it had ever held before. Something hung on the wall which had not hung there before, and she turned the light to see.

Was it the coveted picture? No, she never had it. Grandpa wanted to get it for her, but mamma would not have the full blessedness of her self denial spoiled. She read in letters of soft coloring, the words:

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."—Standard.

"WAY DOWN IN MAINE."

M. E. B. T.

DEAR CAPTAIN DEBORAH: Do you suppose your young soldiers would care to hear a little of a Band of Hope in the days of Auld Lang Syne, "when I was young?"

I was only six years old when I joined the first Band of Hope organized in our city, one of the first in the state. Our organizer was one whose name is a "household word" with the friends of temperance everywhere. His face—always aglow with goodness, and truth, and love—is one of the portraits in the gallery of memory. Our childish hearts were responsive to his sympathy, and like swarms of bees we would cluster about him.

He was aided by a number of earnest workers, who helped to make our weekly meetings sources of infinite delight, bringing something new and interesting for each occasion, something that would inspire in us true and noble aims.

We were divided in classes of ten or a dozen each, and to each, as "monitor," one of the older members was assigned, who should select a member of the class for recitation, or some other exercise, each week, and should keep a record of the attendance, etc.

How proud were those promoted to this responsible position. Or we younger ones, when in the absence of the monitor we were permitted for the time being to don her insignia. With what dignity we wore the symbol of our office, a wide scarf of blue silk crossing the right shoulder and tied at the left side. This decoration made the wearer a conspicuous figure in those days of simple childish dress, on occasion of our annual picnics, reunions, rallying marches, etc. And we all wore very complacently our pretty badge with its blue rosettes, the badge a strip of white ribbon on which was printed in blue our pledge surmounted by the words, "Member of the —— Band of Hope," and the device an anchor.

And our lovely white silk banner, which bore the same words and symbol in gleaming gold, seemed to shed upon us a radiant light, whether, like the ancient "fiery cloudy pillar," it went before us on our march, or stood in the midst of our assemblage.

A fac simile of the banner, in gilt on fine paper, with the addition of the pledge and a certificate of membership was presented to each one on joining the Band.

Carefully cherished with many other souvenirs of the past is this beautiful momento.

And the words of our triple pledge, repeated in concert at every meeting, are as deeply imprinted on my heart as on the badge I wore above it.

212. NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of 41 letters.

My 5, 6, 26, 11, 12, is the name of the first man, translated.

My 3, 13, 2, 24, 17, is the name of a noted patriarch's wife.

My 4, 9, 14, 33, 31, 23, 12, 2, 18, 41, 37, the noblest martyr.

My 1, 13, 2, 22, is the name of his mother.

My 7, 30, 13, 17, is the name of a man with whom God made a covenant.

My 32, 33, 9, 15, 20, is the title of a ruler of England.

My 40, 41, 31, 13, 3, 41, 8, 6, 13, 19, 18, 36, 20, was what the authoress of this enigma warned President Garfield of before he left his home at Mentor, Ohio, to be inaugurated, by writing him a letter.

My 41, 36, 2, 2, 30, 16, is what the people of the United States will witness more during the impending presidential campaign and administration than they did in the last one of which I now write the people.

My 26, 27, 28, with a V prefixed is what the women will have the the right to do in the near future to save the 29, 26, 25, 3.

My 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, is the name of the state to which I was banished in 1880 to keep from revealing a revelation, (given to me from the source of vision) concerning political and religious interests.

My whole is the name and address of a prophetess of the nineteenth century. MRS. J. M. C. W.

213. PREFIXES AND SUFFIXES.

Take a consonant; suffix a vowel and it means behold; add a consonant and you have a household deity; add another consonant and you have the fat of swine. Now, take the original consonant and prefix a vowel and a consonant and you are sick. Prefix another consonant and you have volition; place the last word before the first and you have a familiar name. I. P. M.

214. WORD SQUARE.

1. Something that flies; 2. A god; 3. A girl's nickname; 4. A girl's name. CHARLIE D.

215. CHARADE.

My first is the name of a useful domestic animal.
My second describes an act often performed by that animal.
My whole is the name of a peculiarly stubborn lock that will not bear banging. H. E. R.

NOW AND THEN.

MRS. S. R. GRAY.

A Conversion—Written February 1866.

O tell me have all the women
So strayed from the good old way,
That now they are fondly longing
To vote on election day?

Have they not heard that corruption
And vices of every kind
Lurk often in voting places
And never are hard to find?

Would they come from homes of splendor
Or of wretchedness and care?
Must they go in crowds these women?
Alone to vote would they dare?

O, but think of these voting places
The unpleasant things within
The manhood debased and ruined
The profanity and sin!

And where are the sick and dying
That woman's hand is not there?
The weary, the aged and poor,
Do they need no more her care?

Woman, dear woman, forget not
Thy mission of love and cheer;
Recall "'mid scenes of confusion"
A woman's holiest sphere.

Later—Written October 11, 1884.

Because I'm eighteen years older
Have seen something more of life
And in the conflict with evil,
Have longed to be in the strife,

Because I'm an earnest woman,
Sustaining a woman's part
In the changing drama of Life
And having a woman's heart,

Because I've seen desolation,
Have heard the sorrowful cry
From hearts that I knew were breaking,
And prayed with a tearful eye;

Because my "sphere" is to comfort
And help every sorrowing one,
And I would be of the number
To whom God shall say, "Well done,"

Because to the Temperance Army
I came long ago—to stay,
And the dear word "Prohibition"
Is on one banner today.

Perhaps—because they'll not let me,
So maybe I'd not, if they would,
But now I think I should hurry
To vote for St. John—if I could.

THE KITCHEN SCHOOL OF PHILOSOPHY.

MISS MARY MCDOWELL.

My servant is a German girl, bright and intelligent, a devoted Roman Catholic; my laundress is a colored woman but a few weeks ago from South Carolina, a "Methodist sister" happily married to a "Methodist brother," both husband and wife earnest temperance advocates and in the past loyal to the Republican party, which they say "set them free." This morning found the German girl and the colored woman earnestly talking and as I caught the words from the "colored sister's" free lips, "Oh, I tell you I wish them colored folks down home knew all about this new party and what it wants to do for them. Wouldn't they work and vote for it!" I could not stay out any longer, so I "jined the meetin'." Here was our school of philosophy—German, African, and Anglo Saxon joined in heart touching the curse of intemperance and the true freedom for all people.

The German girl in answer to my question, said: "Yes indeed, Miss Mary, my mother and every German woman would vote the saloons away if they had a chance. My mother has wept so often because of the beer that she hates it, and my grandmother left her old home in Germany to get my grandfather away from his companions and to save her children and husband from being beer drunkards."

"Yes ma'am," said colored Jane, her mild eyes growing as fiery as they could with a pent up zeal, "Just give the colored women a chance and they will vote whisky out—I tell you they will, sure 'nough."

Then in her simple wisdom she said, "Why, you can't get a white person down south to vote the Republican ticket, nor a colored person to vote the Democratic ticket, but they would join to get rid of whisky, and a new party with a new name would bring them together. My people are tired of being cheated by one party and bulldozed by another and they can't vote for the Republicans and they won't vote for the Democrats, but they want to vote for something, and a new party with a new name would join them, any way where I come from it would, in South Carolina."

The German sister showed that she wanted a turn now. All the while they rubbed away on the washboards, and at times getting so in earnest that I trembled for my clothes.

"A few miles from here is a German village, full of saloons, and the mothers and wives hate them because they are ruining their sons. They know it is too late to save the old men, but they must save the boys. If only some good German woman could go there and speak to them of this woman's temperance work, I believe they would be glad and would listen and help her."

Right at this interesting point I had to leave, but the other members of the K. S. P. are still talking and rubbing, unconscious of how much their simple words mean and what signs of the times I saw in their spirit and free speech. As I went about my work, I kept saying there is truth in all this—it is in the air, women are catching the "home protective" impulse almost unconsciously.

What a sisterhood that will be, when German and Swede, Irish and negro, English and French, join hands and hearts and prayers to vote this home curse from our midst.

Can't you hear the hallelujah chorus sung in harmony by all tongues, over the home victory? I can. I felt that I must tell this. It was too good to keep.

APPLE BUTTER MINUS CIDER.

I send you a receipt for apple butter made without cider. I noticed in one of the papers that a Kansas friend desired said receipt. One bushel of apples, 2 gallons of water, ½ gallon of vinegar, or enough to make the water quite acid, ½ gallon molasses. Cinnamon. allspice, and cloves to the taste. Put about three quarts of the vinegar and water in your boiler, put all your apples in, and let them cook until nearly soft, and then by degrees add the rest of the vinegar and water. When nearly done, put in the molasses, sugar can be used instead, if desired, then add the spices. This apple butter will keep at least a year. It is the way my mother made it thirty-five years ago. EXCEPTING one drug, there is nothing which medical men are so particular about as the nature and quality of the drugs they prescribe. They are exact to a grain in their prescriptions, and so careful are they that they frequently recommend their patients to get their prescriptions made at some particular establishment, so as to obtain the purest drugs. But in reference to one drug they display a culpable recklessness in the way in which they frequently prescribe it to their patients. They do not seem to care what course of life the latter have led, and even though they may have been greatly addicted to intemperance, our medical men only sometimes take that into account. Accordingly they prescribe the powerful drug alcohol; and instead of doing this in a form in which it could be obtained at the apothecary's shop, they advise their patients, men, women, and children, sober and intemperate alike, to take it in the shape of wine, beer or spirits, to be procured at any grocer's, wine merchant's, public-house, or beer shop they may choose, and too often can we hear the young man or woman say with an air of authority at a public bar counter, "I am taking this because the doctor ordered it." Varying as these drinks do, as to strength and purity, at each description of shop where they are sold, such conduct on the part of medical practitioners does seem very like quackery, and a disgrace to the noble profession. If alcohol be required as a medicine, but which, after the experience of the Temperance Hospital in London, is very questionable, still, if our allopathic and homœopathic practitioners think it necessary in certain cases, let them be consistent, and show the same care in its prescription as they do in respect to other drugs.—Dublin Coffee Palace Journal.

I HAVE been greatly interested in a story bearing the peculiar title of "Barebacks." A few pages explain the title. Some children are reading Bunyan's Pilgrim Progress with great enthusiasm. They come to where Christian passes into the Valley of Humiliation and is about to meet Appollyon: "Then did Christian begin to be afraid and cast about in his mind whether to go back or to stand his ground, but he considered that he had no armor for his back." One boy thought perhaps he had lost some of it off; the other said that could not be. They appealed to their mother, who directed them to look up the words armor and armory with illustrations, but she added, "I think you will find boys, the Lord's soldiers are never armed for a retreat. Retreat in battle when the battle is right means disgrace, God's fighters are all barebacks so far as armor goes. He makes them proof against the foe when they stand their ground or march forward facing danger." So in this great warfare organized by this great army of Christian women in our unions all over the land, may we be armed for conflict, not for retreat.

THE man who saw the whole world drowned,
No sooner safe on the shore was found,
Than, lo! himself was drowned in wine:
Ah, Lord, whereto Thy discipline?
Man bales Thy judgments out of mind,
And, to Thy warnings madly blind,
Under Thy rosy arch of light,
Makes his own deluge in despite.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Nov. 16.] Fourth Quarter, No. 7. [1884.

TOPIC: SOLOMON'S SIN.

LESSON TEXT: 1 Kings 11, 4-13.

GOLDEN TEXT: Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.

TIME: B. C. 995.

PLACE: Jerusalem and roundabout.

1. "A prudent wife" said Solomon in the days of his wisdom and his dependence on God, "is from the Lord." Again he says "Live joyfully with the wife of thy youth." It was wives however that turned his heart after other gods. God's plan was no more polygamy in the beginning than it is today. It was expressly forbidden to a king to have many wives. Deut. 17: 17. Solomon's many wives were doubtless "strange women" in more senses than one. They were aliens and foreigners, worshipping the gods of Paganism. They were from the very tribes with which David his father had warred.

In disobeying God's law he laid the foundation for the disruption of his kingdom—which actually occurred in the next generation.

2. The sin of a ruler has mighty consequences. God lays express commands upon men in authority, and holds them to heavy responsibilities. His word is full of instances of punishment proportioned to the office and work of the offender.

3. Solomon deceived himself in his sin just as hundreds of men do today. He tells us in Ecclesiastes that he pursuaded himself that it was not the pleasures of sin that he sought, but to know what was good for the sons of men. Many a young man enters the way of sin from curiosity, and thinks it impossible to retrace his steps to virtue; many older men are drawn into questionable schemes and plans by the desire to know the ways of worldings, though not intending to give themselves to them.

4. One sin leads to another. His heart given to "strange women," Solomon readily yields to their idolatrous forms of worship. He even provides places of worship for them. The Lord his God is forgotten, and the covenant which was to be unbroken if he went not "after other gods." The sin of sins was forgetting God. Others follow as naturally as the flower turns to the sun. The reason why God insists upon loyalty to Himself is that only so, can we be kept from yielding to the ruinous demands of our would-be masters.

5. Another instance of God's covenant with parents for their children's good, is His word to Solomon that for David his fathers' sake, he would not take away the kingdom during his life. A very tender God is ours, whose mercy is from one generation to another.

THE MEANS AND THE END.

Nobody for a moment believes that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized for the sake of itself. No one would be so unwise as to suggest that its raison d'etre is simply the spiritual and intellectual development of its members, though experience proves that development to be a striking incident of its existence. No one would intimate that the end and aim of this society is to build up a great organization which like a well-manned, skillfully sailed ship shall clear all rocks, avoid all shallows, and only mark out to other craft the safe highway of the seas.

Nobody does or would say any of these things in so many words, or even in deliberate thought, yet many of us forget at critical times, that as an organization we are simply and only, a means to an end. It is not strange that we forget. Greater systems than ours are often wrecked on just such reefs of conceit. Churches forget that they are but the instruments of soul-saving and build up ecclesiasticisms that God is compelled to rebuke. Governments forget and become tyrannies, at which the voice of God thunders through the noisy revolutions of the people. But with all the lessons of history and of Providence so clearly written out before us, with the little lapse of time since the almost supernatural birth of the society, there seems every reason to remember that "we are set" not so much for an "example" as an agency; not so much a product as a process.

Let us turn back to our creed and see for what cause we are come into the world:

"This society is the lineal descendant of the Crusade of 1873–4, and is a union of Christian women of all churches, for the purpose of educating the young; forming a better public sentiment; reforming the drinking classes; transforming by the power of divine grace, those who are enslaved by alcohol; and removing the dram shop from our streets by law."

We were no more instructed as to the precise manner in which we were to be used for this purpose than we were prepared by precise arrangement for the manner of the Crusade. Our growth has been a succession of seeming experiments in which, however, always a faithful few have seen clearly the beckoning of the Divine Hand.

About midway in our history, with all the vivid impression of a heavenly vision, the word came to the leaders of our rapidly increasing, on-marching column,—"Set over against the appetite of the dram-drinker, and the avarice of the dram-seller, the undying mother love of the home."

This thought germinated in good and honest soil, and brought forth the truth, which was speedily incorporated in our system of effort, viz., the demand for woman's enfranchisement, in the interest of the home. When this demand was formulated by the society, there was a cry from the east and west and north and south, "It will hurt and perhaps destroy the Woman's Christian Tempeance Union." Loyal hearts were grieved, and brave ones were saddened. On-looking, ecclesiastical friends mourned what seemed the undue haste to identify a Christian body with a measure which had never before taken on a distinctly Christian type, though eminently an outgrowth of Christ's gospel. Indifferent workers passed their little criticisms, and spiteful enemies rejoiced at what they thought the beginning of the end.

But the W. C. T. U. sped on with a divine momentum, too busy to heed, too conscious of high behest to feel the shafts of enemies, or the friendly wounds of the faithless. Today the darts are all sheathed, the criticisms hushed, and the opposition is won over.

Today, however, a new menace is uttered. Strangely, and yet not strangely it is spoken by lips that have blessed us. Its deepest growl, its angriest tone come from the ranks wherein march many whose hands have upheld us, and who are our own best beloved. This is indeed hard to bear and to overcome.

The days and years of prayer for a political organization which should either engraft upon its stock, or make the central idea of its purpose, the culminating thought of our own creed, have brought us noble answer. Not in the way we hoped, or expected, but none the less plainly indicated.

Has the W. C. T. U. waked spirits that it desires to quell? Now that the tender nursling Prohibition, strides out into the arena of politics, a very St. Sebastian amid the flying arrows, shall its mother hide her face or go over into the camp of the enemy? Suppose going to its rescue and its support shall bring us into the range of these very arrows. Suppose some of our best friends are alienated. Suppose money is withheld and doors now open are shut against us. Suppose we lose some of that prestige and power which the years and their patient efforts blessed by God, have won for us. Do we exist for friends' sake, for money's sake? God can open doors now unseen, upon broad highways, where now we walk in foot paths. God can raise up friends for us now, just as well as in the past. God can help us to conquer prejudice now, just as easily as He has helped us smooth the rough places of opposition, all through the last decade. So we reasoned within ourselves, at St. Louis, with a bright over-looking of the near infelicities. But as they were forced nearer and nearer, we said,

"For his cause came I into the world," and if it bring contumely, scorn and seeming defeat, the disciple is not above his master, and the path He trod, our feet may press with joy.

The W. C. T. U. is not the end, but the means, and whenever we exalt it, or any of its departments above the object for which it was formed, there may well be a suspicion of wood, hay and stubble at our foundations, and our work is in danger of being burned. Happily such considerations prevailed, and the menacing danger was averted. The society, recognizing God's answer to myriad prayers, said "As we now know which national party gives us the desired embodiment of prohibition principles, we will continue to lend our influence to that political party which declares in its platform for National Prohibition and Home Protection.

Then, remembering the spirit of our first feeble beginning, the dangers and difficulties which confronted us then, we reiterated the language of the convention at Cleveland in 1874; "We will endeavor to meet argument with argument—misjudgment with patience, denunciation with kindness, and all our difficulties and dangers with prayer." Verily, God hath led us; "He will be our guide even unto death."

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLICATION ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of stockholders of the Woman Temperance Publication association was washeld at St. Louis. Oct. 23, 1884. This was the largest meeting of the stockholders ever held, 400 shares of stock being represented either in person or by proxy. Much time was profitably spent in informal discussion of practical points, which made stockholders acquainted with the workings of the company, and the exact status of its affairs.

The following resolution, moved by Mrs. Hoffman, of Missouri, supported by Mrs. Benjamin, of Michigan, was adopted:

Resolved, That hereafter no stock shall be voted until the full amount of twenty-five dollars a share shall be paid thereon; the treasurer is instructed to give receipts for partial payments on shares, these receipts being exchanged for certificates of stock, when the full amount due for said stock is paid.

Election of directors for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

Mrs. T. B. Carse, Chicago; Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Elmhurst; Miss Frances E. Willard; Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ohio; Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Michigan; Mary Allen West, Illinois; Mrs. Mary B. Willard; Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Missouri; Miss E. S. Toby, Massachusetts; Mrs. S. F. Chapin, South Carolina; Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Illinois.

Mrs. Hagans, as treasurer of stock fund, reported receipts for the year, including balance, $2,266.22; expenditure, $1,943 30; cash on hand, $322.92.

It was unanimously voted to increase the capital stock of the association from twenty-five thousand dollars to fifty thousand dollars.

MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

The newly elected board of directors met the evening following and re-elected the officers of the preceding year: Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, president; Mary Allen West, secretary; Mrs. L. A. Hagans, treasurer. Mrs. Mary B. Willard was re-elected editor, and Charles E. S. Fielden business manager for ensuing year. His report total receipts for the year from Amount paid on old debts during the year, $2122.78. We still owe $2875, which is much more than offset by value of printing material, including electrotype plates and outstanding accounts.

That our association is taking respectable rank as a publishing house is shown by the fact that the printing done by it for one state W. C. T. U. alone, during the year, that of Illinois, amounted to 2,052,000 pages, for which it paid us $1112.31. When the National W. C. T. U. and other state unions patronize us in the same proportion, our future will be assured.

Our enlarged business requires enlarged facilities for doing it. The business committee were therefore empowered to hire an additional room for the publishing department and to purchase another press for job work.

MARY ALLEN WEST, Sec.

Now is the time to arrange wholesome entertainment for the winter evenings. It used to be the custom to lay in a stock of cider and nuts at this season, but cider has fallen under the ban in temperance households and mothers are querying as to the best amusements for their young people. The W. C. T. U. which has been described as "One hundred mothers for one boy"—is on the alert and in many places is planning a series of entertainments, full of attractive instruction for the boys and girls. In one town, last winter, through W. C. T. U. efforts, two courses of lectures were arranged—one for young men and boys, and another for young women and girls. For the one, such topics as these were chosen:

"Little savings of time and money make men successful."
"True honor and courage."
"The duty of a good citizen."
"Personal purity."
"Worship of God, Religion."
"Courtship, Marriage, Fatherhood."
"Fun."
"The dignity of labor."

The young women listened to the treatment of such as these:

"Adornment of home, and the dignity of house (or home) keeping."
"Motherhood."
"Tight garments; corsets, shoes, gloves, sleeves, etc."
"Love, Courtship, Marriage."
"Beauty; physical, mental."
"Fun."
"The relation of food to the drink habit."

After each lecture, the young people discussed the subject which had been handled by some honored citizen, gentleman or lady, as might best suit the case. The example is a wise one.

THE general officers of the N. W. C. T. U. held a final meeting in St. Louis on the 29th of last month and authorized Miss Helen L. Hood' of Chicago, to begin investigation concerning the best rates for a W. C. T. U. excursion to the Yellowstone Park during the summer of 1885. Miss Hood's energy and adaptation to railway "combinations" is sufficiently known to make everybody sure of a delightful trip.

The meeting resolved itself into a prayer meeting in accordance with the appointment of the executive committee of the National Prohibition party, that God's aid may be given to measures which will result in the speedy putting away of the liquor traffic.

Mrs. E. G. Greene, of Vermont, the new superintendent of the new department of kindergarten temperance work has gone home to prepare plans for the newly undertaken service. She greatly desires that each state should appoint its brightest, most energetic and capable woman as superintendent in this department, and that she ascertain the number of kindergartens in state, and number of public schools with kindergarten department.

Another Y. W. C. T. U. loss, or gain,—which? Miss Mamie Wells, president of the South Perinton, Y. W. C. T. U., New York, has "doubled her joys and halved her sorrows." She will be worth just so much more to her new home.

Mrs. Mary E. C. Wyeth is with us and of us, both. She has been the inspiration of the social temperance union of Riverside, Florsda, which is now engaged in a series of "Evenings with the Poets."

I should think it would be a good exercise for these litesary temperance societies to take up the poets and authors who have suffered through drink, and trace if they can, the influence of drink upon their writings. There are Burns, Lamb and Poe, for instance, and Coleridge with his terrible passion for opium. De Quincy, too—but let these bright young folks figure it out for themselves.

* * *

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens delighted large audiencess at Laport, Ind., last week, and aided the W. C. T. U. vastly in the observance of the Day of prayer. She would have been in demand in many other places but for "piping politics" which has engaged everybody for the last few weeks and days. Mrs. Stevens left the east for her California home this week.

Col. Woodford who made such a "happy hit" in his introduction to the St. Louis convention is again in the temperance field, all the more vigorous for his service in the hrrvest field of his extensive Iowa farm. He is a powerful and logical advocate of what he knows to be true, and deals his blows at the liquor traffic with the skill of one who knows the enemy's weak points. Besides this, he is one of the tenderest of brothers to the tempted, and has learned the winding way to hearts long closed to sweet and holy influences. He believes in man—the human unit, and sees the angel in him when others pass by on the other side.

Miss Anna Gordon has been quite ill with malarial fever, since the National convention. She is improving now however.

In consequence of Miss Gordon's illness, Miss Willard was obliged to give up the round of southern conventions to which she was promised. She will probably go south later in the season.

* * *

The North Side (Chicago), W. C. T. U., one of the "widest awake" to be found anywhere send out word to their friends and well wishers that there will be a literary entertainment and sociable, Tuesday evening, Nov. 11, at their hall, 721 Larrabee street. An interesting and attractive program has been arranged, including recitals from Prof. Lyman, assisted by Mrs. Annie Sage McCall and others, solo singing by Mrs. Richards, daughter of Francis Murphy. Tickets including refreshments, 25cts.

IOWA.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The tenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. met in Oskaloosa, Oct. 7, 8, 9 and 10. Nearly two hundred delegates were in attendance, and full reports of the work were promptly and faithfully given. The past has been an eventful year in Iowa prohibition circles. The new law, which went into effect July 4th, has proven very effective in all the interior portions of the state. Some of the large river districts, notably those under the jurisdiction of Judge Hayes, are openly defying the law: but taking authentic facts as reported the entire situation is very encouraging. Miss Willard (in no state is she more beloved than in Iowa) has reported us so fully and kindly in the last issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, that I will add a only selection from one of the local newspapers of Oskaloosa, in its report of the convention. It was a meeting of great interest to our people, because it was a woman's convention, because it was a temperance convention, and because it was made up of Iowa's noblest characters. Not a mean motive underlies this movement. "For God and Home and Native Land," is their motto. "A school house on every hill-top and no saloon in the valley," is the burden of their prayer. To lift men and women up, to make life nobler, sweeter and richer, is their mission. The order is well organized. Its proceedings were systematic, harmonious and instructive. Their zeal, though ardent, did not outweigh their knowledge. Coming as they did from Iowa's best homes, they were commissioned to speak in a good cause, and to sound a note of warning or encouragement or censure, and to direct the work of the temperance hosts of Iowa against the foe.

Mrs. Aldrich, president, gave an address Tuesday afternoon, that was suggestive as to the work of the organization. She reviewed the work from the origin of the W. C. T. U., pointed out obstacles in the way encountered, gave a vivid picture of Iowa redeemed under law, spoke her mind plainly about the decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa on the amendment, expressed great hope in the usefulness and continued prosperity of the Benedict Home for fallen women, and indeed laid out the work of the future as only a master mind can do. She urges scientific instruction in our schools upon the evil of alcohol upon the human system, asks for at least quarterly Sunday school lessons on the same, encourages railway corporations, mining companies, and all corporations where many lives are in common danger from negligence, or careless, reckless actions, to refuse to use men who become intoxicated, and enters strong protest against impure literature. Against the growing evil of tobacco chewing and smoking, she sounded a note of warning, and, indeed, left nothing unsaid that seemed necessary to make it a thorough treatment of the situation.

Mrs. Foster addressed a very fine audience at the opera house Wednesday evening. She was master of the situation. She never faltered. She unwound a chain of logic in the history of events in Iowa during the last decade, and showed the present struggle to be foremost of all issues, highest of all achievements, most sacred of all duties, grandest of all results in civilization's march.

A brilliant portrayal of the scenes enacted at Des Moines last winter, and in Iowa during the amendment campaign, brought afresh to her hearers those memorable days. The work of the women in the lobby was not excused but extolled, and the men in the senate and house of the 20th general assembly who stood by their colors in spite of bribes and threats, who voted "aye" on prohibition, were classed among the heroes of our time. No greater action ever marked legislators than this. "This is Iowa's golden age."

Referring to the 27th of June, Mrs. F. exclaimed: "Talk of your torch light processions! That 30,000 majority was a torch light procession in which the light from beaming eyes illuminated loyal souls!"

The question today is: Shall the law be enforced? If it is not, if riot shall run unrestrained, then shall the lawless rule. The German vote, nor our love for party, nor the Chinese question, nor the tariff, nor Mormonism, nor heights nor depths shall separate us from this issue. "Right is right since God is God, and right the day must win." I shall live to see it enforced in Iowa, and in all this land.

In the proceedings of this convention there has been nothing dull nor tame; no low tide, no common place matter; nothing that was unprofitable nor unpleasant. But like all gatherings it had its high tide, its climax, its "supreme moment." Such was the gathering at the opera house on Thursday night, where had assembled one of the finest audiences ever convened in this city, The room was full everywhere. From the stage a sea of faces met the eye of the observer, and it was not an angry sea; no tumult arose nor muttering storm in the distance was heard, but over all sweet silence fell and whispered: "Peace, be still."

President Aldrich gave a most happy introduction to the speaker of the evening, Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the W. C. T. U., the lady who has done so much for this cause, who has been heard from the platform and through the press all over our country, now stood ready "to speak for herself." No adequate outline can be given by us. The address was pronounced excellent by all. Her language was faultless, her ideas clear and beautifully woven into bright fabric, her manner easy and graceful, her voice agreeable and distinct. She drew a vivid picture of woman's progress in the past and of her possibilities at the present.

The W. C. T. U. gave her a field for taking the culture of the home into the world and doing all men good. Culture will not mar women. A good watch will tick in any case, but the immortal thought and spirit of man can only vibrate and operate through cultured brain and disciplined heart. The coarse, untrained being can not mould refined character in others, nor accomplish that whereunto we are called. A sad, sad sight is the grave of a friend, but the most pitiful thing on earth is a living grave—a man robbed of his god-like powers, yet seeming to be.

Three thoughts prominent in the lecture were: (1) No sectarianism in religion; (2) no sex in citizenship; (3) no sectionalism in politics. The work of the W. C. T. U. is fast killing out sectarianism among our denominations. It is bringing clearly to view the great truth that the help of woman is needed at the ballot box, and is breaking down the barriers that allow a north and south, and Mason and Dixon's line is fast fading from sight.

The speaker favored a national party—the St. John movement—presented her reasons, and with this argument closed her very able lecture.

Thus closed one of the happiest evenings ever witnessed by our people.

OFFICERS FOR 1885.

President, Mary J. Aldrich; recording secretary, Mrs. L. A. Berry; corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. V. Maxfield; treasurer, Mrs. M. G. Davenport.

Superintendents.—Evangelistic, Mrs. A. M. Palmer; legislative, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster; scientific temperance, Mrs. C. A. Dunham; juvenile work, Mrs. McBride; Sabbath school, Mrs. F. W. Burrell; flower mission, jail and prison work, Mrs. L. D. Carhart; hygiene and heredity, Dr. Jennie McCowan; temperance literature, Mrs. N. M. Smith: capital and labor, Mrs. S. R. Woods; franchise, Mrs. A. McKinney; state and county fairs, Mrs. D. S. Dixon.

One of the most touching incidents of the convention was the presentation of the beautiful Japanese patchwork silk quilt to Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster. It was a work of love, made by the ladies of Muscatine for Mrs. Foster, a gift of home women to a womanly woman, as a recognition of her noble life and unselfish labor for the home. The quilt had been made under the supervision of Mrs. C. S. Jackson, the superintendent of state and county fair work. It had taken premiums at the state and Muscatine county fairs, the money going to the W. C. T. U. Quite a sum of money was also donated on the quilt by persons who wished to assist in giving it to Mrs. Foster, the money to go the W. C. T. U., their names to be in the list of contributors. Mrs. Jackson presented it; her remarks were very beautiful, and Mrs. Foster was greatly touched, saying in her response that the love and confidence of the Iowa women were more precious to her than anything else. This quilt will be on exhibition in the Iowa department of woman's work, at the world's fair, New Orleans.

ANNA LEE MAHIN.

RHODE ISLAND.

PROVIDENCE.—Before entering upon our winter's work, we avail ourself of the cordial invitation of Miss Gordon to pay our respects to THE UNION SIGNAL. We have, in times past, received so much help from it that we very gladly send an account of our experience for its pages.

We have been organized now more than two years, during this time we have learned at least where lie some of the shallows of temperance work. We have found ourself able to accomplish a few things and quite liable to fail in others.

Our membership has about doubled since we began. Starting out with perhaps seventy members we have now a hundred and fifty young ladies, and half as many associate members, gentlemen being admitted on signing our pledge and paying an annual fee of fifty cents.

At first our main effort was to bring in the young people of our city, so we made our regular fortnightly meeting as bright as possible. We had debates on interesting temperance topics and the members of the society took such an active part in the business that our visitors told us it was as delightful as the program.

The Y. M. C. A. kindly gives us the use of its hall which saves us great expense and is an attractive place for our social gatherings. These latter meetings have always proved a great help to us in getting members. We send out dainty little cards of invitation and gather in four or five hundred young ladies and gentlemen. We have been fortunate in securing the very first talent of the city for our musical and literary program. We have had the pleasure of listening to President Robinson of Brown University, and several other gentlemen and ladies of reputation. We have not had more than three socials during the season, and try to have something of real value said at each one, so that the guests shall have a definite idea of the aim of our society. The nearest approach to a purely social gathering which we have ever indulged in, was a lawn party held at the close of our last season. One of our associate members offered us his house and grounds beautifully illuminated and enlivened by music. On this occasion the members provided cake, and the associate members furnished ice cream. We had a splendid time and became better acquainted with each other. I said this was the only time we had a social time without a formal program, but I ought not to forget the delightful occasion when Miss Pearce, our former president, gave a "Kettledrum" to the entire membership, not even omitting the school. More than one of us during our call whispered to our next neighbor, "Isn't this an interesting company? Aren't you glad you're a member?"

That was at the time when our "Tea room" was being discussed. For six months the idea of meeting a certain great need in our city haunted us "C. T. U." girls, and finally after discussing and weighing and waiting in hope that the Young Woman's Christian Association or the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would undertake the work, we decided to take it up n ourselves. Though the "Tea room" is not exactly in the line of temperance reform, it seems fitting to us that our society, composed largely as it is of young ladies in a measure self-supporting, should sympathize and help that large class of girls who find it so difficult to make "both ends meet" and get withal "a good time out of life. We believe, too, that all elevating influences tend to general temperance in the community. The main purpose of our "Young Woman's Tea Room" is to furnish a pleasant place for young women during their leisure hours whether at noon or evening. To this end the most energetic of our members came forward and said, "We'll try. If we can get a thousand dollars pledged by Christmas, the room will be a fact." I need not say we succeeded.

Dear UNION SIGNAL, if you find yourself on Broad street in Providence, some day, don't fail to look along the doorways for a blue and white wooden cup and saucer. If it is at noon, you will be well paid for ascending one flight of broad stairs and entering the door marked, "Young Woman's Tea Room." You will find yourself in a large sunny room where some twenty or thirty young women are eating lunch or reading. If you are tired, you shall lie down on the lounge, if travel stained, stop first at the bath room and fix up, or if hungry—well if you are very hungry you would better go out to a store and buy a sandwich or something which will go well with your coffee. When you pass by the matron's desk lay down four cents or a ticket and she will give you a delicious cup of tea, coffee or chocolate, or even a glass of milk, or a glass of ice cream for eight cents, and carrying it to one of the tiny tables, you shall take solid comfort in a low rocker as long as you choose to stay. Our large center table and book shelves will furnish you with the latest and best magazines, and many a book dear to a young woman's heart.

On the little bulletin board are announcements of classes in needlework or perhaps lectures on "How to avoid cold, etc." If your interest is aroused, you can learn all you wish about the room and the girls by talking with the pleasant little woman who is pouring coffee behind the screen. To be sure, a scheme like this will not work itself. It needs the intelligent interest of every member of the society, and as is always the case in large organizations, our union is often tempted to "leave it to the committee." The great point we find is to have a matron who will be sympathetic yet experienced and discreet, original and observing, yet not dictatorial. One in fact, who will inspire the confidence of the girls who visit the room and those who have the responsibility of its maintenance upon them.

The question before us now in regard to it, is how we shall make the room of greater benefit, how we shall bring under its Christian influence the large class of girls who are suspicious of everything done in the name of a "Christian temperance society."

My space has been so largely given to its "Tea Room" that I find the "Careful Builder's Union" almost crowded out. For of course, we have tried to instruct the young, as all Y. W. C. T. U's. do.

Our boys wear a little nickel badge bearing the letters "C. B. U." This emolument is highly valued by our little members, even though "the other fellows," say it means "Cry Baby's Union."

Of our temperance school, perhaps it is just as well that I should write later, for on the very day of my letter our faithful and efficient committee meets to talk it all over and see what can be done to strengthen it and improve upon former methods. Here, as in all branches, it is most necessary for the young ladies to "take hold" personally. Self sacrificing work is what we need constantly. We look for the time when it will no more be said to us, "Oh, put Miss Blank on that committee, she has so much more time than I, and it is so easy for her."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

Wednesday evening (September 24) we gathered in the Congregational church, large, old-fashioned, and beautifuly decorated with autumn leaves and flowers. The choir gave us inspiration by their prohibition songs, and we still hear the echo of the thrilling refrain, "Sleeping on Guard, Sleeping on Guard." We listened to the wonderful words of the first chapter of Joshua, "Be strong and of a good courage; I will not fail thee nor forsake thee," and wondered that we could ever be fearful or cast down; and then our earnest Mrs. Richardson led us even to the "Holy of holies" in prayer. Mrs. J. B. Melendy, of Milford, touched our hearts by her warm words of greeting, and the earnest address of our loved president followed, from which I make a few extracts: "It is of importance that we devise a plan by which 'our new school law' shall receive the attention it demands. Its enforcement in many of the towns of the state will largely depend upon us. Some of our school boards do not yet comprehend its value. Public sentiment does not everywhere sustain it. Let us not grow weary in looking after this department of our work which has been so successfully inaugurated. I think there should be a superintendent in every local union to look after the enforcement of this school law.

"Before another annual convention the state legislature will convene. Our success in the past gives us courage for the future. While we would add many things to the good statutes New Hampshire already has, there are three subjects which I wish to present to your thought as important for us to consider with reference to petition work.

"1st. A law prohibiting the sale of pernicious literature in the state.

"2d. A law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors.

"3d. A law prohibiting the delivery of intoxicating liquors by express companies. Which of these, if any, it may seem best to concentrate our energies upon, I leave for your consideration. There may arise issues more momentous for the time; if so, let us be ready to meet them. It is the privilege of womanhood to spur the manhood of our commonwealth; to be mindful of the moral interests, which are the safeguards of home and country.

"The question of constitutional prohibition is yet to come before the people of New Hampshire. When it comes we must not be one whit behind the loyal women of Kansas, Iowa and Maine, whose efforts were worthy of the cause. The question is constantly being asked by suffering wives and mothers, "Is there no spot in New Hampshire, to which we can go, where cider, beer and rum cannot be obtained?" I know of none, do you, dear sister? We cannot over estimate the importance of this line of work. Now, more than ever, must we labor for constitutional prohibition, since one of the great political parties of our state embodies the following resolution in its platform, this year:

Resolved, That the existing liquor law of New Hampshire, spasmodically enforced, or wholly disregarded, as political exigencies, or personal prejudices may demand, is a disgrace to the state, because it breeds hypocrisy, and corrupt morals; and that we believe that a stringent excise law would be the best practical remedy for the evils of intemperance, while at the same time it would prove a legitimate source of revenue to the state.

"To insure prohibition in New Hampshire, we must place it beyond the power of party. When it becomes a part of the constitution, and only then, will the danger of open dram shops be past, and the enforcement of law be less spasmodic. Let us keep New Hampshire from taking backward steps.

"The political condition to me looks hopeful. Not because of any clear, prophetic vision from the medley of the present, but because the people are beginning to think and act for themselves. The wrath of man sometimes brings praise to God's name. The curse of American slavery was not blotted out without conflict and struggle, and individual conscience. The war now going on so blindly, is waging mightily, and the end is not yet. As in the National W. C. T. U. we may not all look at things from the same political standpoint, yet we have the same hopes and aims by different methods. It is a good omen that differences of opinion among our leaders, do not bring discords. Let us be charitable to those whose opinions may differ from our own, while we are still of one heart, and of one mind in the struggle for 'God and home and native land.'"

From the excellent report of our corresponding secretary, Miss Wendele, I give the following items concerning the work done in our state during the past year:

"Twenty-nine unions have been formed during the year. The total number of unions is sixty-one, with an aggregate membership of over 1,600; $1,400 have been raised for local work. There are twenty-five juvenile societies with a membership of nearly 2,000. Fourteen of the national departments have been duplicated and nearly all the superintendents report encouraging advancement. Gospel temperance meetings have been held by over half of the unions and the days of prayer have been quite generally observed. A large proportion of the churches where there are unions use unfermented wine. Through the influence of two ministers, the Sunday law has been enforced in one city, and one minister shows his zeal for the cause by issuing 2,000 copies of a temperance sheet fortnightly for gratuitous distribution. Much effective work has been done in the Sunday school, temperance talks being given, the pledge circulated, tracts and papers distributed and concerts held. Twenty-five unions report temperance books in Sunday school libraries. The temperance lessons are used more generally and there seems to be an increased interest among officers and teachers. At least 40,000 pages of temperance literature have been distributed in a variety of ways, besides a large quantity of temperance papers and pamphlets. Nearly all the school boards are favorable to the new school law and it is hoped that soon it may be in active operation throughout the state. Five unions have loan libraries.

"There is a growing interest in the jail and almshouse work, flower mission day being an occasion of special interest. Temperance articles are sent to forty newspapers every three weeks, which is an advance over the preceding year. Two unions have reading rooms. One union is about to start a Y. W. C. T. U.; another to form a young woman's department in the juvenile work and in furnishing literary exercises. A fine temperance library has been presented to the state normal school, the funds having been raised by the corresponding secretary."

Thursday morning we hastened to attend a prayer and praise service at 10 o'clock, and wondered whose was the genial, half-familiar face that greeted us from the platform, and were glad Miss Kimball was to lead our service. We sung, "Rejoice and be glad, the Redeemer has come." Then followed the lesson of trust from Jonathan, who, when the Philistines surrounded the people of God, and the men of Israel fled and hid themselves, did not wait to complain of others, or even to tell his father, —not even to dread the sharp rock on the one side, or the sharp rock on the other side, but said to his armor bearer, "Come, let us go into the garrison of the Philistines; it may be the Lord will work for us; for there is no restraint with the Lord, to save by many or by few." We know the victory which the Lord vouchsafed to Jonathan, who trusted Him, and how, when the victory was assured, those who had joined the enemy, and those who hid themselves came forth and joined the ranks of Israel. "May we have grace," remarked Miss Kimball, "not to say to those who join our temperance ranks when success is sure," "You would better have come before." The result of this convention will be permanent and far reaching. LUCY J. HOLMES.

KANSAS.

COUNTY CONVENTION AT MILAN, SEPTEMBER 3, 1884.

After the opening devotional exercises, a very appropriate address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. Armstrong, and was responded to by Mrs. Weeden, of Wellington, in an enthusiastic temperance address.

Miss Campbell, county president, treated the children to a short talk and presented them with temperance cards; she urged the necessity of organizing Bands of Hope over the country.

Mrs. O. A. Davidson read an excellent essay entitled "Influence."

Mrs. Green, of Illinois township, reported a W. C. T. U. organized four weeks ago and now running with a full membership.

Mrs. March, of Dixon township, reported their union and Band of Hope in good working order.

Mrs. Dr. Maggard, of Wellington township, reported having organized with but four members a few years ago, and now claiming ninety-six members.

Milan reported their union progressing slowly, but as having no room for discouragement.

The convention then discussed the question: How can we gain positive evidence against the sale of liquor?

After several had expressed their views on the matter, it was finally decided that each community devise its own way and means to annihilate the traffic.

Miss Lulia Slough, an attorney of Leavenworth, being present reported progress of the work in that place. She stated that although Leavenworth had so many open saloons, they were still fighting against them and could boast of one business block that had no saloon at all. She reported a reading room and library, started by subscription, as flourishing.

Mrs. March read an essay on Juvenile Work, which was full of suggestive and practical instruction for the young.

Then came children's time;—

"They just played," as Mrs. Easter expressed it, "that the old folks were not there—it was all their meeting." With the leadership of Mrs. Easter, Mrs. March and Mrs. Mummy—as right and left hand supporters—old and young, had a real good time. One little girl spoke, with solid determination, "If I were a boy." A bright little fellow showed that "teetotalers are growing up as fast as drunkards die." Many of the speeches offered just as good suggestions to the cause as did those of the grown folks.

At the evening session the discussion of the subject: Power of Individual Influence with reference to Temperance, was opened by Mr. Murray, of Wellington, who cited many and important influences we should and do have on one another in the temperance cause.

Mr. Armstrong said there was no half way business in this temperance cause; every one has an influence for or against.

Mrs. March said that we can do much more to influence others than we think.

Miss Slough spoke of home influence—the influence of a mother over small children.

Mr. Folks told of the influence an old gentleman had over the community. He quit using whisky in the harvest field; this was a number of years ago; but his influence was felt, and today such a custom is hardly thought of.

Mr. Hamilton said the hope of our people lies in our influence over the growing generation.

Mrs. Hamilton spoke of a mother's influence over her children.

Mrs. Carson suggested that the young men's influence is what we want. She also stated that eastern states are looking to Kansas as their sun or leader in this temperance work.

The convention adjourned to meet in three months.

MRS. WEEDEN, Secretary.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

RIVERTON.—A beautiful place along the river, and a total prohibition town, as by its charter no rum can be sold on the tract.

DENNISVILLE.—The young people's union, a temperance society organized a long time ago, is in a prosperous condition and bids fair to greatly improve the habits of our young men.

FRENCHTOWN.—The prohibition boom is moving along in this town and throughout the county, and on November 4 they will cast their ballots for St. John and Daniel. Mullica Hill, Malaga, Newfield, Flanders, Woodburg, Trenton, Chambersburg and Gloucester City are all moving in this same grand army of prohibition.

MONTCLAIR.—We have hit upon one line of temperance work that is not usual and I will try to explain it. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. and the members of the Reform Club solicit, from men who can use tools, plain bulletin boards about 15x18 inches, with a little moulding around them and a space two and a half inches at the top divided from the lower part by a piece of same moulding. These are painted black, with moulding red, and placed in depots, blacksmith shops, carpenter shops, livery stables, stores and anywhere that they can be put and be protected.

Then Mr. Samuel Crump prints bulletins containing some of the startling facts well known to temperance speakers, but not known to many well-disposed temperance people. For instance:

| New York city supports | |
|---|---|
| Liquor stores | 10,075 |
| Butcher " | 2 015 |
| Bakery " | 1 055 |
| Grocery " | 4,127 |
| | 7 197 |
| Liquor stores outnumbering food stores by | 2,878 |
| In one year New Jersey supported | |
| 5,640 saloons, at a cost of | $28 245 000 |
| 1,893 schools, " " | 2,082 250 |
| Saloons cost more than schools | $26.162,750 |

These are posted on the boards and changed from time to time, the bulletins being on white, yellow or pink paper and large enough, 10x15, to attract attention. We believe that the educational effect of this is excellent and propose to continue it. Already seven different bulletins have been printed and posted and others are being made.

Mr. Crump will furnish, without charge, any or all of these to any one in any part of New Jersey who will apply for them.

Will our Reform Clubs consider the propriety of removing from their rooms, the pool and billiard tables, and the smoking rooms? Our boys, whom the white ribbon army are teaching to avoid all dangerous ground, and to take good care of their bodies, which are to be kept clean, for the "indwelling of the Holy Ghost," so that they may become useful and Christian citizens, cannot visit such places with safety. Are smoking, billard and pool rooms, component parts of true reformation? Is the gospel temperance standard to be lowered to meet those "who have not been educated beyond that point," the pool table? Let all temperance workers have a clean record, for we want all New Jersey for God and purity. "Wash ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, cease to do evil." Is. 1:16.

Right gladly do we welcome to our temperance ranks the "Queen" "Tower-light." We should expect just such efficient work from "Puella" of Clintondale, in our neighbor state. Shall our temperance workers travel on the Lord's day? Ex. 31:14-16.

PENNSYLVANIA.

MCKEAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The semi-annual convention of the W. C. T. U., of McKean county, Pa., met at Custer City, October 1 and 2. There were delegates present from nearly every union in the county. After the devotional exercises, which were led by Mrs. E. P. Morris, an address of welcome was given by Mrs. Annie Hitchcock, of Custer; response by Mrs. A. L. Metcalf, of Bradford, followed by an earnest and enthusiastic address by Mrs. H. A. Page. Encouraging reports were given by the superintendents of different departments of work.

Recitation, "Only Sixteen," was impressively rendered by Miss Aggie Beatty.

A very pleasing and instructive paper was read by Mrs. A. L. Metcalf, entitled, "Work that Will Tell."

A short address was given to young ladies, by Narcissa E. White.

At the evening session an address was given by Miss

Narcissa E. White, which was listened to with marked attention, by a large audience.

Friday morning's devotional meeting was led by Mrs. G. S. Stewart, of Bradford. Discussion, "How best to teach temperance in the Sabbath school."

Recitation, "The Present Outlook," by Miss Ada Howe.

An excellent paper on "Total Abstinence," was read by Mrs. E. P. Lillie, of Duke Center.

The afternoon session opened by a Bible reading, conducted by Mrs. M. D. Harris, of Bradford, after which the children of Custer City gave a very pleasing entertainment, consisting of temperance recitations and songs. A memorial service was held for Mrs. J. L. Wilson, of Bradford.

ARKANSAS.

NOTES FROM A TRAVELER.

I am not the far famed "Arkansaw Traveler," but am at present a traveler in "Arkansaw," by the request and arrangement of our dear National W. C. T. U. president, and the president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U. Miss Willard made request that I report progress through THE UNION SIGNAL, and I herewith furnish first installment of notes and observations.

I began work in this state the first of October, at the goodly city of Little Rock. A series of five meetings was held here culminating in a fine success at the grand opera house, on Sunday afternoon of October fifth. During the week a delightful reception was tendered me by the citizens of Little Rock, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson. A large and representative company were present and the occasion was most enjoyable in all respects. Many of the best citizens of Little Rock did all in their power to make my sojourn there delightful and the meetings a success. The W. C. T. U. of this city has an honorable record for zeal, earnestness and good work.

At Benton, Malvern, Arkadelphia and Emmetts I have organized local W. C. T. U's. from which we may expect good records of work.

At Prescott and Magnolia earnest hearted little unions were already doing what they could to advance the interests of temperance and prohibition.

At Prescott, I addressed three meetings on Sunday, October 12, including a meeting for the colored people at 3 p. m. in the court house. We had fine audiences and good attention and response at each of the meetings. Next morning I addressed a meeting of the Prescott W. C. T. U. and in the evening a large meeting at Emmetts, making five addresses delivered in 36 hours. But I proved in the great fatigue I experienced as the result that though the "spirit may be willing, the flesh is weak."

At several places appointments were not well understood, and I found no meeting arranged, but in each case I have arranged to return, and I doubt not fine success will reward my next endeavor.

At Lewisville we had a large and successful meeting the first temperance meeting ever held in the town, and the same fact may also be stated of some other towns I have already visited.

In several places no woman's voice had ever been heard in a public address before. But I gratefully and modestly record the fact that quite a number of those—both men and women, who were deeply prejudiced against a woman speaking in public, before my arrival, frankly acknowledged their conversion, the withdrawal of their opposition and their hearty sympathy with "the innovation" after the meeting was held, and they discovered that after all a woman could "make a speech" and preserve her womanliness.

I have had a kind reception and a respectful hearing in all the places where I have spoken thus far, and expect a continuation of the same.

Informal receptions and temperance tea parties have been the means chosen to extend cordial greetings to me on my arrival, at several of the towns I have so far visited. I might mention a number of names, but Magnolia rather leads the list, as a large number of men and women loyal to the temperance cause, and with a royal welcome for the stranger sister from the north met me with a brass band at their depot. The band discoursed national airs, as the train bearing your correspondent halted at the depot, and continued the same as they escorted the long procession of friends of the new comer and the cause she represents to the hotel, where an informal reception was held, and evidently enjoyed by all.

But my letter grows to unseasonable length. More anon.

The work goes on, and will grow and strengthen I am sure. From God come all the helps. To Him be all the glory. MISS I. C. DEVELLING.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

GREENVILLE.—Our Greenville union has been delightfully refreshed and strengthened by a visit from our loved and honored state president, Mrs. Chapin, who has in four meetings held among us, filled the measure of her duties in this portion of her territory.

By a peculiar and trying disappointment in the failure of railroad connections on her way to the North Carolina state convention, held in Asheville on the 10th inst, she was brought to us by a special Providence, which fact alone has greatly encouraged us. We like to feel that God has special work for us, and gives us a special remembrance of his watch over us. We hastily arranged for a public meeting at the opera house on Friday night, the 10th, and although the night was a stormy one, we had a very good audience, who thoroughly appreciated her courageous and inspiring words which were full of arguments, incidents, illustrations, anecdotes and bits of humor which could not fail to awaken a response in every heart and will.

On Saturday afternoon she addressed the children of our city in the W. C. T. U. reading room, in a manner that drew every one of them into the expression of their desire to become temperance boys and girls and made their parents and friends desire to follow their example and uphold them in their purpose. We had never heard her speak to children before, and we were deeply impressed with her ability to instruct them as surely as she does all others.

On Sunday afternoon she led a meeting at the reading room to organize a mother's meeting which resulted in the promise of thirty ladies to sustain such a meeting regularly in the future. It was a delightful occasion to many present, who had for a long time desired to see some such organization started in Greenville and there is no doubt that this will be the beginning of earnest, consecrated effort in the cause of gospel temperance. Not even our hardest adversaries can be unmoved at the thought of loving, anxious mothers praying together in faith and hope for their children and families. We believe Mrs. Chapin will reap a rich and glorious harvest from this new field of work. Many ladies thanked her with tears for her words and prayers.

On Sunday night, the 12th inst., Mrs. Chapin addressed a large audience in the colored Methodist church and as we listened to her words of instruction and encouragement and warning we thought that of all the work she had done for us this would bring the greatest blessing to our community and individual lives. She is wonderfully gifted in her manner of speaking to her colored friends and wields a powerful influence over them. They appreciate her courage and self-reliance or rather her reliance in God, in telling them the plain truths which make for their peace and prosperity, and their respectful and courteous reception of her wherever she goes, inspires her with new zeal in their behalf. Several of our ladies with their husbands heard her excellent address and rejoiced that we could participate in such blessed work for "God and home and native land."

Mrs. Chapin left us on Monday morning carrying with her the richest blessings God vouchsafes His children here, and the consciousness of duty faithfully, lovingly and cheerfully performed, while we who were left turned to our duties with stronger, higher hopes, thanking God for giving us so brave and true a leader.

MRS. F. A. WALTER, Cor. Sec. State Union.

MAINE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY CONVENTION.

Our convention, held at Eastport, opened with devotional exercises, led by R. B. Clark, of Eastport.

Mrs. H. P. Adams' welcome to the ladies who had come to "our island of the sea," was like herself, full of earnestness. The response was made by letter from Mrs. F. A. Pike, president of the Calias union, and read by Mrs. Black; short speeches followed from ladies of the different unions, and Rev. Mr. Whitcomb, pastor of the Baptist church.

In the afternoon reports on education were given, followed by remarks from Mrs. E. L. McLaughlin, of Boston. Mrs. Hannah Pearce gave a very interesting account of the Band of Hope and Sabbath school work of Eastport.

Reports of the progress of work in Calais, Machias and Eastport were given, also an interesting account of the work in the county.

The importance of subscribing for THE UNION SIGNAL was presented by Mrs. Adams, the paper was endorsed by Mrs. McLaughlin, and its circulation commended to the ladies.

The evening session of the convention was held in the Unitarian church. An interesting address was given by Mrs. L. Rideout, of Calais, and brief addresses by Mr. N. B. Nutt, collector of the port, and Rev. Mr. Jones, of Eastport. These gentlemen were followed by Mrs. McLaughlin, who was listened to with undivided attention. The anthem, "For God, and Home, and Native Land," closed the session.

The exercises of the second day were more largely attended than the first. The morning session opened with a devotional meeting, led by Mrs. W. P. Paine.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

At the annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the maritime provinces, by request of Miss Willard, her address in regard to a world's W. C. T. U. was read, and the following resolution unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the proposition made to the N. W. C. T. U. at Detroit, by Miss Frances E. Willard, in October, 1883, to form an international W. C. T. U. that shall comprise representatives from all the civilized nations of the earth, meets with the hearty approval of the maritime W. C. T. Unions, believing that such a union of forces throughout the world must be productive of the best resuls in removing the curse of intemperance."

In a recent number of THE UNION SIGNAL I observe that the "maritime provinces" are credited with "ten unions." At present we number fifteen, and with God's blessing we hope to add at least five more this year, so that we shall be a strong link in the chain that is to encircle the globe. Our northern blood may course a little slowly to compete with our sisters across the border, but what we lack in stature we make up for in strength and will, or the good old English word pluck expresses it better.

We are much strengthened and stimulated by THE UNION SIGNAL, which is taken by quite a number of the St. John W. C. T. Unions, and I hope by many other unions. We have also a little paper of our own—"The Telephone"—through which we can "speak unto the people" once a month, and we hope, also, to our sisters everywhere. Our bright little editor deserves encouragement. I believe that she is the first woman in Canada who has ever undertaken to print as well as to publish a paper, making it entirely "woman's work." The central office is at Moncton, N. B. Address Mrs. J. T. Cowie, of that place, for all particulars. Our late convention was one of the most successful ever held by the maritime union. We shall watch with interest reports from your great National Union, to be held this month. We women know no "boundary line." We are "one in faith, one in hope, and one in charity"—all are kindred in our cause. We believe in St. John, and watch with you in fullest sympathy the result of your presidential election; ready to rejoice with you or to weep, if you must mourn. Meanwhile, we pray that He who rules the hearts of all men may gladden your hearts if it be for His glory. JULIA C. TRUMBULL, Cor. Sec.

MISSOURI.

TWELFTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The second semi-annual convention of the twelfth district of Missouri W. C. T. U., met at Butler, Bates Co., Oct. 2d and 3d. Twenty-five delegates were present, and profitable and very interesting sessions were held.

The subjects of scientific instruction, juvenile work, temperance literature, young woman's work, health and diet, finance, all received special attention. Reports were given from twelve unions, showing advance in the work in this section. It was decided to hold district conventions annually hereafter, and county conventions semi-annually hereafter. It is believed that by so systematizing the county work greater interest will be gained. Many mothers deeply interested in the glorious work can spare us the time and means for a one day's convention with her county sisters, and thus gain that renewed strength and inspiration which is sure to be the result of any W. C. T. U. convention.

Resolutions were adopted pledging the unions to work for prohibition on election day, also pledging them to extra effort respecting scientific temperance instruction in our schools.

$72 was pledged for district work for the next six months.

The address of welcome was given by Mrs. Naylor, of Butler, and briefly responded to by Mrs. Ingraham, district president, after which Mrs. Clara Hoffman delivered one of her powerful, clear cut addresses upon prohibition.

The second evening we listened to a scientific lecture and chemical analysis of the human system, the food necessary to its sustenance, and of wine, beer, brandy and other stimulants, the whole showing that God in his wisdom produced the various grains and meats according to the various requirements of our nature, but alcohol was man's creation, therefore not a necessity, but a luxury.

Convention adjourned to meet next October, at Pleasant Hill. LUCIA A. GARDNER, Dist. Sec.

ROCHESTER.—Mrs. M. A. Green, county president Andrew Co., Mo., organized a W. C. T. U. at Star Chapel, Empire, Mo., of 19 members, with the following officers: President, Mrs. Johnson; Rec. Sec., Mrs. Storms; Cor. Sec., Mrs. L. B. Daingerfield; Treas., Mrs. S. S. Manley At Flag Springs, Oct. 8, a small union, officers: President, Mrs. N. A. Clark; Recording Secretary, Mrs. R. A. Shephard; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. S. E. Boyles: Treasurer, Mrs. Kate Walker, with Vice-Prasidents from various churches. These unions are in fine localities, intelligent people, and we look for good results. Rochester W. C. T. U. hope to gather in some votes for St. John and Daniel, Brooks and Eshbaugh, Nov. 4, as sheaves from their two years labor in the temperance field. C. V. JONES, Cor. Sec.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A LOCAL W. C. T. U., fifty-one strong, was organized in Clinton, N. J., August 23. A hall has been secured in which a reading room will be opened. A band of hope has also been organized that promises well.

THE Y. W. C. T. U., of Jacksonville, Ill., organized October 1. Collected a large share of its dues within two days thereafter, and sent two delegates to the state convention October 7 to 10.

This union, composed of a charming circle of talented young ladies, including several teachers in the public schools and colleges, is planning earnest work with their Band of Hope, Flower Mission and Social Work.

That they may keep thoroughly posted concerning the happenings in the temperance world, and the latest and most approved methods of work, they have, like sensible girls, subscribed for THE UNION SIGNAL, and thus begin house-keeping in orthodox fashion.

THE liquor element has warned the ladies of the west side W. C. T. U., of Des Moines, Iowa, not to hold any more meetings, and a threat has been made to burn the church, but "none of these things" move them. They expect to have their convention sometime in October.

THE Schoolcraft, Mich., W. C. T. U. has been greatly strengthened by a visit from Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, president of the 5th congressional district. She addressed the union and Band of Hope in the afternoon. In the evening a good audience followed her attentively through a lecture, that must from the powerful and convincing arguments so impressively prerented to her hearers, materially advance the cause of temperance in this locality. 34 new members were secured, 5 of whom were honorary, and 24 subscriptions taken for THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE Vienna Park temperance camp meeting, Aug. 27 and 28, under the auspices of the Indiana W. C. T. U. was so decided a success that a committee was appointed having in view an arrangement for an annual meeting at this point. Mrs. M. L. Wells and Miss Todie Reed assumed the responsibility of this enterprise. The state officers and many of the prominent workers of the state were present and assisted according to their diversity of gifts. Col. Bain, of Kentucky, and Rev. Pinkham, of Iowa, spoke to delighted audiences, followed by Hon. S. S. Dwiggins, nominee for governor on the Prohibition ticket of Indiana,

THE ladies of the Minnesota W. C. T. U. with those of the W. S. A., occupied a large tent during the recent state fair. Within the walls were draped with red white and blue and hung with pictures of noted workers, banners, etc. Tables loaded with choice books, leaflets, papers and petitions for signatures, all pertaining to the work in hand, a couch and easy chairs and convenient toilet arrangements, plants and flowers made it a very homelike place. Outside the tent was gorgeous with banners, signs and leaflets. A large picture of ex-Gov. John P. St. John attracted much attention. At the corner of the tent in its coat of blue with white lettering and red lock, stood one of the W. C. T. U. water barrels of which the union is justly proud. Hundreds drank at this fountain knowing the water to be clean and pure and cold. The ladies in charge at the tent were kept busy from morning till night ushering in and entertaining callers from all parts of the United States and distributing many thousand pages of temperance literature; among these seven thousand copies of THE ISSUE OF TO-DAY, copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and of the Temperance Review, the organ of the state W. C. T. U. of Minnesota.

MISTLETOE MEMORIES,

OR WHAT THE POETS SAY ABOUT CHRISTMAS.

Comprising a collection of poems selected from the writings of H. W. Longfellow, J. G. Whittier, Thomas Hood, Alfred Domett, Chas. Mackay, Sir Walter Scott, Jennie Joy, and others. The whole bound in Banner shape, with rich silk fringe and tassels. The cover of this novelty is printed in nearly eighteen colors (being an almost exact fac simile of landscape studies printed in oil colors on gold pebble board), and ranks exceedingly high as an imported art production of the premier class. The original designs were drawn by H. Maurice Page, and were awarded a prize of Fifty Pounds Sterling at the Suffolk Street London Galleries in a competitive exhibit of 6,000 entries. For presentation, this art souvenir is vastly superior to a mere Christmas card, as it combines the advantages of both art and literature. Size 4x6 and one half inches.

Signal Notes.

Beer is today the inner citadel, the entrenched camp of the rum power.—Toledo Blade.

From Jackson to Grand Rapids, Michigan, a distance of ninety-four miles, there is a St. John club and pole in every town.

Bass's great brewery in England includes six acres of beer barrels; and it is estimated that the beer from it fills up each year about six acres of grave yards.

I look with scorn upon the selfish greatness of this world, and with pity on the most gifted and prosperous in the struggle for office and power; but I look with reverence on the obscure man who suffers for the right, who is true to a good but persecuted cause.—James A. Garfield.

The following curious advertisement appeared in a recent number of the Zuricher Lokal-Anzieger (a Swiss paper) in English, French and Italian: "Advice to Students.—If you want to learn the pronunciation of the German language easily and thoroughly, drink Wrexham Lagerbier, one glass at eleven, two at dinner, one at six, and two at supper. Stick to the exact doses given, for if you take less you will pronounce it too hard, if more too indistinctly. May be obtained at ——."

So large is the number of persons taken to Bellevue Hospital, New York, who have been made insane through intemperance, that the insane pavilion may well be named after this class of patients. From five to ten persons are taken to the hospital every day for examination, and of these the majority are the outcome of intemperate habits. So far as appears, the insanity so produced is not a form of delirium tremens which is more or less temporary in its nature, but a loss of reason which may be as permanent as from any cause whatever. What is still more serious, this class of sufferers has doubled within a year, and is five times as great as it was five years ago. No wonder that one of the officials at the hospital remarked that it was the strongest and most practical kind of temperance lesson that he knew of.—Churchman.

In a certain town of our acquaintance, says the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the undertaker is also a saloon keeper. In the front room are liquors, with all the equipments of an average groggery. Separated by a very thin partition in the rear are his coffins, and not far from the back door is the cemetery. The association is suggestive. It is altogether appropriate for the man who deals in whisky to have a stock of coffins on hand. He who mixes the drinks ought to trim the casket. And then, how suggestive the gradation! In the front room whisky; in the back room, coffins; at the back door, the cemetery.

"What has become of the witty, hail-fellow-well-met, good looking, noisy chaps that were the typical drummers of a dozen years ago?" "Drank themselves to death mostly," said the veteran. "Some are in business for themselves, some have survived and are at it yet, but the majority have drunk themselves to death. Fifteen years ago, when I first went into business, it was a positive fact that the man who could drink the most liquor could sell the most goods. Merchants seemed to expect it when they saw a drummer, either when the drummer went in the country, or the merchant came to New York. If I had stayed in business then, I'd have been a dead man now. Now it's changed, al except the New York part of it. A good many merchants, when they strike the city, still expect to be taken out on a roaring spree, and don't consider they've been treated square unless they are carried to an hotel in a cab and put to bed on the floor with their clothes on. But in the country that sort of thing's playing out. A merchant would be apt to feel insulted if you tried to drag him out to drink. I take a pocket full of good cigars with me, and when I think it is business I offer my man one of them; but, then, I go to lots of places where I would not do such a thing, and where it would not be proper to smoke."—New York Sun.

Miscellaneous.

Education through the eye is a large factor in all modern teaching. Vice has always used this powerful agency, alluring to the scenes of dissipation within by means of an attractive exterior.

The flood of vicious literature, so debasing in its influence, invites perusal through attractive illustrations.

This power is being turned to a better purpose as Christian people have become aware of its efficiency.

A notable example of this is seen in the publication of an attractive paper, containing full page illustrations and entitled "ILLUSTRATED TEMPERANCE TALES."

This monthly sheet is admirably adapted for scattering among the masses, for Sabbath schools, for gospel meetings and for all ages. Its illustrations attract the eye.

Its incidents, stories, etc., touch the heart. Supplied at one cent a copy, it has found a circulation of many thousands. If not among its large list of subscribers, send for free sample copies.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

For maps, descriptive circulars and summer resort papers, or other information not obtainable at your local ticket office, write to the

WHAT THE DOCTORS SAY.

Rev. J. W. Horsley, M.A., Chaplain H.M. Prison.

ALCOHOL AND MATERNITY.

"There is no evidence that alcohol is more necessary or beneficial to nursing mothers, as such, and all experience points strongly in the opposite direction."—Dr. Greenfield.

"The less alcohol that nursing mothers who are moderate drinkers take during lactation the better for them.—Dr. King Chambers.

"Lactation is, perhaps, of all other times, that when alcohol is calculated to do most harm and least good."—Dr. Edis.

"It is a popular fallacy that the drinking of stout makes you better nurses."—Dr. Heywood Smith.

"Numerous cases of the advantages which mothers derive by the practice of abstinence during the period of suckling have come under my own observation."—Dr. Grindrod.

It is an idea too revalent with nurses that fermented liquors increase the quantity of milk; but I am sure all intelligent physicians will agree with me that this view should not be encouraged."—Dr. R. D. Thompson.

"I have observed that those females who have abstained from alcoholic drinks during the period of pregnancy have usually enjoyed an immunity from many of the most distressing symptoms incident to this period....My recent experience has convinced me that a large proportion of the disorders incidental to childhood may be obviated, or considerably mitigated by the non-alcoholic diet of parents."—Mr. Beaumont.

"Countless disorders among infants are due simply and solely to the popular fallacy that the nursing mother cannot properly fulfil her duties unless she resorts to the aid of stimulants."—Dr. Edis.

"It is not an uncommon occurrence at all that convulsions in infants are brought on simply by the drinking of the parents."—Dr. L. M. Klein.

"Women of England, I charge you in the name of God, and as you must answer for it at the Great Day of Account, be determined that you will not be a party to the mischief which must follow from the daily use of alcohol."—Dr. A. Carpenter.

"The intemperate woman is curable by no drug, and her infirmity increases with her years."—Dr. J. Haddon.

"A woman can kill her child by drinking. I suppose that if women knew that they would be more careful!"—Dr. L. M. Klein.

"Infant mortality is mainly due to two causes, the substitution of farinaceous food for milk, and the delusion that ale or stout is necessary as an article of diet for nursing mothers."—Dr. Edis.

"One of the causes of excessive infant mortality is the pernicious habit of drinking large quantities of ale or stout by nursing mothers under the idea that they thereby increase and improve the secretion of milk, whereas they are really deteriorating the quality of that upon which the infant must depend for health and life."—Mr. Harrison Branthwaite.

"Drunken women bring forth children like unto themselves."—Aristotle.

"All the evils resulting from hereditary alcoholism may be transmitted by parents who have been noted for their drunkenness.'—Dr. N. Kerr.

"Those who have had the misfortune to be the offspring of parents under the influence of alcohol can only be kept from the drunkard's fate by a life-long abstinence from all intoxicating liquors."—Dr. A. Carpenter.

"The children of drunken parents are more liable to attacks from prevailing epidemics, and sink under them sooner than other people."—Dr. Taquet.

"The father and the mother lay in themselves the foundation, and carry on by a constitutional germinal impulse over to their children a constitutional liking for stimulants."—Dr. J. C. Jackson.

ALCOHOL AND HEREDITY.

"Not one of the transmitted wrongs, physical or mental, is more certainly passed on to those yet unborn than the wrongs inflicted by alcohol."—Dr. B. W. Richardson.

"The habit of the parent becomes the all but irresistible instinct of the child."—Dr. Elam.

"Many drinkers who were never drunk have yet transmitted very unstable nervous systems to their children."—Dr. Anstie.

"All the diseases arising from drinking spirituous or fermented liquors are liable to become hereditary, even to the third generation, increasing, if the cause be continued, till the family becomes extinct."—Prof. Darwin.

"A father or mother who drinks is almost certain to deprave and ruin the morals of some of their ofispring."—Dr. Drysdale.

"It is now well-known how apt intemperance is to become hereditary, and to beget various forms of insanity."—Prof. G. H. B. Macleod.

"It is quite certain that the children of habitual drunkards are in a larger proportion idiotic than other children, and in a larger proportion themselves habitual drunkards; and they are also in a larger proportion liable to the ordinary forms of acquired insanity."—Dr. Mitchell, Lunacy Commissioner.

"The children of drunkards are deficient in bodily and vital energy, and are predisposed by their very organizations to a craving for alcoholic stimulants."—Sir W. A. F. Browne, Lunacy Commissioner.

"To drag an alcoholic from his fatal habit is not only to restore an individual to health, but it is to put him in a condition to procreate other than imb ciles, epileptics, or fools."—Dr. Magnan.

"Persistent drunkards, in nine cases out of ten, plant the seeds of insanity and the allied nervous diseases in their offspring."—Dr. A. Wynter.

"I have little doubt that a large proportion of the great infantile mortality may be traced to drunkenness in the parents."—Mr. W. C. Garman.

"A host of facts might be brought forward to prove that drunkenness in parents, especially that form known as dipsomania, is a cause of idiocy, suicide, or insanity in their offspring.—Dr. Maudsley.

"Alcoholism is a disease that may be transmitted as phthisis is from parent to child, and developed in after life."—Dr. Newman.

"No vice is more hereditary than intemperance."—Dr. D. Yellowlees.

"Many specific diseases, engendered by alcohol in the parent, are too often stamped in the child; while the propensity to its use descends also, making the evil interest compound in its totality."—Dr. A. E. T. Longhurst.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. # The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 44. CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 13, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

GRACE GREENWOOD says: I believe that for one woman whom the pursuits of literature, the ambition of authorship and the love of fame rendered unfit for home life, a thousand have been made undomestic by poor social striving, the follies of fashion, and the intoxicating distinction which mere personal beauty confers.

DR. FELIX OSWALD, one of the leading scientific writers of our country, will furnish a series of papers for the "Chautauquan," in the coming volume, entitled "The Poison Problem; or the Temperance Teachings of Science." This is a hopeful sign of the times, when temperance and science "have kissed each other."

THAT those who have the liquor interest at heart rightly discern "the signs of the times" is evident from the three leading editorials of the last issue of The Champion, the organ of the Home versus the Saloon must occupy when it Liquor Dealers' and Manufacturers' State Protective Association of Illinois. Rightly, too, does that journal state the position which the contending forces in the great battle of the says, "There can be in this war no middle ground. Parties must adapt themselves to the situation and stand or fall as they enlist in the cause of liberty or oppression. There may or may not be re-adjustment of political lines; but there can be no re-adjustment of the issue."

AN English exchange, writing of the plea by the descendants of the old Danes and Saxons of "inherited tendencies" in regard to drinking habits, claims that these old people were more wide awake to these evils than is usually allowed, and quotes the following points from the Elder, Edda:

"No worse companion can a man take on his journey—
Than drunkenness.
Not as good as many believe
Is beer to the sons of men.
The more one drinks, the less he knows,
And less power has he over himself."

A RECENT investigation, by special examiners appointed for the purpose, has brought to light the great losses several of the Hartford life insurance companies have sustained in certain portions of the country, from insuring persons subject to habits of inebriety. In a certain section, twenty-eight deaths were all traced to the excessive use of alcohol, and the losses were paid, simply because it was cheaper to settle than to contest. These examiners were instructed to cancel all the risks of ten thousand and upward where the insured were found using alcohol to an excess. These are startling object-lessons, involuntary testimonies to the advance of public sentiment as to the effect of this great curse.

IMPORTANT action was recently taken by the Grand Lodge of Free Masons for Ohio, declaring liquor-selling to be a masonic crime, which will be sufficient ground for the refusal of Masonic fellowship. This shows the development of moral feeling in the world, and a direct influence upon a great social organization; for we may hope that if this principle is accepted in one quarter, it may in time become universal. It has been suggested, by an exchange friendly to temperance, that if the Free Masons would go farther, and create within themselves a total abstinence society, they "would appear before the world with an object more exalted than any hitherto put forward, and that this department, once established, would, by its superior moral force, steadily gain upon the organization until it became its mainspring."

A PITIFUL story comes to us of a scene in a Philadelphia police station, where a rough, tangle-haired woman, who had been arrested, had fought like a fury, and stormed at the officers in three languages, was followed up a few hours later by a little tot of a girl, who looked from one officer to another, and asked them if they had put her mother in jail. She was so little that the policeman had helped her up the steps, but here she was, in search of her mother; the degraded woman heard her voice and called to her. So they swung open the door and let her in, and the little thing asked her mother, who had shrunk back, ashamed, "Why, mother, are you in jail?" Then the baby dropped upon her knees on the stone floor, and began to pray: "Now I lay me down to sleep, and I hope my mother will be let out of jail." There were tears among those rough men at the sound of that innocent voice; and when the case came into court the judge whispered to the woman to go home and try to be a better mother. It was the drink that made the trouble. It is the drink that is always working woe.

A CURIOUS paradox is just now presented in the display of a picture advertising a play called "The Wages of Sin is Death," in the windows of beer saloons and other resorts. The picture represents a mother as turning to the liquor-seller and pointing to the dead body of her baby crying out, "My child is dead. You killed it!" It is a strange adornment for a place whose steps take hold on hell. The story is vouched for as one of the most terrible in the liquor annals of California. After years of debauchery, the husband and father, in a drunken frenzy, killed his child. The distracted mother caught up her baby, and ran with it to the saloon that had been the ruin of her husband, and laying the little one down on the counter, called on the dealer of death to behold his work. As she uttered the words, the heart that had borne so much gave way, and she fell at his feet, dead. When the husband "came to himself," and realized his dreadful deed, he seized a pistol that lay near, and blew out his brains. The clergyman who offered the last prayer over the three inanimate forms of rum's victims, added, in telling this story to one of our W. C. T. U. workers, "and the saloon keeper did not even close his doors during that funeral."

THE UNION SIGNAL has a letter, written to one of the chief officers of the Illinois W. C. T. U., from a lady in Olney, Illinois, to which town the Republican managers went for the affidavits with which they stabbed Gov. St. John in the back on the eve of election, too late for the false charges against his character to be met by counter affidavits. This letter (which can be seen at our office, and is of undoubted authority,) states that at the age of nineteen John P. St. John was married to a woman in Olney. Soon after he left to get work, being poor and obliged to seek employment where he could find it. In about three months he returned, unexpectedly, and going to his home was confronted by indisputable proof of his wife's infidelity. Not willing to put a reproach upon the prospective mother of his child he quietly left home, remained absent two years, that she, who had so cruelly "deserted," at his own fireside him to whom she had pledged honor and faith, might, in the technical language of the law procure a divorce on the ground of "desertion." The woman subsequently married again. Her son was acknowledged by Gov. St. John, was provided for by him, lived at his brother's in Olney for years, and has now by his father's efforts, a good position in Washington. Gov. St. John returned to Olney, and from one of its best families married the noble woman who has so long been his chief comfort and counsellor. His course throughout has been most honorable, and the partisan party which aimed a poisoned arrow at an untarnished record, will be met by the execration it merits from all good men and women.

"Casting all your care upon Him for He careth for you." 1 Peter 5:7.

O pilgrim, worn and weary,
Bowed with thy weight of care,
When life seems dark and dreary,
Go to thy God in prayer.
He knoweth every sorrow,
He feeleth every pain.
Then trust Him for the morrow,
Thou shalt not trust in vain.

When tempests gather o'er thee,
And days grow chill and drear,
When all seems dark beyond thee,
With scarce a ray of cheer,
Then go to Him who loves thee,
And tell Him all thy care,
For He is strong and loving,
And He will hear thy prayer.

Go tell Him all thy sorrow,
Bring Him thy griefs and tears,
Commit to Him tomorrow,
With all its hopes and fears.
Trust Him who rules the tempest,
Who trusts Him shall not fail.
The Lord Jehovah reigneth!
And justice shall prevail!

Ah! not alone we struggle,
We have a friend on high!
Then bear to Him thy burden,
He heareth when we cry.
The weariness and watching,
Endure but for a night.
A brighter day is dawning!
Joy cometh with the light!

A PART OF THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS.

AT THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION, MRS. FRANCES L. SWIFT, PRESIDENT.

DEAR SISTERS AND FELLOW LABORERS: An old, old writer tells of a solitary watchman, who for ten years watched every night for the beacon lights that should announce the fall of Troy, and saw at length the kindling fire that told of victory. So it has been with the women of our Christian Temperance Union. For ten years they have watched and waited at the "posts of the doors," working at the bidding of the Master. And now that we see the beacons lighted which tell of sure and certain triumph, all the past, though it brought toil and care, seems but "a watch in the night." We even wonder at ourselves that we ever thought the waiting long or the service hard, so gracious and kind have been the leadings of His hand.

The Apostles "returned to rehearse all that God had done with them," and we return, at the appointed times and seasons, to look in the face our mistakes and failures, to be encouraged by the advance we see in every department of our work, to inquire as to our duty in the future, and unitedly to ask the promised blessing and inspiration of the Holy Spirit. It is only as we look back that we can see what God hath wrought for us, and thus looking, our hearts are thrilled with the thought of the gracious bestowal of faith, and the "mind to work," which have brought us to this time. We believe what Tennyson says of virtue, is true of the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She "Desires no isles of the blest, no quiet seats of the just,

To rest in a golden grove, or to bask in a summer sky,
Give her the wages of going on, and not to die."

Dear friends, the hours of the three days which we shall spend together, will be all too short for the review of the past, and the discussion of the best methods for future work, and we do not propose to occupy this precious time in anticipating what will be more forcibly said by others. That the sentiment for prohibition is increasing in the country is shown by well attested facts. The states which have heretofore taken a stand for this principle are reiterating their conviction more firmly than ever before. In Maine, where prohibition has been tried for years, the vote cast at the recent state election for constitutional prohibition, gave a majority of over 44,000. In Kansas, each succeeding year, the people are more strongly in favor of the amendment. It is admitted that "there are scores of prohibitionists where there was but one two years ago," (and one newspaper not favorable to the movement said in a recent editorial, "A sense of duty compels us to remark, that notwithstanding our earnest opposition, the cause of prohibition is gaining ground every day." All the states whose legislatures have been in session during the year, have had the liquor problem under "anxious consideration," while constitutional amendments have been before twenty different states. The south is wonderfully aroused over this question, the movement growing with a rapidity which surprises even its best friends. Many of our great railroad corporations, steamship companies, and larger manufacturing interests, have forbidden the use of intoxicants among their employes, under the penalty of discharge. Greater solicitude is felt in the condition of the masses. The "bitter cry of outcast London," is found to be the cry of all our large cities. How can they be reached? is the complicated question, and schemes of all kinds are being instituted for their uplifting.

In the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, never before have we been able to record so much success. After seven years of effort, Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, the superintendent of this department, announces that the International Sabbath School Convention at Louisville, passed a resolution that the request for specific temperance teaching shall be carried out by the lesson committee, while the great National Educational association convened in Madison, Wis., last July, heartily endorsed the efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to secure a scientific temperance educational bill in every state, and pledged co-operation to that end. Six thousand teachers of public schools interested to have the children forewarned and forearmed as to the dangers of the use of alcohol! Public school teachers and Sabbath school teachers of 10,000,000 children, awake on this subject! How much this means of promise for our own as well as for future generations. We also gratefully recognize the providential leadings which have made this cause to become a national issue, and an era in the political history of our country.

During the year just past, there has been no meeting of the legislature to which petitions could be addressed, and our local unions have given their time and efforts to the regular line of Woman's Christian Temperance Union work. As strength and assurance have come with the use of the means at our command, we have gone forward step by step. New doors have opened, into which we have gladly entered, and all over the state, we see with joy, an increase of temperance sentiment. Our newspapers, secular and religious, are full of articles for and against, and the conviction is growing in the minds of the people, that the liquor traffic is filling the land with crimes and wretchedness, and that a republican government, for and by the people, has no right to license or encourage it. More and more the conviction is growing that moral suasion alone will never break the power of this giant evil, and that legal prohibition must be the end and aim of all intelligent effort. At our last meeting in Bellefonte we felt the need of a greater number of organizations, and this work has been carried on so energetically, that 181 new unions have been reported, while our county unions have more than doubled. We feel that just here is a point that must still be pressed. Pennsylvania is a great territory, and no set of officers, we care not how efficient they may be, can conduct the minute oversight and detail of such a field. The unions need to feel the sympathy and co-operation of kindred minds. In the county organization, is our hope for thorough work. The weaker local unions would then be fostered and encouraged by their own county officers. The successes of one would render enthusiastic and encourage others, and the result would be what we hope for—unions in every town and every county, composed of our best and wisest Christian women. We must also learn that what is needed to promote this reform, is firm faith, and love for principle: continuous, rather than spasmodic effort. That these "cardinal virtues" are being cultivated by our women, is shown by the reply of one of our leaders to a gentleman, who said, "It is of no use to ask for constitutional prohibition. It will take ten years to win." "Ten years!" she replied, "Is that all? Then we'll begin petitioning this year, and there will only be nine left."

We must have the country districts thoroughly organized. We have not yet realized the power that lies in the four-fifths of the voters, who live outside of our large cities. Let us win these, and our cause is won, even if we do have to give up our corrupt cities in despair. We must put forth every effort now, during the weeks and the months that are upon us, to bring every influence to bear upon our legislature, to give us the school law for which we ask.

The children are being destroyed! Within the last few days we have heard of devices to tempt our boys into the dram shops, which fill us with ever increasing apprehension. In many of our cities, we are told, the saloon keepers issue tickets, good for so many drinks, the prizes offered to those who soonest exhaust the number being revolvers, decks of cards, and the biographies of noted desperadoes! In all our large cities the free lunch is a temptation to our boys, and it behooves every mother to know where her son gets his luncheon. In one saloon where a number of boys were found intoxicated, their Sabbath school lesson papers were found in their pockets, showing that it is not only from the slums and neglected places that the ever increasing army of victims is coming. The poisonous drugs in the manufactured alcoholic drinks so freely used of late, are producing fearful results. It is stated that from five to ten persons are daily taken to Bellevue hospital for examination, and by far the majority of these cases of insanity are caused by intemperance. These are not delirium tremens patients, but a loss of reason which is permanent. It is said this class of sufferers has doubled within a year, and is five times as great as five years ago.

As your state officers review the past year, the opportunities they have been obliged to neglect for want of time and strength to occupy, rise up sadly before them, and the recollection nerves us to urge more systematic and aggressive methods. We need headquarters, with a salaried officer or clerk always in her place, to answer letters, give advice and instruction, and to send out broadcast the circulars and incentives needed.

Without the salaried officer, devoting all her time, we scarcely see how this work can be increasingly and effectively carried on. Some one should be in constant correspondence arranging for new organizations, lectures, etc. It is hardly necessary for me to tell you of the self-denying years of work of our faithful corresponding secretary. She has risen up early, emphatically. The gray of the morning and the midnight lamp, have alike witnessed the untiring and unceasing movement of her pen. She has cheered, encouraged and agitated, given ideas, suggestions and inspiration, we almost venture to say, to every Woman's Christian Temperance Union woman in the state, from the president to the youngest and most timid. While much of her work has been what no one else could do, she might and should be relieved of many wearying details. It is not right or just to allow her longer to bear this burden.

It was Robert Hall who said that the best place to keep a secret was in an annual report. But we do not believe this is true of our state reports. They are not thrown into the waste-basket or used for kindling fires. The demand is increasing for them. They are read and pondered—the unions gaining therefrom hints and ideas for practical work. We need a larger number this year than have before been printed. With some exertion we might secure advertisements to meet in large measure the outlays for printing, while we believe each union would cheerfully pledge for itself a sufficient number to put the report into the hands of all interested within its limits.

Some new departments of work might profitably be added to our list. Those recommended by the national are not all duplicated in the state. A department of "Work Among the Miners," has already been established in Fayette county, and we suggest that this be made a state work.

Hitherto our Woman's Christian Temperance Union ship has been out in the open sea with plain sailing before her. True, adverse winds have at times overtaken her, but we have had on board the Master, and His "Wherefore didst thou doubt?" has quelled our sometimes rising fears. So we have gone on, with eyes steadily fixed on the pole star prohibition. But of late, even as we are approaching the shore, the great rocks loom up, and we find we are in the midst of the breakers. What shall we do? We would not turn back and so delay the hour for which God waits. No, but let us keep in the channel, and closely following the directions of the great Pilot, we will avoid the rocks which threaten to dash us to pieces. We may be delayed somewhat, our progress may for a time be slower, but as we turn the prow of the vessel first one way and then another, we are still advancing, and our Divine leader will surely bring us safely through.

The heated political campaign through which we are passing is a time that tries men's souls. It is probable that every member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, believes in, and is working, as she has always done, for prohibition; the utter extermination of the liquor traffic. This has been the one earnest prayer of all hearts since the Crusade. But there is so much difference in the ideas of the people as to the methods of procedure to bring about this most devoutly to be wished consummation, that it seems impossible to lay down any rules by which we may all work alike. While the hopes of all were disappointed by the action of the two great political parties, in ignoring our memorial and the "great question of the hour," at their conventions, many of our wisest and best still feel that we must expect deliverance through these parties. Thus, while each woman must maintain her individuality, and use her influence as conscience dictates, (and we earnestly urge the necessity and duty of even enthusiastic personal effort) yet it seems wiser and better to leave partisan discussion to other times and places than these. The movement for the submission to the people of the question of constitutional prohibition, will be agitated again this winter, and we ask for unions to give all the help in their power, while our chief work must be effort to secure the school law. Let us ask for the name of every voter of whatever party to our petitions for these measures, which we believe to be of vital importance to our commonwealth. Finally this work grows upon us; its needs and possibilities rise up before us until the burden seems heavier than we can bear, and we are tempted to cry out: "Who is sufficient for these things?" We have read that Erastus, Duke of Lunenburg, had the figure of a lighted candle stamped on his coins with the initials of a Latin motto which read: "I consume myself enlightening others." Dear sister workers, has not this little illustration a thought for us? Do not our hearts respond to the mysterious truth expressed in the Savior's words: "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it?"

A PARALLEL.

L. A. NASH.

In bygone ages of an island history, after there had been some sweeping and garnishing by a superinduced civilization, brought in at the point of the sword from the outer ancient world, the islanders lapsed to their former state. The civilization had been neither deep down nor real, it had been laid on like a varnish and the rottenness smouldered underneath. The enchanter's rod of the Master was removed, and turbulent and wayward wills broke loose. The King's Highway was no longer safe to the traveller, the peasant's home was no longer his little sanctuary. Then arose a man who was at once a warrior, king and saint. The legend tells his love and pity for men was such that his soul still hovers over woe and want, and bird's wings waft it from place to place. His knights must hold his hand and work with him and so he starts,

> That fair order of my Table Round,
> A glorious company, the flower of mankind,
> To serve as model for the mighty world,
> And be fair beginning of a time.
> Their work,
> To break the heathen and uphold the Christ,
> To ride abroad redressing human wrongs,
> To speak no slander, no, nor listen to it,
> To honor his own word, as if his God's,
> To lead sweet lives in purest chastity.

These were men bound together to "redress the wrongs" of women chiefly. That they be not altogether taken up with the material warfare, and forget the warfare of the soul, the saintly Arthur sent them forth in "quest of the Holy Grail." This seems to symbolize the longing for an ideal life, the higher life of the soul, which is the animating principle of all true religion. A modern teller of the story says, "That such a quest should in the first instance have a disintegrating effect on existing social conditions, is in accordance with the experience of all history."

Fifteen centuries have been creeping on. We know no other work; we make no other quest. The soul of Arthur hovers maybe over thousands of "Tables Round." But women are now at work redressing the wrongs that men have let worm in, and that it seems they can't, or won't, turn out.

> The old order changeth, yielding place to new,
> And God fulfills himself in many ways.

Our vaunted civilization is still but superficial so long as dragons are permitted to stalk abroad. We are enlisted under the banner of another St. George, whose life work was to trample under foot and destroy a terrible dragon, the scourge of humanity.

This, by the by, is the well known device of the Church of England temperance society, and a very telling one it is. Could Carlyle have been looking on to this drink-serpent when he wrote in 1850, "America, too, will have to strain its energies; to crack its sinews, and all but break its heart, as the rest of us have had to do, in thousandfold wrestle with the Pythons and mad demons, before it can become a habitation for the gods. America's battle is yet to fight, and we sorrowful, though nothing doubting, will wish her strength for it. New spiritual Pythons, plenty of them, enormous Megatheriums, as ugly as ever were born of mind, loom huge and hideous out of the twilight future on America, and she will have her own agony, and her own victory, but on other terms than she is yet aware." We feel inclined to say with the first lordship in the old dialogue of 1630:

> "Well, God, mend all!"

But incited by the working spirit now abroad, we add, with the second lordship: "Nay, by God, Donald, we must help Him to mend it." The very little child feels this. A little boy, in his Sabbath school just told, "we must ask God to help us to be good!" When asked, "What is is it we must do?" he says, "We must help God to make us good." And so it is, the battling with the monster evil, and the quest of the Holy Grail, still go hand in hand. We work as though on our life depended the victory. We pray as though it were only God's. We pray, for 'tis prayer that moves the world. We wrestle and fight, with petitions and persuasive talk, and teaching the children and endeavoring to help elect our rulers, just like the Israelites in the wilderness, and all the time somebody else had to hold up the tired arm that brought down help from heaven, just so with the three thousand of our "Tables Round," let us while we fight, not forget the quest. Pray and work. Work and pray.

RURAL WORK.

MRS. LOUISA S. ROUNDS.

So much is being said now of "rural work" by our temperance women, let me give you a bit of experience of my own.

On my way from Chicago to this city to attend our state W. C. T. U. convention, I took in several towns, and a few rural districts. Leaving the "main traveled road," an expression frequently heard in the years before rail roads, but which in my case, meant simply to leave the great Wabash rail road and try one of lesser fame, I found myself one Saturday night in the little village of Morton, Tazewell county, booked for a speech that evening and also the following evening. Morton has a few earnest temperance men and women, but the population being mostly Germans, the temperance sentiment is not particularly strong.

The speech Saturday night served to arouse attention, and I was most cordially invited to visit the public school of the village, and address the children. The principal, a staunch, true temperance man, gave me the invitation, which I gladly accepted. On Monday afternoon I made my way to the school house, which for the size of the village is certainly a very fine building.

I had a royal time with the children, and came away with a feeling of gratitude that the school house doors, even, were among those which should open before us, and "which no man can shut."

But not yet has that blessed prophecy been fulfilled, as the sequel shows. The next morning the principal of the school was waited upon by a member of the school board, a German, and informed that he must not again invite anyone to address the children on temperance. The board consists of one American, a temperance man, and two Germans, lovers of beer!

The question suddenly took this shape and I still wait the answer: Who rules the schools of this country? Americans or Germans, foreigners? The action of this foreign born trustee created a good deal of excitement, as you may well suppose, and the end of that outrage is not yet.

Passing from Morton to Gridley, I could not refrain from relating my experience in the former place to a large audience gathered to hear a "little more temperance talk." The above question was propounded to them, with comments plain and easy to be understood.

The next morning I received a most polite note from the principal of the public school in Gridley, inviting me in the name of the directors on school board, and in his own name to visit his school and to address the children. The invitation was accepted with thanks, and again I looked into the faces of a hundred children more or less, whose bright eyes and ready answers to temperance questions, made it impossible to doubt their interest in, and knowledge of our blessed cause.

Dear workers, let us keep "pegging away." The school house doors of Illinois will yet admit our temperance text books, which, unlike our workers, will remain "to go no more out forever!" God speed the day, and help us bravely to work and wait for it.

Correspondence.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

At the National W. C. T. U. convention at St. Louis it was decided that there should be a national representation of the W. C. T. U. at the World's Exposition at New Orleans. While the convention voted to endorse any efforts made by the state and county fair department to secure such a representation, it did not intend that it should be a representation by that department alone. Every state and local union has a special interest in such a representation, as well as every department of work. In order that there may be a creditable showing of our society in every part of the country, we ask the president of every state and territory to see to it that a special decoration is made by some one who has taste and skill for such work, and sent to New Orleans to adorn our Liturature Booth. I would suggest that it be something that would represent the state by being made of some special product. For instance, if from Maine, let it be a shield made of pine or pine cones, with "Maine W. C. T. U." upon it. The whole being of unique design and beautiful workmanship.

If from South Carolina, let it be of rice, or anything that is a staple product. There is no grain or mineral that cannot be utilized in this way. If all these could be the special work of women, it would be a proper representation of our W. C. T. U. workers. If we cannot have the shields made of the products themselves, it would be even more beautiful to have them made of some native wood and painted with some design in which the special products are introduced.

Be sure that each one has upon it the name of the state with the letters Woman's Christian Temperance Union attached. This will show how extended is our organization. We ask superintendents of national departments to have printed a large number of the circulars relating to the special lines of work in their departments, having them ready to send to New Orleans by December 1, when the exposition opens. If there is any literature that belongs specially to a department, we would be glad to have the superintendent of that department arrange for a display of such literature. The means to defray any extra expenses can easily be provided for by calling upon the constituency of the department for small donations.

We also ask that some emblem, expressive of the work of the department, be prepared and sent to be used in decorating. Of course, this is not practicable in every department, but it will be in very many of them. In order that our representation may be one that will do honor to our organization it is necessary that the call for cash contributions should be very generally responded to. In Missouri the state superintendent of the fair department has issued cards to every local W. C. T. U. asking for small donations, and they are responding by sending in sums ranging from twenty-five cents to five dollars. Cannot the state superintendent of this department all over the country try this plan of raising a fund? It is not necessary that a union should take any money out of its treasury. There are a thousand ways in which it can be procured by levying upon the products of the farm and garden that lie all around. If every county superintendent of fairs will solicit a few donations from farmers, of articles that they would gladly give and not miss from their store, a liberal sum would be realized that would be the means of carrying the gospel of temperance to thousands of people.

Let us do a little practical work of this kind, and learn to put money in our treasury where it is so often needed. It is hoped that all superintendents of this department will make a special effort to help in this work as it is in the line of work that belongs to the department.

We ask that where there is no superintendent of fairs in a state the president of the state will do the work of soliciting funds or appoint some one to attend to it.

We should be glad to receive any suggestions in regard to the manner of decorating a literature booth, and making it attractive.

Any offer to arrange our national motto in some beautiful design will be gladly received.

Will not the prominent speakers of the W. C. T. U. secure a good collection at one of their mass meetings and donate it to this purpse.

We have been planning and working for ten years, and this will be an opportunity for bringing the results of our work before the people in a tangible form. Now let us be just to our own work, and make such an impressive showing as will broaden our influence as a society, as well as secure an influence over individuals in classes that are entirely cut off from it now.

Let no time be lost, but let us go to work immediately to secure a proper recognition of the magnitude of the work of the W. C. T. U. We hope that any women who can go to New Orleans to help in this work will report as soon as possible to their state presidents who will duly authorize them as a committee for such work and report the same to the superintendent of state and county fairs.

THE GREATEST ISSUE.

Dear Union Signal:—Away here in the Cherokee Nation, I have just read the annual address of Mrs. President Bascom, of Madison, Wisconsin. How I should like to help in the great cause of reform. It seems to me there has never been a time in the history of the republic when great issues so crowded themselves upon the attention of the people. The occasions which gave rise to the several wars in which the government has been involved, each had its own peculiar characteristics; but the one now before the people is diverse in many of its elements from all that have preceded it. Its object is to remove an evil which is more wide-spread in its efforts than was that of slavery; it proposes to accomplish this work by addressing itself to the moral sense of the age. It is in the hands of the women, and has produced many specimens of eloquence that will lose nothing by way of comparison with the best deliverances that adorn the history of English literature. It has given many a state paper to the country that equals in point of real merit the best that have been drawn up by the founders of the constitution, or by any that have undertaken to expound that document as it was understood by those who framed it.

But behind all this enginery there is a moral force which will never abate. Indeed, if we apply the criterion of Patrick Henry, and judge of the future by the past, the time is not far distant when this force will have become almost irresistible. There may be aspirants to office now living, who may live to see the day when they will regret that they failed to read the signs of the times.

It will not do to relegate the question to the states. It is too broad in its bearing upon the interests of the people. It was claimed that slavery was a question which belonged exclusively to the states; but, at last, by a federal act, the chains which held four millions in bondage were broken asunder. So it will be in regard to the national crime of intemperance. After a while it will be discovered that government is simply the establishment of a state of things which contemplates the good of the people; and, by an act of sovereignty which derives its authority from God and humanity, it will be proclaimed that the traffic in alcoholic drinks shall be stopped. And, why not? It is a mistake to suppose the people were made for the government. The converse is true. The government is made for the people. It is the creature; they are the creators. Or, again, what is government, but the expression of the people? And have not the people the authority to say that whatever is hurtful to them shall be stopped? From the nature of the case, the good of the people is the "higher law" in the case.

As early as 1824 the Cherokees passed a law to prohibit the introduction of liquor into the country. This law with some modifications has been in force ever since that date, and, although whisky is often smuggled into some parts of the Nation, it is to be considered as the protest of the Cherokees against the evil of intemperance.

A beautiful state of things! Relics of barbarism float down the stream of civilization as drift wood on the Mississippi river, and today we are told that woman is to have no existence in law or policy; that she is to be the "hewer of wood and drawer of water" for society, while the "lords of creation" shape her destiny and control the world. I believe in no such rank. If woman has no right to ask the world to make her home the abode of bliss, it would certainly argue that the constitution of the universe has been founded in wrong.

KEEP UP THE BAND OF HOPE.

Dear Union Signal:—The enclosed is an extract from a letter sent by Anna Gordon, our "assistant superintendent of juvenile work," to a lady of New York state, in reply to her query as to "keeping up Bands of Hope now that we have scientific temperance instruction in the public schools." The points made seemed to me of such practical value that I asked her to copy for "the larger audience." Yours truly, F. E. W.

"While it is true that school children in your state will receive scientific teaching on this question, it is also true that it will in many cases take months to get the law into working order, and that there will be teachers wholly indifferent to the subject.

You had the temperance text book in many schools before the state law was passed. Was outside juvenile work given up in such localities for that reason?

But let us suppose a town where the new law is thoroughly carried out by teachers in sympathy with our ideas. At first thought one might say that the children of such a community were being taught in school sufficiently on this question, and that the W. C. T. U. might just as well turn its attention more specifically to othes lines of effort.

It seems to me that such a W. C. T. U. thereby loses its most encouraging department of work. The children lose the benefit of associated work in a society of their own which means as much in rallying children as older people.

They lose the moral education which can be woven into the Band of Hope teaching, and more than that we shall not be so apt to secure their names on our triple pledge, and cannot longer impress them deeply with the thought that they are our dependence in the future of this great battle for the right.

Scientific temperance instruction in the public school is an immense step gained, but to my thought only more grandly opens the way for the united efforts of the little folks.

If we give up the juvenile society where the children are trained to sing their charming songs, where we bring to mind each week freshly, the sacredness and bond of their pledge, the W. C. T. U. will not so often give an entertainment by the children, where I am confident a child's persuasive voice often sends our dear cause home to hearts that would open to nothing else.

Can we not supplement the teaching at school by making the societies more of a social affair—sometimes with debate on the very lesson taught that day in school; or by making a strong point of 'military drill' to reach the older boys, and calisthenics for the girls?

Then a favorite idea with me, is not to confine the teaching strictly to temperance, but let the juvenile society be a place where all good principles are taught, more like the Chautuaqua Look Up Legion, only emphasizing total abstinence from intoxicants, narcotics and tobacco. Let an occasional lesson be devoted to the subject of kindness versus cruelty to animals, with stories by teachers and children of the wonderful instinct and sagacity of animals.

Study the lives of great men and women, especially total abstainers, and let the society be a garden in which all sweet graces, gentle deeds and moral principles are planted. What a rich harvest of pure and noble manhood and womanhood will be the result of such planting God only knows!

Last of all the young women of your state will be deprived of what has proved to many girls a choice means of growth in grace in the best elements of character." A. G.

FAITH CULTURE.

Dear Union Signal:—A little more concerning the Faith Culture department. My heart has responded from the first suggestion of it up to the present moment. I have thought of the nest of departments growing so large as to fail of warmth and breadth of wings to cover the "eggs" referred to a long time since by Mrs. Livermore. But I am quite sure a department for faith culture must be slipped into the nest. I believe a mother's instinct will make her quick to recognize in it a part of her own dear self, and that she will hasten to give it a warm place in the nest, and although latest of the brood, it will be of rapid growth and early find a prominent place in the sisterhood of departments.

It is a special need of the hour, the supreme moment for such a movement. Faith is on trial, demands rapid culture and increased strength. The Scriptures warrant faith culture. Careful searching will prove this statement to be correct.

In an hour of trial the Master tested Martha. She first declared her faith in him. Next responded, "Yea, Lord," to the test, until, walking beside her Lord she stood at the brother's grave. When commanded only to roll away the stone, her Master to bid the brother come forth, all her professed faith in a moment is shrouded in unbelief.

Like Mary and Martha of old, we have been asking the Lord for great things. We have made a declaration of our faith in God. Christian faith through the Women's Christian Temperance Union has challenged the liquor traffic to meet for battle. We have defied this giant "in the name of the Lord of Hosts." Our expectation is from Him. We have struck for national prohibition and have a Gideon band upon whom the spirit of the Lord has come. At the water's brink they have been tested, and are now crying "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of Hosts."

Some of our sisters are looking to Him for physical healing, others for the opening of morally blinded eyes and for morally dead bodies to be raised from the grave. These declarations will call for a test by our dear Lord. Step by step we are reaching a point where we will be called to roll away a stone of mighty magnitude. We have been dealing with pebbles in the past, but Rocky Mountains face the future. Faith intensified will lead us on to victory.

Our dear sister Denny, who has "moved" in the direction of faith culture, is waiting, I suppose, for a "second." I am ready to second the motion with her consent for a change of phraseology; that instead "of a standing committee to pray for the sick," we have a Faith Culture department, including in it, prayer for the sick. Shall we have such a department? Let us hear from our sister Denny again. "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove." "This is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith."

WHY SHOULD WE WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In a W. C. T. U. manual that Mrs. Ada H. Kepley sent me, I read with pleasuse that a great activity in foreign work is developed in the state of Illinois. She suggested a very important reason, viz.: "That we should get the votes of the foreigners, as they are a great hindrance in the promotion of the prohibition cause." I am glad to see that our dear W. C. T. U. is looking in this direction.

The day after the nomination of Blaine I had an interview with a foreign beer drinker, who said: "Blaine is a man of the people," and I said: "It may be, but for the welfare of the country we need a Prohibitionist." Then he replied: "Prohibition will win at the next political campaign, for the matter is not carried on well enough yet to win now." I believe that if the Temperance Union had done as much foreign work four years ago as she does now, the Prohibition cause would doubtless win in the present political campaign. Four years ago I lived in Ohio for a year and nobody told me of temperance work. Once I attended a temperance lecture but I did not understand the language.

Last summer during the great Prohibition campaign in Ohio, a noble German temperance man gave stump speeches at different places. As he is a good orator he succeeded everywhere; but the want of organization did a great harm to his work.

In the following I will give two more reasons why we should do foreign work:

1. For their sufferings. Many foreigners suffer from poverty, from drunkenness, from being misused for want of knowing the language and the circumstances of this country; and especially in time of sickness they are in a pitiful condition, feeling that they are strangers in this country, and generally they get homesick besides.

2. For their ignorance of the nature and effect of alcoholic liquors, as all intoxicating drinks are poisonous, and do the greatest harm to the system.

For this reason I would like to see Julia Colman's books translated into foreign languages.

As Christian women it is not only our duty to relieve the condition of the foreigners, but it is also our privilege. Hoping that all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL understand this, I am yours in the Lord,

Beaver Falls, Penn. MRS. E. PFEIFFER.

THE SCIENCE OF GOVERNMENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have been thinking for some time of writing you of a subject that has lain upon my heart, and a pre-eminently fitting one, it seems to me for the W. C. T. U. to take up.

Some time ago, one of the teachers in a temperance school who has a class of young people ranging in ages from fourteen to sixteen years, applied to me to see if I could suggest any new study for them. They had gone several times through the catechism and were tired of it. We talked over several more advanced works, but since then it has occurred to me that it would be a grand thing to give them a simple work on "Science of Government" (perhaps you can think of a better name). Not only would it be excellent for them but for our young ladies and for the mass of our women (myself for instance), who need enlightenment and who may not ask their husbands at home because of radical differences in opinion. It should of course make clear to us things that are dark to us now; should show us the dangers that menace our republic. Above all else, should show how only that nation whose God is the Lord may prosper; should lay bare the principles that should guide and govern us regardless of party.

Such a study should be profound in its simplicity. And as I happen to know how profound is the ignorance of many otherwise cultivated ladies upon these points, I take the liberty of bringing the matter to your notice, in hope that if you are too busy to undertake it yourself you will at least bring some of our capable ladies to this work.

I have given you my thought in its crude state. It may have already occurred to you but if not, trust it may prove a "seed corn" for this our need, and there am glad to let it rest. S. J. T.

COUNT THE FOREIGN VOTE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is cheering to see that the cause of the foreign work is exciting renewed interest in the hearts not only of our women, but that those of the different nationalties, are awakening to the fact of the danger they are in from the grand enemy, alcohol. It has been suggested, and the thought has burdened me for months, that we should have German speakers in all our large cities this fall. If the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Buffalo could each have one week of German lectures it would do an infinite amount of good. Will the Lord give us the money to obtain lectures if we make the effort? He has told us to ask largely that our joy may be full—but he has not bid us go in debt. Will our German friends who can speak, step forward in this important time and help us? Will they give us their services as reasonably as they can? And will our unions not see that by some energetic management they could each contribute something toward a fund to be used for this purpose and collect money at once to do it? Prof. Schmitz, of Elgin, Ill.; Dr. C. Bernrenter, of Nashville, Washington county Ill.; Rev. L. Pfeiffer, of East Gnew, Erie county, Pa., could, I presume, any of them be secured for lectures if they were paid a reasonable sum. Shall we not secure these gentlemen and have a course of lectures given to the Germans during this autumn. Who will help in this good work?

SLAVERY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL FRIENDS:—Our grand and good president, Lincoln, did a noble thing when he liberated the millions at the south. With one stroke of his pen he set them free. O, for some one brave and strong enough to set free the slaves of another kind, some of whom are now writhing in their chains and beating, as it were, against the bars of their prisons in vain for release from what seems to hold them as in the grip of death. These slaves are not all conscious of their bondage; some would laugh at the mere suggestion of such a state. These are but in the infancy of their thralldom and know not, or dread not the galling chains of the future, when they may call for deliverance and it will not come.

These slaves are not of any especial age or hue, are not confined to any particular clime or locality; they are not captured suddenly; are not sold into bondage unawares; they are not with chain and handcuff marched to and fro from their work, but are even free to choose their liberty or their bondage and in reality do choose. These slaves are not born into slavery, but go smiling, regardless of all warnings, in the road which leads to it, and at last find themselves entangled and almost helpless at times, feeling the grip of the enemy are ready to cry out in their agony, "Oh, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me?" but blindly they pursue the downward road, hugging their chains and each day, each hour, making their emancipation harder to accomplish, and less probable.

Were it not true that our great and supreme Ruler can do all things, we would despair of any deliverance for some of these captives we see from day to day. They are on the street cars, on our corners, our boulevards, in our offices, our homes, and even in our churches and Sunday schools! The Lord have mercy on all, especially these "blind leaders of the blind." Does any one need to be told, what kind of slavery we refer to? Rum (we call it by no more polite or refined name than it deserves) is the king which rules so many of our loved ones, and binding them hand and foot, casts them into the "fiery furnace" where only the recognized "form of the fourth" can save or deliver. The chains are even now being forged, for the laughing innocent in your arms, young mother, for the romping, happy boy that runs to meet "father," on his homeward way, will you not strike right and left to save these? Do you not care, that you smile and look incredulous, when you are warned in time? Such experiences can never come to you and yours, you say. If you are careless and indifferent you may live to repent the day, that you would not rise to the help of those who would drive this demon rum from our land. "Who is that elegant young man?" said a friend of mine at an evening party, to one standing near. He was a slave, and they did not know it, until a few hours later he was carried home by friends, to avoid open disgrace.

He was at the house of nominal friends; they, in their ignorance, or indifference furnished that which helped him in his downward course, and spoke scornfully of him—in his weakness—that he "could not control himself." A few years after he was begging pennies to cross the ferry and still later on,—no one could tell where or how,—passed over to the other side into the darkness. Who—we ask, will be held responsible for this wreck?

One sometimes requires great courage and decision to break away from the old customs and habits. It has been foolishly remarked, "One may as well be out of the world, as out of the fashion." "When I move from here," said a weak spirit who was surrounded by lovers of the wine cup, "I will not use wine any more. I should be thought mean, if I did not offer it to my friends here;" and the chains were day by day being strengthened and fastened upon loved ones, and after years brought sad memories and fearful remorse. Do not smile dear friends, or consider us over zealous when we make urgent appeals to you for your money and your influence. VIRGINIA J. KENT.

MR. JOSEPH LIVESEY, of England, the veteran temperance reformer, sprung from the poorest ranks of life, and by honest, hard work and self-denial, combined with a large-hearted sympathy for his fellows in their struggles with poverty and temptation, won his way to a comfortable position and the sincere respect of his fellowmen. His life story reads like a chapter from Self-Help. When a boy he learnt to read, and studied grammar and arithmetic from books fastened with cord to the breast beam of his loom. The crowning act of his life, which has rendered him famous in the eyes of millions of his fellow-men, was when, on September 1st, 1832, he with six other noble men of Preston, signed the first pledge of total abstinence from all liquors of an intoxicating quality. Joseph Livesey's parents died when he was seven years old, of consumption. His constitution was not a strong one, and on fifty occasions he suffered from rheumatic fever. His principles were thus severely tested in his own experience, and his long life is ample evidence of the non-necessity of alcoholic drink to preserve a lengthened vitality.

A PRINCIPAL of one of the New York publishing schools, complains to a Prohibition association that teachers dare not talk about temperance in school because the trustees are elected by the rum interest and are controlled by it.

THE CHILDREN'S RALLYING SONG.

META E. B. THORNE.

(Tune: "We are coming Father Abra'm.")

We are coming, O Columbia, a brave ten million more,
"From Mississippi's winding streams and from New England's shore,
From rocky northern hilltop, from sunny southern plains,
From Mexico's blue waters, and from far Pacific main.
We bring the loyal true hearts, we bring the willing hands,
And souls afire with earnest zeal to do thy high command,
Our banners white are gleaming like sunrise in the sky;
"For God and home and native land!" resounds our patriot cry.
Refrain.—

We are coming. we are coming, our native land to save,
We are coming, O Columbia, the young, the true, the brave.

You may see us onward marching adown the path of time,
Our bands increasing day by day,—a multitude sublime.
From hillsides and from valleys you may hear our tramping feet,
Like the billows of the ocean as upon the rocks they beat.
A mighty host advancing we wax each day more strong,
How its echoes glad resounding from each hill, and rock, and glen,
"For God and home and native land!" Loud swells the grand "Amen."

Refrain.—

We are coming, we are coming, our native land to save,
We are coming, O Columbia, the young, the true, the brave.

O the conflict is before us with a fearful giant foe,
But our armor bright is ready, we will give him blow for blow;
In the strife we will not falter for the victory is sure,—
Even we shall yet behold it, if we to the end endure.
Quail then monster, at our onset, O thou demon fierce and strong,
Thou who dar'st our land to darken with the foul and bitter wrong;
Like returning tides that slowly, surely sweep along the strand,
We will hurl thee, hateful tyrant, from our own, our native land.

Refrain.—

We are coming, we are coming, home and native land to save;
In the name of God, we're coming, we, the young, the true, the brave.

THE KEEPER OF THE DOOR.

"Oh, dear! I am completely discouraged." Jenny pushed away her book and looked up at her mother with an expression that was very much like despair, and yet not altogether that, for somehow her mother had a way of brightening up dark places, that was helpful as well as comforting.

Her mother was rocking the baby, and she scarcely dared speak lest the little tyrant should open his eyes for a new frolic, but she sent Jenny a smile that said just as plainly as words, "What is the trouble. Let us talk it over."

"It's about my besetting sins, mamma. You see we were talking last Sabbath about striving against sin, and Miss Marston told us the only way to overcome it was to fight as the sharpshooters did in the war, by taking aim at a particular one. She advised us to sit down and make an honest list, just for our own eyes, of our own special sins, the ones that made us most trouble, and then try by God's help to overcome them. I made up my mind to try it, and I had to write down ever so many things, but I truly thought my tongue made me the most trouble."

"Your tongue! Oh, yes! I understand," said mamma.

"Saying things, you know, mamma; things I ought not to say; and I am so sorry about it afterwards, but that doesn't make it any better, because I go and do it again."

"Well?" said mamma, as Jenny paused.

"Well, I thought I'd just take aim at that one thing, and I did. I thought it would be a good plan to write down whenever I forgot, and so every night I put down in my little book the bad things I had said, and—and—mamma it is just horrid! The days don't grow a bit better, and to-day is worst of all."

Jenny drew a deep sigh, and scowled at her little book. Then she said desperately, "I wish there was some way to just tie my tongue up, and keep it out of mischief."

"You need a gate keeper," said her mother, laying down the baby and taking up her sewing. "When a city is in danger from enemies, they must do something more than put sharpshooters on the walls; they guard the gates, and keep sentinels at their posts day and night, to give warning of the approach of danger."

"I try to watch," said Jenny; "I thought of it all the morning while I was dressing, and then when I came down and heard Rob fretting at Matty for taking his slate, and at Norah because there was no toast, and even at the baby for pulling his hair, I went to singing,

"Brother, thou wast mild and lovely, Gentle as a summer breeze," though I knew perfectly well that always makes Rob madder than anything else. Then he threw his book at me, and papa sent him out of the room, and I just wanted to pound myself on the head for being so mean."

"You must have a gate keeper," said her mother, more seriously than ever, and I would ask for one before I was an hour older. Your Father will give you one."

"Papa!" exclaimed Jenny. "How can he?"

But her mother opened her Bible, and turning over the leaves gave it to Jenny with her finger on a verse in Psalms. "Read that," she said; and Jenny read aloud: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth: keep the door of my lips."

There were tears in her eyes as she repeated the words, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth." "I never thought of that, mamma; somehow I expected to take care of the sin myself, but I should like a keeper. Just think, mamma, of an angel standing on guard to keep the door of my lips. Will he have a sword, I wonder?"

"I think so; the sword of 'Truth.'"

"And what will be the watchword?"

"'Peace,' I think, or 'Love;' the love that 'worketh no ill to its neighbor;' at least I would try that watchword today, and ask the keeper to challenge every word and let nothing pass without the watchword."

When Jennie went to her room that night, she found a little card pinned up over the dressing table with David's prayer written upon it, and she added it very earnestly to her own petitions. In the morning it was again before her eyes, and she went down to breakfast repeating it to herself. The first thing she saw was Johnny tormenting her beloved white kitten by trying to drive it in harness.

"You mean, cruel boy!" was upon her very lips, but the keeper drew his sword and stopped the words.

"That is not true; you know Johnny does not mean to be cruel; nothing must pass here without the watchword."

"Johnny," said Jenny, pleasantly, "do you know how the emperor came to be a donkey?"

Johnny was glad to listen to a story, and Jenny quietly released the kitten while she told him about the belief, in China, that the people who abused dumb animals would come back again after they died, and be born with the bodies of animals themselves, that they might understand just how the poor creatures suffered.

"It isn't true," said Johnny, stroking the kitten in Jenny's arms.

"No, but it shows that even the heathen believe that God will punish us if we are not kind to the helpless creatures he puts in our care."

"I guess I won't have kitty for a circus horse," said Johnny; "cats don't know much anyhow."

Rob had not recovered from the dumps, and was in a particularly exasperating mood, and once an angry retort slipped from Jenny's lips in spite of the keeper, and she apologized for it the next minute, to Rob's utter amazement; in fact, he was too much astonished to say another saucy word that morning.

At school, Jenny's temptations came thick and fast; first a temptation to evil speaking, then to unkind criticism, then to uncharitable judgment, then to tell a ludicrous story of a simple-minded old Christian, then to punish the self-conceit of Mamie Morris, by repeating what a lady had said of her, and then to make a cutting reply to a most ungenerous taunt. It seemed to Jenny, as she reviewed the day, it had been a specially hard one; and yet she was conscious that through it all the keeper had been standing at the door, and she could look back with gratitude, and not with shame.

"How about the watchman, Jenny?" asked her mother when she came home.

"He stood at his post, mamma; twice I think something slipped by without the watchword, but he killed it with his sword before it got far enough to do much mischief."

Cousin Sue heard the story, and on Jenny's next birthday sent her a lovely motto for her room; a wreath of daisies and wild roses, delicately painted as a border for the text: "Keep the door of my lips."

"I think Cousin Sue might have sent that to me," said Rob, honestly; "I am sure I need a doorkeeper more than Jenny does."

And Mamie Morris confessed to her dearest friend that she really did believe Jenny Wilder was a Christian, because she never said things to make folks uncomfortable.

"She's so funny, and so smart to think of things, that I never used to open my mouth before her without expecting to be set down, but now I like her best of any girl in school."

Mamie's friend had a pang of jealousy.

"Well, Mamie Morris, to tell the truth, I think you just need setting down once in a while. You're such an awful little puff-ball that if somebody didn't step on you, or squeeze you, you'd—you'd just burst, which shows that Mamie's friend needed a keeper of the door also.—S. S. Times.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALKS.

Dear Children:—The National W. C. T. U. convention at St. Louis, of which I told you in my last letter, is over and I hope you have heard all about the children's part in it, and know how bright and brave the Band of Hope boys and girls of St. Louis looked as they marched into the crowded room where the first evening meeting was held, waving their banners on which we read, "For God and home and native land," and sang the pretty "Welcome Song" which Miss Anna Gordon had written for them. But I am quite sure, you have not heard of something that happened during the convention which pleased me very much, so I am going to to tell you about it.

Among these boys and girls of the Prevention Army was a loyal little visiting soldier from Louisville, Ky., who wrote me a letter so long ago, that I think it is quite time she was writing another. Every day of the convention this little soldier was one of the pages that waited upon the ladies, carrying their messages, or doing any little errand they might wish, and everybody liked to look into her sweet, happy face as she passed up and down the aisles so quickly and quietly. In the "Kitchen Garden scene," of which I hope you have heard, too, our little soldier was one of the maids that helped to wash and wipe the nice tea-set the ladies gave the commander of our great army—Miss Willard.

On Sunday it rained and Carrie—(I guess I forgot to tell you that the little maiden is Carrie Leach), was so tired that she stayed at the hotel while her mamma went out to the young ladies' meeting in the afternoon. When her mamma came back Carrie surprised her very much by saying, "Mamma I have been writing some poetry." Of course mamma was very anxious to hear the poetry her little ten years old girl had written. I was fortunate enough to hear it too, and thought it was too good to keep, so begged it for you, and here it is:

VOTE FOR ST. JOHN AND DANIEL.

Who are you going to vote for Cleveland, St. John or Blaine?
I think St. John is the best one,
Because he's a temperance man.

He is a candidate now for President
A good man too you know,
I hope he'll be elected
To make our good cause grow.

He said that he would help us,
Cleveland and Blaine don't care
How soon we gain our victory,
Though the country needs repair.

Now vote for St. John and Daniel,
The better man of the two,
They will make our country better
And stand by me and you.

Isn't that pretty good and don't you think all the men in the United States had better have taken Carrie's advice? Our boys will vote for just such men I am sure, by and by. When I wrote last I thought we should know by this time who was to be our next president, but we don't know "for sure" yet.

Whoever it is, we must all be true to our colors, and when the boys and their mothers and sisters vote the "white flag of prohibition" will lead all the rest.

A PICTURE.

EMILY BURTON.

Forth from the spires and tow'rs of L——
Comes the sound of the Sabbath bell;
Softly borne on the summer air,
Like the reverent voice of prayer.
And up and down each shaded street,
Is heard the tread of childish feet,—
Little ones going to Sunday school
To learn from loving lips that rule,
Which makes of earth a paradise,—
Type of heaven beyond the skies,—
Taught long ago, by one who wept
That men in dead indifference slept.
Where sad he walked by Galilee,
Pleading for love and righteousness,
Pleading for truth and liberty,
While soothing sorrow and distress;
Teaching ever the golden rule
That's taught today in Sabbath school.

Over the beautiful town of L——
Falls the Sabbath like a spell
Of rest and quiet, peace serene,
Only deepened by the scene
Of people, robed meet for the day,
Passing along the shaded way;
Each to the church he deems the best,
Each deeming himself divinely blessed.
The preacher's cultured voice is heard
Calling attention to the word.
His well dressed flock, in cushioned pews,
Follow with him the wandering Jews,
Hear him recount their failings o'er,
The golden calf, and many more,
And all their wickedness deplore.
He shuts the book with calm delight
That if aught dims their perfect sight,
Tis but a mote; and in his prayer
Shows for the heathen loving care;
Remembers all, who like the Jews,
Strange gods and molten idols choose.
The organ peals, solemn and slow,—
The people, thankful, rise to go,
Arranging hats and fans and shawls
The while the benediction falls.

A stranger in the town of L——
Would he deem that harm could dwell?
That danger like a devil lay,
At every turn, a hidden snare,
To trip the feet and fill with care
The lightest heart? With power to place
The idiots stare upon the face,
Where intellect and reason shone
And grace and beauty had their throne?
With power to poison every pleasure,
And rob the soul of every treasure,
And last of all by vilest stealth,
To make a pauper out of wealth?
Ah! no, he could not deem that here
Such danger lurks that mothers fear
When their sons are out of sight
They shall be stricken by this blight;
That wives in agony await,
Husbands home returning late,
Lest they shall have been betrayed
To this evil, and waylaid.

Alas! the shaded walks of L——
Lead down the feet of youth to hell;
Lead them into hamlets of vice
Whose entrance fee is virtue's price,
Where every sense becomes defiled,
The calmest soul a demon wild!
And loving heart in anger turns
Against its best beloved, and spurns
With bitter hate and fiendish rage,
The cries of infancy or age.
Here murders, blasphemies, and crimes,
Disgrace the records of the times,—
Till patriots yearn with one strong hand,
To sweep the evil from the land.
Mothers bereaved, weep in dismay,
And cry for help, beseech and pray,
But law is deaf, and men are stone;
And their piteous, pleading moan
Falls dead upon the people's ear.
Oh! does the God in heaven hear?
The preacher shuns so vile a thing
As a licensed whisky ring!
'Twere better far to lash the Jews
Than a fat pastorage to lose.

False is the peace that seems to dwell,
Over the shady streets of L——,
See where from yonder cottage door,
Sad that the Sabbath comes once more,
A mother looks with mournful eyes.
Ah! what to her are sapphire skies,
Or summer airs? To all her grief
They bring not respite or relief.
Saddest day of all the seven,
When she farthest seems from heaven,
When her heart is most oppressed,
Is this Sabbath day of rest.
For with its dawn she knows will come,
Her once loved darling reeling home—
The wages of his week's work gone;
Oh! think of it, her only son,
Drunk and maddened to a fiend,
Cursing her, his truest friend;
Cursing his mother til' she weeps
And forth into the darkness creeps.
Her heart is broken! What can save
Her darling from the drunkard's grave?
Upon thy head, O thriving L——,
Be it that her home is hell.
Thy pavements with her food are bought,
Thy grounds from her clothing wrought,
Thy grounds are sewered by her fears,
Thy streets are watered by her tears.
Upon thy head the burden be
Of all her want and misery!

CHARITY AND POLITICS.

A WOMAN'S WAY.

MRS. ESTHER T. HOUSH.

It was four years ago this fall that a woman evangelist had charge of a mission church near one of our large western cities. She was chosen by the people, and they built a church for her, where she labored most effectively, gathering about her two hundred members, and conducting all the services of the sanctuary that were permitted by the rigid rules of the mother church. She did some things, too, not in the category of ministers' lives, for she was not only a home-keeper, but did with her own hands all that was necessary for the comfort of her husband and five sons.

Seven weeks before the presidential election, she began a series of meetings in another church, four miles distant from her home, preaching twice every day through the week, and in her own church twice every Sabbath. A friend furnished the conveyance, and she drove back and forth—a ride of sixteen miles a day. To one who asked how she managed to accomplish so much, she answered simply:

"Very easily. I rose early, prepared breakfast, did up the work, arranged things for dinner, went to church, preached, came home, and when dinner was over, rested and mended clothes until time for evening meeting. There was so much joy in the service, I never thought whether I was tired or not."

Three weeks before the election, after this month's incessant labor, she began nightly meetings in her own church. The political fever was at its height; every mass meeting threw new fagots on the blazing heap. Everything seemed destined to be swept away; religion, resolutions, neighborly kindliness, forgotten in the bitter party animosities. Quietly, peacefully, this brave woman kept on her way. No longer having a horse furnished—for horses and principles were alike confiscated to the campaign—she walked the mile and a half to her little church, where, however loud the yells of political men outside, the song and sermon went on. Men of all parties belonged to that church—Republicans, Democrats, Greenbackers. When a political meeting of their creed was held, the members attended. No notice was taken of their absence. By and by they began the evening at the campaign meeting and closed it in the praise meeting. At the close of the service on the Saturday evening preceding the election on Tuesday, she said in an earnest voice:

"I have held meetings every evening these three weeks for a purpose. You have listened to many political speeches; now I will make you one."

The men looked from one to another with an expression of, "I wish she wouldn't." But though she rightly interpreted the meaning of the glances, she continued:

"I know that you represent all political creeds, yet you have never heard a word from me respecting those beliefs. It is not necessary, to make you a political speech, that I should tell you what I believe in regard to politics. There are subjects of more vital importance to me than who is elected president of the United States; interests at stake in these times of election, more valuable than any you have heard discussed at any mass meeting you have attended."

A look of relief went about the room, and nods were exchanged as much as to say, "Thought she wouldn't go back on us."

She stood silent a moment, and her tones were full of tender feeling:

"There are many reformed men among you. I know how hard you are trying to be true to your pledge amid all the temptations spread about you. Of you, I make one loving request: Go to the polls on Tuesday like the Christian men you are! Vote as you believe God, whom you serve, would have you vote! Don't stop to talk! The time for talking is past; the time for action has come. To you who are bitter in your animosities towards your opponents, I have an added request to make: The morning of election day, read carefully and prayerfully the thirteenth chapter of I. Corinthians! In the spirit of this blessed truth, go to the polls like free men and cast your ballot!"

"I never heard such a political speech as that," they said, as they crowded about her to say good-night.

When the election was over, this dear woman counted her flock, not one was missing. Many said to her, "I didn't know politics could be so much like religion; that chapter on charity kept coming in my mind all the time I was at the polls, and when Neighbor Brown cast in a ballot that killed mine, I could have shaken hands with him anyway!"

Could such a spirit prevail, how soon might it be that vox populi, vox Dei!—Woman's Century.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Nov. 23. | Fourth Quarter, No. 8. [1884.

Topic: PROVERBS OF SOLOMON.

Lesson Text: Prov. 1: 1–16.

Golden Text: The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. Prov. 1: 7.

Time: B. C. 990.

1. This Book of Proverbs is believed to have been written by Solomon in the height of his wisdom and loyalty to God, before his heart was estranged by his heathen wives from a pure faith. They are full of better than earthly lore. As one of the wise-hearted had said, "They are coined in another mint. They are not of the earth, earthy; but they came down from heaven."

2. In the golden text Solomon strikes the key-note of the book. He begins at the beginning. He goes down to the foundation of the character and the life. He searched beneath the results for the cause,—leaving the foliage and the branches, and finding the root of the supporting stem, where is the determining force that decides the form and extent of the growth that follows.

3. The foundation upon which he builds a noble character is laid in a spirit of reverence. "Obedience is better than sacrifice." Said one who had gone astray, and repented; "I am now willing to obey the Savior's command, 'Follow me.'" He had been a leader of men, and in the pride of his own wisdom had fallen into snares, and had been taught humility by the things he suffered. A nation must sometimes learn in the same way. Prosperity does not teach the deep lessons found in the school of sorrow; and trials that test men's souls, strengthen their purest principles, while they burn away the dross.

4. In the enticement of sinners so vividly portrayed in verses 11 and 14 of the lesson, we could almost believe the language written for the liquor seller of today; not that he would dare to show his fearful business in such a light to his victim, but it might well stand for the great associations that meet in fully organized power to further the deathtraffic. These think to "find all precious substance," and to fill their houses "with spoil;" but "they have sown the wind and they shall reap the whirlwind," is the word of our God, which endureth forever.

5. The exhortation comes at the last of the lesson, "refrain thy foot from their path," again emphasizing the importance of the beginning. The first step in the downward way is the fatal step, in most cases. So the fear of the Lord, taken as the beginning of knowledge, leads on to the heavenly heights where we shall "know as we are known."

STAND THEREFORE.

No great work was ever wrought out in feebleness and fear. John Bunyan's spirit was no prisoner, though his body lay for years in Bedford jail. Persecuted for the truth's sake, he wrote within the walls of his prison-house the story of his immortal pilgrim, his conflicts and final victory. None but a free soul could have created such a character. In him the promise was verified, "The truth shall make you free."

Opportunity is often a severe test of principle, as well as an opening for action. The advance legions in the army of progress, have ever been obliged to hew their way through the pathless wilderness, and to brave the threatening flood. Every work that has diverged from the established order of things, has had its baptism of fire, and blood, and tears. While the prevailing conservatism of mankind forms a needed bulwark of safety in public affairs, for avoiding aggressive evil, yet it is often a great barrier in the way of introducing the good. But this very conservatism may cherish within its motionless limits the elements of corruption, like a stagnant pool that gathers impurity and breaths out death to its neighborhood.

"Falsehoods which we spurn today,
Were the truths of long ago;
Let the dead boughs fall away,
Fresher shall the living grow."

Those who would make the world better are called to a warfare "not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Wherefore they are exhorted to put on the whole armour of God, that they may be "able to withstand in the evil day," and having done all, to "stand." There comes a time when we must abide results. When, having obeyed the deepest convictions of loyalty to the truth, there remains but to endure with courage whatever of censure and hatred that obedience may have called out. Poetry has embalmed in undying eloquence the memory of the six hundred at Balaklava,—those disciplined soldiers of whom it is declared as a supreme test of their brave obedience,—

"Theirs not to question why,
Theirs but to do and die."

Can we come with less devotion? We have not suffered for the truth yet "unto blood," but it is written of those who overcame the great Accuser, that the victory was won "by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death."

We need the wisdom of the serpent, and the harmlessness of the dove. Coldness of friends and sneers of enemies,—while they hurt to the inmost, quivering heart,—must not separate us from the essential truth so hardly won, so much dearer than happiness, or life itself, as this life counts. When the crisis of decision came to Esther, she recognized her opportunity and her danger also, but was willing to abide by the results,—"If I perish, I perish." This woman was the pivot upon which was balanced the fate of her people. She would not be the queen in the great drama of history that she stands today, if she had not attained to that freedom of spirit which led her to choose death rather than life, unless life could be noble and true. She dared not deny herself. She could not be disloyal to her people, and to the undoubted call of God as to her individual duty.

If any self-interest, any lower allegiance than that due to the Highest Himself, and to the purest ideal revealed by His spirit, any tenderness that makes us untrue and unloving to those who need us most,—the great multitude of the lost whom Jesus came to save,—if any of these things "move" us, then are we not in a state of the truest freedom, and our cup will be bitter when we come to the dregs presented by the hand of Death.

OUR NATIONAL ORGANIZERS.

The corps of national organizers has been increased and the national president placed at its head. Mrs. Chapin, while retaining her position as superintendent of southern work is also placed on the list of organizers as she comes north every year. Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, of Boston, one of our most gifted and acceptable "national women" is also added to the list, also Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Indiana, an excellent speaker and worker. Miss Henrietta G. Moore, the pioneer in this department, retains the position she has so grandly filled. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt ranks here, too, though from the broader character of her next year's work, she is designated "Superintendent of Reconnoissance for World's W. C. T. U." Mrs. Mary F. Shields, of Colorado, the beloved president of that state, agrees to "mother up" New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Wyoming. Mrs. Perkins and Mrs. Cooley are among our truest women, and with their names the list is complete for 1885. A by-law was adopted at St. Louis, making the national organizers ex officio members of the annual meeting, and their standing the same as that of national superintendents, the term "Organizer" being employed to designate, more specifically, their duties.

As our report for the St. Louis convention was made up from the stenographer's notes, this will have to account for some errors as to language, which we correct in this number. The following is the resolution offered by Mrs. Callanan, of Iowa, as a substitute for the one offered by the committee:

Resolved, That in order to utilize the political preferences and individual associations of all members of our unions, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will avoid partisan affiliation with political parties, even while co-operating with any or all of them to advance our cause of constitutional and statutory prohibition in state and nation."

Mrs. Callanan's intended remark preceding the presenting of this resolution regarding the Prohibition Party was as follows: "A large part of the party is composed of the friends of liquor dealers," etc. In the excitement of earnest discussion it is easy for both speech and hearing to become confused. No slightest lapse of the "gentle amenities" has been intended toward any of our faithful friends and workers.

Permission has been granted to the New Hampshire State Temperance Union to deposit in the corner stone of the new government building, soon to be erected at Concord, the signature of every child in New Hampshire who will consent to sign a temperance pledge. Blank pledges, printed on the thinnest bank-note paper, that they may occupy as little space as possible, will be circulated through the 236 towns and cities of the state, and having been returned to Concord, will finally be deposited as above mentioned. Each child whose signature is secured, will be presented with a memorial card, ornamented with a small engraving of the building as it is to be.

A prophecy comes ringing down the lines from one of our standard-bearers: "Could the mad-men who hang and burn St. John in effigy look down the future, they would see their children building a monument to his memory. The martyr of today will be the hero of tomorrow."

NEW BOOKS.

A very comprehensive work of 600 pages now passing through its second edition in England, is The Foundation of Death, by Axel Gustafson. The author is a Swede by birth, a graduate of Harvard University, and has won high distinction as a thorough student of world politics, and as a political writer of marked insight and acumen, he having written articles for the Boston and New York dailies, as well as for the North American Review, International Review, National Quarterly, and Atlantic Monthly, under the nom de plume of "Carl Bremer." The drinking habits of the English people and their poverty, led him to examine the drink question, which he approached with the notion that there was probably a safe dietetic use of alcohol, but in the course of his investigation he was driven to the opposite conclusion. His own conversion was so radical that he determined to place before the public the facts which, in his own mind, clearly demonstrated the value and necessity of total abstinence. The alcohol literature of all lands has been laid under tribute in this effort, and over 3,000 works in various languages have been examined and quoted. The topics treated are:

1. Drinking Among the Ancients.
2. The History of the Discovery of Distillation.
3. Preliminaries to the Study of Modern Drinking.
4. Adulteration.
5. Physiological Results; or, the Effects of Alcohol on the Physical Organs and Functions.
6. Pathological Results; or, Diseases caused by Alcohol.
7. Moral Results.
8. Heredity; or, the Curse entailed on Descendants by Alcohol.
9. Therapeutics; or, Alcohol as a Medicine.
10. Social Results.
11. The Origin and Causes of Alcoholism.
12. Specious Reasonings concerning the Use of Alcohol.
13. What can be done?

It is a matter of gratitude that a text-book of such high authority and character has been placed within the reach of all, by its American publishers, Guin & Heath: Boston, New York, and Chicago.

A fascinating, sketchy picture of the injustice legally done to "Settlers on the Soil" is the new book, "Driven from Sea to Sea," by C. C. Post, editor of the Chicago Express.

It is no fictitious tale, as ample foot notes verify the most appalling facts of the book. "It is the unexpected that happens" is an adage never more completely fulfilled than in this story of an honest settler, driven first from his home in the east to seek a fortune, otherwise denied, in the "diggings" of the Pacific. A corporation of capitalists get hold of the mine, and the poor fellow is crowded out in a way that has grown familiar. From this on, every attempt at bread-winning meets similar defeat through a system of legalized robbery that is dfficult to realize in a free country. Land grabbing and land monopoly will get a merited blow from this graphic and well authenticated story. A new vein has been opened in literature, or an old one re-opened, as was the case in the publication of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." May the new venture do as much toward breaking down the tyranny of unjustly amassed power and wealth, as did that wonderfully pathetic appeal of Uncle Tom toward the removal of slavery's curse.

A Boy's Workshop, with plans and designs for indoor and outdoor work, by a boy and his friends, with an introduction by Henry Randall Waite, comes to us from D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. Every boy has a natural and inborn desire to make something; a knife, a hammer or a gimlet is to him a source of untold happiness, and one often finds occasion to regret, while looking over work accomplished by juvenile fingers, that so many born mechanics should degenerate into dry goods clerks or second class professional men. Most of these boys exercise their ingenuity without any instructions. Few parents think it worth while to show them how to drive a nail straight, how to construct their toys, or how to make those little repairs which would not only delight them to accomplish, but would be a genuine domestic service. Here is the workshop all ready to the boy's demand, and the parent's need, even if it be an unacknowledged one. It will teach any bright boy, who has whittling ability, how to make poles for his mother's curtains, a wooden tent for summer camping, a fernery for his sister, how to bind his Youth's Companion, Wide Awake or St. Nicholas, and even how to photograph his favorite dog.

The Intermediate Text Book.—The long promised book is now ready. The Temperance Physiology for intermediate and common schools, adapted to pupils from ten to thirteen years of age, the second in our series of text-books, with special reference to alcohol and other narcotics. This book, treating the subject with great simplicity, begins with alcohol, and ends with tobacco, while woven through the whole is the story of their work of ruin on living tissues. It has only enough physiology to make this intelligible. Other matters of general hygiene are given a relatively important place. We are sure our friends will thank the publishers for the large, open type, the fine paper, the illustrations, the handsome cover, all making the book "a thing of beauty" for the children. The publishers are A. S. Barnes & Co., 111 Williams street, New York city, N. Y., who also publish the Hygieneic Physiology for High Schools. It will be necessary to wait a few weeks longer for the primary text-book. Mrs. Hunt desires that local superintendents of scientific instruction should send at once for a copy of this new book, asking of their respective school boards its immediate introduction.

The Chicago & Northwestern railway, which requires total abstinence on the part of employes, gives example as well as precept. The new general passenger agent is Mr. R. S. Hair, with whom our Helen L. Hood has worked most cordially in years agone, in the order of Good Templars. I am glad to see teetotalers in office, "on the rail" as well as in the government. Dr. W. H. Stennett, who leaves the position now filled by Mr. Hair, becomes assistant general manager, of the great system of railway service so admirably conducted, and Mr. H. C. Wicker its general traffic manager.

Miss Narcissa E. White, state superintendent of scientific instruction in Pennsylvania, is spending some time in Col. Parkers's Normal school, at Normalville, Ill., in order to perfect herself in new methods of education as applied to temperance work, and will soon be prepared to enter on her future work with greater earnestness and success than ever.

* * *

Some unknown friend has sent Miss Willard a tin case containing elegant specimens of pampas grass which now adorn her home parlors. Hoping that this grateful acknowledgment may reach the eye of the giver, it is made through our columns.

The old adage, "a rose by any other name would be as sweet," is rejected by Mrs. Mary T. Burt, of New York, who desires to name her rose herself. Our stenographer reported her part in the debate of Saturday, at the St. Louis convention not quite verbatim, and we give the sentence as it was uttered: "Arrayed against it are two great parties which are honey-combed through and through with the liquor interest."

* * *

A waft from Idaho! May the message be a prophecy of the good time coming, as we believe it is a true expression of the reverential earnestness which is the basis of all this W. C. T. U. work! "If we temperance women and prohibitionists ever are successful in a national election, don't let us 'torch-light procession over our victory, but each go to his own place of worship, and there sing the doxology so loudly that it can be heard round the world."

On Duty.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

REPORT OF ANNUAL MEETING.

The second annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Southern California, has followed close upon that of its elder sisters, in the northern part of the state. While we cannot boast the age, experience or number of unions of our dear northern relative, we do believe we have something of the same zeal and whole-heartedness for the cause, and that our growth during this, the first year of our existence, has been a vigorous one.

Our well-beloved president, Miss Hathaway, being east for the summer, the great burden of preparing for the convention fell upon the shoulders of Mrs. Harris, our vice-president, whose energies flagged not, and who was up to the time for all occasions and emergencies, spite of her poor health. The Lord seemed to uphold her with His right hand.

Our convention opened Monday evening, October 6, at the First Presbyterian Church, of Los Angeles. Flowers, palms and smilax in beautiful profusion and arrangement, adorned the church.

Mrs. Forsythe, president of the Los Angeles union, extended a hearty welcome to the delegates in behalf of the local union of the city, and Mr. E. S. Cameron, of Colton, responded.

Rev. S. A. Seward, of Ventura, was then introduced, who gave an address on "Seventy Years Progress in Temperance," showing for our encouragement how public sentiment in relation to temperance, has been steadily growing and broadening. He closed with a noble tribute to the women of the W. C. T. U., and its grandly organized plan of work, with its lines reaching out in all directions, and recognizing all forces.

This eloquent speaker was followed by the Rev. H. H, Rice, of Sacramento, upon the wine question, who gave us quite a sparkling account of a winery in this vicinity, which he had just been visiting. The way in which he described how the Chinaman puts his foot into it, brought down the house. It might be a good thing for those who delicately sip our California wines, and enjoy their charming aroma, to know that it is the flavor of Chinaman, in numerous cases, over which they are smacking their lips. "Where ignorance is bliss," etc.

I must not forget to mention the delightful music we had. Our national anthem many of us heard for the first time. It is truly a grand battle cry for "God and home and native land.

Tuesday, 9:30 a. m., the convention opened with devotional exercises, and in this hour of prayer, as well as in the Bible reading and consecration meetings which followed during the session, there was much of that true feeling of Christian humility, which recognizes "that our help cometh from above," that the battle is not ours, but God's.

When the roll was called, forty members responded. The corresponding secretary reported a large increase in the number of our unions, there being twenty-six local organizations, with a membership of 668. The treasurer's report showed a healthy financial condition.

I cannot begin to tell you all the good things we had and enjoyed, for the want of time.

The reports of our superintendents showed a beginning in various lines of work, and were full of promise for the future. Our discussions of constitutional prohibition and the wine question indicated which way the wind is blowing here, and gave us some faint glimpse of the magnitude of our work. We are peculiarly situated with regard to this great issue, and will have very many prejudices and interests to battle with, unknown to you in the east.

We were greatly privileged in having with us Mrs. P. D. Brown, president of Northern California. She is a most indefatigable worker, and the mantle of her zeal seems ample enough to cover a multitude with its folds.

CONNECTICUT.

FAIRFIELD COUNTY CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of Fairfield county, held their semi-annual convention, at South Norwalk, Sept. 17.

A devotional meeting was held at 9:30 a. m. conducted by Miss Weed, of Norwalk. The meeting was well sustained and interesting.

At 10 a. m. a business meeting was held, the president, Mrs. Palmer in the chair. An address of welcome was given by Mrs. Barber, of South Norwalk; Miss Lamphear, of Meriden, made a very graceful reply. Reports were made from the various unions of the county indicating six months of active work. One new local union of twenty members was reported.

Rev. Mr. Pegg, gave a very encouraging address to the union ladies. Rev. Mr. Hibbard spoke briefly of the necessity of church temperance work, and gave a short history of the temperance movement in his own denomination (Episcopal). Rev. Mr. Ross also made a short address. By request of the president, Mr. Heath, of Danbury, spoke at some length on the evils of the "High license" system. Mrs. Whillhelm, of Danbury, then gave an interesting report of the work among the Germans of that place, after which two dollars were appropriated from the country treasury to purchase German tracts for general distribution. The meeting was then adjourned, and the audience invited to the lecture room of the church, where refreshments were served. The business meeting was resumed at 1:30 p. m. By invitation of the president, Miss Lamphear read a very entertaining paper on The Union Signal. The president then called for testimonies in its favor, and many subscribers spoke very highly of its merit. Thirty subscriptions were obtained in the audience. The session closed with the question box, presided over by Mrs. Wing, of East Bridgeport. One of the questions was, "Shall we cease our efforts after election?" Mrs. Wing made answer that as "Eternal vigilance," was "the price of liberty," it was also the price of success. Work, for other elections are coming.

Mrs. Buell, our state secretary, arriving near the close of the season, made a short address.

At 7 p. m, the union ladies formed in procession and proceeded to Music Hall, where they listened to an address by Col. Bain. The hall was well filled. The subject was, "The American home against the American saloon." Much enthusiasm was manifest at the mention of St. John and Daniel.

The lecture—what shall I say of that? What can be said of Col. Bain's lectures by one who has heard them? If many such speakers as he were in the field, it would hasten the joyful day of Prohibition.

KANSAS.

I have long thought of penning some items of my constant journeyings for The Union Signal, but constant travel and an exciting campaign has prevented.

I came to this state about the middle of April and have been actively engaged since. Everywhere I have been welcomed by warm hearts, hospitable homes and crowded houses. Kansas is up and doing. Prohibition succeeds as well as we could reasonably expect. The interior of the state has very successfully closed up saloons even in large places like Lawrence and Topeka. It is along the frontier of the territory and Missouri lines that open saloons are found.

Everywhere I find the people greatly interested and where there is no organized W. C. T. U. they are all ready and anxious to organize.

I think if four active women could be found ready to give their undivided time and attention to the work, that successful unions could be organized in every town of five hundred inhabitants in the state.

I have just returned from attending the state union held at Leavenworth, and was well pleased with the proceedings. It was well attended by an intelligent class of women who appeared to comprehend the importance of woman's work.

The chief attraction to me was the presence of "our queen," Frances Willard, whom to see is to reverence. I am grateful that heaven has given us the light of her wisdom, to lead the van, and establish a system of organized effort that will develop the sex up and out of past ignorance and darkness, to a high and glorified position on earth, and benefit all humanity, to a purer, nobler standpoint.

MICHIGAN.

PROHIBITION POLE RAISING ON ONE OF THE FARMS OF MICHIGAN.

One of the main corners of the beautiful little city of Lansing, runs direct from the capitol grounds to the Agricultural college, a distance of three and a half miles. About midway on this pleasant drive is a brick farm house, in which live three single people, a brother and two sisters, Adam, Jennie and Sally Foster. They are Methodists, and of course prohibitionists. Sally Foster is known in all the camp meetings of Michigan, and has been connected with the W. C. T. U. from its beginning here.

On the 16th of October there was a gathering at this Foster farm. The lawn was full of people, and the roadway was lined with carriages. For many days Adam and his friends had laid aside their farm work and bent their energies in securing a tree from a distance, nearly 100 feet high, and had prepared it for the occasion. The Prohibitionists of Lansing and vicinity were invited. A fine St. John and Daniel banner was attached, and with suitable ceremonies this mammoth pole was planted in front of this farm house, a memorial for the hundreds of passers by, an educator to the people of the capital at the west, and to the students who throng the college at the east.

There are women as well as voters in Michigan, who hope and believe that the N. W. C. T. U. will not withdraw its support from the only party that has a principle to live and work for.

L. Anna Ballard, M. D.

NEW YORK.

Brooklyn.—On the evening of October 21st the W. C. T. U. No. 5, of Brooklyn, N. Y., E. D. held a public mass meeting in the South Fourth Street Presbyterian church. Some time before 8 o'clock the large building was filled with an intelligent and appreciative audience, one-half being voters. Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, of Boston, was the speaker, and for more than an hour she held the people with persuasive argument, pointed illustrations, and pathetic appeals for prohibition.

Mrs. McLaughlin was at her best, and one of the facts most apparent in her lecture was that prohibition is in the plan of God for the redemption of this world unto Himself. Some of the good people took exceptions to the fact that she did not mention the name of Mr. St. John. This is not always necessary, so long as there is no other party offering prohibition, or anything approximating it. Mrs. McLaughlin gave no uncertain sound on that point.

On account of the illness of the president, Mrs. M. E. Hartt, president of the county union, presided, and Mrs. Joseph Knapp sang two of her best gospel songs. So ended one of the most representative temperance meetings ever held in this city.

MAINE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY CONVENTION.

By an oversight of the printer a part of the report of this convention was omitted from the last issue.

The resolutions adopted included the following:

Whereas, The children are the hope of our cause and of our country, and their interest demand our especial care and attention; and,

Whereas, Our schools are the places where our children receive many of their most permanent impressions, and the law of our state provides that the teacher be required to train the pupil in principles of sobriety, virtue, etc., and regarding the intelligence and morality of the citizen as the basis of freedom for our government, and of permanency for its institutions, therefore,

Resolved, That we show our care for the children, and our sympathy with the teachers and our appreciation of their work by appointing two ladies, from each union as a committee to visit the schools from time to time, as each respective union may direct, this committee to be chosen at a meeting of the different unions, each for itself.

Resolved, That we in the name of "God and native land," having entered into this work with a purpose never to cease our efforts while this life shall last, or until the traffic of strong drink shall be driven from our land, nothing short of prohibition will satisfy us.

Resolved That we appreciate the importance of a wider circulation for our national paper, The Union Signal, and will endeavor to raise a club of ten subscribers in our community in addition to the copies already taken.

Mrs. C. Jackson, Sec. Eastport W. C. T. U.

Vassalboro.—My first number of The Union Signal has just come. I am just delighted with it. In looking over "News from the field" I find no letter from Maine. You have heard of our convention by way of Miss Willard's charming "lead pencil letters." Are we not justifiably proud of our state and of the noble men and women, who so many years have been working in the temperance field slowly winning their way to the goal which has been reached this September. The good seed has been scattered broadcast this year, even the remotest parts of our state have been roused by the temperance call.

I would write you of our little union here and what we did to help on the work; of the prayer meetings we held, and how we trimmed up the old town house with mottoes and flowers and pinned button-hole bouquets on the men's coats—who at first look around as though this was an awful innovation, but when being invited, helped tie bouquets on the stove pipe. We did not stay to pass around the "yes" votes "we folded our tents like the Arabs and as silently stole away," but I fear my letter is too long now. The motto our president tried to impress upon us at the convention was multum in parvo.

MINNESOTA.

FRANCIS AND EDWARD MURPHY IN ST. PAUL.

The W. C. T. U. of St. Paul invited Mr. Francis Murphy and his son, Thomas E. Murphy, to come to this wrecked city and hold gospel temperance meetings. Mr. Francis Murphy reached this city August 29, and opened the first meeting in the Grand Opera house Sunday, August 31, at 3 p. m. Rev. Dr. Dana, of the Congregational church, introduced our speaker in a most happy manner to the largest audience ever gathered in St. Paul up to that time, to listen to a temperance speech. Mr. Murphy was received with a thunderous applause, after which he held his listeners spellbound for over an hour. At the close, three hundred and fifty persons signed the pledge.

Monday, September 1, Dr. McLarence, of the Central Presbyterian church, gave us the use of his church for our first week's meetings and the Dr. made us feel so much at home and the church did so much for us that we felt almost sorry when our meetings had grown so large that we found it necessary to go to the city hall in order to make room for the crowds that flocked to these meetings. Hundreds had signed the pledge at the end of the first week and the interest had increased until we found that nothing but Market Hall would accommodate the people, so we had to leave this comfortable little house of God, and go to the hall, and while we temperance workers went in at one door, the empty beer casks were being rolled out of the back door, as the hall was used all the week by the Germans.

On Sunday, September 7, we had the Opera House again. Mr. Thomas E. Murphy was expected to assist his father at 3 p. m., but owing to the heavy rains the train was detained and Mr. Francis Murphy addressed a larger audience than the previous Sunday. This was a day long to be remembered in St. Paul; wise folks said, "Murphy can't get a crowd today," but he did. The streets were packed with people and every saloon in the city was decorated and hundreds of Germans were parading the streets with seventeen brass bands discoursing music, as the people were filling the opera house to listen to temperance, and our beautiful opera house was filled from every side and our meeting was undisturbed by the paraders. Every one was so well entertained that they soon forgot the disappointment of Mr. Thomas Murphy's delay.

Monday we opened our meetings at Market Hall and all the week Mr. Murphy and son delighted their hearers and won many drunkards, who are today blessing God that these two good men were sent to heal their wounds. In this hall we reached all classes and at the end of two weeks we found that public sentiment demanded another week, so on we went. But as the city refused to give us the use of the hall we found $30 per night was more than we could afford, so we were forced to go into the churches. Our good Methodist brother, Dr. Marshall, came to help our and we continued our meetings one week longer, closing with a grand and still larger meeting in the opera house Sunday. For three weeks these two good men labored in our city with the finest results ever gained in this northwestern country. They organized a gospel temperance union during their stay; 3,875 persons signed the pledge, and forty-three bolts of blue ribbon were used.

The W. C. T. U. owe a debt to Mr. Murphy and his son they can never repay; they have opened the doors in this great city and let into every corner a bright hope for temperance work; they have not only made homes happy by healing the wounds of the drunkard but they have made a pathway for those who have so long wandered through the city trying to find some path to lead them to successful work in the cause so dear to our hearts. St. Paul has passed out of the darkness into light. We find in our efforts many ready to help us where in days past we could find not even hope.

The daily papers of this city have been most kind and we have been so gratified to find at each meeting the courteous reporters prompt at their places. It is impossible to mention all our good friends that have come to us during these meetings, but I must tell you that for four Sundays the Grand Opera House was given us free of charge by W. F. Davidson, one of St. Paul's noble business men, and a grand temperance worker as well; to him is due much of our success. Mr. Murphy and his son have left us, but not until their friends were numbered by thousands. Many men who have been drunkards for years have signed the pledge and are sober today. Wives and husbands long separated are united and made happy. Nothing has ever awakened such good feelings in the community as these gospel temperance meetings. I trust they may be kept up in this state until every town and county has felt their softening influence.

NEW JERSEY.

TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The state W. C. T. U. met in executive session, at No. 1 Union Hall, at 2:30 p. m., Oct. 7. The evening service, of prayer and testimony, led by Mrs. J. T. Ellis, was one of thrilling interest and gave the key note to our tenth annual convention.

Wednesday 9 a. m.—Love Feast, led by Mrs. A. C. White, of Peterson. The Holy Spirit was present with power. A poor drunkard accompanied one of our ladies into this praying circle, and as we paused, came forward and signed the pledge, remained all day in the meetings and was placed in charge of a new convert who would aid him to resist the tempter. It was a solemn hour and its influence was felt throughout each session.

At 10:30 convention called to order by the president, Mrs. S. J. C. Downs. A large number of visitors and delegates were present, representing sixteen counties.

Address of welcome by Mrs. S. I. Blanchard, president of Newark, No. 1 W. C. T. U. Mrs. B. spoke of the beauty of Newark, its fine churches, etc., and said that notwithstanding all, this city was accursed, because of its legion of saloons, with open doors ready to drag humanity down to the drunkard's grave. She alluded to the Prohibition convention of the preceding day and of the good work that club were doing and although women could not vote, they could talk and pray. Her right royal welcome was responded to by Miss Mary W. Osborn, of Middletown. Mrs. Pearson, of England, made a short address, in which she said, that temperance was pre-eminently a woman's cause. Woman is the dispenser of the social amenities. How many times have governments investigated the cause of drunkenness? Is there anyone here who does not know the cause of drunkenness? It is drink!

The afternoon session was intensely interesting to its closing hour. In the evening, mass meeting was held in Halsey street M. E. church and notwithstanding the rain there was a grand gathering of courageous cold water advocates. Mrs. Mary R. Denman, the first state president, gave an interesting outline of the temperance work for the past ten years, after which Mrs. Pearson gave one of her powerful arguments in favor of total abstinence and prohibition.

Wednesday, 9, a. m. Devotional exercises led by Mrs. Mickel, of Millville. Convention called to order at 10:30 by President Downs. Committee on revision of the constitution reported, and the discussion on the changes proposed occupied the morning. In the afternoon, immediately after the devotional exercises, the convention proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year. Mrs. S. J. C. Downs, of Ocean Grove, was re-elected president. Mrs. Mary C. Nobles, of Atlantic Highlands, vice president; Mrs. J. T. Ellis, of Flemington, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Emma Bourne, of Newark, recording secretary; and Mrs. E. A. Mickle, of Millville, treasurer. So we enter upon our eleventh year of aggressive work against intoxicants, with our own old army officers, ready for any and every duty. Mrs. Hammer reported juvenile work, shewing what had been accomplished in her department and stated that 500 children in Newark attended temperance schools.

Mrs. Seabrook, of Keyport, reported legislative work. Mrs. Clark, of Jersey City, reported for superintendent of Bible reading. Reports were also received from superintendents of hygiene, heredity, young peoples work, Sunday school, temperance lessons in schools, literature, relation of capital and labor to temperance, influencing the press, evangelistic work, parlor meetings, unfermented wines, periodicals, state and county fairs, colored people, railroad rates, and prison and station houses.

Delegates were appointed to National W. C. T. U. convention to be held in St. Louis, Oct. 24. The state semi-annual W. C. T. U. will meet in convention at Salem, in April 1885. The annual convention to be held in October at Trenton. Second evening, mass meeting held in St. Paul's M. E. church, addressed by Mrs. Pearson. Third evening, mass meeting in Clinton ave. church, addressed by Mrs. McLaughlin, of Boston, Mass., and Mrs. J. T. Ellis. The delegates and friends were grandly entertained by the citizens and W. C. T. U's. of Newark. One or two conversions occurred during the convention. Superintendents of departments were re-appointed by state executive committee.

CALIFORNIA.

PASSADENA.—The Passadena W. C. T. U. recently passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we rejoice in the action of the Pittsburgh convention in nominating Messrs. St. John and Daniel as candidates for president and vice-president of these United States.

And in answer to the call of our national president, Miss Willard, the W. C. T. U. of Passadena, California, responds: We "dare to follow," we dare not "to falter."

Resolved, That we approve the action of the Prohibitionists of California in forming a separate party; and that we desire to aid them to the full extent of our ability.

Resolved, That in our official organ, The Western Wave we gratefully recognize that we have "both sword and shield."

It is a paper we desire to see in every household in Southern California. Behold they that hate it shall be clothed with shame, the dwelling place of the wicked shall come to naught, neither will God help the evil doers.

Resolved, That while alcohol per se is a useful though deadly poison, neither wine, brandy nor any other intoxicating drink is needed for any purpose whatever.

PENNSYLVANIA.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The Pennsylvania state union held its annual convention in Harrisburg, Oct. 15, 16, 17. I was directed to prepare report of the same for THE UNION SIGNAL. I did my best to keep notes by the way. I hope some other victim will try next year to keep track of what is going on, gather up the gone on, and stand ready to clutch the going to go on, all in one narrow moment, meanwhile taking subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL. (yes, and bless the good women I received 34 names!) No, on the whole I hope they'll let me do it! It was particularly jolly. Low be it spoken, however, the convention notes had a rather neglected childhood. I reached home Saturday night, brim full of the good things abounding in our own convention, with its records of how the Pennsylvania Dutch and Dutchesses are arising and shining; and I left home for the National Monday night. And now, on this blessed Monday morning, the convention is not over, and I have attended every session; so you see "my vision is limited" as to the time in which the state notes could have been elaborated.

But there was a convention, the tenth annual, and it was a grand one. We inundated Harrisburg—they are used to cold water freshets—about 280 strong. (If sister Ellen Watson wants to rise and correct my figures, "Barkis is willin'")—280, be the same more or less. We met in Grace M. E. Church, Mrs. Frances L. Swift in the chair. Our recording secretary, Mrs. J. R. Jones, has been prevented, by long continued and serious illness, from assuming her duties in the convention; her place was filled by Mrs. Mair, of Allegheny.

The devotional hours throughout our sessions were marked by great fervor and earnestness, and were conducted by excellent leaders. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith was there, and there's no use in wasting adjectives and adverbs, in telling how much her presence was worth. By the way, you would better pronounce her name Whi-tall, and not "Whittle," as I did, or she may ask you to do it.

We were welcomed to Harrisburg by Dr. Agnes Kemp in a spirited, pleasant address, to which Mrs. T. B. Hoover, of Franklin, gracefully responded.

Our president's annual address was one which those who know Mrs. Swift had a right to expect. She has a heart keenly alive to the evils of intemperance, an eye and ear alert to catch all signs of the times, and to utilize all available sources of power, and she possesses an untiring industry in working for the interests of the union.

The address recounted good work done all along the line during the past year, and set forth the need of still greater effort in time to come. The submission by the legislature of a constitutional amendment to the popular vote, and the endeavor to obtain a law making scientific temperance instruction obligatory in all public schools in the state, were set forth as the two great objective points of this year's work.

The afternoon session was made pleasant by the presence of Rev. Dr. Stevenson, president of the National Reform Association, who made an address and delivered a message of good cheer and sympathy with our state union from his own organization.

The regular business of the session commenced with the reading of the corresponding secretary's report, rendered in her own lively, spirited style. Mrs. Watson has a happy faculty of rapping delinquents over the knuckles for their sins of omission, their vagueness and their delays. Nevertheless, she rejoices in the progress of the past year. There are twenty-eight counties organized. During the twelve months past 180 new local unions have been organized. The reports from counties are a real inspiration. They tell of untiring, effective work from women who are enlisted for the war. The prevailing sentiment of the speakers is that of resolute will to pursue the work regardless of obstacles, and with firm faith in God and ultimate victory.

Venango county reported 500 paying members, which entitles them to send one delegate to the national convention.

The treasurer's report shows receipts $1,323.20; disbursements $730.16; in treasury $556.06.

At Thursday's session, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston, was gladly greeted by the convention. They also received with joy Mrs. J. R. Jones, our recording secretary, of whom mention has been made, and who is bound to us by the triple cord of faithful service, grand qualities of mind and heart, and the tender tie of a great affliction.

The superintendent of scientific temperance, Mrs. Joseph D. Weeks, read her annual report. A great deal of work has been done during the past year in "making public sentiment" concerning the work of this department.

Petitions are being largely distributed and signed by voters, asking the next legislature for a bill making "Instruction on the influence of stimulants and narcotics" compulsory in the public schools of the state.

Mrs. Hunt gave the convention a graphic and highly interesting account of the methods pursued in New York to obtain a similar law. In speaking of text books she strongly endorsed the work on physiology by J. Dorman Steele, M. D.

In a short, energetic talk Mrs. H. W. Smith urged upon unions the importance of Mrs. Hunt's presence in the state this year to aid in the scientific temperance instruction work and exhorted them to be ready to second her efforts.

The convention was greatly shocked to hear that one of the delegates, Miss Lizzie Wallace, of Newville, Cumberland county, had just met with a sudden death at the station. Going there to meet a friend, she was struck by an engine, killed instantly, and a Mr. Foster of Harrisburg, who tried to rescue her was terribly injured.

Mrs. William Patten, superintendent of Y. W. C. T. U. work, presented her annual report. Oil City society she calls the "banner union." They have raised the sum of $580 00.

Very honorable mention was made of a large number of local unions that have done varied and valuable work.

At this point it was announced that the funeral of Miss Lizzie Wallace would take place from the Motter House, and a delegation of twelve ladies volunteered to attend the services.

Miss N. E. White offered an amendment to the constitution, raising the annual fee of local unions to sixty cents. Held over for one year according to constitution.

Mrs. I. Colgrove, of Corry, read her report on evangelistic temperance work.

Mrs. H. W. Smith gave a plain talk on hygiene and heredity, which was exceedingly well received.

The report of Mrs. L. D. Sandford, of Erie, superintendent of department of influencing the press, came next. A good amount of work has been done which the superintendent considers only a beginning of that which is needed.

A great many secular papers freely admit temperance articles and religious papers almost universally publish weekly temperance matter.

Mrs. D. Blanchard presented her report on juvenile work, reformatories, etc.

Mrs. Wittenmeyer, superintendent of legislative work, followed with an able report.

Miss Luther made memorial remarks concerning the late Mrs. Butler, of Johnstown.

Election of officers followed, resulting in the choice of: president, Mrs. Frances L. Swift; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ellen M. Watson; recording secretary, Mrs. Joseph D. Weeks; treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Woods.

The convention had been sorrowfully forced to accept the retirement of Mrs. J. R. Jones from the recording secretaryship, on account of her continued delicate health. A hearty vote of thanks for most energetic and faithful service was tendered Mrs. Jones.

An interesting report of the work among intemperate women and in jails and prisons was presented by Mrs. Nicholson. The general statements were full of pathos, and particular cases graphically rendered brought tears to many eyes. Mrs. E. D. C. Mair followed with her account of railroad work. It commenced with a lovingly drawn outline of the incessant, faithful, difficult, dangerous, but all-important labors of the railroad men. Too much cannot be said of the severity of their conditions, of their temptations, their needs, and of their rightful claims upon active Christian sympathy, particularly of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Mair followed with a most touching appeal for Mr. Harry Foster, the gentleman who risked his life and received terrible injury, in trying to rescue Miss Wallace. A collection of seventy-five dollars was at once raised for Mr. Foster and a large number of members pledged additional funds from their local unions. Miss N. E. White gave a glowing report of work done in the scientific temperance institute, in institutes and normal schools. The reading of resolutions on scientific temperance work and text books was next in order. Mrs. Hunt spoke upon the subject and gave anew her reasons for her hearty endorsement of Dr. J. Dorman Steele's physiology and hygiene.

In addition to the proceedings above outlined there were many agreeable incidents which those present will recall, that want of space compels one to omit.

But we must make mention of the three evening sessions which were occasions of great delight to our convention. On Wednesday evening Mrs. J. Ellen Foster addressed a fine audience, in the court house, on constitutional amendments and their superiority over statutory enactments.

It is not "for the likes of me" to characterize Mrs. Foster's work; but no power shall keep me from saying that it was rare sport to sit within three feet of her brilliant presence and try to outline, in pen gymnastics, her rapid sentences, and keep track of her logic.

The "scratch notes" I find today, were exploited in an unknown tongue—not sanscrit—but, surely, sans-English! however, I have a few inter-cranial mementoes of that blessed hour, so not all was lost.

On the second evening Mrs. Hunt spoke to a church full of delighted people, concerning her own chosen work. The undersigned "let well enough alone," that night, and the gray goose-quill rested from its wild-goose chase after the unattainable, and "let nature caper" just mentally.

On the third evening, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, in her own delightful way, illuminated a pleasant hour. What with story, gay humor, quaint concert, poetry and pathos, the "illumination" seemed a blending of starlight, moonlight and sun flashes, just touched here and there by a surprising squib or cracker, as is meet for a campaign year. It was an evening long to be remembered.

I suppose all conventions are made glad and gay with incidents and episodes that gild the refined gold and paint the lily of serious work done on these occasions. It's so in ours, at all events; quite recently the editor of THE UNION SIGNAL spoke of the journeys thither, as an agreeable preparation for what would follow. The regiment of White Ribbons that careered in company over the Alleghenies found a day of such companionship a very good foretaste of convention flavors. With which abrupt return to first principles, dear UNION SIGNAL, adieu. J. A. W.

MISS WILLARD'S ITINERARY.

Owing to Miss Gordon's illness, Mrs. C. B. Buell went in Miss Willard's stead to Winona, Vicksburg, Natchez, Miss., Baton Rouge and New Orleans, La., Selma, Ala., and Pensacola, Fla. Mrs. Chapin also visited all these cities. Before 1885 Miss Willard plans to reach the following places: Nov. 18, Paducah, Ky.; Nov. 20, Owensboro, Ky.; Nov. 23, Williamstown, Ky.; Nov. 24. Hamilton, Ohio; Nov. 25, Xenia, Ohio; Nov. 26, Lebanon, Ohio; Nov. 29-28, Portsmouth, Ohio; Nov. 30, Canton, Ohio; Dec. 2, Altoona, Penn.; Dec. 3, York, Penn.; Dec. 4, Lancaster, Penn.; Dec. 5, Reading, Penn.; Dec. 6-7, Pottsville, Penn.; Dec. 8, Shenandoah, Penn.; Dec. 9, Wilkesbarre, Penn.; Dec. 11, Newburgh, N. Y.; Dec. 12, Kingston, N. Y.; Dec. 13-14, Cohoes, N. Y.; Dec. 16, Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Dec. 17, Watertown. N. Y.; Dec. 18, Auburn, N. Y. Following these, probably, Spencerport and Churchville, N. Y.; Paw Paw, Mich.; Vicksburg and Natchez, Miss., New Orleans, La.

ENTHUSIASTIC PROHIBITION RALLY IN LITCHFIELD

October 31 is a red letter day in our history. Our "four months old baby" had a rally that for its age outdid, comparatively, the rallies of the two old parties which were on the two days just preceding, and which were pronounced glorious. On the morning of our rally, efforts were made to tear down the rude stage in our city park, which has served for all of the speakers of all the parties during the campaign. A few just minded citizens, not of our ranks, would not permit such injustice.

The rough boards, posts, etc., were covered with decorations kindly offered us by leaders of both the Republicans and Democrats; but conspicuous amidst the stripes and stars, emblematic of the union of heart which the triumph of our cause will consummate,, were our own mottoes, "Home Protection," "For God and home and native land," "Constitutional Prohibition," etc., the name of our party, the names and pictures of its standard bearers. The annual drink bill pinned in front gave a shade of sadness to the otherwise brillant scene. Spite of the chilliness of the day, and the inconvenience of the afternoon hour, an audience of two hundred, principally men, gathered to listen to addresses by Judge Irwin, of Edwardsville, and Rev. T. J. Hynes, of Greenville. Both are men of character, strong in their conviction, and armed with an array of facts that must fall with power. In the evening a quiet and respectful audience of not less than five hundred gathered to hear two eloquent speakers, Rev. H. W. Davis, of Nokomis, and Mr. S. V. Keller, of Medora, the latter of whom spoke here some weeks since, and whose address the press admitted to be the best that had been made on that platform.

Mr. Davis spoke of the ridicule and denunciations that are heaped upon the temperance workers, and the terms that are applied to them, fanatics, enthusiasts, cranks, etc. "But," he said "a crank always turns something."

A temperance glee club interspersed the exercises with stirring prohibition songs set to old tunes. But the grandest part of the day is yet to be told. It was our procession, not a torch light procession, but our Band of Hope of near two hundred children. Bright with rosettes and sashes, with flags waving and banners flying, proudly they marched the whole length of our principal street headed by the marshal band and led by one of our prohibition men. They stopped first in front of a saloon, which had piled in front of its doors a dozen or so beer kegs, each ornamented with cards stamped with prohibition and tied with blue ribbon, and sang "When we are old enough to vote, etc." Several such stops were made and hearty hurrahs given for St. John and Daniel. Well might King Alcohol tremble when he looks on such a sight as that. All interested pronounced the whole affair a grand success.

As a practical outcome of our efforts we expect to poll not less than sixty votes next Tuesday. Our county and district are organized; tickets are out and arrangements made to have them at the polls,

Our union is planning work for the wtnter. Mr. Hoofstitler will spend two weeks with us soon. We hope his work will yield such fruits as will make it practicable for us to invite Capt. Linscott to give us ten nights of gospel work.

As never before our union has brought upon itself the ill will and malediction of many who are just beginning to realize our strength. One hopeful sign is the ridicule by those who do not favor us of those who profess to be prohibition men but who are not third party prohibitionists.

While I have given the bright side, do not think we have no discouragements or little to contend with. One piece of injustice was the refusal to grant the petition of the scholars of our public school for the afternoon of the Prohibition rally, while the two previous afternoons were granted for the other parties.

But we falter not for our Leader is all powerful, and we rejoice in our persecutions for great shall be our reward.

AMELIA STAHL, Sec. W. C. T. U.

CHRISTIAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The convention of the W. C. T. U. of Christian county, which convened September 15 and 16, was a complete success in the main. Some very interesting papers were read, and also some letters giving very gratifying reports of the work in different parts of the county. All the unions in the county were represented and visitors from abroad. After closing our convention on the 16th, on Friday 17th, we had two rousing temperance speeches, by Mr. Smith of Decatur and Mr. Felter. Friday the 17th, the Band of Hope was called together, formed in line and marched from the church to the court house. After going into the hall they formed around in front of the speaker, with flags and banners of different kinds; while there they sang some Band of Hope songs after which they escorted the Edinburg brass band on its return home. Our band numbers about sixty or seventy. We think we have done a good work for Taylorville as the influence is steadily growing.

EMMA L. CHASTON, President Taylorville Union.

LINCOLN.—I write to give an account of our meeting today (October 29). We had prayer service from 9 a. m. to nearly 5 p. m., new leaders each hour. We used Mrs. Clardy's program as given in THE UNION SIGNAL. Several ministers were with us and led several hours for us. We never had tried tolling the bell every six minutes for the soul that dies from the drink habit, so we thought that we would do that. We had our purpose to do so announced in the pulpits last Sunday and its object explained, and also published it in the papers.

Well! we came together this morning for our meeting and the Lord was with us in power. The tolling of the bell only stirred us up to more earnest petition. A man dropped dead here a day or two ago from drink, one of the saloonkeepers.

We secured the consent of one of the prominent officials of the church to our project of the all day prayer meeting and the tolling of the bell, he is a Prohibitionist. Several of the other members of the board of stewards are Republicans and about 11 o'clock they came down to stop the tolling of the bell. One of our sisters said to them, "What objections have you?" The spokesman replied, "Well! there are a good many sick people in town, and it is disagreeable to some people, and we would like to have you stop tolling it." If he had said "it sounds disagreeably to our Republican ears and the Republican party are sick," it would have been more honest. We told them we would get another bell, so this afternoon we went to the Christian church and tolled the Christian bell for lost drunkards, since some of our Methodist officials could not abide the sound.

Between the hours of one and two, several members of our union visited every saloon in town, fourteen in number, and told the proprietors why we were tolling the bell and that we wanted them to think about it when they heard the bell this afternoon. We told them that the poor fellows that died from drink did not have many friends left and that we tolled the bell in memory of them. They were perfectly courteous to us. One or two tried to argue. An Irish saloon keeper who tried to argue with one of the ladies was met by, "The Bible says: 'Woe to the man that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips.'" He said "What Bible is that in?" She answered him, "The Catholic Bible," and told him to read Hab. II chapter. It has been a glorious day, not a dry minute in the meeting. Praise God from whom all blessings flow. S. L. D. CORTRIGHT.

ROCK ISLAND COUNTY CONVENTION.

A convention of the temperance workers of Rock Island county was held in Port Byron, October 15 and 16, at which time a county W. C. T. U. was organized with Mrs. Mary Metzgar, of Moline, as presidont. Miss West was present and a great impetus was given to temperance work throughout the county.

ELLA G. TAYLOR, Sec.

LITCHFIELD.—Eor some time we have wished to inform you how our beloved work prospers in this, the largest place in Montgomery county. There are eighteen or twenty saloons here and King Alcohol is reaping a large harvest; but the W. C. T. U. has determined to fight him every step of the way.

We think we have great reason to be encouraged. A year ago the union was small and feeble, but there were a few faithful women who labored for the cause and met occasionally. They held on through trials and discouragements until in the latter part of December they decided to hold public meetings. Once a month an entertainment consisting of music, recitations, essays, and short addresses, was held. A large audience usually greeted us. Just before closing, the work of the union was presented by some earnest sister and the pledge roll was carried through the house. In these efforts the society received new impetus, and its numbers increased daily until now we have about forty paying members. During all the summer we have held our regular meetings once in two weeks. The meetings have been made interesting by the use of "Readings on Beer."

In the spring, Capt. J. F. Linscott spent four days with us. He helped us much. We were indeed revived and resolved we would never give up. Before leaving, he organized a Band of Hope. During the heated term the average attendance has been one hundred and fifty. Sometimes we have over two hundred, We meet every Sunday afternoon using Band of Hope quarterlies, published by D. C. Cook, and Julia Colman's "Catechism on alcohol." More girls attend than boys, but we expected that. The children have given one concert which was pronounced a success.

For the last few weeks there have been gospel temperance meetings in the city park every Sunday afternoon.

The attendance has been good some being present who never enter church. We have encountered opposition from some "over-righteous brethren." They pronounce them political, but these very men usually support the saloon element.

A St. John and Daniel club has been organized. Two weeks ago, Mr. Jacob Hoofstitler presented the cause of Prohibition. Although it had rained during the day and the evening was cloudy, a goodly number listened spell bound. Sunday afternoon he addressed a still larger crowd, leaving out the political question. Monday evening was a feast of good things to the Prohibitionists and W. C. T. U. He is, indeed, an eloquent, forcible speaker, and the vast crowd assembled to hear him, had every phase of the question presented.

Men of both parties, Democratic and Republican, have pronounced him the best speaker of the season, but the "love of party" is so strong within them, they can not break the bonds that bind them. But we do believe he has converted some over to the cause so dear to us all.

Our union is loyal to the cause. We have enlisted for life or as long as a saloon curses our land. EARNEST.

STERLING.—I have been requested to send for publication the following resolution passed at a recent meeting of the W. T. T. U. of Sterling.

S. E. QUIGLEY, Sec. W. C. T. U.

We the ladies of the W. C. T. U. of Sterling, appreciating the ability, and earnest efforts of brother J. H. Hoofstitler, of this city, in the cause of Prohibition, do by unanimous vote, hereby recommend him as a lecturer to all who desire help in that direction.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Unions have been organized at Equality and Elizabethtown by Mrs. Villars, and at Oswego by Mrs. Rounds.

—Doubtless the non-appearance of the list of legislative candidates, with their position in reference to the legislation for which the Illinois W. C. T. U. will ask at the next session of the legislature, has occasioned some disappointment. The responses came in so slowly that it was impossible to issue the list until so late an hour that it was thought best not to incur the large expense which the publication would involve. The replies received are on file and will be valuable for future reference.

NEWS IN A NUT SHELL.

Miss Eliza H. Gage is to be in Berkshire county, Mass., the coming winter lecturing and organizing W. C. T. U.'s and juvenile societies. Her address will be Pittsfield, Mass.

A pleasant gathering of the young ladies of West Chester, on Wednesday, 22nd, at Windom, the home of Mrs. S. R. Shipley, was the occasion for organizing a Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The officers elected were: President, Mrs. Wm. T. Haines; corresponding secretary, Mary Moneyham; treasurer, Susan G. Shipley. There are now forty-three such unions in Penusylvania.

Intent on exerting all their influence for prohibition, the Rockford, (Ill.) Y. W. C. T. U. drew up some strong resolutions urging their fathers, brothers and gentlemen friends to vote for St. John and Daniel, secured the signatures of 200 of the young women of Rockford and had dodgers struck off (the Blaine dailies refusing to print their petition) and circulated throughout the city. A bit of electioneering worthy of commendation and imitation.

A good work has been done in Carrollton, Me., under the leadership of C. J. Holt; a W. C. T. U. and Band of Hope were organized, and 438 signatures to the pledge were obtained. Mrs. J. E. Drake, is president of the new union and Mrs. W. A. Berry is corresponding secretary.

The spirit of the W. C. T. U. is clearly exemplified in the call to prayer issued by the Denver W. C. T. U. requesting all Christian women in the state of Colorado to join with them in prayer, from seven to eight on the morning of election day, that "the day may be the beginning of better things for our rum-cursed land."

Signal Notes.

Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, says the south will be prohibition by the next presidential election.

There are 10,000 teetotalers in the railway service of Great Britain and 12,000 among the sailors in the naval service.

According to the new French law, drunkenness in either husband or wife will be regarded as a sufficient cause for divorce.

At midnight on Wednesday, Oct. 22, masked women raided the only saloon in Palmyra, Ind., and destroyed the liquors, and gave Mr. William Bott, the proprietor, twenty-four hours' notice to leave the place.

The British drink bill for 1883 foots up $628,386,375. The quanity aggregates 1,032,142,158 gallons. This would make a lake a mile long and a mile wide, with a depth of 35 feet, or sufficient to float men-of-war.

Fruiba, Colorado, like Greeley and Colorado Springs, is a prohibition town. A prohibitory Liquor clause in the deeds forever prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors in these towns or on the street tracts adjoining.

We denounce the Republican party for having failed to relieve the people from crushing war taxes, which have paralyzed business, crippled industry, and deprived labor of employment and just reward.—Democratic Platform, 1884.

In the last twenty-four years under a Republican administration, while the population has increased only 59.51 per cent., the consumption of liquors increased over 150 per cent. With such a record as this Republican organs and orators should be slow to claim that it is the Temperance party.

A significant statement was lately made by a citizen of Denver, who chanced to have been at one time its mayor. "Whenever we extend the saloon limit a little," he said, "we have to add to the police force. And everybody doesn't seem to realize that the extra policeman costs more in a month than the saloon nets in a year."

We find when conversing with Republicans as to voting for St. John, they do not reply to our argument, or consider the thing in the line of conscientious duty, but simply exclaim "Democrats," and run back to the old party, like the little girl who said, "When I want to get into bed awful quick, I just say 'rats,' and scare myself right in!"

As an evidence of the far reaching results of efforts for good, Mrs. Byington spoke of the temperance work in Natal, Africa, which has been begun by Mrs. Robbins who had received the impulse from crusade work in Chicago. The intemperance habits of native Africans had been a great trial to the missionaries, but now the last man in the church had given up his beer.—Womans Board of Missions.

Miscellaneous.

Education through the eye is a large factor in all modern teaching. Vice has always used this powerful agency, alluring to the scenes of dissipation within by means of an attractive exterior.

The flood of vicious literature, so debasing in its influence, invites perusal through attractive illustrations.

This power is being turned to a better purpose as Christian people have become aware of its efficiency.

A notable example of this is seen in the publication of an attractive paper, containing full page illustrations and entitled "ILLUSTRATED TEMPERANCE TALES."

This monthly sheet is admirably adapted for scattering among the masses, for Sabbath schools, for gospel meetings and for all ages. Its illustrations attract the eye.

Its incidents, stories, etc., touch the heart. Supplied at one cent a copy, it has found a circulation of many thousands. If not among its large list of subscribers, send for free sample copies.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

For maps, descriptive circulars and summer resort papers, or other information not obtainable at your local ticket office, write to the

Miscellaneous Selections.

The Monthly Record (Birmingham, Eng) says: "The result of freely advertising Professor Andre's offer of one guinea each to ten destitute families that had been teetotalers for three years has been that nineteen applications were received for the charity. After investigating these locally it was found that only six of the cases really came within the designation of 'destitute teetotal families,' and the six guineas have been duly forwarded. Nearly all these cases were the results of the sickness or death of the bread-winner of the family. This fact speaks eloquently for the thrift and careful habits of the millions who constitute the temperance community in this country."

The state of Massachusetts has been most thoroughly canvassed by the Prohibitionists. In one week over four tons of mail matter were sent out from their headquarters in Boston. Mr. Faxon, candidate for lieutenant-governor, has had twelve clerks constantly at work, and he has supplied every city and town and school district with St. John literature. The nominations for minor offices were made with great care, and 400,000 ballots distributed. Every voting place in the state has been perfectly supplied with Prohibition tickets. Last week (the concluding week of the canvass), great meetings were held all over the state. Mr. Faxon has all along persistently insisted that 20,000 votes will be polled for the national ticket.

The Illinois Baptist General Association at its annual session October 15-17, unanimously adopted the following:

"Resolved, That since the liquor traffic, destroying alike our churches, our schools and our homes, is always and everywhere the enemy of God and man, we as Christians should lay the axe at the root of this evil tree, seeking to educate our people in the principle and practice of total abstinence and prohibition; that we welcome the W. C. T. U. in their work of prayer, persuasion, and personal effort, and that we most earnestly recommend all our pastors to encourage church temperance work."

A club of thirty boys, in Rochester, N. Y., organized themselves to march and hurrah for St. John and Daniel. When they can vote they will help elect a prohibition president.

And we denounce the Republican party and the Democratc party for having failed to relieve the people from crushing liquor taxes ($800,000,000 per annum) which have paralyzed business, crippled industry and deprived the laborer of manhood here and of eternal life hereafter.—The Voice.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

OUR PREMIUM GIFT.

MISTLETOE MEMORIES,
OR WHAT THE POETS SAY ABOUT CHRISTMAS

Comprising a collection of poems selected from the writings of H. W. Longfellow, J. G. Whittier, Thomas Hood, Alfred Domett, Chas. Mackay, Sir Walter Scott, Jennie Joy, and others. The whole bound in Banner shape, with rich fringe and tassels. The cover of this novelty is printed in nearly eighteen colors (being an almost exact fac simile of landscape studies printed in oil colors on gold pebble board), and ranks exceedingly high as an imported art production of the premier class. The original designs were drawn by H. Maurice Page, and were awarded a prize of Fifty Pounds Sterling at the Suffolk Street London Galleries in a competitive exhibit of 6,000 entries. For presentation, this art souvenir is vastly superior to a mere Christmas card, as it combines the advantages of both art and literature. Size 4x6 and one half inches.

Every person sending us $1.75 with one name for UNION SIGNAL, (either new subscriber or renewal) before December 1, will upon demand, receive this beautiful Christmas memento FREE.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 45. CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 20, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE best of men are unworthy to loose the latchet of Christ's shoes, yet the sinful woman might do as she would with his feet. Desert may not touch his shoe tie; love may kiss his feet.

NOTE the call on page 12, by our National president and corresponding secretary, to a day of fasting and prayer. Soul and body will be fed with the bread of life, and feeble knees will be strengthened that have bent lowly at His feet whose promise is, "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength."

INSPIRATION and courage are breathed in every word of Miss Willard's letter, at the head of the "correspondence" of this week's number. Surely God is "causing the wrath of man to praise Him," in many of these mutterings of wrath on the part of our enemies. Take this letter, as a keen-edged weapon to meet the accusers of our cause, and to aid the faint hearted, who are dismayed in the smoke and terror of the conflict.

IT is delightful to know with what cordial kindness Mrs. Chapin chaperoned Mrs. Buell through her sunny south. Some people are loveliest in their own homes, adding to their usual charm that last, finest grace of hospitality. It gives us a quickened belief in the "unity of the spirit" to read, in the record of this southern tour of work, of the presence and favor of the representative ministers, including a Jewish Rabbi in one city.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, president of the W. C. T. U. in Germantown, Pennsylvania, with other ladies of her union, stood at the polls in the rain on election day, and distributed Prohibition votes. Such courage is not more admirable in these noble women than the faithfulness of their leader, who, while a national officer, and engaged in broad fields of usefulness, is found at her post and equally faithful in her home work. This is an object lesson which ought not to be forgotten.

IN these days of trial and conflict it is good for us to rest on the immutable Word, and some of the world's truest philosophers and noblemen may also "give power to the faint." The first is from Edward Thompson, the second from Seneca: "The world cannot bury Christ. The earth is not deep enough for His tomb, the clouds are not wide enough for His winding sheet; He ascends into the heavens, but the heavens cannot contain Him. He still lives in the Church which burns unconsumed with His love; in the truth that reflects His image; in the hearts which burn as He talks with them by the way."

"Life is warfare, and those who climb up and down steep paths and go through dangerous enterprises are the brave men and the leaders in the camp, but to rest basely at the cost of others' labors is to be a coward, safe because despised.

WE refer our friends who have fallen into error regarding the action of the St. Louis convention, to the record in THE UNION SIGNAL for Oct. 30. They will see that no arbitrary pressure is put upon state and local unions or individuals, as to political preference or influence. And those who have read impartially the utterances of the paper upon this theme and concerning the friends and enemies of the third party movement, will we are sure, agree with us that justice has been done to all.

THE exhortation by John Sunday, an Ojibway Indian, at a missionary meeting is exceedingly applicable now to all who would see temperance work go on vigorously. May it reach the convictions and the pockets of all lovers of temperance who read the stirring words! "There is a gentleman who, I suppose, is now in this house. He is a very fine gentleman, but a very modest one. He does not like to show himself at these meetings. I do not know how long it is since I have seen him, he comes out so little. I am very much afraid that he sleeps a good deal of the time, when he ought to be out doing good. His name is Gold. Mr. Gold, are you here tonight, or are you sleeping in your iron chest? Come out, Mr. Gold, come out, and help us do this great work. Ah, Mr. Gold, you ought to be ashamed of yourself to sleep so much in your iron chest. Look at your white brother, Mr. Silver, he does a great deal of good while you are sleeping. Come out, Mr. Gold. Look at your little brother, Mr. Copper; he is everywhere. Your poor little brown brother is running about doing all that the can to help us. Come out, Mr. Gold!"

WE give below, excerpts from communications coming to us "since election." Comment in fit terms would be impossible to us. "The servant of God must neither strive nor cry." Let us remember "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

From a New England State:—I came home from St. Louis full of zeal for work, but thus far have had to use all my grace to keep sweet-hearted. My husband voted for St. John, and we have been persecuted and insulted publicly and privately. His parishioners threatened him savagely if he dared to do this—as if a Christian minister ought not to vote his convictions! Don't you think my work for the present is self?

From Kansas:—We are having troublous times. Gov. St. John has been hung in effigy in our town, in Topeka and many other places. Violent language is used in regard to him and if he escapes personal violence it will be almost a wonder. The W. C. T. U. is in disrepute also. But God reigneth.

From Illinois:—A noble pastor in this city has had withdrawals from his church because he dared to vote for St. John, and men who had subscribed money to an addition to the church have stated that they would cancel their subscriptions.

Another from Illinois, to-wit:—Mr.——, a true hearted reformed man and blacksmith finds that angry Republicans will not patronize him farther. Some say the W. C. T. U. women ought to be buried. A pastor declines to give notice of our gospel meeting. O, may the eyes of these Christian people be opened to see the strangeness of their course."

It should not be forgotten by those who show a spirit of intolerance, that no cause has ever grown so rapidly as when its persecutions were most bitter. Can we not agree to disagree and live in peace?

THE Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago, appointed Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett superintendent of plan of study in Heredity for Chicago and vicinity for this year, and Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson superintendent of study of Hygiene. The doctors have decided to present a course of popular scientific lectures upon these subjects. In co-operation with the Woman's Physiological Institute, under whose auspices the lectures are given, they have arranged the course to be held during the winter in Apollo Hall, (Central Music Hall) at 3 p. m on the following dates. No admission fee.

THE BATTLE HYMN OF TEMPERANCE.

LEWIS MEREDITH.

(Tune: "John Brown.")

The word from Heaven is spoken, and will never pass away,
That truth and right shall spread and win a universal sway,
And now are pouring o'er the world glories of the day:
God's truth is marching on.
Chorus: Glory, glory, hallelujah! God's truth is marching on.

From sin and satan Christ shall have the empire of the world:
Thro' darkest dens, o'er ranks of hell, His lightnings shall be hurled;
Behold from far, and waving wide, His banner is unfurled.
His truth is marching on.
Chorus:

The wretched earth has mourned so long, the reign of vice and crime;
That hearts will dance and eyes will shine, when comes the better time.
'Tis coming—coming on apace! in all its golden prime.
God's truth is marching on.
Chorus:

The fiend is doomed. Thy will be done! Let all be pledged and sworn.
To storm the forts with prayers and votes, till on the wind is borne
Exulting shouts of joyful hosts as through the gates of morn,
God's truth comes marching on.
Chorus:

Arise with heaven! And bless the world! Let all respond and go,
With heart and hand and voice as one, to foil and crush the foe;
For God hath cursed the curse of drink, and He will lay it low;
His truth is marching on.
Chorus:

DR. DORCHESTER AND THE TEMPERANCE CENTENNIAL.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"The Liquor Problem in all ages" is a new book by Rev. Dr. Daniel Dorchester, of Boston, published by Phillips & Hunt of New York. It is a complete history of the temperance reform, and the most comprehensive cyclopedia on that subject with which I am acquainted. It statistics are especially interesting, and being indicated in colors, are more readily retained. Dr. Dorchester the gifted author of this book was the first to propose that the year 1885 be signalized as the centennial of the temperance reform. He has ascertained that the celebrated essay on the effects of Ardent Spirits, by Dr. Benjamin Rush, was first published in 1785, reprinted in England the following year and in America in successive editions. Dr. Dorchester's careful and critical study of the temperance movement enables him to trace its progress, link by link back to Dr. Rush a zealous Quaker and the most distinguished physician of his time.

Dr. Billy J. Clark of Moreau, Saratoga county, N Y., first gained "the arrest of thought" from the reading of this essay, and then, urged on by his own observations as a physician went to Rev. Lebbens Armstrong, the Presbyterian minister who was his pastor and the two men founded the first temperance society. In the estimation of our author, Dr. Rush was the John Wickliffe of the temperance reform, and from his great reputation as a physician and signer of the declaration of independence, his utterances commanded attention and ushered in the literature of temperance which has been, from the first, dependent upon the printed page, more than upon any other agency in its mighty propaganda.

The general conference of the Methodist church held in Philadelphia in May last, adopted Dr. Dorchester's resolution recommending the friends of temperance to celebrate the centennial of the movement in 1885. The Nation W. C. T. U. at its recent convention in St. Louis, endorsed this action and fixed upon December 23, 1885 (the date of the woman's crusade) as the time when we would so celebrate, considering this to be the most notable temperance date in the first century of temperance reform. Dr. Dorchester had already been consulted and approved of this date. Let us hope that the Anglo-Saxon people everywhere may unite upon this memorable day as the appropriate one. We need a year in which to secure the ratifying action of all great bodies ecclesiastic, educational, medical, etc., and we can make a magnificent showing on December 23, 1885, for however varied our views as to methods and men, we shall doubtless be a unit in our willingness to "celebrate."

THE INTEMPERATE LANGUAGE OF TEMPERANCE ADVOCATES.

CANON FARRAR.

I will undertake to say that, as a rule, any one of us here arguing with a person for five minutes about total abstinence would not fail to hear the remark, "Oh! you temperance people use such very intemperate language." I should really like to be able to gauge the mental capacity of a person who holds aloof from a great and most necessary reform by sheltering himself behind the plea of that stale and feeble antithesis—that disagreeable and meaningless epigram. On one occasion Charles Lamb was in the presence of a gentleman who made some extraordinary remarks, and he said he should very much like to examine that gentleman's bumps. Supposing it were true—supposing that the temperance reformers were in the habit of using intemperate language—so much the worse for the temperance reformer; but that does not affect in the slightest degree the vast mass of absolute and irrefutable truth they have to bring forward. Take the speech of Mr. Cowen at Newcastle—a man who is not a total abstainer. He said: "What fresh condemnation can language apply to intemperance? It produces poverty, disease and crime. The injuries it inflicts are not irregular and exceptional, but as regular as the motions of the planets, and as deadly as the sirocco of the desert. There is not a profession in the land which the serpent has not drawn the spells of his sorcery around. There is not a household that has not been despoiled by its leprous pollution, and yet, with the vast accumulated experience of ages, men persist in the practice. It is not ignorance—it is infatuation, it is insanity." Let our opponents deal with the mass of absolutely certain truths that we bring forward, and while they condemn us for intemperate language, still let us show the example without falling into that error, if of that error we are guilty. Personally I have always tried to be particularly careful not to render myself justly and fairly liable to that complaint. Sermons and speeches which I have had the honor at different times to make in the cause of temperance have been scattered, I believe, by many tens of thousands among my countrymen, and I do not think a single sentence in any one of those sermons and speeches has ever been seriously impugned, much less refuted, and of this I am certain, that I never used a single sentence which I should have to retract, and for which I could not produce decisive authority, or what appeared to me to be indisputable evidence. All true language will always be called and regarded as intemperate by those whose interested monopoly we are obliged to assail. The fact is the blackness and darkness of the horrors of the facts with which we constantly have to deal is such that it is almost impossible for us to use any language which can be called intemperate, because it is impossible for us to have the power of painting the scenes of misery and disease of which we have almost every day ghastly evidence in the reports of the police courts and the assize sessions, and if we use what they call intemperate language, it is only because men do not like to hear us say things which are perfectly true. I do not wish that any temperance reformer should say one syllable which can justly be attacked, but at the same time we have the right to say that we will not suppress the truth.

Reformations are never wrought with rose-water. Luther knew this. When Luther was charged with violent language his answer was, "The word of God is a sword, a battle, a fire, a ruin, and a hurricane." At any rate, Luther knew this, that you cannot fight against gigantic abuses if you are to go about with a pair of jeweller's scales to weigh every word you say. It is not only we who use what is called intemperate language, but poets, statesmen, publicans and brewers, and even those newspapers which always seem so glad to seize an opportunity to have a fling at us and our cause. Supposing I were to say that the drink was, as I heard it called on this platform, "The devil in solution." That phrase was used 300 years ago by Shakespeare, and the words he puts into the mouth of Cassio, "Oh! thous invisible spirit of wine: if thou hadst no other name to be known by, let us call thee devil." Suppose, I say, that gin is the authentic incarnation of the evil principle, and a black throat down which all kinds of wretchedness whirls, calling upon delirium to help it. That term was used by the departed giant Thomas Carlyle. Supposing I were to make this statement, "The encouragement of drunkenness for the sake of gaining money is a more desperate form of assassination than has ever been adopted by the bravos of any age or any country." Is that intemperate language? If so it was used by the highly-polished and highly-cultured John Ruskin. Supposing I make the remarkable statement that one day in the week, viz., Saturday, is "pay-day, drink-day, crime-day"—is that intemperate language? If so it is used by a gentleman who is very far indeed from wishing to be called a temperance reformer, though an extremely able judge—Lord Bramwell. Suppose I use this striking statement "the amount of alcohol consumed in a district is the measure of its degradation"—only weigh the sentence and see whether anyone has said a stronger thing than that. Who said it? The able and witty Irish judge, Baron Dowse. I might give an immense number of similar instances. Who said, "Let us crush this artist in human slaughter?" I never said that; Sir Wilfrid Lawson never said that—even the dauntless Canon Wilberforce never said such a thing. The man who said that was a man who was in his day of the pink of fashion and the glass of form, the famous Lord Chesterfield. I told you even brewers often used language as strong. Supposing I were to say that "a great many public-houses are vile places; some of them are seething hells of vile immorality and crime, and they do not exist in answer to any real necessity or any popular demand, and they are galvanized into a putrescent existence by the operation of the brewer's battery, and there are in England 170,377 licensed places of drink of all kinds and that they ought at once to be diminished by 64,000, since at present there is one to every sixty male adults in the country;" and supposing I was to say that the compensation ought to come in great measure from the trade—a remark which you received as somewhat startling from your chairman—is that intemperate language? Who uses it? That is not used by poor fanatics such as we are, but by Mr. James, of the Stonehouse, Devonport, and Plymouth Beer and Wine Trade Defence Protection Society. I think, then, I am making good my point, which is that it is only when people who are not temperance reformers use such language that it is accepted as all right: if we used it it would be called intemperate.

It has been said—"It would be impossible to find anything which stands for so much loss to soul, body, and estate, for so much discomfort and everything disagreeable as the public-house. Even if we accept the best case that can be made for it in principle, the fact is that it is still a huge nuisance and misery. There is not a vice, a disease, a disorder, or a calamity of any kind that has not its frequent rise in the public-house. The public house degrades, ruins, and brutalises a large fraction of the British people." That is the language of the Times, and it has written other passages equally strong. You know who it was who said, "Drink produces more evil than the three historic scourges of war, pestilence, and famine combined." You all know that was said by one of the most powerful Prime Ministers that England ever had. Only consider the force and weight of that sentence. War, with all its horrors, agony, and crime; with its widowed houses and orphaned children, its careers of young men prematurely cut short, the angel of death amongst us, as John Bright said, so near that we can almost hear the beating of its wings; or again, famine. We are now thanking God for a magnificent harvest; but if that blue mocking spectre were among us, how should we be horrified as it turned men into wild beasts, and made the eye of the mother untender towards the child she bore. Pestilence! we have known something of it, and how it has depopulated mighty cities, turning nations into apparently panic-stricken cowards; how it paralyses industry, and how, in some communities, hardly enough are left to give the last consolations of religion to the dying or to bury the dead; and, great God, is an evil to be stalking among us for years and for generations and for centuries, and nobody is to come forward and earn the civic wreath which men may earn in war, or to do what was the most heroic thing ever done—to stand between the living and the dead that the plague might be stayed, or earn the beatitude of those who heal the sick and give bread to the hungry—is no one to come forward and stop these fearful evils and do these blessed works except those described in the article alluded to? If that were true, then it would show that England was at the very last gasp of her national honor, and at the very nadir of her indifference to the law of God and the welfare of man. Therefore I do earnestly trust that we have heard the last of that imbecile epigram about holding aloof from the temperance cause because temperance reformers use such intemperate language, and I do hope we shall have courage to take our stand with those who are characterised in so contemptuous a manner. When Lord Clive was accused of robbery, he said, "When I think of what I have taken and what I might have taken, I stand aghast at my own moderation." I think, we may stand aghast at the coldness of our words. We need to be on flame, and it seems as if we, who call ourselves by the name of temperance reformers, had caught something of the coldness of the icebergs which tower about us, and as if our hearts were a little frozen too.

THE EDUCATION OF THE WOMEN OF THE W. C. T. U.

MRS. L. D. DOUGLAS.

This is emphatically an age of education. It is especially an age of reading. We are educated through our literature; through the various newspapers, magazines, and books; through lectures, associations and conventions, into all departments of knowledge—into science, philosophy, and the arts.

We have our wonderful common school system distributed all over our land, whereby learning is as free and as accessible as the air we breathe. We have normal schools, colleges, and universities. Beside these institutions, established directly for the teaching of the young, there are springing up in various parts of the country institutions for teaching adult masses. Such are the summer school at Martha's Vineyard, the Chautauqua assembly, and the Lake Bluff convocation, also the summer camp meetings.

These institutions are answering those anxious questionings of some of the more thoughtful of our people, namely; of the dangers which threaten us from the illiteracy of our immense foreign immigration. It is feared, and not without reason, that the rapid increase of our population from the ignorant people of the lower classes of other countries, will in time give the power of the government into the hands of the ignorant and the illiterate.

But the facilities for education afforded in recent times, where in one assemblage the multitude can have the teaching, the scientific experiments, the black-board illustrations, the stereoptican views, etc., and be taught chemistry, physiology, astronomy, anatomy, and the various other sciences formerly confined to the laboratory and the school-room, and to only a favored few, give assurance to our hopes, and a solution to this most difficult problem. Such advancements are made in the knowledge of the sciences that the masses are now being taught the latest obtained truths, such as have not heretofore been known even to the most learned. These institutions will save our country from the only remaining barbarism now to be feared, viz., illiteracy. They will providentially supply the want of that compulsion in education which would otherwise be most necessary to our salvation.

We have also within these few years other means of education, hitherto unknown, in the institution of "Studies at Home." Miss Ticknor, of Boston, appreciating the great need of something of the kind, has been instrumental in establishing a system of education to be carried on at home, whereby those whom poverty or duty have denied other opportunity, and adult people who have missed the opportunities of education in their youth, can take a regular systematic course of collegiate study and examination in all branches of learning, including the study of Greek and Latin and the modern languages. I am not informed in regard to the condition of this universal college at the present time, but a few years ago it numbered some forty professors and thousands of students. Such also, though much less pretentious, is the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle which is doing a large work in educating thousands who are profiting by its opportunities.

Beside these, we have now in our country two great national institutions of learning, unique in character, comprehensive in scope, and all-embracing in plan, created and conducted entirely by women. The one, the Association for the Advancement of Women, holds an annual congress in different parts of the country, at which are read able papers on Art, Science, Industry, Education, Temperance, Politics, Health, Universal Suffrage, etc., accompanied by able discussions, making it an education and a power and influence for good wherever it is held.

The other, our National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Both sprung into existence at about the same time; both are the fruits of woman's efforts, and both are probably as potent influences for the upbuilding of humanity as we have in our own time.

There is this difference between them; the Association for the Advancement of Women was instituted directly for the benefit of women, for the amelioration of her dependent depressed condition, for opening the way by which she shall have more equal opportunities with man in the struggle of life, shall stand by his side equal in opportunity, equal in privilege, equal in responsibility, unshackled, free; the other, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was instituted directly for the benefit of man, for the amelioration of his degraded, enthralled condition, for opening the way by which he shall be on more equal terms with woman, shall stand by her side equal in purity, equal in honor, equal in self-possession, uncontaminated, free.

Both have providentially been called into existence by the exigencies of the times, and both are powerful influences for the education of humanity into the higher and more spiritual uses to which the race is destined.

But it is the education of the women of the W. C. T. U. themselves in their special work which we wish to consider at this time.

They are being educated in a marvellous manner to uses and services which could never have had a place in their thoughts when they began. Like the Israelites of old they are being led through the wilderness towards the promised land. The redemption of their brothers from the drink habit, and legal prohibition of the drink traffic go before them, a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night. They are fed with the manna of success just sufficient for their daily needs. Some of them will live to enter in and take possesion of the promised land. Some of them will be able only to climb to Pisgah's top and view its glories from afar. Some of them will never see thus much, but still know by faith that it is there, and will never cease to press forward, striving towards its attainment.

When the women entered upon this crusade against the rum power, they were so walled in by obstacles and difficulties, were so helpless, there seemed nothing they could do but pray, which they did with such a fervor, such an unreserve, such an entire confidence in the justice and reasonableness of their prayers, and such an absolute faith and trust that they would be answered, that they commanded the admiration, the respect and the amazement of all beholders.

Those prayers so marvellous in their fulfillment by the rapid closing up of saloons, and the consternation thrown into the ranks of the liquor sellers, confirmed their faith, stimulated their hopes, and nerved them to renewed efforts. The way opened in which to do more. To their prayers and faith were added works. The first opening was very limited indeed, but by doing that little well, a door was opened into larger work and wider fields, until now the opportunity is so large and the work so vast, that nothing is wanted but sufficient willing hearts and hands to accomplish the complete fulfilment of their prayers.

Emerson says: "When you would reform a man you must begin away back with his ancestors."

The women of the W. C. T. U. have intuitively apprehended this truth. In tracing effects to their causes, they have been led into a study and knowledge of the laws of heredity. If "the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children even unto the third and fourth generation," so no less will their virtues as truly follow the same law. In their work among the children, they are forming the grand-parents of the future who will need no reforming. In their work among the children they are laying the foundations so broad and deep that the superstructure of honor, sobriety and purity built upon them will be lasting and secure.

In studying the effects which intemperate habits have upon health, they have been led into a study of Hygiene. Hygiene means health. Health physical and spiritual means holiness. A body perfectly healthy, informed by a spirit perfectly healthy, will be holy. So many things affect the health, food, air, water, warmth, clothing, cleanliness. In studying these things, they have been led into the knowledge of heredity and hygiene as never before. In our unions, a study of the laws of health and the structure of the human organism is being carried on all over the country to a large extent. In remote neighborhoods and farming communities as well as in populous cities, there is such a knowledge of physiology as was formerly obtained by but few. Thus the admonition of the ancients inscribed on the temple at Delphi, "Know thyself," is being accomplished in a large, broad sense, and our workers, in ways not anticipated are growing into a liberal and scientific education.

In legislation, our women are being gradually and steadily initiated into the mysteries and intricacies of the law. They are rapidly acquiring a knowledge of the theory and practice of government, and are forming their own opinions and are ready in expressing them. They are growing into a more familiar and intimate knowledge of the press. They hold public meetings which they manage, at which they preside, and at which they are frequently the speakers. They are rapidly acquiring a familiar knowledge of parliamentary law and the rules regulating assemblies. They mould public sentiment. In a word, they are entering into the world's work. And in this present year, an unprecedented instance, women have held an honored and influential place in a presidential nominating convention, and a woman seconded the nomination of the candidate for the presidency of this great nation in an appropriate speech.

So when the prohibition of the liquor traffic is secured in the states, there will no longer be any question of the fitness of woman's place in governmental affairs,—she will be already there. There will no longer be any clamor on dispute about woman's right to suffrage, to place, and to equality before the law. She will already have them. She will already have been called to assist in conducting the most important affairs of government.

In this period of initiation and preparation they are thus being mysteriously and providentially educated into that which they themselves would have thought beyond their province at the time of the crusade, are being educated to take their places as helpers in all that pertains to the welfare of humanity.

When the advance guard of our noble temperance workers, that host of consecrated women, shall have leveled the hills of difficulty, filled up the valleys of doubt and distrust, and built a broad, smooth highway for the masses to come easily up to the heights on which they have planted the standard of equal sobriety and purity and honor for man as for woman, and when both shall have attained equal heights of purity and freedom, then shall walk together, side by side, on this new continent, the new man and the new woman, unfettered, disenthralled.

And we are living in the early dawn of the day when these things shall be. Already the roseate light of this new day is touching the topmost heights. Already by faith we view the promised land. By prayer, by faith and by good works we shall grow into the stature of the perfect help meet for which we were originally designed.

THE ST. JOHN MOVEMENT AS THE BREWERS SEE IT.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE LOCAL UNIONS.—The Champion is the representative paper of the beer, wine and spirit trade of the United States. It is also the official organ of the "Liquor Dealers and Manufacturers State Protective Association of Illinois." Its editor and publisher is Paul Schuster, a noted German beer champion. This paper was established in 1878 and goes weekly to the brewers and wholesale and retail liquor dealers of nearly six hundred cities and towns in twenty-two states. Upon its title page are the followlng mottoes: "Use a little wine for your stomach's sake," (the apostle Paul). "Constitutional, personal and civil liberty." "No prohibition, no sumptuary laws." It gives as the chief plank in its platform, (at the head of its columns,) this: "We demand for the manufacturer and dealer in beer, wine and alcoholic spirits, the same protection and privileges which are accorded to every other branch of industry and commerce in every state of our union." This paper is printed in German and English and is widely read.

Immediately after election, when it was known that the St. John and Daniel voters would probably aggregate 200,000, the following remarkable editorials appeared in this whisky paper. Let every white ribbon woman read them carefully. If they do not have a "tonic effect" I mistake the temper of the hour. With sharp criticisms coming to us on every side from those we love, and denunciations from an enraged partisan press, it will be of great service to us if we ponder well, and to our cause if we circulate carefully, these remarkable admissions from the dragon-power against which we have so long contended. When the liquor dealers find the same principles that are embodied in resolutions of conferences and synods written into election returns, they take the alarm and not till then. Shall the children of light be less wise than the children of this world? Brave hearts of the W. C. T. U., read these editorials from the liquor dealers' Champion in your local unions; if possible, secure their publication by the local press; send them to your pastors and church leaders that they may lay these things to heart. Stay all your souls steadily upon the God of battles in this day of strife.

Yours for the conflict, FRANCES E. WILLARD.

WARNING TO THE LIQUOR TRADE.

Although the complete returns of the election are not yet at hand, this much we know that in every state of the union the Prohibition candidates have received thousands of votes, and with one or two exceptions—due allowance being made—the vote for the cranky St. John throws into the shade the self-styled workingmen's or people's candidate the irrepressible Benjamin F. Butler. It reaches a total of over 200,000 votes. A similar strength of the prohibition element was developed by the votes cast for congressional, state executive and legislative candidates. What of it? What is that to the liquor trade? It is exactly what the firing of the first cannon of Fort Sumpter, on the 12th of April, 1861, was to the United States government: a solemn, forcible, defiant declaration of war, by the simultaneous opening of hostilities. There is no backing out now for either side. The prohibitionists have shown at this election that they now are enlisted for the war to its bitter end. They propose to crush the liquor traffic out of existence, by fair means or foul, and they have good reasons for being sanguine of success. Look at their sweeping victories in Kansas and Iowa, at their progress in Missouri, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Illinois, where local option and high license prevail, and at their steadily growing strength in a dozen other states, such as Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota and others. Are you blind? Are you deaf? Are you the fools of whom the Latin poet said: Quen Deus perdere volait, prius dementat. Whom God wants to punish, he first makes mad (crazy). It would seem so indeed.

The prohibition flood is now sweeping over every state in the union, threatening some of them, ruining others. It undermines the very foundations of every distillery and brewery and shakes like an earthquake every liquor warehouse and every saloon in the land. Do you not hear and feel the prohibition waves beating against the very walls of your stores, your business places, your family dwellings.

When the Ohio or Missouri rivers rise and overflow their banks and cover the lands on both sides with debris and ruins, do the riparian inhabitants stand stupidly by to witness the falling down of their houses, barns and stables, the carrying off by the flood of their hens, cattle and grain? Do they smile, stick their hands in their breeches pockets and say to one another: "Well if my neighbors can stand it, I can."

Yet this is exactly the condition of the liquor dealers and saloon keepers of almost every state of the Union today—this is exactly how they act, how they speak. They can't help seeing the wave of prohibition rolling onto them, they can't help foreseeing the destruction and ruin which will follow, and yet: They quietly look on with their hands in their pockets, a cigar or pipe between their lips, placidly saying "Well, all we can do won't help us any. What's the use throwing our money away for protective associations. If others can stand it I can." And the like.

Once more, we call your attention to your danger. There was mirth, rejoicing, carousing and revelry in the dining hall of the Babylonian Monarch Belshazzar where the mysterious hand traced on the wall in fiery characters the ominous words, Mene, Tekel, Eupharsin. Neither the king nor the guests took notice of the warning, and before moving they were slaughtered, the royal palaces plundered and given a prey to the flames, and the Babylonian or Assyrian Empire obliterated from the face of the earth.

Saloon keepers, liquor dealers, brewers, distillers, beware! The muster of the prohibition hosts, at the late election, is your "Mene, Tekel, Eupharsin." Rouse yourselves from your lethargy; form your protective phalanxes, fight for your rights, for your business, for your homes; but remember that while a child can easily break a single twig or a small stick, the most powerful man cannot break a bunch of rods tied together. In union there is strength. United we stand, divided we fall!

THE ENDURING ISSUE.

The election is over, the smoke of the battle is disappearing; and as the atmosphere clears up, we can see standing forth in glaring prominence, one representative and distinctive fact, which it becomes the friends of personal liberty to heed and keep prominently in mind. This fact is that there is a National Prohibition party organized in this country, which is bent upon carrying forward the temperance agitation to the bitter end. The party which voted for St. John for president "means business." It is enlisted for the war, and the fluctuations of presidential campaigns are mere subsidiary incidents in its grand crusade. It has enlisted in its behalf several great religious organizations with their Sunday schools and their attendant swarm of fanatics, and while the more conservative of these organizations stand firm against the inroads of frenzied agitation and morbid eal, the fanatic at churches with their powerful discipl ine constitute a great political power. Outside of the Democratic and Republican parties, and to a certain extent independent of either, this party of Prohibition looms up like a cloud in the horizon of personal liberty. Whether it shall assimilate the Republican party to itself, or proceed regardless thereof, is a qustion for the future to decide; but the principle of Prohibition has a distinctive, organized embodiment, and is now and henceforth a political entity, which cannot in the future be blinked or dodged.

Let it then be understood that the battle for freedom and right on the part of those who desire to uphold personal liberty in this land, has just fairly opened. The issues are clearly made. Proscription stands defiant, claiming to wield the sceptre over men's consciences, over their thoughts, over their tastes, over their incomings and outgoings—in a word, claiming all that, and even more than the Roundhead Puritans of England claimed in that era of fanaticism whose wave of frenzy swept to destruction a republic founded with the best of intentions, and left a corrupt monarchy in its place.

There can be in this war no middle ground. Parties must adapt themselves to the situation, and stand or fall as they enlist in the cause of liberty or oppression. There may or may not be a re-adjustment of political lines; but there can be no re-adjustment of the issue.

We counsel our friends to stand firm with faith in the future; with faith in this great people, ever ready to do justice; with faith in our form of government, and our constitutions, statutes, and courts. Standing thus firm, and prepared to do all that becomes good citizens to defend and maintain our rights, we shall not fail. But, while you "trust in God" keep your power dry.

EN ROUTE IN ALABAMA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I suppose the world still moves. In fact all I have seen indicates it; but then I hav'nt seen every thing. Not a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL since I left St. Louis, November 29! Not to have seen these later numbers of our paper is to have—well, to say the least, met with a great misfortune. The first thing I do when I reach "Headquarters" will be to sit down and read up.

To go back to Nov. 29, executive meetings were all over and my trunks packed and at the depot, when marching orders came from my superior officer, and almost before I knew it, I was speeding away to the south instead of toward New York. I felt not a little quaking at the prospect, knowing that in trying to fill the engagements of Miss Willard, one has "lots" of room in which to "rattle around." However, when I boarded the train, I found Mrs. Chapin and Mrs. Ervin, of Mississippi, and my spirits rose, knowing each to be in her own way a host.

The evening of the 30th found us in Winona, Mississippi, where the next day it was proposed to hold the state W. C. T. U. convention. At the station we were met by a number of friends of the cause, both ladies and gentlemen, and Mrs. Chapin and myself taken by Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Holloway to their home near by, where our stay was made most pleasant by both host and hostess.

Friday morning at 9 o'clock we were escorted to the M. E. church. At ten the church was full of both ladies and gentlemen and after the reading of the 146th Psalm and prayer by Mrs. Ervin, Mrs. Chapin addressed the audience. I followed her with a very short talk, after which a paper was circulated, and over a hundred names obtained toward the formation of a local union.

In the afternoon Mrs. Chapin gave another address, and at four o'clock I talked to the children and a Band of Hope was organized with a large membership.

The evening meeting like those of the day, was very large, notwithstanding the election excitement, and continued till a late hour, more names being added to the list already obtained.

Winona is a no-license town, as are many others in this state, and to my surprise we found a strong sentiment prevailing among the people, not only in favor of local prohibition but in favor of the national ticket.

Saturday evening we started for Vicksburg, but were not able to get through that evening and so remained at Jackson, arriving in Vicksburg about 9:30 the following a. m. A telegram announcing our arrival had not, we afterwards learned, been delivered, so there were none to meet us at the station save the usual station fiends, and fiends they were, indeed. They seized our satchels, two or three of them at a time, all pulling and pushing and talking and begging, each going through with the catalogue of virtues they and the hotels they represented or did not represent, were possessed of. A desperate effort saved my baggage and umbrella, but my temper was gone. White or black, it was all the same, no one of them knew more than he was paid to know, though afterward if one could judge of intelligence by the prices we paid for our transportation and that of our trunks to a hotel a few rods distant, it certainly was of the highest type. Hereafter I shall always have unbounded regard for the New York hackmen and their prices.

We were hardly settled in our quarters at the hotel ere the waiter announced the Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall. I had heard of Dr. Marshall, but never expected the pleasure of meeting him. So kindly, so genial, so entertaining was he, that at once we felt at our ease, and the little trials of the morning suddenly presented their funny side.

Dinner time found us settled in the Dr's. lovely home, having been most cordially welcomed by his charming wife and daughter.

Our meeting was announced to be held in the opera house, and at the appointed time we found it well filled. On the platform with us sat Rev. Dr. Marshall, Rev. Mr. Woodward, pastor of the M. E. church, the Jewish Rabbi, and a young lawyer whose name I do not now remember, who was chosen to introduce the speakers. Dr. Marshall spoke of the meeting, apologized for the absence of Miss Willard, and gave out the hymn, "Rock of Ages," which was sung by the great audience, after which Rev. Mr. Woodward offered prayer and Mrs. Chapin was introduced. I thought I had heard Mrs. Chapin before at our national convention, and summer meetings, but I never had. To hear her one must be in the south. She is only quite herself before a southern audience. It is needless to say I was charmed and felt that I was taking my reputation in my hands to dare to follow her.

Monday morning we were invited to a place called Edwards, about twenty miles out on the railroad. The invitation was accepted although no notice of the meeting had been given. We arrived between three and four in the afternoon and at seven-thirty the Presbyterian church was filled, many standing about the doors. A union was organized here with twenty-seven members. The next morning we returned to Vicksburg and through the kindness of Dr. Robbins spent the morning riding about town and visting the national cemetery, the most beautiful in the country, from which can be seen the Mississippi river and the plan of the siege which has made this city historical.

Our stay in this lovely city, among these kindest of friends, came to an end all too soon and Wednesday evening found us in Natchez. Here a surprise awaited us, for among the friends who were at the depot to meet us were Mrs. Dr. McPhetus and Miss Walworth, sisters of our own Mrs. Douglass Walworth, now of New York, but not long since corresponding secretary of the Tennessee W. C. T. U. Our host here was Major Reed of the M. E. church, and our meetings were held in the Presbyterian church, Rev. Dr. Stratten, pastor, whose kindness will be long remembered.

A Band of Hope and a W. C.T. U., with Mrs. McPhetus, wife of a leading physician, president, was the result.

Our next appointment was at Baton Rouge and our home with our Mrs. W. A. Goodale, whom delegates to the St. Louis convention will remember. Our special meeting was to be the following evening, and so we improved this, by going to the colored church to hear their bishop, and a good gospel sermon we heard, after which Mrs. Chapin gave a short address. Here I parted regretfully with Mrs. Chapin after learning that the connection which I had expected to make, thereby getting back to keep an engagement at the north, could not be made. Altogether I never felt more forlorn. To be obliged at so late a date to break an engagement which might have been kept, could I have known all the circumstances, was a great grief. Added to this a hard cold taken at St. Louis and "all along shore," and Sunday morning found me too sick to be fitted for anything. Some how the day passed and the afternoon meeting was over.

I received a most cordial reception in the home of Mrs. Merrick, both from herself and the judge, and could but be delighted with my stay there. The judge is one of the most genial gentlemen I have ever met, and Mrs. Merrick was most kind and considerate. The work in Louisiana is progressing, as it must under the watchful care and guidance of such workers as Mrs. Merrick and Mrs. Goodale. I have been surprised to find a strong third party sentiment every where I have been. I do not mention this as the sentiment of the women only, but of the men. In every place it has been the unanimous statement that the issue in the next presidential campaign will be prohibition, and as commonly was it stated that had there been an electoral ticket in Mississippi it would have received in many counties a large support.

Election day we passed in Vicksburg, and I never knew a quieter day at the north. The following days, when perhaps the excitement was higher than ever on election day, we were passing from one to another and up and down the streets of various towns, but not a sign of excitement did we see or the least demonstration of any sort. It was an excellent time and opportunity to look into one or two things we at the north ought to know about. Politicians both north and south seem to be off the same piece. That the saints are not in one party and the unwashed entirely in the other is a fact I have known for some years, and this knowledge has led me to take what is said in their organs with a grain of allowance. But of this one thing I am convinced by my observation, the rank and file at the south is ready for a new party, as is the north, and four years from now we shall see an entire change in the political complexion of the country, and no better advice can be given the politicians than a little speech made by one of our boys when one of his mates said to him: "Now look here, are you fool enough to think those prohibitionists will ever elect a president?" and our young man replied: "I want to give you this little piece of advice, you'd better get aboard if you don't want to get left." So say we all of us!

Had it not been that duty called us away our willing soul would have remained much longer in this land of sunshine and flowers. I can only hope that good has followed in our wake and that mayhap the effect of this short trip will be the casting up of the highways and removing of the stumbling blocks from before the feet of some who heretofore have been hindered in their efforts for a purer life.

To those who have made visits in their homes so pleasant and to those who have planned and assisted in the meetings, I can but return heartfelt thanks and an earnest God bless them. CAROLINE B. BUELL.

PLANS FOR THE CHILDREN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We had a pleasant time with our dear children last week: we are in the habit of handing around a treat of cake every few weeks, (the teachers or other ladies of the W. C. T. U. sending in a supply) and our little ones enjoy it very much as this forms a sort of "off day." We vary the exercises, thus keeping up the interest of the children, and find it works well. At this season of the year it is very necessary to impress upon the minds of the scholars, the evil effects of cider, giving an object lesson as regards the alcohol contained, etc. An accident occurred, a day or two ago, in our vicinity. A barrel of cider burst and knocked out the side of the house and did other damage, and yet good people will say to us, "Do not put anything about cider in your pledge, it is a very simple drink;" but we know from the testimony of many poor fellows, who insist that it is the "devil's kindling wood," that it is far from a harmless drink, but is in reality fraught with danger, owing to the large proportion of alcohol.

There is a feature of the work which I think could be well introduced in our temperance schools, adding much to the interest of the girls, large and small; I refer to sewing schools. Now, dear editor, do not smile, and say, "what has sewing to do with temperance?" I will try to explain. Let the girls meet an hour before the usual hour for opening the exercises, and devote themselves to making fancy and useful articles; after a time have a sale (not a fair) and use the money thus gained to purchase something needed for the school, a library, blackboard, Sewall's Plates, or subscribe for children's papers for the year. The boys can be interested with a club, where they can have debates or readings, and I would also suggest reading aloud by a teacher or older scholar at the sewing school, when practicable. The boys' evening might also be varied by a drill, once a month; if a master cannot be secured, a large boy might take some lessons and then teach the others. The point is, how to interest our larger boys and girls, the class who come between.

How glad I shall be when our boys are all grown up (may I say our girls also?) and ready to vote for prohibition. Perhaps we may have it by that time, however. God speed the day! Yours for God, the children, home and native land. ANNA M. HAMMER.

FROM THE NEW NORTHWEST.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have spent this 4th of November, in Seattle, the largest city of this territory, and have seen enfranchised woman at the ballot box, speaking, for the first time here, in most competent language, in behalf of territorial interests.

Early in the forenoon, my hostess and her husband sat down with various tickets in hand, which they scratched and fixed according to their individual preferment. It has been said by opposers to woman suffrage that either husband and wife would vote alike, or there would be domestic broils engendered at once. I noticed that the tickets of these two heads of one household differed considerably, and after excusing themselves to me a few moments while they went to vote, they started off together, evidently much in love with each other, though in the possession of mutual dependence and independence.

Later on I was carried to all the voting places in the city, beginning with the worst ward. I alighted at each place and tarried until my note-taking furnished me with irrefutable proof that woman's ballotation is becoming to the most womanly woman, and a thing of good, in application to any question.

Fathers and mothers, husbands and wives, sisters and brothers, sometimes differed in their franchise expression, yet I heard no demand for the police, nor did I learn of any application for divorce. The W. C. T. U. and the Y. W. C. T. U. were busy at the polls in the distribution of tickets, and I was pleased with the gentlemanly recognition and consideration given to all women by all men.

Well-dressed, cultivated women, women of gentleness, women of tenderness, womanly women, were everywhere. Women and men in carriages, women and men on foot, women and men in crowds, and yet the coming and going, and even the standing in survey, or in conversation, was enacted "decently and in order," and I said, "Why, here's the solemnity and the quietude of a funeral!"

Yes, woman's assertion of herself as a citizen of Washington territory has not removed her one jot or one tittle aback or adown, but has advanced both man and woman mightily forward along the way of polite proprieties and moral rectitude. HENRIETTA G. MOORE.

LOUISIANA'S FIRST Y. W. C. T. U.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"The Master's work may make weary feet, but it leaves the spirit glad." Although weary and unrested I have spent a pleasant afternoon and have just returned to my cozy little home. Our W. C. T. U. meets every Thursday at 4 p. m. A meeting of young ladies had been called for the same hour in an adjoining room. Miss Anna Barlow, a leading spirit in all good work, informed us that the young ladies wished to organize a Y. W. C. T. U. I was requested to organize it. In the room were gathered the brightest and best, the most winsome and fair of all the "fair daughters" of Red Stick. Inspired by the earnest, beautiful faces before me, with a happy, full heart I read the Crusade Psalm, after which we all joined our voices as our hearts in repeating the Lord's prayer. I explained the work, its object and the manner of working.

After a temporary organization the following officers were elected and the constitution as found in "the Pathfinder" was adopted: Miss Anna Barlow, president; Miss Addie McGrath, vice president from Catholic church; Miss Anna Reymond, vice president from Presbyterian church; Miss Nettie Rowe, corresponding secretary; Miss Bettie Sherburne, recording secretary; Miss Corinne Maiot, treasurer. This is the first Y. W. C. T. U. in our state and we do hope it is only the forerunner of many more.

Our dear Mrs. Chapin in eloquent, fervent manner, stirred hearts to feel that they were not sowing as they would reap. I was told that many were moved to tears by her appeals. Mrs. Buell, in her quiet, earnest way, probed deep into the careless lives of many and startled them into life. We attribute the awakening of our young women to the efforts of these dear workers here last week. God speed them on their way and keep them 'neath the shadow of the Rock.

Our newly organized Y. W. C. T. U. intend to go into aggressive work at once. They will work zealously for honorary members among young men, will circulate voters' pledges that we may in the near future test our local option law, and put the question of "license" or "no license" to the people. Next week they are to give a reception in a public hall, with music, etc. Your humble sister is invited to talk to them and tell them of the national convention at St. Louis. That glorious convention! It is an inspiring theme and if I only could speak what is in my heart, eloquence would flow from my tongue. I know you wish our young union a Godspeed.

Yours in love,

"SUFFER THE LITTLE CHILDREN."

Suffer the little children
To come unto Me, He said,
And laid His loving fingers
Upon each innocent head;

For such is the Father's kingdom
In the land of light and grace;
And the God of the good, the great, the wise,
Loveth each little face.

Then a man in his Maker's image
Rose up with a brimming bowl,
And cried, "I bid for the children—
A bid for every soul,

"In behalf of Satan's kingdom,
Its stain, its sin, and its slime;
I will lead them into the darkness
Through lanes of sin and crime."

"And who speaks for Christ's kingdom?"
Cried an angel robed in white,
"And who will lead these children
Away from the realm of night?"

Then rose up a temperance worker,
A woman fair and sweet:
"I'll care for the little children,
I'll guide their tender feet."

Then she gathered them under her banner,
The little ones and all.
The sign was a cup of water,
The scene was a temperance hall.

Then the messenger of Satan
Went back to his foul retreat,
And the gates of Satan's kingdom
Shut down on his passing feet.

But the voices of the children
Rose up to the blue above,
And the burden of all the singing
Was the Victory of Love.

THE STUBB'S LETTERS.—No. V.

My Dear Peter:—As I've got the time to write now, I shan't wait for your answer to my last, but I'll write the letter I promised about the temperance lady's lecture.

You said you'd heerd 'whisky in the right quantity is a strengthnin help.' The lady said, "There is no right quantity." She talked about our beautiful bodies bein' the houses for our souls to live in; and she said usein' 'em so much they must needs be constantly repaired just as other buildins' must.

Well, as near as I can say it like her, it's this way. When you eat a piece of bread or beef your body's glad to get it, and a million of tiny fingers like, takes hold on it and begins to make it over into things of different kinds to help mend and build up the body. And very soon it isn't bread or beef any more, but it's flesh on your arm or leg; and she said its kemical energy gits imparted to you, and it comes to be your strength.

"Now," says the temperance lady, "If you take into your stumick a little alcohol it 'll git no sich a welcome as the bread or beef." Says she, "Nature'll treat it like a pizen as it is, and she'll try to git rid ov it as soon as possible. The many juices ov the system 'll hurry along as quick as they can, to mix with it, and weaken it so's to keep it from shrivelin up the delicate membranes it touches." The lady said, "The veins 'll take it up and try to hurry it away, and then the wonderful organs that seems like scavengers to the body—the lungs and the kidneys and the perspiration-glands—they'll all go strait to work to throw off the enemy."

That is exactly what he said, Peter and I've been thinkin' ov it ever sence, and lovin' God more and more for makin' my body jest like He did. It seems sich a grand piece ov work, this body ov mine and fit to be the house ov my soul; and I would n't put a pizen thing like alcohol in it for all the world, that I wouldn't.

She said Professor Leibig says it has been proved jest as certain as a sum in rithmetic,—and he knows what he says, for he's a great skolar, and he has n't got no kind ov reason to tell a lie about it either—the great professor says that as much flour as will lay on the point ov a table knife has got more real nourishin' qualities than eight quarts ov Bavarian beer. Mind you Peter, that's thirty-two half pint glasses. It fairly made me smile, tho' it was a pitiful smile too, to think ov poor Deekin Jones's wife every day a gulpin down three glasses ov the mis'able stuff which she can't abide the taste ov neither, and her husband a miller, a makin' the very finest flour in all these parts. It'll take nigh upon eleven days for the poor creetur to git as much strength from it, as she might git from a piece ov good bread no bigger 'n her little finger. I've bin wonderin ef it is n't my duty to go and tell her about it.

Well the truth is the Devil's not dead yet, Peter, and he's still a goin' about a tryin' to deceive the very elect theirselves: and that's the reason that right in the face ov the plainest truth people gits wrong views, You see, its like the Evil One's a standin' close by you, tho' you don't see him, and he's a holdin' before your eyes a piece ov colored glass that makes all you look at, be that color.

Watch out for him Peter my boy, he's not fur away when somebody tells you that whisky can ever be a strength'nin help.—I'll tell you more about the lecture in my next. Let me hear from you very soon.

Your loving, Aunt Jane.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—Sometime ago we had a little talk about Bethesda Mission, its Kindergarten, Children's Church, Sunday school and Creche, or cradle mission. Many of you were very much interested in this mission, and some remembered the little waifs that are cared for there, with various nice little gifts. I have just been down to the Mission again, and I do wish it were possible for every single little soldier in our army to enjoy just such a nice visit there as I had. When I went in, the children and their teacher were so taken up with some of the nice little games they play to rest the little tots, that most of them did not even know I was there. I would like to tell you about all these games, but am afraid we should talk too long if I once began. One of the prettiest games, I thought, was the one they were playing when I went in. I forgot to ask the children's name for it, but the teacher, Miss Chambers, first went into the ring, then by a polite bow, not speaking a word, she invited one of the little girls in, to play she was a little bird, this little girl invited another little girl into the ring in the same way, and then there were two little birdies in the ring, and presently a good many more. All the time the children sang a pretty little song as the birdies hopped about in the ring, or hopped up to some little child as their "home," when the birdies would be stroked and petted as all little birdies should be, I wish I could make you see how nicely all this was done, the polite bows that were made by these ragged little ones, colored as well as white children. We had the scissors-grinder, and the farmer sowing, reaping and threshing his wheat, and then the children marched to their seats to the tune, "Bringing in the Sheaves," and went to work on their Bible lesson. The youngest ones were working on card-board the picture of a Bible, closed; the next oldest an open Bible, with a pretty little text; and the oldest a lily, with the text, "Consider the lilies of the field."

On the tables I saw their work of different kinds, all pretty and nicely done. On one table were some little models made of putty, among which were some barrels. One of the little girls had played she had sweet cakes in her barrel, another sweet potatoes, and a little boy had filled his with cider. Most of the children were temperance boys and girls, though, and couldn't drink the cider, so the little boy kindly filled it with apples instead. This morning the "little talk" they always have the first thing in the morning was about heaven. One of the little girls was very anxious to get there, so she "wouldn't have to wear ragged clothes any more;" a little boy wanted to know if they had plenty of money, if they did he was "going to ask for three or four hundred dollars, just as soon as he got there."

Now, it seems to me, and I am sure you will all agree with me, that our little soldiers who have nice homes, pretty, warm clothes, plenty to eat, and everything they want to make them happy, would enjoy their Thanksgiving dinners, and their Christmas and New Years presents very much more, if they remembered the poor little children of Bethesda mission. Clothing, food, coal, wood, books, anything that little boys and girls from three to ten years old can use or wear, would make these little ones and those who take care of them very happy.

I shall be very glad to see that the gifts, which I hope will come in generously, find their way to the Mission. Last month there were 625 children in the Kindergarten, and there are six or eight little babies to be taken care of in the Creche every day. Shall we not help care for and make them happy? Captain Deborah.

Chief Justice Coleridge.—Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, of England, said from the bench of the supreme court in 1881: "Judges are weary with calling attention to drink as the principal cause of crime, but I can not refrain from saying that if they could make England sober they would shut up nine-tenths of the prisons."

"WHOSOEVER LOVETH ME."

MRS. A. E. BURTON.

Sweet to me are hours of twilight,
When the busy, hurrying day
Lingers, just to softly gather
One by one each golden ray.
Till the mystic shadows mingle
With the fast receding light,
As she folds the soft grey curtains
O'er the portals of the night.

When the strange and tender yearnings
Of the soul for all that's pure,
For the solving of life's lessons
Into something higher, truer,
Kindle each of life's ideals
Into fresh and vivid glow,
As the peace and rest and sweetness,
All our being overflow.

When the hope and faith and courage,
Scattered through long days and years,
Seem to thrill each inmost fibre
Till the heart is filled with tears,
And we lift each pain and trouble,
All our weariness and care,
All our earthly sin and weakness
In a silent, trustful prayer.

Floating down the great forever,
Time has gone but little space,
Since those skies, and just such twilights
Left their gentle, soothing trace,
On the life of our Great Master,
Tracing out with eyes Divine,
Those same starry constellations,
From the hills of Palestine.

'Neath fair Lebanon's tall cedars,
Where sweet Kedron seeks the sea,
On the Mount, or in the garden,
By the side of Galilee,
Passing by the eager people,
When the busy day had flown,
When the twilight gathered softly,
Jesus sought to be alone.

Oh! the love which took our sorrow,

Pain and trouble, guilt and death,
Lifted them with patient pleading,
Eager, supplicating breath,
Up to eyes of pitying mercy,
To a Father's tender care,
To a Father's faithful promise,
In a hopeful, trusting prayer.

We can almost see Him coming,
From that garden on the hill,
All the love and pain and anguish
Lingering about Him still,
As he tells His dear disciples
Something of the gloom and dread,
Something of the storm-cloud gathering
Over His devoted head.

As He says, in sad entreaty,
"Whosoever loveth me,
Let him take my cross upon him,
Let him feel earth's misery,
All its hardships, darkness, error,
All its faithless, blind despair,
All its suffering and sadness,
Taking them to heaven in prayer."

Daily then this burden, sisters,
Falls on every Christian's heart,
Some one's grief, or guilt, or folly,
Some one's cross to bear in part,
Some small share of life's great errors,
Seeking out your heart and mine
As our human love and pity,
Lead us up to Love Divine.

Sisters, we must not be weary,
Lo! the Lord who owns the land,
Has been sending out the message,
"Come and lend a helping hand,"
And the reaper gains sweet wages,
As with patient toil and care,
Precious fruit for life eternal,
To the "Harvest home" we bear.

REASONS FOR "WEARING THE BLUE."

AUTHOR OF "THE LAIRD'S SECRET."

As example with me has always gone a long way further than either instruction or precept, it occurs to me that it may perhaps interest others, more than anything else I could say, to hear how I was led to adopt the blue ribbon, and why I continue to wear it. It was an incidental conversation between two good Christian women that gave the bias in this respect to my whole after life; and I have reason to believe that their influence for good was experienced in many more cases than mine.

I was learning my French lessons at the nursery-table that night—so long, long ago—and Nurse and our kitchen-maid, Nannie, were sitting by the fire, finishing some piece of work for baby. Nannie had made some remark which I had not caught, but I distinctly heard Nurse's rejoinder, "We live in queer days; a'body does just what pleases theirsels, and heeds naething for their neebors. The land's gaun clean to destruction wi' drink, an' hardly onybody fashin' theirsels sae muckle as to lift a finger to stop it; it beats a'."

No answer being made to this, Nurse went on—

"What I wonder at is the ministers an' the Sabbath schule teachers, especially the ladies that gang aboot veesiting the puir folk—hoo they can look on at a' the sin an' meesery that's in the world through drink, an' no trying to do something against it. I wonder at them that they dinna gie theirsels to the Lord's wark, an' band theirsels thegither to pit it doon."

"It's no wnat they take theirsels that's the mischief, sae much as the example they set other folk," observed Nannie, after a pause. "I've heard the minister hissel, when I've been in at the table, when he's had the young gentry at their denner, insistin' on them takin' another glass o' wine—just in the kindness o' his heart, an' ne'er thinkin' aboot it—when the lads had maybe mair nor they should hae had already. An', ye ken," lowering her voice so that I could scarcely hear, "ye ken hoo yon ane cam' into the drawing-room last week, an' spilt a' the cream ower the mistress's silk gown—the mark'll ne'er be oot a' its days. It was weel for him his freend got him away sae cleverly, afore onybody noticed."

"Weel, it's a real disgrace—just doonricht murder, baith o' body an' soul," I heard Nurse say in indignant tones. "I'm misdoobin' it'll be heavy on the ministers when they come to gi'e in their account at the last; for if them that turns mony to righteousness are 'to shine as the stars for ever,' what'll they be that turns mony away frae't? And mony's the ane's been led on in the road to ruin that ne'er wad hae been but for seein' them he lookit up to gaun afore him."

"But, after a'," said Nannie, who was by no means so rigid in her principles as Nurse, "it's gey hard on them that ne'er take mair nor they should take, that they they hae to suffer for them that dinna ken when to stop. Maun I be keepit oot o' my tea just because tea hurts you?"

"That's another thing a'thegither; though I will say it wadna be very neeborly if ye kent it did me ill, an' that I couldna keep frae't, for you aye to be takin' your tea afore my very een. But ye canna even the tea to the drink; tea'll ne'er hurt onyboky's soul, or gar them do what's wrang; an' a'body can do without tea, if they have to do't—they can take other things in its place; but ance let them get used wi' the drink, an' they canna gie't up, reason or nane. It's just a kind o' madness, an' nae po'er on earth can stop it when ance it's gotten ahead."

"But what can folk do?" said Nannie, after a pause. "Ye canna pit the drink oot o' the land, an' naething less'll do."

"But a'body can lend a helpin' hand to pittin't away. If nane drees, there'll be nae drink; an' if ye dinna want folk to drink, ye mustna take it yersel'. Ye wad ne'er think o' takin' a drap oot o' a poison-bottle in a bairn's sicht, if ye didna want to do the same as sune's yer back was turned, an' there are heaps o' grown-up folk nae better nor bairns in that way. An' what for should ye gang on takin' what's nae better nor poison, baith for body an' soul? It disna matter though you may can tak' a drap without killin' yoursel'; them that sees ye maybe canna. Onyway, they're no a' like to keep by that; and when there's sic a risk, what for meddle wi't ava? For ma part, I wadna like to be hard on my neebors, but I canna see hoo ony ane can be a Christian an' gi'e his countenance to sic a sin."

There was no reply for some minutes, and then I heard Nannie again—

"Aweel, it's a rael truth that a'body should try to set a guid example, an' it's whiles the best that us women-folk can do. I used aye to laugh at you for bein' sic a teetotaler; but I'm sure, if it's to do any guid, I'll put doon my name the morn. An' weel I ken that if there's ae woman that rues bein' a teetotaler, there five hunder breckin' their hearts the nicht that theyr'e no; but it's easier keepin' the deil awa' frae the door than drivin' him oot after he's in."

This conversation made a deep impression on my mind—school-girl as I was at that time; and I resolved then and there that, like Nannie, I would at least "try to set a good example" in that respect; but my resolutions were not carried into practice till some years after that—after I was done with lessons, and had become a Sunday school teacher myself. And it was an address by a young minister at one of our conference meetings (which I remember as vividly as if I had only heard it yesterday) that thus happily deepened my convictions into action.

"When the first missionaries were sent forth by their Master on their enterprise," he began, "we are told that 'He gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease.' They were first to put the people in a position to hear their message, and then say to them, 'The kingdom of God is nigh.' Our own land, in this our own day, is groaning under a terrific burden of sin and misery, and we must first relieve it of that before we can deliver our message with effect. We need no one to point out to us (for that is a fact none will attempt to deny) that the source of all this evil is the drinking habits of the people—that intemperance is the sin which oppresses the land, and the cry of which has come up before God. Hardly a day passes without crime, in one shape or another, being traceable to this vice, and until it is checked nothing whatever can be done. Ministers and elders, Sabbath school teachers, magistrates, and all in authority, agree that the greatest evil they have to contend with is this many-headed monster; and many a broken-hearted wife and wretched family can add their agonized testimony to the same effect. And can nothing be done to check this evil? Yes, certainly there can! The remedy is in our own hands, and a very simple one it is, requiring only a little exercise of that brotherly love which we are commanded to cherish towards all. Example with the larger half of mankind goes a long way further than precept; and if we wish others to leave off their darling sin, we must not ourselves 'touch, taste, or handle' the unclean thing. Believe me, my friends, there is no middle course open to us, if we would do real good: either we must go on encouraging drunkards, or we must abstain altogether. Depend upon it, if we would go to the homes of poverty and vice, armed with 'power against unclean spirits,' etc., we must go clad in the temperance armour, or we need not go at all. These are strong words, but things have now come to such a pass that we dare not longer temporise or trifle with the evil. My friends, shall we sit tamely by and see our land vanquished by a far more insidious foe than the old Edwards who invaded it of yore? Shall we not rather unite in one great, simultaneous, patriotic movement to crush the enemy that threatens to destroy our peace? and wage unremitting war against him until spirituous be reduced to the place of any other drug, and until not a drunkard be seen in our midst? Do you say, yes? then join in that noble band who, as the apostles of the temperance cause, are preparing the way of the Lord, and hastening His kingdom on the earth. I speak especially to my fair friends here, with whom the first step in any great reform usually rests. Let them lead this movement—let them affix their names to the temperance lists, and set their faces steadfastly against intoxicating drinks in any form. Rest not till, with the blessing from above, you have exterminated those pitfalls, those lures to destruction, that in the form of spirit-shops lurk in almost every street—till, like parts in our sister-land, America, the use of intoxicating liquors shall be discountenanced by the law of the land."

It was a solemn and heart-stirring appeal, and I felt every fibre of my being thrill a deep response to the words. Many a time and oft before this had I read of noble deeds that have "sent a voice down through all time"—of the old Greek and Roman heroes dying for their country—of the knights famous in song and story "who went about redressing human wrong."

But the reveillee had sounded in my ears—I was thoroughly roused. Doubtless it was a grand thing to die for one's country; but was it not quite as noble to live for it, and help to fight the foes—no less tangible than those the old knights had to contend with—that still threaten its peace? True, I did not even yet see very clearly how my influence and example could greatly benefit any one, but all events I could but try, and I would. "She hath done what she could," was once said approvingly to a poor woman, for a very small service, by the Master who could have commanded the service of all the kings and potenates of the earth; and His "Well done" at last would surely be a rich reward for a whole life spent in such efforts. Even I could feel that this was

And so my early dreams have been realized in the endeavor to do the true work of a woman in the world—to fight in the Master's name against evil in every form, and in particular to wage uncompromising war with that giant sin, intemperance, which lies at the root of all the others, thus helping to hasten the coming of His blessed kingdom of peace, and light, and love.

And as I think the members of a corps ought always to show their colors, so that there may be no mistake as to what side they are on, that is my reason for "wearing the blue ribbon."—Scottish Temperance League Monthly.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Nov. 30.] Fourth Quarter, No. 9. [1884.

TOPIC: TRUE WISDOM.

LESSON TEXT—Prov. 8: 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me. Prov. 8: 17.

TIME: B. C. 990.

1. The openness of the call and work of wisdom. Arnot says: "The wisdom of God is manifested in Christ, and Christ is the wisdom of God manifested." We have this publicity of our Savior's words and work testified to by Himself: "I spake openly to the world; I even taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." He healed the sick, and fed the multitudes, and preached on the mount, and performed His mighty works where all the world could know what He did. Later, when Paul was engaged in his great defense before Agrippa, and Festus accused him of madness as he proclaimed the truth of the resurrection, and gave the account of his marvellous conversion, he replied; "I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness. For the King knoweth of these things; * * for this thing was not done in a corner." This has been the proud boast of Christianity all along the ages. The ancient priestess muttered her incantations and oracles, and iniquity almost invariably seeks a secret way of gaining power, whether with nations or individuals; as witness schemes for fraud, correspondence conducted in cipher, and oaths of secrecy in consultation. Or witness the saloon door, guarded with screens from the public gaze, while the witching strains of music fall on the ear of the passer-by, to allure his feet into the ways of death. "Deeds of darkness" has passed into a proverb, so universal is the habit of sin to seek the cover of night for wickedness. Let us "walk in the light, as He is in the light."

2. The preciousness of wisdom. Many things are valuable as commodoties, especially the rare and wonderful jewels, which are hard to find and of great price. But of priceless worth are the treasures which money cannot buy,—love, wisdom, nobleness,—all the riches of the spirit which are not to be measured. Yet these are freely given for the asking, when we seek the Infinite wisdom.

3. The royal character of wisdom. "By me kings reign, and princes decree justice. By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth." The hand writing appears on the wall, even while the revelry goes on in the palace of the king, and while no one in the gay company of wine-drinkers dreams that the decree has gone forth against their place and kingdom. This is a frequent error on the part of those in high places. They imagine that their prestige and power can never depart, and too often allow wrongs and injustice to reign in the place of wisdom and truth; suddenly their brief day is over, and God sets up a purer authority to aid in bringing His kingdom, "on the earth, as it is in heaven."

MAJORITIES, MINORITIES, INDIVIDUALS.

"None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." This is the underlying law of humanity, that, with resistless power, forms armies, founds cities, organizes colonies, unites families, builds churches and schools, and lays the foundation of republics and kingdoms. By this law, we find ourselves numbered with all the associations, benevolent, social and otherwise, that have claimed our aid and taken hold of our sympathies. Men, thinking of the same themes and coming to the same conclusions, gradually gathering great force, form majorities. Men thinking on the same themes coming to different conclusions from the first named class in smaller numbers, are called minorities. Majorities are strong in numbers and power, and often become despotic. Minorities fight for their existence, and struggle for a foot-hold: having gained which, they often gather to themselves a force which lifts them to heights of command. It has been a common mistake to "despise the day of small things." Yet this is not nature's way nor according to the philosophy of history and Scriptures.

The sands of the shore, the waves of the sea, the leaves of the forest, are all the tritest illustrations of the immensity of aggregated littles. But a still better figure is that of growth from a living principle. He who "spake as never man spake" did not disdain to liken the kingdom of heaven to "a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and sowed in his field. Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest of all herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." The essential thing is, the power of growth. Here is the saving clause on which organization is based for every new undertaking of reform. The few who dare to be standard-bearers, read in the history of the past that every new party, evolved from the heart of older organizations, met with abuse and ostracism in its inception, learned by the things it suffered, and grew strong, like the youthful Hercules, by the greatness of its tasks, which gave it the element of the heroic.

President Seelye's utterance in the October North American Review is stimulating and full of encouragement: "A scattered vote in a single election may easily be the controlling vote in the next. Such a vote, if indicative of a high purpose, a purpose which can neither be cajoled nor frightened, carries with it a healthy instruction to political leaders, and a healthy inspiration to the people."

Every man needs to realize his personal responsibility in the use of the ballot. He not only belongs to the majority, or the minority as the case may be, but to God and to himself first of all. Here comes in his duty as an individual, which he can never abrogate. He cannot plead justification for a wrong vote by saying that he went with the multitude. He is as responsible, morally, as if his were the only vote in the world, for any other idea dethrones conscience, and elevates party above principle. Yet many arguments used, in the heat of political excitement, would take away from the individual his privilege of conviction and expression. The assumption is, that he must be with the majority or he is wrong, and he is subject to ridicule and scorn if he dares to step aside from the beaten paths. But look back through the centuries and see that splendid system of Paganism which filled the known earth with its prestige of art and learning, and wealth and countless votaries. Then see the little band of twelve, gathered from ignorant and uninfluential classes, sent out without scrip or money "as sheep in the midst of wolves." Who could foresee that in the course of a short time, as history goes, that little band, so pathetic in the fewness of its numbers and the narrowness of its resources, as we look on it with mere worldly judgment, would have so won the hearts of the people that even the Roman Emperor Julian, who threw open his coffers and lavished his treasures upon the rebuilding of temples and establishing Pagan worship again, could not turn back the tide of that pure, fresh stream of Christianity, whose fountain was the eternal truth.

It is said of a strong, true spirit who passed from the earthly to the heavenly ranks, leaving much undone that he had hoped to accomplish, and seeing many of his dearest wishes "fall to the ground," (not, we believe, without the notice of our Father) "To mental eyes he seemed to fail, the work of his hands has perished. But he was true to his orders. He fulfilled the law. He enacted the Golden Rule. The Deity who disposes will see to it that the water he poured upon the sands, becomes beneath them a living fountain, to which fainting pilgrims will come in their thirst."

Dear friend, whoever you are, whose eyes read these words, disregard not the sacred and unalterable law of your own being, the seal of your individuality, which God Himself bestowed. Live not unto yourself alone but be yourself, your noblest, wisest, truest self, that you may be all the more to heaven and humanity. In the quaint putting of Epictetus, learn the blessed lesson of the worth of the individual: "Of what good, then, was Priscus, who was but a single person and unknown! Why, what good doth the purple to the garment?"

OUR NEW SUPERINTENDENCIES.

Chief of these is the "Department of Instruction and Organization in Schools of Higher Education." This has long been a missing link. We have not reached the thousands of America's most fortunate and cultured youth, who are in universities, colleges and seminaries. But we must reach them. They will have more to do with moulding public sentiment in the chief homes, pulpits and newspapers, and mercantile centers of the land, than any other class whom we can reach. But they require peculiar treatment. They must be reached on their own plane. We must go to them for they will not come to us. The state universities are nearly all co-education schools. We must arouse the young women to activity in W. C. T. U. work, the young men to a true sense of personal obligation for pure habits, and all to a keener sighted patriotism. Vassar, Wellesley, Holyoke, Smith and Wells, are crowded with noble young women whom we can fasten to our cause with hooks of steel. Dartmouth and Yale, Princeton, Amherst, Union and Hamilton, must all be reached. Much of this work must be wrought out by indirection. It requires a woman of the broadest culture, sweetest motherliness of nature and choicest educational experience to win success in this difficult field. All these qualities meet in Mary Lowe Dickinson, who in the fullness of her gracious prime, dedicates herself to this work with the enthusiasm of youth. God bless and guide her as she goes gently and steadily forward, and may she be embalmed in all our hearts and prayers. Under the head of "Educational" we have had for a year "Kindergarten Temperance Work," but nothing has been done, and Mrs. E. G. Greene, of St. Albans, Vt., president of that state and author of "The Pathfinder," our new book on W. C. T. U. methods and plans, has accepted the superintendency. This earnest and gifted woman never permits a position held in trust by her to be like the talent in a napkin. She is loyal and true always and we shall see such an unfolding of plans and work for the little ones as will mightily augment our hopes. There are no bounds to what may be wrought out of this department for prevention which is the chief hope of the temperance reform.

"Work among the Indians" is a department instituted as a result of the enthusiasm created by Hannah Whitall Smith and Emma Molloy in their recitals of experiences and work among the original owners of the continent. The rarest woman we could think of was Mrs. Dr. McCabe, of Delaware, Ohio, first president of Ohio W. C. T. U., the select and lovely spirit who welcomed us to Cleveland when the National W. C. T. U. was organized in 1874. We shall hear from Mrs. McCabe; and it was a happy day for the Indians when she was placed in this position.

We have some new superintendents of departments already established. Mrs. Grubb, our "wide awake" at the head of "Work among Foreigners," has as her assistants Mrs. Ada Kepley, of Illinois, for the Germans. Mrs. Kepley is a lawyer of Effingham, Ill., but has shown more intelligent zeal in this behalf than any one else. Mrs. Harris, of Los Angeles, California, takes Mexicans and Chinese, and has a valuable habit of causing results to come to pass. Mrs. Fixen, our gifted "little Dane," and Mrs. Van Olinda, take the Scandinavian work.

Mrs. S. R. Woods, of Marshalltown, Iowa, takes the department of Relative Statistics. As Mrs. Woods is one of the strongest women in that leading state, and has "a head for figures" we shall receive through THE UNION SIGNAL and otherwise, helps of prime value in the year to come.

The department of "Effort to induce physicians not to prescribe alcoholics" has been entrusted to Mrs. Rev. J. Butler, of Fairport, N. Y., who has made a fine success in her one year's work along the same line in her own state.

Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. B. Buell, takes the department of "Presenting our W. C. T. U. cause before Influential Bodies," and will make it a specialty this year. Of winning presence and address and large experience, Mrs. Buell will do us credit in this most important embassy.

To Mrs. Charles Greene, a most accomplished lady in Baltimore, Md., has been entrusted the difficult department of Efforts for the Suppression of the Social Evil. To lend a hand to fallen women as well as men is a dear and sacred purpose of the W. C. T. U. Wonderful results have attended the labors of Mrs. Stevens, of Maine, Miss Duty, of Cleveland, Mrs. Hobbs, of Chicago, and other leaders in this blessed work. The national department will seek to broaden, systematize and unify the Christlike endeavor.

Mrs. Margaret Bottome, of New York, remains in charge of Parlor meetings. None in America are so well known and successful as those held in "up town" drawing rooms, by this grand woman, at the metropolis. Mrs. Dickinson, so long her friend and associate in Christian work, will assist Mrs. Bottome to make this department a force throughout the land.

Miss Mary McClees, of Yonkers, becomes "Organizer of Kitchen Gardens," instead of superintendent, as the former designation better expresses her duties. We have no worker more capable and loyal. Let our Y. W. C. T. Unions send for her and give a new impetus to their plans for the winter campaign.

Dr. Bessie Cushman, of Hannibal, Mo., becomes secretary of the department of Hygiene, and will strongly enforce our valued Mrs. Dr. Kellogg. Dr. Cushman has great promise as a physician and will ere long make her mark among our national workers. It would be a great advantage to this department if our white ribbon women would read and heed the wisdom of Dr. Kellogg's magazine Good Health, published monthly at Battle Creek.

Mrs. R. G. Peters, of Manistee, Michigan, has "miners" added to "lumbermen" in her department, a provision most needed in Michigan and many other states. The work will be carried on largely by the circulation of literature, at least for the present. Gladly would we send out evangelists were it possible. Indeed, "how shall they go except they be sent?" But our hands are empty of "the wherewithal."

The name of Mrs. Barney's department was also rendered more inclusive. "Work in charitable and penal institutions and in police stations" is what that "sister born for adversity" has long been doing, but the convention wanted it expressed. We are rejoiced to know that Mrs Barney is again restored to health, after the painful ordeal which deprived us of her presence in St. Louis, and will address herself to her beautiful tasks with renewed zeal.

Our dear Zerelda Wallace asked to be relieved of her department, but we would by no means consent to count her out from our national superintendents, that "good gray head that all (women) know" has been too long an ornament, we should be downright homesick should she leave us. So we gave her as secretary the best state superintendent of franchise on record, Henrietta L. Wall, of Akron, Ohio. Mrs. McLeod, of Maryland, was continued in the place she fills so gently and so well, as corresponding secretary department of southern work.

This completes the resume of new departments and changes for 1885, except the notable appointment of Mary A. Woodbridge, the heroine of Ohio's unequalled constitutional amendment campaign, as superintendent of legislation and petitions. The fitness of things was conspicuously manifest in this selection, for it was universally conceded by political leaders in Ohio, that the great partisan campaigns of that year, were not so well managed as the non-partisan one which outranked all others in the people's thought, and would have been crowned by success except for an unfair count of voters.

Election being over, let us turn to our wide and varied heritage of work in thirty-four departments, with earnestness and vigor, determined with God's help to make this the most magnificent year in all our annals.

A FEW earnest words from "the mother of us all," Mrs. E. J. Thompson:

"We all agree that this battle is the Lord's; and yet many are the opinions as to how it should be fought. In view of this difference of opinion the inspired admonition may be remembered with profit anywhere and always: 'When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any.' Tell the dear sisters of the white ribbon army to read Mark ix, 50, latter clause of the verse. It is a simple prescription, but I do believe if we follow it carefully, our blessed union will be preserved inviolate, and the God of Jacob will—through it—perform His righteous pleasure—namely, 'execute judgment for the oppressed.'"

Dr. R. H. McDonald has issued a "CATECHISM OF TEMPERANCE AND TOBACCO," the two subjects being treated in parallel columns. It is just the thing for Sunday schools and Bands of Hope. Send to R. H. McDonald & Co., New York, and receive copies free.

CANADA.

FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE PROVINCIAL W. C. T. U. OF QUEBEC.

The opening meeting of the union was held in the Methodist Church, Stanstead Plain, on the morning of Oct. 7th, with an attendance of about eighty delegates. There were also present Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, of Boston; Mrs. Hidden and the Rev. James T. Powls, of Vermont; the Rev. Mr. Pitcher, of Sherbrooke, and the Rev. Mr. Bond, pastor of the church.

The address of welcome to the delegates from the unions of Stanstead, Rock Island and Derby Line, was given by Mrs. Blodgett.

Mrs. Dalkin, of Quebec, responded on behalf of the delegates, returning their cordial thanks to the ladies of Stanstead for their hospitality.

Mrs. Middleton, in her president's address, after thanking the ladies of Stanstead for their cordial welcome, said that looking upon the increase of the local unions from 16 to 47 since the provincial union had been formed a year ago, she could not but exclaim: "What hath God wrought!"

Miss Lamb, the corresponding secretary of the union, gave a synopsis of work, stating that Montreal had a total membership of 1,517, honorary members 223; Quebec, 72 members; Sherbrooke, 30; Coaticooke, 126; Stanstead, 40; Waterloo, 70; Knowlton, 35; St. Andrews, 36; East Farnham, 35; Sutton, 68; Cowansville, 41; Granby, 25; Richmond and Melbourne, 16; Danville, 66; Aylmer, 23; Rougemont, 11; Hatley, 29; Magog, 28; Trenholmville, 11; Compton, 32; Sawyerville, 50; Eaton, 15; Birchton, 20; Bulwer, 15; Martinville, 10; Waterville, 20; Beebe Plain, 12; Barnston, 12; West Shefford, 10; Robinson, 22; Gould, 14; Island Brook, 20; Stanbridge, 16; Cookshire, 12; East Clifton, 15; Cassville, 2; Newville, 15; and Bedford, 31 members.

In the evening, after a short service of song by the choir of the church, Mrs. McLaughlin, of Boston, was introduced, and for considerably over an hour addressed a crowded audience.

At the meeting on Wednesday afternoon, Miss Barber, the superintendent of prison and police station work, gave an account of the work done by her and her assistant during the year.

Mr. Lucas, the superintendent of the department of heredity and hygiene, then read her report, which she explained was necessarily a short one. The funds necessary to the effectual carrying on of the department, were very limited, and they had been unable to purchase many of the books that their work required.

The report from Mrs. Jack, superintendent of the department for temperance, literature and influencing the press, was read by Mrs. Middleton. She strongly urged the importance of making temperance literature more attractive, and instanced the works of "Pansy" as of the right type. Speaking of the increase of temperance literature, she drew attention to the fact that there were now in America one hundred and fifty-three newspapers and periodicals devoted altogether to the temperance cause, besides the legion of dailies and weeklies that admit literature upon the subject.

The report upon Sunday school and Band of Hope work, by Miss Rhynas, showed thirty-one Bands of Hope in connection with their work in the province, with from twenty to one hundred members in each. In many of these the catechism on alcohol and the juvenile temperance manual were used.

A very lively discussion was opened on the subject of petitioning parliament to allow the franchise to widows and spinsters who have property in their own right. Mrs. McPhie, of Argenteuil, said that if the seventy widows, property holders, in that county, had been allowed to vote, Dr. Christie would have been returned to parliament, and the saloons would have been closed on Sunday, the Sunday traffic on the canals stopped, and many other evils abolished, under which they were now suffering. Mrs. Foster, of Knowlton, thought that with a very little pressure parliament would grant them the franchise. Mrs. Ewing, of Richmond, said, through the influence of Dr. Weber ladies already voted on municipal questions. Mrs. Putney and Mrs. Tupper both expressed their opinion that women holding property should be allowed to vote. Mrs. Blodgett, of Quebec, said that if they had petitioned for the franchise years ago, they would now have been able to carry the Scott Act. Mrs. Trenholme moved that they now petition parliament to grant the franchise to all ladies holding property.

On Wednesday evening a public meeting was held, addressed by the Rev. Mr. Bond, Mrs. Hidden and the Rev. D. V. Lucas. The special object of the meeting was the advocating the adoption of the Scott Act in the county. The Rev. Mr. Bond in his opening remarks, said that prohibition was the demand of the hour and the necessity of the case, and urged them all to vote on the right side tomorrow, for it was not possible to obtain a Dominion Act for prohibition unless testimony was obtained that the different counties were ready for it, by the adoption of this act.

Mrs. Hidden spoke, giving a sketch of the woman's movement in the states from the time of the Ohio crusade, dwelling upon the importance of temperance literature, and urged that women, young and old, consecrate themselves to the work.

The morning session of Thursday, after the consecration service led by Mrs. Sanderson, of Danville, was devoted principally to the election of officers for the ensuing year. The following officers were re-elected: President, Mrs. Middleton; 1st vice-president, Mrs. Dunkin; 2d vice-president, Mrs. Walker; cor. sec., Miss Lamb; recording sec., Mrs. K. W. McLaughlin.

Intense excitement prevailed through the convention on Thursday while the voting was going on, as from time to time word was brought to them of the state of the polls, and the evening session was not called together until they had heard the news of the victory, long after eight o'clock. Then the bell of the church rang out a joyful peal, so that the speakers within could scarcely be heard, and the rest of the evening was spent in a service of praise to God for the country's deliverance.—Ex.

INDIANA.

Thinking it might be of interest to your readers to hear of the work of the ladies on election day in different localities, I send you a brief report of the day in Westfield, Hamilton county, Ind.

Being denied the privilege of casting the little "paper ballot," we looked about to see what we might do to aid the temperance cause on that day. Finally, the night before the election we decided to open a room for the distribution of temperance literature, also for the use of our brothers as a headquarters on that day. A room was secured not far from the polls, and early in the morning a number of ladies assembled there to "set the house in order;" the walls were handsomely decorated with beautiful temperance mottoes, temperance tablets displayed outside and in, and our tables piled with literature. Over the door outside, in large letters, "Prohibition Headquarters" attracted no little attention, from both friend and foe, and many came to the door who did not enter, but the large tablets displayed on the wall, such as "Startling Statistics for Voters," and "The Right to Prohibit," received a careful reading, and we hope was the means of awakening many minds who heretofore had remained undecided. To the tired and chilled voter who had ridden miles from the country to cast his ballot, the warm room presented comfort and a home-like appearance. We very much regret that we neglected to register the number of voters who visited the room during the day, but the number was large. Forty-nine ladies called during the day; some remained all day, and some only a short time. Altogether the attendance was very good, considering the short notice given. There were gray haired Christian mothers, old veterans in the temperance work; middle aged, anxious wives and young ladies in the bloom of youth, all from the best walks of life. A number of ministers, with their wives, spent the entire day with us. We are satisfied that much good was accomplished by our effort.

MICHIGAN.

REPORT OF THIRD DISTRICT CONVENTION.

In spite of rainy weather, and dark, low-lying clouds, the third district convention held at Charlotte, Oct. 31 and Nov. 1, was a success, in point of numbers, earnestness and enthusiasm, the forty-five delegates present representing a live constituency. In fact, the heart work commenced by these Christian women ten years ago, will be able to stand a great deal of dampening, and clouds from within or without may never interfere with their faith-works and God-given results.

The Congregational Church was very beautifully trimmed by the Charlotte ladies with autumn leaves and blossoming plants, the most noticeable part of the decorations being a large "St. John and Daniel" banner draped over the organ chancel, and a beautiful white dove of peace, having in its mouth a Prohibition ballot, which is about to drop into the ballot box, over which it hovers. Our worthy and honored president, Mrs. N. Bailey, occupied the chair. Each business session was preceded by a half hour devoted to scripture lesson and prayer.

Friday forenoon was occupied by the usual routine work and appointment of committees. However, this routine was very pleasantly relieved before the noon recess, by our president giving us in her usual happy manner, a report of the national convention held at St. Louis, its united character and harmonious results.

Afternoon session opened with a cordial address of welcome by Mrs. D. P. Sagendorph, of Charlotte, ably responded to by Mrs. Thomas, of Albion. The reports from towns and counties followed, showing much thorough, persevering work done by county presidents and wide-awake local unions in distributing temperance literature, organizing new unions, conducting temperance revivals, organizing large Bands of Hope, circulating and presenting petitions to common councils to reject saloon bonds, and lending their push to Prohibition clubs during the campaign, all proving that the third district may still retain the honor of being the banner district of Michigan for W. C. T. U. work.

The next business being the election of officers for the ensuing year, the action of the convention gives us the following: President, Mrs. Norman Bailey, of Hastings, unanimously reelected; recording secretary, Mrs. J. J. Curtis, of Charlotte; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. G. Bentley, of Hastings, treasurer, Mrs. E. M. Watkins, of Union City. At this time we were favored by a beautiful solo by Mrs. Haslitt, of Charlotte. As a delightful introduction to the afternoon business, Mrs. E. M. Watkins, district treasurer, presented a well prepared report of the money transactions for the past year. Nine old ladies, the original crusaders of Charlotte, were presented to the convention, each making a few remarks in regard to their great interest and faith in the work their prayerful efforts had been the means of starting. Resolutions were passed "that we deprecate the use of cider, wine and beer, and other stimulants, as a medicine, among professedly Christian people, and will throw our influence against such practice;" that "we find but one standard of morality in the Bible for man and woman, and that mothers, wives and daughters should exact honor for honor, chastity for chastity and temperance for temperance, teaching their children the same;" that "as the work of educating the people in temperance devolves almost entirely upon the W. C. T. U., we will endeavor during the year to plant a union in every township in the district;" that "we tender to the Charlotte unions hearty thanks for our warm reception and entertainment during the convention," making our sojourn with them a "feast of gladness." The following, and last, was most unanimously adopted:

Whereas, We now know which party has furnished "the best embodiment of prohibition principles," and which aims to protect our home from the curse of the rum traffic; therefore,

Resolved, In affirmation of the position taken by our state and national W. C. T. U., and in accordance with our convictions, we avow that the Prohibition party, as represented by their platform of 1884, is the party that merits the allegiance and endorsement of the W. C. T. U. of the third congressional district of Michigan.

Mary T. Lathrap addressed an immense audience Friday evening, in the skating rink, on the great issue of the age, in her usual forcible and convincing manner.

The third district convention closed its session Saturday afternoon, feeling its lease of life a long and strong one.

And though age wearies by the way,
And hearts break in the furrow;
We'll sow the golden grain to-day,
The harvest comes tomorrow.

Mrs. C. G. Bentley, Rec. Sec.

MISSOURI.

CONVENTION OF FIRST DISTRICT.

I know that your space is very valuable, so I shall give you a very brief account of our district convention, held in Kirksville, Oct, 28th and 29th. Thirty-one officers and delegates were in attendance, representing fifteen unions. This district was organized last May, and had at that time seven unions. It has now three times that number. Mrs. M. J. Carney, president of the local union, welcomed the delegates on behalf of the W. C. T. U., the clergy and citizens of Kirksville. Mrs. O. V. Eggleston of Macon, responded in behalf of delegates. Nettie Furrow, a bright little girl eight years old, greeted the delegates in behalf of the Kirksville Band of Hope. Mrs. Hoffman responded to the greeting, and gave on the first evening of the convention an able and eloquent address to a large and appreciative audience. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Massachusetts, spoke the last evening of the convention, in the largest church in the city. The house was packed before the hour arrived for opening the session. Her subject was, "Waiting for the Verdict," and the masterly way in which she handled it showed that she knew just what had to be done, in what way and by whom, before the universal verdict would be, "The saloon must go." It is generally conceded to be the finest lecture ever delivered in Kirksville. The convention was favored with an excellent paper on "Dress," by Dr. Bessie V. Cushman, of Hannibal; also with others, which were both instructive and entertaining, but which we will not take space to enumerate.

Two hundred and thirty-two copies of the convention number of The Union Signal were subscribed for. A resolution passed almost unanimously, endorsing the national party, and promising our moral support to the same. On invitation of Prof. J. P. Blantin, president of the State Normal school here, the officers and members of convention went in a body to visit the school. Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Hoffman were invited to talk to the students, and both made pointed and telling ten minute speeches. The professor of english literature told his class to go and hear Mrs. Hunt, and the next day instead of their regular lesson they might place an outline of her lecture on the board.

Mrs. Julia Bosworth, Dist. Sec.

NEW JERSEY.

Camden.—During the summer months Union No. 2 W. C. T. U. of Camden, have been holding gospel temperance meetings alternately with the men's union, at Diamond Cottage Grove, every Sabbath afternoon, from three to five o'clock. Nineteen years ago the Grove was a beer garden, with race course and ten pin alley. The last four years the temperance workers have had their meetings in the summer under the shades of the trees, and in the winter have held consecration meetings in the old bar room. I have heard the testimonials of many who have been converted, that once frequented the place when it was a beer saloon, to play ten pins, drink and gamble.

The old cottage is in ruins, and near by under the trees every Sabbath during the summer, could be heard the sound of praise and prayer. On the opposite side of the grove the Camden and Atlantic City excursion trains, with their numbers bound for Sunday recreation, could be heard during our hour of worship, giving us a double incentive to the work. As a union we have prospered this summer as never before; we certainly have cause to "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," for his continued mercies and answers to prayer; he has restored to health our beloved president, Mrs. Dr. Cator, who has been suffering from a severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia; but while she has been laid by her place has been filled by others, and the work has been going on; there have been one or more ordained ministers of the gospel to address the people every Sabbath. The Hon. William Daniel gave an address the 12th of October, to about 5,000 people, at the Grove, Hon. Thomas V. Cator has spoken for us twice on prohibition; he cannot be surpassed. Dr. Graw has addressed large audiences a number of times, that have been highly appreciative. It has been said that we were losing our identity by holding our meetings alternately with the men's union, but it is not so; we have been about our legitimate W. C. T. U. work all the time; have distributed 10,000 tracts and leaflets, besides papers and cards; are well officered, and in every way prosperous, and have had over $75 for local work. Have been instrumental in making from three to four hundred prohibition votes.

Union No. 2 heartily endorses the Detroit resolution of the N. W. C. T. U.

PENNSYLVANIA.

A GIRL'S ACCOUNT OF A STATE CONVENTION.

The tenth annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania was held in Grace M. E. church, Harrisburgh, October 15, 16 and 17, 1884. As we arrived the day before the opening of the convention, we had an opportunity of seeing something of the capital of our state, with its courtly old state house, its soldiers' memorial, and the fine old residences of its one beautiful street, on the banks of the picturesque Susquhanna. In the evening, while the executive committee were in session other members of W. C. T. Unions gathered in a private parlor and earnestly prayed that the convention might be abundantly blessed and that great good might be accomplished.

On the morning of Oct. 15th, after devotional exercises, the convention was called to order. First came the roll call of officers and superintendents. Mrs DeKemp of Harrisburgh, spoke words of welcome in the name of the women of Harrisburgh. This was responded to in a very pleasant manner by Mrs. Hoover, of Franklin. The minutes of the executive committee were then read and approved. Then our state president, Mrs. Swift read her annual report. Reviewing the work of the past year and taking an outlook into the future, she earnestly plead for greater activity on our part. A unanimous rising vote of thanks was given to Mrs. Swift for her excellent report, and its recommendations were referred to the committees on plan of work and resolutions. In the afternoon we heard the reports of the treasurer, corresponding secretary and county president. In the evening, Mrs. Foster gave a very eloquent address on state prohibition. Previous to this address, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith gave a short Bible reading on the 46th Psalm.

On the second day, Oct. 16th, various matters of interest were discussed, and we listened to the report of several superintendents of departments of work. The W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania, last year had two hundred unions, this year it has three hundred and eighty, an increase of one hundred and eighty unions. Last year we had but seven Y. W. C. T. Unions, this year Mrs. Patten reports forty-one regularly organized unions. Too much credit cannot be given to the superintendent of this department for untiring efforts to interest and help the young ladies in this beautiful field of labor.

Mrs. Smith spoke in behalf of THE UNION SIGNAL. Mrs. Hunt spoke very earnestly on behalf of Scientific Temperance instruction. After telling us of the difficulties encountered in her great work, she begged that we should solemnly ask ourselves the question she had asked herself so often: "Can my captain depend on me?" In the evening, notwithstanding the rain, a crowded house listened to Mrs. Hunt's excellent lecture: "Waiting for the Verdict." The few of us who remained at our hotel spent a pleasant hour in singing, prayer and conversation on the subject of faith and the power of prayers, etc. About noon of this day a very sad accident occurred. Miss Wallace, one of our delegates, was run over and instantly killed by a freight train. Harry Foster, a baggage man, in his heroic efforts to save her life received such injuries that he has since had both of his legs amputated. A committee of two ladies called upon him at the hospital and conveyed to him expressions of sympathy from the convention together with a purse of $75. Many of us will feel a life long interest in the noble man. October 17 was the last day of the convention. We listened to more reports from the superintendent of departments of work. Those on prison and railroad work were particularly interesting. Mrs. Hunt spoke again telling us about the text book she has recently prepared for use in public schools. Ten delegates were then elected from our State W. C. T. U. and one delegate at large from the Y. W. C. T. Unions of Pennsylvania, to represent us at the National Convention at St. Louis.

The most interesting of all the meetings held by the convention (to us girls) was the young ladies meeting, held in the lecture room of the Market Square Presbyterian church. Several young ladies took part in the devotional exercises and made informal remarks, after which the meeting was addressed by Mrs. Patten, Mrs. Dickenson and Miss White. These ladies talked kindly and yet very earnestly to the girls, pleading that we should not live to ourselves, but try to make the world sweeter and better by our living in it, that we should try to do something noble, grand and unselfish, that we should help boys and young men, brothers and friends, by our example to live better and purer lives. This meeting was enjoyable, and, we believe, productive of good, arousing the thoughtless to a sense of their responsibility, and stimulating those who are trying to do a little for this noble cause, to greater and more decided efforts, to save our young men from the allurements and temptations of the wine cup. In the evening an excellent address to a large audience was delivered by Mrs. Dickenson. Previous to this address Mrs. Smith spoke to us on the words: "See that thou make all things according to the pattern shown thee on the mount." This verse seemed a fitting close to all the meetings of the convention. We have indeed been on the mount with God. The earnestness, the enthusiasm of those engaged in the work of the W. C. T. U., the regular meetings of the convention so full of interest and Christian zeal, the devotional meetings which lifted us out of ourselves and helped us a little heavenward, and last but not least, delightful intercourse with true, noble, earnest, Christian women, all seemed to inspire us with greater zeal, renewed consecration and more earnest endeavor to live and work "for God and home and native land."

A MEMBER Y. W. C. T. U. OF PHILADELPHIA.

NEW YORK.

HOMER.—At a meeting of the W. C. T. U., Nov. 4th, 1874, the following action was taken.

WHEREAS, our sister Miss Ruth W. Ranney has left us to become a missionary in Burma, therefore.

Resolved, That in the departure of our beloved sister and faithful co-worker in gospel temperance, we hereby sustain an irreparable loss, certainly in a human point of view, but recognizing the call of our Divine Master, we humbly bow in submission to His will, also

Resolved, That as a token of our love and confidence, and an earnest desire, that our hearts may still beat in unison for this our common cause, we pledge to her a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL for the year 1885, beginning Jan. 1st.

Our society is prospering finely, there has been an outgrowth this year of two new societies, the one at Cortland outdoing its parent and has become the banner bearer of the county, and we have ordered an organizer for two more in adjoining towns.

MRS. D. H. ALLEN, Cor Sec.

BATAVIA.—Mrs. Decker, of Victor, met the ladies of Genesee county at Alexander, July 15, 1884, and organized a county union. We at that time had three unions in the county. September 18 we held our first convention in Leroy. This convention was well attended and very successful. Every one responded cheerfully to the work assigned her. Seven W. C. T. Us. and two Y. W. C. T. Unions reported in good working order and ready for doing all "their hands found to do."

Batavia Local Union has been working well for three years and still is striving to do all it can, to put down this terrible vice. Sunday evening, November 2, Mrs. Emily McLaughlin of Boston, spoke for us, in the Baptist church. The house was packed and over a hundred went away, not able to get even standing room. Hundreds stood during her entire lecture, as if spell bound. A silence that could almost be felt held us as we listened to this beautiful Christian woman, pleading for the saving of our boys. It was one voice of commendation for her, as she sat down. "Would that every man, woman and child might have heard that lecture" was repeated to me by different gentlemen who listened.

Our W. C. T. U. served a dinner on election day at our parlors, which was very successful. We hope soon in this union to organize a class in "kitchen garden training." Genesee county is awake and working, sure of success, for as God is on our side, who can be against us. Our committee are at work soliciting subscribers for your paper and hope soon to send you a goodly number of new names.

JENNIE G. COWDIN,

NEBRASKA.

It has been some time since we have been able to report our W. C. T. U. work, having been away most of the summer. But we are not dead, nor dying out, nor going to slacken our efforts now that the presidential campaign is at an end. We hold weekly meetings, and new names have presented for membership at each meeting of late. We are going to endeavor to make the W. C. T. U. of our magic city "The banner union" of our state this coming year. To that end we have fitted ourselves out with pocket tablet, and pencil and at every call I have made of late, have presented our work and solicited names, even at church, for I do not hesitate to speak of it there, after reading the declarations of God in Holy Writ, concerning this great evil we are warring against.

The past year has been a crowded, hurried year of western life, but an eventful one, the most marked of any in its history of our work since the crusade fire first burned in our adopted state. Our state convention convened at Omaha, Oct. 23, 24, 25, 26 and was the most replete in interest in every respect of any heretofore held. And the crowning glory of our annual meeting was the presence of our national president, Miss Willard, truly its "gentlest of all hearts," whose presence threw an inspiration over all in attendance. Those of us who had never been so favored as to have met with her before, felt that we could exclaim as did the Queen of Sheba, "The half was never told us" of the good works she has done and is still doing.

Our work this year is presided over by Mrs. Jennie Holmes, of Tecumseh, Nebraska, state president, Mrs. Jennie E. Ford, of Kearney, who has been at the head of this work for two years past, laying it down on account of enfeebled health. We are planning for a campaign for securing a compulsory temperance education bill, the petition for which will be presented at our coming legislature next January, and trust this golden opportunity may not pass by without our securing this desired measure. We have watched with great interest and anxiety the workings of the W. C. T. U. in the grand old "Empire state" and home of our childhood days, and rejoice with them at the crowning victory they have gained, and pray that Nebraska may be the next to wheel into line. And this will be but the advance step to bringing prohibition to our young and growing state. And if the submission question is ever given, our people will surely carry by a large majority. There has been a marvelous growth in temperance sentiment throughout our state the past year, and our W. C. T. U. does not intend to let it grow less during the four years to come, and will endeavor to make our capital city and state an exemplary one. A few days since I heard an encouraging remark uttered by a gentleman who is by no means a prohibitionist. He said: "I would have little faith in the Prohibition party, but that it is in the hands of women, and that means success," and if he had added, "God is at the helm," he would have truly spoken. And as God commanded the children of Israel to "go forward" so surely I believe he speaks to the women of this day and age to "go forward" and we will in His name and His strength and never cease our efforts until every state in the Union shall be granted a constitutional amendmemt and as a cap sheat to that a national constitutional amendment, declaring prohibition forever against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. Our land can truly be called the "land of the free."

MRS. C. M. LEIGHTON, Sec. Lincoln W. C. T. U.

ALABAMA.

HARTSELLS.—That your many readers may know something of the progress of our glorious cause in this corner of the world, I write this short letter. The W. C. T. U. was organized at this place about six months ago. There are also a lodge of Good Templars, a Temperance Alliance, and a Band of Hope here. And we all live and thrive in a little village of only six hundred inhabitants. There are several other unions in the state; a very strong one, in good working order in Troy, Pike county. Mrs. Tom Murphee is their president. We have already accomplished some good, and hope to be of much greater, and more lasting benefit to the cause in the future.

The preachers in this district have generally declared for prohibition, and are preaching it to their congregations.

The "Alabama Prohibitionist" is a live temperance journal, edited and published by Leslie Bros., Union Springs, Ala., and devotes two or three columns each week to the W. C. T. U.

The "Troy Messenger" also gives us a corner in its columns.

Any sister passing down the L. & N. line will be doubly welcomed if she will stop off and see us. What I mean by "doubly welcomed" is that my husband will be as highly rejoiced as myself, and she will find him at the ticket office, when she gets off the cars.

Should this find a place in your columns, I will write again "by and by."

MRS. J. W. HENRY.

CONNECTICUT.

WEST WINSTED.—We met recently at our "Temperance Union rooms" to review the work of the past year, and choose new officers for the coming year. Our union is determined to persevere. We number eighty members, and have chosen the same officers that we had last year. The union supports a large reading-room, a temperance school of over one hundred in number, but everything has been so confused, and sometimes we feel as a union, that we are not recognized in the community as we would wish. We do not grudge our time or work yet, we wish the voters to allow us a liberty to help in whatever way we choose; and we need their sympathies, their support, and desire them to feel that this temperance work is their work as well as ours, and we must join our forces together to accomplish what we desire. We sisters will still sing,

"Give to the winds thy fears,
Hope, and be undismayed;
God hears thy sighs and counts thy tears,
God will lift up thy head."

Our Winsted union is full of tender consideration and "gentle firmness." We will endeavor to meet all our difficulties with prayer, and in our dangers have patience. With malice towards none and charity for all our W. C. T. U. takes its stand on the structure of ten years' thought and effort along the lines of an undertaking which includes the removal and banishing of the dram-shop from our country.

The women of today need a proper education upon moral issues. The great power of women's influence must be thrown into the balance to restore and preserve the proper poise of the republic.

MRS. M. A. PARSONS.

OHIO.

The W. C. T. U. of the 4th district, also the Lucas county W. C. T. U. met in convention at Monroe Street M. E. church, Toledo, Ohio, October 29 and 30. October 29 being the national day of fasting and prayer appointed by the Prohibition party the forenoon of that day was spent in devotional exercises, and the sense of the needs of this nation for humiliation and confession, gave earnestness and solemnity to the whole convention.

The afternoon was spent in review of work, hearing reports, and report of secretary and of finances. Mrs. M. F. Watson, district president, gave a report of her work and became eloquent as she drew an analogy between these days and those of the anti-slavery conflict.

In the evening an earnest and able address was delivered by the presiding elder of the M. E. church for this district. October 30, Lucas county convention was opened, Mrs. J. C. Miller, county president in the chair. There were reports of vice presidents, essays, and Bible reading and discussions, making the day full of interest and enthusiasm. The work of the coming year is very clearly given and the loyalty of Lucas county W. C. T. U. to prohibition embodied in the report of the committee on resolutions here given:

WHEREAS, Our work for the second amendment was foiled by the intrigues of political parties, we of the Lucas county W. C. T. U., reaffirm our strenuous opposition to all license or taxation, and are earnest in our efforts for National Prohibition, trusting in God for guidance and direction. Therefore,

Resolved, That we express our hearty approbation of that political party which has adopted as part of its platform the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Resolved, That we recognize in the repeal of the Scott law and the three million dollars to be refunded, the entering wedge to many hearts, otherwise invincible to the temperance cause.

Resolved, That our earnest and hearty support be given to THE UNION SIGNAL, the organ of the N. W. C. T. U.

Resolved, That we continue the subject of scientific temperance instruction in our schools that we may secure the most thorough agitation upon the subject.

Resolved, That we recommend mothers' meetings in all our unions, as a help to those raising families, and as tending to strengthen and enlighten the continually increasing conviction, that ere the reign of the saloon is ended, the women of the land will be granted expression at the ballot box.

CIRCULAR LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT.—A CAMPAIGN IN MICHIGAN BY DR. HENRY A. REYNOLDS.

By a vote of the state convention of the W. C. T. U. at Flint, the executive board was authorized to invite the Red Ribbon reformer, Dr. Reynolds, to return to Michigan some time this winter. This invitation will be accepted by him, provided a series of engagements can be made. He can begin his work in the state about December 1.

The doctor will work on his old line of moral suasion and reform, to which he seems so specially called of God. It will be remembered that nearly one hundred thousand men signed the pledge and donned the ribbon during his previous visit, and the legislature of Michigan invited him to speak before them, and passed a series of resolutions highly commendatory of his work.

Mrs. R. A. Campbell, of Traverse City, will make his engagements; let applications be sent her at once, even if dates can not be given, so she may know what to expect.

It is time in Michigan for reform work. We need it just now more than anything else.

For the sake of the young men, in pity for the drinker and his family, let all help to bring Dr. Reynolds to those who need him.

MARY T. LATHRAP.

FLINT.—Amid all the excitement of an indefinite election the two W. C. T. U's. of Flint gathered for a union meeting at the Garland Street M. E. church to hear a report of the N. W. C. T. U. The full report was given by our delegate, Mrs. C. H. Johnson, consisting of extracts from presidents' address, the telling points of superintendents' reports, discussion of resolutions, incidents of the convention, closing with the memorial service and the poem written for the occasion. The report occupied fifty minutes, and was listened to with great interest. Flint Central union was invited by the North Side union and a delightful tea given us for abundance and elegance of serving impossible to be excelled. This is a young union but a very strong one and blessed in its officers. With the inspiration of the N. W. C. T. U. still upon us we shall still work on, remembering our trust is in Jehovah, and our cause is in His care. **

MASSACHUSETTS.

CONCORD.—The Juvenile Temperance Union of Concord, Massachusetts, has just given a concert in the town hall before an audience of several hundred. The program consisted of songs by a large choir of bright boys and girls, members of the J. T. U., and a dramatic allegory.

The following was the introduction:

An army young, tender, and strong,
Greets you tonight with festive song.
We come with banner all unfurled,
Our motto, "Temperance 'round the world."

It was accompanied by the unfurling of our flag, above which appeared in gilt letters, "Temperance 'round the world."

Solos were rendered by a gifted friend. The temperance recitations were effectively spoken.

The allegory consisted of a conflict between temperance and intemperance. The performers embraced fifteen youth and children, each appearing in costume. King Alcohol was represented in a regal robe, his crown surmounted by significant bottles. The Queen of Temperance arrayed in white, brilliantly crowned. On the one side were personated Poverty, Despair, a scold, moderate drinker, Folly, Unbelief; on the other, Wealth, Peace, Charity, Total Abstinence, Wisdom and Faith. The costumes were well adapted to each representation and each part was performed with marked propriety.

Forming a circle, each side adhering to its leader, the victims of Intemperance yield to the persuasive power of Temperance and with their king kneel. Just here, a girl in white enters with a scroll and presents the pledge to each kneeling figure, who signs it, when the rags of poverty and other marks of the drinking habit are thrown off, and with united heart and hand all repeat in concert,

Saved by the pledge, we all agree
To live in peace and harmony,
To keep the right, the wrong defy,
And from all tempting sin to fly.

After which, all retired in regular and graceful order, presenting a beautiful picture of friendly concord.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

BELOVED SISTERS OF THE LOCAL UNIONS:—These are the times that try women's souls. To be tolerant toward the intolerant is a difficult grace and yet its exercise is imperiously demanded of us.

A party long accustomed to success is in defeat. Thousands of leading men see their hopes blighted, ambitions overthrown, perhaps their occupation gone. Party journals denounce the Prohibitionists as having caused all this and "fellows of the baser sort" hang ex-Gov. St. John in effigy. The W. C. T. U. is termed "a political party" and subjected to the sharpest criticism by men who found no fault with our societies in Iowa, Kansas and other states, where they "lent their influence" to the Republicans. Free speech and "a free ballot" have, within a fortnight, cost many a voter dear, in the good will of business patronage of his neighbors, while obedience to the most profound convictions has called down bitter imprecations on many an earnest woman's head. Our own familiar friends in whom we trusted, have uttered these words in public print and private reprimand. Not from the ignorant or base but from cultured scholars and Christian gentlemen have come these words and deeds. Not in a generation has such a cross-fire of denunciation whistled through the air as that now aimed at those of us who "lent their influence" to the Prohibition party.

All this you know from the things that you have suffered.

But what is our duty in the strife of tongues?

Dear sisters, we stand before the people as followers of Him "who when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously." Let us, therefore, pray mightily to God that we may be replenished with heavenly grace according to our need, so that the law of kindness still shall dwell in our hearts and on our tongues, and charity (or love) which "vaunteth not itself, is not easily provoked, doth not behave itself unseemly," shall control our every action. Next to God's spirit dwelling in our own, nothing will so help us to be considerate and patient, as to pray for and speak gently of those who, in our judgment, have done injustice to our motives, our record and our character. Let us be careful not to do them a parallel injustice, but by recalling their noble qualities and their kindness in the past, keep them hidden in the citadel of our generous regard and confidence until this storm be overpast.

Let us try also to put ourselves in their places and to realize that they too are sincere, even as we are, and acting, the great majority of them at least, from patriotic motives. We seek the same goal, but have chosen different roads, each one of us believing his way the best. In time we shall agree to disagree and go on without bitterness. "A soft answer turneth away wrath but grievous words stir up anger." May God fill our mouths with soft answers in these wrathful days! If we women cannot mitigate the asperities of politics, woeful will be the day of our influence therein whether that influence be indirect, as now, or direct as in some future time. But if God be with us, we can save our country, as surely as Joan of Arc crowned her king.

That the infinite spirit of Christ may rule and reign in our hearts, making them tender, true and teachable, I ask you to observe, as a day of fasting and prayer, the fourth of December, reading on that day those passages of scripture which relate to God's power in the affairs of government, and also such as illustrate the supreme fact that "he who is slow to anger is better than the mighty and he who ruleth his spirit than he who taketh a city." Let us exhort you more earnestly than ever before to observe individually the noontide hour of prayer. Our prayer for you, beloved friends, shall also be that "your faith fail not," but that you "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free," and "having done all, stand."

Yours, "with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right,"

FRANCES E. WILLARD, Pres.
CAROLINE B. BUELL, Cor. Sec.

DEPARTMENT OF FRANCHISE.

To the Superintendents of Department of Franchise:

DEAR SISTERS:—The elections are over, and those who claim to represent us in the halls of legislation, both state and national, will soon be in their places. Now, let me urge you to see as far as possible every senator and representative in congress from your state and present our claims for the ballot through a sixteenth amendment.

If you cannot do this yourself, write to some woman in every district and county in your state, who can and will do it. Urge upon all the women the importance of writing these letters; and while not abating one jot or tittle of our just claim to the full ballot, write and petition your state legislatures for every form of suffrage not expressly forbidden by your state constitution.

Somebody has said that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty;" and it may be said of women that eternal effort and perseverance are the price which they must pay to secure it.

In this communication I would like to say to all the state presidents, if you have not a superintendent of this department, please appoint one and send me name and post office address as far as possible.

In every state where a superintendent has already been appointed, I would like them to write me immediately, stating as far as they can, what they are doing and the progress of the work.

Twelve of our state W. C. T. Unions have resolved to work for woman's ballot, and have, I think, state superintendents of this department: but I have failed thus far to secure names and postoffice addresses.

Now, dear sister presidents and superintendents, do not neglect this request. I labored last year under such disadvantages for want of this information.

To the members of the local W. C. T. unions in those states which have not declared for woman's enfranchisement, and where your state officers may think that public sentiment will not justify them in so doing, I would say that, as national superintendent of this department, I have no authority to appoint one. But every local union may do so for local work in their vicinity themselves, if they think public sentiment sufficiently advanced to make it advisable.

Let suffrage leaflets be purchased and circulated from the parlor, the business house, and "pockets" should be filled in depots, post offices and prominent places, that he who runs may read. Over these "pockets" should be printed, "Woman's Suffrage. Take and read." MRS. Z. G. WALLACE,

Supt. Dept. Franchise of N. W. C. T. U.
Indianapolis, Nov. 4, 1884.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A DRINKING fountain was lately erected in Union Square, Somerville, Mass., by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in memory of the late Mrs. L. B. Barrett. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore delivered the dedicatory address.

CEDAR RAPIDS being the residence of the state president, the headquarters of the Iowa W. C. T. U. have been removed from DesMoines to that place and the office of the corresponding secretary has been located at 75 3d Avenue, where all communications should be addressed.

WE are glad to note that in the new course of study for the Galesburg (Ill.) public schools, the effect of stimulants and narcotics upon the human system is to be studied in the seventh grade. This is a step in the right direction and will, we trust, lead to the study of this subject in all grades.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.
Let it be forever remembered that the
Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY
is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from
CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.
It also operates the best route and the short line between
Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.
Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.
Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated
North-Western Dining Cars,
the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.
All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.
It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.
Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.
For maps, descriptive circulars and summer resort papers, or other information not obtainable at your local ticket office, write to the GEN'L PASSENGER AGENT C. & N.-W. R'Y.,

OUR PREMIUM GIFT.

Get You Ready
FOR CHRISTMAS. There will be stockings to fill. Christmas trees to adorn. Absent friends must be remembered, and if you are a Sunday School teacher, under no circumstances can "those scholars" be forgotten. "But what can I get that will be at the same time attractive, interesting and instructive?" Allow us to suggest "MISTLETOE MEMORIES, or what the Poets Say about Christmas." This unique collection of Poems is selected from the writings of H. W. Longfellow, J. G. Whittier, Thomas Hood, Alfred Domett, Charles Mackay, Sir Walter Scott, Jennie Joy, and others. The whole bound in Banner shape, with rich fringe and tassels. The cover of this novelty is printed in nearly eighteen colors (being an almost exact fac simile of landscape studies printed in oil colors on gold pebble board), and ranks exceedingly high as an imported art production of the premier class. The original designs are drawn by H. Maurice Page, and were awarded a Prize of Fifty Pounds Sterling at the Suffolk street (London) Galleries in a competitive exhibit of 6000 entries, by the following eminent judges: J. E. Millais, Marcus Stone and G. A. Storey. For presentation, this art souvenir is vastly superior to a mere Christmas card, as it combines the advantages of both art and literature. SIZE 4 BY 6½ INCHES. Price, Beautifully Silk Fringed, with Tassels, only 35 cents, post paid. Three copies for $1.00. Mailed in envelope and protector, with privilege of returning if not absolutely satisfactory. ORDER AT ONCE.

Every person sending us $1.75 with one name for UNION SIGNAL, (either new subscriber or renewal) before December 1, will upon demand, receive this beautiful Christmas memento FREE.

Signal Notes.

No liquor has been sold for the last six years in one of the wealthiest and most prosperous counties of Texas, and consequently the jail is empty.

In the city of Portland, Maine, the police seized nearly fifty thousand gallons of various liquors in about twenty months. All this liquor was poured into a sewer, which bore it to the sea.

The Law and Order says that the last report of the Boston police commissioners shows that during the last year eighteen thousand four hundred and sixty-six persons were arrested for the offense of drunkenness. The license system is certainly a "success" in Boston—that is, in promoting drunkenness.

Seattle furnishes the first instance of a woman serving as foreman of a jury. Mrs. Eliza J. Ludlow held that position last week, when John Campbell, who killed a man last July in a drunken broil, was tried and convicted of manslaughter.

In every part of the civilized world the good cause is moving on. Sweden, that has been noted for drinking and drunkenness, now comes to the front with a bill that has already passed both houses of parliament, providing for the total suppression throughout the land of Sunday liquor-selling.

The record for a single week of the results of the liquor traffic as prepared by the New York Observer, from the files of six newspapers, is as follows: Murders, 11; murderous assaults, 17; suicides, 13; wife beatings, 7; affrays, 19; miscellaneous, 41; total, 108.

There are 143,000 schools and 147,000 saloons in this land. The schools run perhaps two-thirds of the year, and six hours per day, while the saloon school runs 365 days in a year, and from 15 to 20 hours per day. The liquor traffic is the sworn foe of education.

Thirty-two deadly poisons are used in the manufacture of wine. Of all poisonous liquors in the world Bourbon whisky is the deadliest. Strychnine is only one of the poisons in it. A certain oil is used in its manufacture, eight drops of which will kill a cat in eight minutes, and a dog in nine minutes. Wholesale dealers dare not drink the stuff they sell.

From the Evening Telegram: "Women vastly outnumber men everywhere in Massachusetts, except in her prisons. On the first day of October there were 4389 convicts in that state, of whom 3586 were men. The "superfluous" women of the old Bay State pay their proportion of taxes to convict and punish this large number of criminals who are their political superiors, and year after year their prayer for equality in political matters is denied by legislators whom the criminal class, before their incarceration, and after their discharge, help to choose."

DR. HATTIE E. LAWRENCE.
DENTIST.
Room 16, 125 State Street, Chicago
Her quiet, gentle manner of approaching the chair, and the firm but careful handling of the instruments cannot fail to encourage the timid and convince the skeptical of her proficiency and skill as an operator.
Mrs. Lawrence having accomplished for me what others have failed to do, I cheerfully recommend her to the ladies of the W. C. T. U. A Member.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN OREGON.

Seattle, Nov. 4.—From the big whisky vote on Saturday at the school election, it was anticipated that there would be trouble today, but the rumors were unfounded, as the largest vote yet polled in this city was taken without any trouble whatever. The vote at the different wards is as follows: First ward, 799; second ward, 1507; third ward, 912. The ladies took an active part, a large committee at each ward working for their pledged legislators. They used principally the ticket prepared by the Young Men's Independent political club.

Walla Walla, Nov. 4. — The largest vote ever cast in the two wards of this city was thrown today —1953. Women went out in great force, 450 of them voting. Republican women commenced in great numbers. The Democrats "called" them, and voting at 3:30 was still lively. Everything went off lovely. The lady candidate on the Republican ticket is away behind.

Olympia, Nov. 4.—The total vote cast in Olympia precinct was 903, of which 312 were women. Increased vote in this precinct since last election is 450. Everything quiet.

Tacoma, Nov. 4.—Tacoma cast the largest vote ever known, 1633. Of these, women numbered 490. The entire Republican ticket is probably elected.

Vancouver, Nov. 4.—The Republican county ticket is ahead. The women wanted to vote, and voted in great numbers. Woman suffrage is a success.

A YEAR ago, Conroy, a New York policeman, became intoxicated while on duty, and without the slightest provocation shot and clubbed Peter Keenan to death. He was tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged. Then the lawyers began their work of defeating justice, and in this case they have been only too successful. It has now been decided by the court of appeals that Conroy was improperly convicted ot murder in the first degree, as the evidence showed that his brutal crime had been committed "without deliberation or premeditation." He must now be tried again for murder in the second degree, the punishment for which is imprisonment for life. Should he be convicted of this crime, the same machinery would doubtless be used to secure his escape from just punishment, and it is not improbable that shrewd lawyers may yet diminish his penalty to little or nothing. It is such farces as this in the administration of our laws that make criminals bold.—N. Y. Examiner

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair and the good it does is by the VIGOR it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Worth Thinking Of.

What Ayer's Cherry Pectoral does:—

It prevents the growth, to serious illness, of a dangerous class of diseases that begin as mere trivial ailments, and are too apt to be neglected as such.
It alleviates even the most desperate cases of pulmonary diseases, and affords to the patient a last and the only chance for restoration to health.
It breaks up a cold, and stops a cough more speedily, certainly, and thoroughly than any other medicine.
It spares mothers much painful anxiety about their children, and saves the little ones' lives.
It cures all lung and throat diseases that can be reached by human aid.

How Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Does Such Good.

It expels the mucus from the throat and the air passages of the head, and cleanses the mucous membrane.
It allays inflammation, puts a stop to tickling in the throat and coughing, and enables the patient to rest.
It heals sore throat, reduces the swollen tonsils, and restores natural tone to the affected vocal cords.
It soothes to natural and refreshing slumber, during which Nature regains strength to combat disease.
It clears out and heals diseased air cells in the lungs, and helps Nature to repair the waste made by the corrosion of pulmonary disease.
It puts a stop to the cankerous decay of Catarrh.

Why Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is so Perfect a Medicine.

Because it is a scientifically ordered compound, of great potency, the product of years of study, observation, and experience in the treatment of throat and lung diseases.
Because it is prepared from the purest forms of the drugs employed in it, chemically combined by a process of such perfection and accuracy as would be unattainable, even by the most skillful pharmacist, dealing with small quantities.
Because it is not only the most effective medicine for the uses to which it is designed, but, owing to the enormous quantities in which it is made, is sold at so low a price that it is placed within the reach of every household.
Because it is an active curative agent, that must be taken by drops, as prescribed in the directions accompanying each bottle, and not a mere palliative syrup that may be swallowed by mouthfuls.

Where Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Stands Before the World.

It is popularly known to be a medicine that has cured laryngeal, bronchial, and pulmonary affections where all others had failed.
It is a favorite household remedy to-day with people whose [illegible]d by it, when they were [illegible] tion ago.
It has held the first-place in [illegible] estimation for nearly half a cent[illegible] in this country, and is more and more highly appreciated, year after year, both at home and abroad.
It evokes daily, from all over the world, expressions of gratitude for lives saved by its use.
It is everywhere recommended by reputable druggists, who know, from conversations with their patrons, and from their own experience, how almost magical are its effects for good.
It is regularly prescribed by many physi[illegible] of the best standing, and is recommended by Professors of Medical Colleges, to their students, as invaluable for all diseases of the throat and lungs.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 46. CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 27, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE next quarterly temperance lesson, to be introduced on the last Sabbath of the year wherever practicable, is written by the Rev. Dr. Daniel Dorchester, of Boston. It is certainly one of the best of the series which has included lessons by the most eminent divines in many denominations.

It should be ordered early, as the edition is made to suit the number of purchasers.

THE Woman's Temperance Publication Association is bringing out a series of "Timely Talks," in leaflet form, and at the rate of forty cents a hundred. They are just the thing for present circulation and for "making sentiment" preparatory to the municipal elections. An especially good one is entitled "Rounds from the Enemy's Cartridge Box," giving the judgment of our enemies as set forth in the Champion editorials published last week.

A PROHIBITION wave is sweeping over northern and central Louisiana. The Times Democrat tells us that in one parish, prohibition was submitted to the popular vote at the election the other day, and actually aroused more interest and brought out a larger vote than the presidential question. In a number of other parishes and wards, advantage was taken of the presidential election to get a vote on the liquor traffic, and in nearly every instance the vote was in favor of the extermination of the dram shop.

CANADA is waking up to a sense of the incongruity there is in fighting whisky whose manufacture is sanctioned by the general government. At a little village named Michipicoten a mob of illicit whisky dealers were imperilling the safety of the community. The Toronto police were commisioned to put down the illegal sale, and did so, but the truth never appeared so clearly to the people, that the home government was intended to protect homes, and that it failed lamentably so long as it paternizes and patronizes the manufacture of that which destroys home.

Per aspera ad astra is just now the legend on our still flying banners. It is only another form of Paul's injunction to Timothy, "Thou, therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." What would General Grant or any other great leader of armies, think of men who enlisted only for the drill and parade?

We have always been careful not to antagonize unnecessarily prejudices and opinions, and have taken our positions as modestly as firmly. We will be careful still, except where carefulness would lead to faltering, and respect to opinion become abnegation of principle.

A GOOD deal of surprise is shown in many quarters at President Arthur's removal of the carved wooden frame from Mrs. Hayes' portrait at the White House. It will be remembered that his first act in connection with the picture was to remove it from the east room to the green room, where also hang portraits of Mrs. Polk and and Mrs. Tyler. It is not pleasant to think that any discourtesy has been intended, and we will not think it. Good and friendly judges have said that the oaken picture frame was too heavy for the picture—and Washington reporters add that its heavy carvings hold dust in a most untidy way. The heavy gilt frame which has superseded it is said to be in harmony with the surroundings and a thoroughly fit decoration for the portrait.

A NOBLE woman among our leaders recently wrote as follows to a sister worker: "I have just read a verse that brought you so before me that I yield to an impulse to send it."

"Unheralded and unheeded
God's revelations come;
His prophets before their scorners
Stand resolute but dumb.
But a thousand years of silence,
And the world falls to adore,
And kiss the feet of the martyrs
It crucified, before!"

"Now the next verse is for me," adds the writer:

"Shall I have a part in the labor,
In the silence and the night
Of the plan divine, eternal,
That He opens to our sight?
In the strength and the inspiration
That His crowned and chosen know?
O, well might my darkest sorrow
Into songs of triumph flow.

I hear in this sacred stillness
The fall of angelic feet,
I feel white hands on my forehead
With a benediction sweet.
No echo of worldly turmoil
My beautiful vision mars,
This silence itself is music
Like the silence of the stars."

AN excellent suggestion for educational work comes from the Rev. W. F. Crafts, of Brooklyn. It is that effort be made to secure not only scientific temperance instruction in the schools, but also instruction concerning the laws of the state and nation. Back of Sabbath-breaking, intemperance and all kindred evils, lies the great fact that Americans are a nation of law breakers. Bad as temperance laws are in most states, they are far better than the practice of the people. For instance, nearly all states forbid the selling of liquor to children. What a wholesome culture of conscience and preparation for citizenship it would be to have all children made to feel that in entering a saloon to buy for themselves or others, they were law-breakers as surely as if they entered the saloon at night to steal!

Dr. Holland said that "the way not to have any more rascals is not to grow any more rascals." Legislatures may well take note of this in connection with the fact that there are many child-criminals in these days. The W. C. T. U. may well incorporate this effort with its other, for law-enforcement, if not within its province and power, is the desire of its heart.

THE American Woman Suffrage Association which held its annual meeting last week in Hershey Hall, was a grand object lesson to this city. It was not alone the presence of many famous women that gave it notable character and influence upon the community, but the strongly developed fact that women of all grades and classes of society, all shades of belief, and especially of the quiet order known as home women, are taking deep interest in this social question which so nearly concerns themselves. The speakers and organizers on the platform were as far removed from the fulfilment of the old and false ideas of "ranting women" as were the women of the audience. Beautiful indeed was the motherly face of Lucy Stone, framed with a dainty cap of lace, and beaming with a love for her kind. Whoever looks even casually into the life of the happy pair known as Henry B. Blackwell and Lucy Stone, must forever rest his fears concerning the effects of "woman's rights" upon society and the blessedness of the closest human relations ordained by Divine rule. Alice Stone Blackwell, the only child of this union, with her gifted nature, her choice culture, her generous spirit and her work for others, is a lively refutation of the old time theories concerning households built upon justice as well as love. Mrs. Livermore's splendid speech and presence, Mrs. Clay's handsome chairmanship, and the reports of the officers of the various states, together with the fine argument of the Hon. Dudley Foulke, of Indiana, now president of the association, and of Mrs. Mary Haggart, of the same state, made up a body of instruction which Chicago will not soon forget. It has wrought a good work upon us. The greatest personal disappointment in connection with the meeting was our failure to hear Mrs. Stone.

A GRAY DAY.

MARY L. DICKINSON.

There's a low complaint in the trees, beloved,
A sobbing sigh in the wind;
An undertone in the breeze, beloved,
As if it had grieved or sinned.
And the clouds hang low, and the sad sounds fall
Like a penitent's voice at confessional.

And nature is hiding her face, beloved,
And mournfully drops the rain,
Like teardrops pleading for grace, beloved,
Her heart, like mine, in its pain
Has lost its sunshine, its voice of song;
And shares my sorrow; and feels thy wrong.

And yet it was not the wind, beloved,
That uttered the bitter word;
And not from the sky or the sod, beloved,
The echoes your sad heart heard.
Yet the weeping sky, and the wind, and the sea,
Say, love, can you hear them? are pleading for me.

Shall the gray mist cling to our hills, beloved?
Shall the clouds ever more drop rain?
Shall they learn no gentler sound, beloved,
Than this echo of shame and pain?
When your love and your smile could bring them all
From the gloom of their sad confessional?

Then light should flash through the gray, beloved,
And glory should fleck the gloom,
And shadows should speed away, beloved,
To make for the sunshine room,
And from mountain height to the swelling sea
The whole wide earth would rejoice with me.

MAUD'S VENTURE.

STORY OF THANKSGIVING DAY IN FLORIDA.

MARY E. C. WYETH.

"The sublime audacity of your purpose astonishes me, Maud."

"I am always furnishing you with a sensation, Maidie. You ought to be grateful."

"Perhaps I shall be when I get my breath," answered Maud with a well feigned gasp.

Maidie was a born Floridian, pretty and piquant, as are most of the Florida girls. Maud Leighton, her bosom friend was "an importation from the west," and had summered and wintered in the land of flowers for three long years. Years seem so long to golden youth.

Maidie and Maud had been neighbors and friends from the first week of the arrival of Mr. Leighton's family in the city of Jacksonville. They were walking together under the moss-draped oaks, one lovely morning near the middle of the month that in the north brings clouds, and winds, and dull and chilly weather, meadows brown and sere, and fallen leaves whirling in eddying blasts. The sun shone brightly—gay flowers bloomed on every hand. The gardens were gorgeous with salviae and roses, and all the warm-colored blooms of autumnal flora. The air was spicy with the aroma of the ripe oranges, hanging on the trees, and the brilliant hues of the pomegranate shrubs in foliage and flower were outrivalled in brilliancy by the ripe and bursting fruit. Lantanas of every hue grew lavishly in the fence corners and along the pavements in the open streets. The summer seemed to linger loth to depart. Lovely children in sun hats and white dresses trooped along the streets.

"It seems like May at home," said Maud. "Look at the roses and honeysuckle and abutilons, in this garden."

"I see," Maidie had answered. "I shall probably continue to see them all winter, unless some ferocious frost comes down. But it is not May. It is November. And by and by it will be Thanksgiving Day. And what are you going to do about it?"

It was at this point that Maud had confided to her friend just what she had intended to do about Thanksgiving—and had surprised that sprightly young person in so doing.

"I thought I'd like to and mamma said I might invite Mabel to spend the day with us."

When Maidie had sufficiently recovered her breath, she added, "Had we never loved so kindly, had we never loved so blindly, Maud, my dear, I should think that you had taken lessons of Flo Ashley, and—was preparing today. Why, tis barely six weeks since you first laid eyes upon the girl—and then, dear me! Oh, I should'nt aspire to—"

"But why?" asked Maud. "Our acquaintance is short, I own—but you and I were good friends within three weeks. And Mabel is so alone, poor girl—living in apartments and taking one's meals at a hotel seems a comfortless way, to me."

"But the most elegant apartments in town, remember," said Maidie. "And Mabel has always lived in the gay world and is so used to form and ceremony."

"That is one reason I had for asking her to dine with us in our little cottage, at our plain home table. I think her wealth and her social position and all that cuts her off from some things that she might enjoy more than a formal reception, or an exquisite and costly menu. And really, Maidie, I fancied I might minister unto, just a little bit, you know, one of the—"

"Lord's poor, such as all orthodox people are called upon to remember on Thanksgiving Day?" laughed Maidie. "Well, maybe, I've heard of highway and hedging it, bringing in coal heavers, and newsboys and washerwomen and blind spinners of one sort and another, and setting them down at a feast, for sweet charity's sake, but I never did hear of going away up, top o' the heap, and singling out Fortune's favorites as objects of festive benevolence. It's a new departure, peculiar to St. Louis, maybe?"

"Maybe," assented Maud with perfect good nature. "Only, I fancy it a November-be. It seems to me that if I were in Mabel's place, motherless and homeless in a strange land, I'd be thankful to be made welcome to somebody's home, to somebody's home life, on Thanksgiving Day, no matter how much money I had, nor how much society and style and all that sort of thing I had had. So, I'm just doing to Mabel as I'd be done by."

"Well, proceed. You have my consent," returned Maidie. "I only hope her Highness won't turn up her aristocratic nose at your invitation and you."

"She is evidently too well-bred for that," said Maud. "I believe she will come and we shall have a good time."

"Ah! J'espere," sighed Maidie. Then more gaily, "Tell me about it when it's all over, the lights out, and the flowers faded. 'Wiltest thou?' And she wilted?"

But Maud did not in the least appear to have wilted, when a few weeks later, she told of the happy day that she had enjoyed with her Thanksgiving guests. For it had come about that Mabel had not only gladly and gratefully accepted Maud's invitation, but had begged that her papa might be included in the family feast.

"For, oh, we are so lonely and homesick since poor Della died. Papa is such a home lover. He hates this way of life, but he has little choice now. While mamma lived we were so happy. Even after her death, so long as his children were spared to him, my father found comfort in his home. One after the other, my sister and my only brother followed dear mamma. Della, our oldest sister, who filled mamma's place as well as any daughter could, has been dead but little more than a year. We have only one another, papa and I. We cannot bear to be separated, even for a day. If your mamma would only let him come too, it would be doing double kindness, yes, fourfold."

"I am sure your father will be quite welcome," Maud had replied to Mabel's pretty pleading. "We are just betwixt and between folks, my papa says, neither poor nor rich, nor brilliant nor stupid, and though not altogether uncultivated, yet we'll bear a quantity more of culture. Your papa, of course, has the good sense not to expect of us more than we have to give. We are just what we are, and we don't pretend to be anything more."

"And so you had not only Mabel, but Governor Merton to dine with you," said Maidie, as seated in their cozy corner, the two friends prepared, the one to hear and the other to tell all about it, after the feast was over, the lights out, etc.

"Yes, he wanted to come, so we let him," answered Maud. "Mabel came home with us from church, and papa and Governor Merton went driving until the dinner hour which was to have been at 3 o'clock, but wasn't until four, for the reason that the cook's mother had a fit and the cook had to go home and leave 'we alls' to get the dinner as best we might—"

"Oh-h!" gasped Maidie, "what did you do?"

"Well, at first it looked as though the bottom had fallen out, I assure you, but mamma just ran up stairs and laid off her nice gown and came down in kitchen bib and tucker herself, and asked me if I wouldn't assist her dress the salad, and prepare the dessert for serving. Mabel begged for an apron, and we turned up our sleeves and tagged mamma into the kitchen. Everything was about half way along. The turkey was getting on very well and the chicken pie was ready for the oven. The vegetables were partly prepared, and the salads and fruits were set over on the side table. 'Oh, this is delicious,' Mabel said. 'I love to dress celery. Please let me.' And she whisked around and found the pans and the water and the celery glasses, about as soon as I could have done it, and we three just made Aunt Sallie's kitchen lively for one good hour. You ought to have seen Mabel peep into the range oven and baste the turkey, and turn the chicken pie, and pinch the sweet potatoes. Her cheeks were as red as roses, and her eyes danced. She said she hadn't had such fun in years. And she was quite wild over the green peas. We picked them from the garden vines and shelled them ourselves. Mabel made a posy of the pea blossoms. When everything was smoothly under way mamma said we girls should go into the garden and cool our faces, and gather some flowers and oranges for the dessert table, for when we found we were to have no serving, we decided to set two tables and to remove ourselves from the one to the other, for dessert. Mabel thought it was a bright idea.

Well, as you know, the day was glorious, like a day in June. There were roses, and tuberoses, and geraniums, and salviae, and honeysuckle, and gladiola, and lots of other flowers in bloom, and we made a beautiful centre-piece for the dessert table. We cut whole boughs of oranges and fixed them so they stood upright in the middle of a heap of pomegranates, pears, bananas, oranges, guavas and grapes, and made a mat of red roses all around them. The dessert table was round, and we arranged all the dessert in circles with sprays of flowers vines or ivy between each course. Governor Merton said it was too pretty to disturb. And while he and papa were admiring the fruits and flowers and so on, Mabel and I stepped out to the kitchen and filled our trays—her's with cups of coffee and mine with some lovely cream puffs that Mabel had made from one of her mamma's receipts. You can't think how pleased Governor Merton was. He said it brought back the good old times, and that Mabel's puffs were like her mother's. Then he told us of the first time Mabel's mother made cream puffs. It was when Della, their first child, was a baby, he said. The cook was off for a half holiday, and he was on, for the same. He'd been ill at home for a few days and was convalescing, able to loaf around in dressing gown and slippers. 'It is a charming chance for my experiment, Willy,' his wife had said—"

"Think of the grey haired, dignified Governor Merton as Willy," interposed Maidie, in a whisper of mock horror.

"'We can tie baby in her chair and you can tend her, while I try that new receipt. I want to have the Jacksons to tea next week, and I've set my heart on a new dish. Come on.' 'So on we came,' the governor said, 'Nelly carried the baby, she wouldn't trust me with it, and I, the chair and the rattle and a whole hatful of playthingumbobs, and we had a gay time in that old kitchen. I remember that I splashed my shirt front with the eggs I was given to beat, and that the baby made a dive at the scales that its mother was holding for me to see just how many ounces of butter she was weighing, and the baby was successful. We had to call in the cat to help us clear up the butter, and I laughed till I cried over the fun. But the puffs were a success, after all. I drew the first one from the oven myself, and burned my fingers awfully. Of course I dropped it, and pranced back from the open oven, forgetting all about that precious baby, when I tipped over her chair, rattle-debangs and all. Then we had a jubilee, and the puffs came near scorching while Nelly untangled the baby and examined the damages.' I tell you, Maidie, we laughed too, for the Governor has such a pleasant way of telling a story, but I could hardly keep back the tears when he added with a sigh, 'Oh, those were happy days, but they are gone. They can never come again. And here are Mabel and I only too happy to borrow the enjoyment of our good neighbors' home.'

"I knew the cream puffs would make you feel at home"—Mabel said. "It was so good of Mrs. Leighton to let me make them. I know I mussed up things dreadfully, but I did enjoy it so." "Then you have that enjoyment to be thankful for," her father said, and that remark served to lead the conversation into a religious channel, and then mamma had her Thanksgiving happiness, for mamma is one of those blessed souls who do dearly love to speak of all His wondrous works, and bless the Lord for all his benefits. After the dessert was over, papa and Governor Merton promenaded the verandah, while we washed up the silver and glasses, and covered up the remnants of the feast, and then we all went into the parlor, and made a cozy half circle about the fireplace. We had lately bought a cart-load of wood from Jerry King. You know he brings anything and everything except persimmon. He says it is bad luck to burn persimmon wood—and there were nine different sorts of wood on that fire, not counting the dry palmetto leaf with which we touched it off. You can't think how that old gentleman enjoyed that fire. I was so glad that north easter sprung up just at sunset. It made the fire seem not out of place. 'Now which is which?' Governor Merton would say, and then papa or I would take that long orange wood cane of papa's, with the brass tip, and point out the kinds. Live oak back log, hickory, ash, magnolia, holly, cedar, pine, sweetgum, and hawthorne. And then the Governor would finish up—'lighted with a raw palmetto, and touched up with an orange stick. Now, isn't that a sight worth coming to Florida to see, Mabel?' and he seemed as delighted as a boy. Our old brass fender and andirons appeared to give him great satisfaction. They were like his mother's. They carried him back to his boyhood days, and he told us several merry stories of his youthful adventures. Some of them had plenty of mischief in them."

"Do tell one" begged Maidie—"Tell the most mischievous one of all." "I think that was the one about the pies," laughed Maud.

"It was one baking day. His mother had baked eight pies, all of them without covers—pumpkin and custard. She had set them on the cellar floor to cool. Governor Merton said he was about twelve years old at that time. His mother sent him to the cellar to bring up some potatoes. No sooner did he spy the row of pies on the floor than he was seized with a desire to plant his foot in the middle of every one, and without considering the consequences, he pulled off his shoe and stocking and deliberately set the sole of his foot squarely in the middle of each pie. For the sequel, he referred us to the chronicles of the Merton family. The memory of what came after gave him a tingle even yet."

"And you were born and bred in Cambridge" I said, "the seat and center of high morality and prosperity and culture. I don't believe any St. Louis boy could beat that performance in pure mischief."

"My mother called it by another name," the Governor said. "She declared that I was possessed and she took prompt measurers to exorcise the evil spirit."

"She believed with the wise man of old, that foolishness is laid up in the heart of the child, but the rod of correction will drive it far from him."

"Oh dear, broke in Maidie. "I think you had a lovely time, with your cream puffs and your story telling, but who would have thought it? Papa says Governor Merton is one of the most distinguished men of the north, that he has been U. S. Senator, and has filled I don't know how many high offices, and has hosts of friends."

"But he was a stranger here," said Maud.

"And you took him in," added Maidie. "Yes, I begin to see. The rich and the cultured have some needs. Oh, yes—and you had the insight or the grace, which is it?—to discern."

"I'm glad I thought to ask Mabel," said Maud. "Of course, it never would have occurred to me to invite Governor Merton, but I almost knew Mabel would enjoy our little home feast. As it was, Governor Merton says he has not spent such a day of happiness for many years, as his first Thanksgiving Day in Florida."

CONCERNING THE TEMPERANCE LESSONS.

LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.

Frequent inquiries have come to me upon this point, during and since the national convention, also expressions of censure in regard to the International Sunday school lesson committee, an impression having arisen that it will not comply with the recommendation so enthusiastically passed by the International convention last June.

Allow me to answer these questions, one and all, according to my present knowledge. The lesson committee have not as yet even called a meeting to consider the subject of lessons for 1887, at which time their work begins, the old lesson committee having arranged the lessons for 1885 and 1886.

We do not know what action the new committee will take in regard to quarterly temperance lessons. My own belief is that it will regard the oft repeated request of its constituency, and the expressed desire of that body through whom the lesson committee was created. When the petition was presented in 1881, this was the main reason given for not granting the same. I quote the exact words of Rev. Warren Randolph, D. D., the secretary:

"The committee in accordance with the terms of its appointment has restricted its work to the selection of Bible lessons as they occur in the Word, and not as they refer to special sins, and its course has been approved by the several international conventions. It is therefore not deemed competent or wise by the committee to depart from this principle."

This reason no longer exists owing to the action at Louisville last June. I have personally received most kindly assurances from individual members of the new committee, of aid and influence in the direction of securing the desired lessons. On the other hand I have received nothing discouraging in regard to the matter. One of the new members appointed last June, very cordially gave me a conference of an hour and a half upon this subject, and expressed his earnest desire that our wish and that of so many Sunday school workers should be met. From another of the new members of the committee I have received not only the same assurances but a most admirable text-book on "The Use of Tobacco," prepared by himself, which, by the way, I wish all our W. C. T. U. workers could have, and I know that as a professor in his university, and as a superintendent in the Sunday school he makes a specialty of temperance teaching.

Whatever the action of the lesson committee may be, let us not forestall or hinder that action by conjecture or censure, but give our hearts to fervent prayer, and head and hand to earnest effort to secure this most blessed end. Upon our faith and effort that action will largely depend.

Secretary Staunton once said: "The United States' government never redresses a wrong till the people demand it. Reach the heart of the people and that wrong will cease." This may as truly be said of any onward movement for the uplifting and betterment of humanity.

Dear women of the W. C. T. U., it is our work to reach the heart of the people upon this subject, and then send their message to this lesson committee, whose members, though they may not see eye to eye with us in regard to this matter, are we believe loyal to the Christian workers by whom they were appointed, and to the best interests of the children and young people in whose service they are enlisted.

See to it that every Sunday school convention, town, county, district, and state, has the subject brought before it, not in an abstract way but in the most practical manner possible. Secure the expression of the convention upon a resolution that covers the point in question. Send a copy of the same to each member of the lesson committee. This method is much more effective than many resolutions presented at one time in a general way.

I give below the address of each member of the committee with the denomination to which each belongs.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D., New Haven, Conn., Methodist.

Rev. John Hall, D.D., New York City, Presbyterian.

Rev. Warren Randolph, D.D., Newport, R. I., Baptist.

Chancellor S. H. Blake, Toronto, Ontario, Canada, Protestant Episcopal.

B. F. Jacobs, Chicago, Ill., Baptist.

Rev. Moses D. Hoge, D.D., Richmond, Virginia, S. Presbyterian.

Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D.D., Nashville, Tenn., S. Methodist.

Prof. John A. Broadus, D.D., Louisville, Ky., Baptist.

Prof. H. L. Baugher, D.D., Gettysburg, Penn., Lutheran.

Rev. John Potts, D.D., Montreal, Quebec, M. E. church of Canada.

Rev. A. E. Dunning, D.D., Boston, Mass., Congregational.

Prof. J. I. D. Hinds, D.D., Lebanon, Tenn., Cumberland Presbyterian.

Rev. Isaac Errett, D.D., Cincinnati, Ohio, Christian.

Rev. D. Berger, D.D., Dayton, Ohio, United Brethren.

It was my privilege to speak by invitation upon the subject of temperance at the state Sunday school convention of Maine, held in Portland not long ago. At the close Rev. F. T. Bayley, pastor of the State street Congregational church of that city, offered the following:

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the efforts of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union to secure thorough and systematic temperance instruction in the Sunday school; and to this end earnestly petition the International Sunday School Lesson Committee for the provision of Quarterly Temperance Lessons in the regular course.

This resolution was unanimously adopted by a rising vote, and the secretary instructed to send a copy of the same to each member of the lesson committee.

The Rev. Mr. Bayley, in offering the resolution, spoke in terms of the highest appreciation of the work of the W. C. T. U. He said in closing: "The plumes of the ladies never seemed so beautiful to me as when waving in the van of this temperance army." And he is the pastor of what Miss Willard fitly calls, "Portland's most select church."

When in Boston I was invited by Thomas W. Bicknell, name dear to all friends of education, president of the Massachusetts Congregational Sunday school association, to address that body at its meeting in Park street church November 12 and 13. It was not possible for me to accept this very kind and and cordial invitation but our cause was ably presented by Miss E. S. Tobey, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., who was given one of the best hours of the convention. After her address a resolution similar to the one given above was offered. The resolution was earnestly discussed. One eminent Sunday school worker and writer present objected because he thought temperance ought to be taught every Sunday, and so forth. When the vote was taken (by rising) there was not a negative. The gentleman referred to did not vote. This additional resolution was also passed:

Resolved, That while caring for and faithfully prosecuting all other forms of Sunday school work, we feel called upon to emphasize the tremendous importance of teaching temperance in our Sunday schools, and urge pastors, superintendents, teachers and parents to give it a large place in their efforts in behalf of our children and youth.

Until the lesson committee provides temperance lessons in the regular course they will be prepared as heretofore, by some of our most eminent men and published by THE UNION SIGNAL Publication Association.

I have this morning received the manuscript of the lesson for December, prepared by the Rev. Daniel Dorchester, D.D., author of "Some Drink Sophistries" and "The Drink Problem in All Ages." The lesson is admirable. Scripture is truth illustrated by indisputable facts. Every union should see that either this quarter or some other the Sunday schools are provided with this most helpful lesson.

The city of Minneapolis has, during the past year, used 6,700 of our quarterly temperance lessons in twenty-one Sunday schools. This is due to the efforts of Miss A. M. Henderson aided by the Y. W. C. T. U. The same success may attend similar efforts.

Dr. Dorchester's lesson will soon be published. Please send to The Union Signal office, 161 LaSalle st., for samples. These are sent free, also samples of the seven other lessons which have been published. Price 50c. per hundred. Reduction made when ordered in quantities. National circular on Sunday school work gives price list.

Shall we not make this hour of need a text for more earnest effort in the religious education of the children and young people upon this subject? Even in these dark and troublous times it may come true that

God's hand within the shadow
Lays the stones, whereon
His gates of praise shall rise at length.

Correspondence.

THE BRITISH WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION--GREETING.

Dear Union Signal:—This letter was received at a time when the columns of The Union Signal were crowded with convention matter. I now give it to your readers knowing that a letter from "our cousins over the way" is always gladly received and read.

C. B. Buell.

My Dear Mrs. Buell:—For many a month I have been your debtor, and the claim was pressed by memory and conscience often enough,—only circumstances were so much my master the debt was mentally acknowledged and perforce remained until "a convenient season" could be found in which to pay it in kind. Mrs. Treadwell's visit during the time Mrs. Youmans and her daughter were in London, led to more knowledge of your work, and consequently still deeper sympathy with it and the workers. She was good enough to visit my own home, as we could find so little opportunity for quiet intercourse, in the busy city. While there she exacted a promise that I would write to you before actually ceasing to be secretary of the British Woman's Temperance Association. As the duties of the office were done by other hands during this month, it is doubtful whether the promise may be considered as kept. Though nominally my responsibilities end with the close of September, and in that sense, I trust she, and you, will accept the will for the deed.

A new reminder came to me in the reproduction of a characteristic letter by Miss Willard in the "Christian" of this week. That letter made my heart leap across the big sea once more, in its earnest longings to know you all as only personal acquaintance can know. O, how I longed to note your wonderful organizing energy, and your united, methodical zeal. The reports of your conferences at Saratoga, in 1881, filled me with admiring envy. Then came successive numbers of your marvellous paper, Our Union, which merged into The Union Signal and grew too fast for my limited time to read. After this came other reports and news through visitors from America now and again.

More knowledge increased the sense of humiliation that the women in the mother-country should move so slowly, and to such an extent ignore the burning shame which is blasting our fairest hopes.

From the first commencement of my duty as secretary, the need of more complete organization and subdivision of labor under responsible heads on our side of the water was increasingly evident, as the magnitude of the work to be done was realized. Personally I have never been much troubled with the conservative ideas prevalent in this country; and for this reason my own patience was sorely tested by the stereotyped comment with which any new suggestion was usually met, "We have never done that before." The spirit which dictated these words so often was a continual drag on the wheels of the new old-family coach. The more your plans were studied, the deeper grew the desire to emulate the manifold energies which seemed to work with such multiplying power in your union. Time passed on, and the strain of the old and new notions grew more trying, and often the wish for more regular inter-communication was suggested as a sort of ideal perfection of unity, yet no practical plan for g this idea seemed possible.

The proposal sent to England by Mrs. Treadwell from your gifted president was not submitted to the executive during my term of office, so that I could form no opinion of its practicability.

Whether accepted and acted upon or not, the sisterly feeling which prompts the suggestion should create a new tie of family affection, and lessen the distance between the workers in the old and new country.

To take a more general view of the relative position of our two national societies, it does seem as if the mother was a little bewildered, at the impetuous, vigorous, original activity of her grown-up daughters on the other side. Our old nursery legend lends a figure which is very near the truth.

There was an old woman that lived in a shoe,
She had so many children she didn't know what to do;
So she gave them some broth, without any bread,
And whipped them all soundly, and sent them to bed.

The little island, though not "a shoe," is terribly over-crowded. The "so many children" has long been both a family, and national problem. And as in all over-crowded homes, too little attention is given to moral training, the bad predominates.

Evils have grown for centuries, and punishment for wrong doing, with rare attempts at training to do right have become the general rule. Thus the whipping and ill-feeding process have been literally fulfilled. Workhouses, prisons, asylums, penitentiaries and all the paraphanalia of legal and physical remedies,—costing a nation's fortune, are the result of this policy. One vice was at last proved to be the source of most of the others, and itself engendered by its own progeny. That vice was the use of alcohol in its varied insidious forms, in the ordinary beverages. Drunkenness was denounced, but for long only a few denounced the thing that caused drunkenness.

At last an effort was made to get at the fountain-head which sent out only poisoned waters. Some of the heaven-taught, manly souls of a few of England's sons, began to cry aloud, but their voices were only heeded by very few. The old mother was deaf and blind to cause, while paying dearly to cure effects. Men and women grew worse, and the struggle of the new nations with old time beliefs and practices grew more fierce. News came across the sea from the younger branches of the family, whose pioneers went away for conscience's sake, and had grown into a great nation, with the same mixture of good and evil, and the same bitter experience of evil predominating, and blighting their newer homes. Desperate diseases need desperate remedies. But, young courage is needed to act out desperate suggestions. While mother and daughter were agreed that their respective overgrown families were greatly in need of some wholesale reform, the mother with the caution of age, prevented the action which could strike deep and straight at the springs, so as to convince those who had the mental and physical vigor of reformers of their responsibility. But her younger, more vigorous daughter, had been better trained intellectually, and having discovered one of the hitherto hidden sources, had no scruple about destroying it and so to turn aside the streams of pollution which overflowed all the precincts of her homes and lands.

So, your whiskey war in 1874 began. The old lady mother lifted her hands in despair at the want of propriety in her distant daughter's family. But, when Heaven smiled and the news came of great success, a sort of consolation crept into the weary heart and she ventured to whisper, "All's well, that ends well." After a while a few resolved to follow the example of their rash daughters across the sea. Only, whatever was done, must be done quietly, so as not shock the prejudices of the occupant of the "old arm-chair." Yet, earnest souls there were who ventured to suggest that women's hands and voices, must remove and protest against the terrible evils of our old homes. This was a grand concession from the old lady. How grand,—our sisters in the new world cannot comprehend. It was a step in direct opposition to all the customs and traditions of centuries.

That step was the formation of the British Women's Temperance Association. But, the lack of women who had been trained to business habits, and who could see and practice the business maxims with which men have long been familiar, and the suspicion which lurked in so many minds and hearts as to women doing public work at all, added to the apathy of ignorance and unbelief, have dragged our wheels on this side the water.

Progress is made, but of the slow and cautious kind, except in certain localities, to-wit, Lancashire and Yorkshire, where the women rose to the emergency of their time and worked in spite of the influences which so generally hinder the work among English women.

(This sketch was put aside, and is only sent at the request of our dear friend, Mrs. Treadwell, on her way back to her home. I conclude with kindest love to you all.)

From yours faithfully, E. H. Bradley,
Ex-Secretary B. W. T. Assn.

A W. C. T. U. PRESIDENT VISITS GOV. ST. JOHN.

Dear Union Signal:—I've been to Olathe, Kansas, to see Governor St. John. I was in Northern Missouri on the day of election; did not return to Kansas City until the 6th. Long before we reached the city, I fancied there was a yellowish green tinge to the blueness of the atmosphere, and a whiff of sulphurous odor now and then. It was "the smoke of their torment," and O, the curses long, and loud, and deep that arose with it! The blood curdles at the bare remembrance; "St. John, the Judas," "The Benedict Arnold," "The Jeff Davis!"

The Kansas City Journal, the leading Republican paper west of St. Louis, recommended that St. John and all who voted for him, "should be tarred and feathered." A big job truly! and not yet undertaken. Our truthful (?) dailies represented St. John as lying low in Olathe, bullied, snubbed and threatened, hourly dreading the vengeance of the "citizens he had betrayed."

The Journal kindly suggested that he be taken out to the common behind the institution for deaf mutes, and scourged until those unfortunates "should break their silence to plead for him."

My heart always went out to the persecuted, and so I went to see if all these dire threats were falling on his devoted head. As I drove from the depot to St. John's house, a fellow passenger asked the 'bus proprietor, "If St. John was in Olathe;" and, "if he dared show himself on the streets."

The answer was, "You've been reading those infamous lies in the papers. One hundred and forty men voted for him in this little town, and nobody dares touch him here; nor elsewhere either." I was received by a neice of Mrs. St. John's, who told me her uncle and aunt had gone to the house of their uncle and aunt, to celebrate a birthday surprise party; the aged couple being eighty-four and eighty years of age.

Speaking of the bitter invectives of the papers Mrs. St. John's neice said, "They will never intimidate uncle Saint. He will stand for what he thinks right."

In a short time Ex-Gov. St. John and wife returned, bright, genial, kindly and cheerful, as I have always found them.

The evening was filled with incidents and reminiscences of the past, and thoughtful, earnest plans for the future.

St. John will not take the platform before the first of the year. He has already more calls than he can possibly answer. Letters by the hundreds come from all parts of the union—letters of inquiry, of invitation—of sympathy, of strong adherence, and loyal friendship. Amid all, the ex-Governor is quiet and simple as a child.

Mrs. St. John showed me a banner presented to her husband by the citizens of Elmira, N. Y. One side is a rich, dark plush, on which is embroidered with gold thread, "Dare to be brave." Beneath these words twine the passion flower and vine; then below, the words, "Dare to be True."

The other side is blue satin whereon is embroidered "Ex-Gov. St. John," with date and place. The banner is edged with genuine gold braid and fringe. An exquisite and costly gift.

I asked to see the badge presented some time ago by the women of Kansas. A description of it was given in the Union Signal at the time. But now, when certain journals have exhausted their vocabulary of vile epithets upon St. John, and christian men have manifested a hate and fury hardly consistent with that "charity that thinketh no evil," and is "kind," it may not be amiss to note that after he had served two terms as Governor of the State of Kansas, her women inscribe on the badge presented to him, the words "Loyal Patriot," and "Protector of our Homes."

St. John's home is comfortable, but exceedingly plain and simple. No evidence appears of fattening by public office. In the cosy room where we sat, his parents' portraits hung on the wall. Just above and between these hangs his grandfather's portrait. A remarkably strong, pure, earnest face, the true Hugenot type. As Mrs. St. John lighted me to my room she quietly observed, "I shall carpet this stairway and hall, when the Democrats pay all that money, which as yet we have seen only in the papers."

Our Third District convention, in session here, passed very strong resolutions condemning the burning of St. John in effigy, and without a dissenting voice endorsed the state and national Prohibition party. Yet this is Democratic Missouri, lying side by side with Republican Kansas, where party hate nailed St. John's effigy to the cross, and amid the howls and jeers of a drunken and infuriated mob bore it aloft through the streets of the capital city. But for the sacred memory in my heart of the brave loved and lost, who struggled and suffered with that party in its earlier, and better years, I could almost blush for the love and sympathy I have given it. Thank God, no party in our country stands on the "divine right of kings;" and grace in defeat is a virtue that might be cultivated with immense profit.

CLARA HOFFMAN.

A CORRECTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I notice in your convention number, tenth page, an incorrect report of the statements I made in regard to the faith-cure for which I am so deeply thankful; and for the honor of God and for the sake of a truth to which He has given me a right to testify, I ask as a great favor, that the following be printed, which is in substance what I did say.

My mind was led, while listening to Mrs. Smith's Bible reading on "The Chariots of the Lord," to think of the many poor, sick, suffering ones, who longed with their whole hearts, to work for the Master, but could not because bound by disease.

I thought, "If their eyes could only be opened to see the 'chariots' all about them, and they could only have faith to step into the one God had prepared for them, they might ride triumphantly over every difficulty that lay in their way, and be able to join our ranks, as fellow workers."

For fifteen years I was one of these suffering ones, but, at last, I came to believe, through the word, that, if I could only have faith enough, in Christ, He would heal me. I took for my text, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever." This I held to for three years, before I was healed. My great desire to be healed, was that I might be useful in the Master's service.

All this time I never doubted God's willingness to heal but thought I failed in some way, to come to Him aright.

At last when given up to die, I doubtless looked to God more earnestly than before, and the cry of my heart was, to know wherein I had failed in coming to Him to claim the promise of healing.

The answer from God was, for I know I talked with Him, "You have tried to exercise faith in me but you have not trusted me for a moment. Faith and trust are inseparable. You have trusted in this remedy and that, this physician and that, and at last the climate." (for we were then at the Rocky Mountains). How quickly I saw my trust had, truly, been divided. My God to whom I had been praying, was no larger as far as trust was concerned than these other things. He said, "In order that my will be done perfectly in your body you must entrust it to my cleansing and care as implicitly as you have your soul." The thought arose "How far would that trust be." He answered: "It would be to accept me as your only physician, now and forever, for the body, as for the soul. To give up every earthly aid, trusting alone in God." Every temptation was brought to bear that could serve to hinder me from taking the step God had asked of me, but they were all answered by the Holy Spirit calling to my remembrance the "written word."

At last the temptation came, "Perhaps it is not God's will that you should be healed." Then my whole heart went out to know God's will. I thought, "If I can know it is God's will for me to die now I can go willingly, or if it is His will that my days be even prolonged in weakness and suffering, I will suffer patiently and willingly."

Then the promise came, "If you will trust your body, implicitly, in my hands, as I have asked of you, you shall know my will." Then came the promise from the word, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Never before had I such a struggle as then to dare to let go of every earthly aid forever, but in looking to God He gave me the will to decide and the courage to let go. I felt then I was lifted into "God's chariot" in waiting for me; lifted out of myself and into my Savior's arms. O, the peace and joy that filled my whole being, and I thought, "If this is trusting God I never trusted Him before." I thought, too, "I desire no greater heaven than I am now in. If I could only always remain in this perfect rest,"—to me, the verification of the precious promise, Math. 9: 28, give me just before I yielded my body to Christ, that I might know His will concerning it.

It was only a few moments before my thoughts were attracted by a very strange feeling going on in my body, where had been constant pain. The sensation cannot be described, but in comparison with pain it was soothing. I thought, "Am I living or am I dying," but I cared not; there was no fear of death. I felt I was already in my Savior's arms, and death would only be to leave me in that sweet resting place. The few moments thus spent were such a precious waiting upon God; waiting to know His will. Soon this strange sensation passed suddenly away, and involuntarily I drew a deep, full breath. I had not breathed such a breath for years. O, how it rested me. Then the thought, "It did not hurt my lungs in the least." (Physicians had pronounced me in quick consumption.)

O, I thought, "Is it possible that God is healing me when I dared to trust Him fully?" As I continued to breath deeply, I placed my hand upon my body that was very much swelled and sore to the touch, and to my surpise, the swelling and soreness were entirely gone. O, the feeling of gratitude and joy that overwhelmed me, as I further tested myself by raising up, turning and twisting in every shape, to see if I really was well, and this, too, the expression of God's will in me.

What a sense of unworthiness came over me just then, as the recipient of so great a blessing; when all I did was simply to "dare to trust myself in God's hands," having had such a struggle to even dare to do that. These commingled feelings overcame me and I found relief in tears.

After this outburst of feeling had subsided and I had concluded, "I never felt so well in my life," the thought came to me as though spoken, "If God has healed you, why not arise and walk." I thought "Yes! why not!" and suiting the action to the thought, I arose and walked, without any inconvenience, feeling as I did so, there had been a thorough work done within by One who could mend as well as make.

The relation of my experience in convention ceased at this point, as I knew the time allotted for this service had more than expired. Only a skeleton of the real experience is related, hence room for many questions, any or all which I shall be happy to answer if any one desire.

THE VEXATIONS OF VERMONTERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—They used to say of us, "The W. C. T. U. is not doing anything at all." Today they say that the W. C. T. U. is responsible for the jeopardy of the country. Here in Middlebury they say the women forced and compelled their husbands to vote for St. John!

Prohibitionists are told that they have ruined the country and ought to be hung as traitors to the party. In Vermont about 1,500 ballots were cast for St. John, thus diminishing the majority for Blaine. Not a word is said of the Independents, whose every vote counted two, one for Blaine and one for Cleveland; not a word of the Irish Roman Catholics who by the hundred have deserted Cleveland for Blaine and Logan. Should the Democrats hang them? O, there are temperance men here who wanted to vote for St. John but they could not. Are not they like Mrs. Foster's man of the "universal joint"?

Our local paper comes out with a declaration that the Prohibitionists hold the balance of power. Good. We thought it was the Germans. They should not hang us, they should conciliate us.

This trouble goes through church and state, affects labor and education. A pastor who voted for St. John is deserted by the sensitive ones of his flock. "Off with his head!" they cry of a constable who voted the same way. The college professors "ought to be dismissed," and an industrious mechanic must starve. A miller who did not vote for St. John but has said that he ought to have done so, can grind no more Republican grists!

From the pleasant south window by which I sit and write, I can see an effigy suspended. Upon it his accusation and superscription is written. "St. John, the murderer of the Republican party." I am told that it will be burnt tonight amidst great demonstrations of rage.

Morning of November 11.—Last night the serenaders were out, horning the Prohibitionists. They saluted some of the best residences in town. This morning I walked abroad making inquiries of those I met as to the fate of the effigy. No one knew anything about it. It had melted into thin air. No one had had anything to do about it. No one had put it up. No one was proud of the exploit. That it had not been burnt was evident.

Well, the effigy attacked a principle that is broad and dear; I looked upon it with sadness. The horning I rather enjoyed. My husband tells them to keep right on in that line; they are making in this way prohibition votes to astonish themselves four years hence. Middleburg was the banner town in the state for Prohibition votes and this is the way politicians feel about it.

I thought the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, especially in Vermont, would be glad to know how it affects our ladies. They bear it heroically, believing that all shall work together for good. Our monthly meeting comes next week and we expect to have an unusually good one. A parlor meeting, supper served, and prohibition gentlemen invited to tea and for the evening.

GOVERNMENTAL SCIENCE AGAIN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The letter in your last issue which drops the "seed corn" for the hour of our need, in drawing out thoughts and plans for general instruction in the "science of government," just touches my thought and purpose. In my rural meetings I have been leading men and women, old and young, to think and investigate the principles of state and national government, to study the requirements of the constitution of the United States and their own state.

In our college the science of government, under that name is made a part of the curriculum, but the text books do not cover the ground in such a way as to suit the professor, and for several years he has been writing and rewriting a set of short lectures which have been made very useful and instructive. He has recently revised them and had them examined by lawyers, teachers and other men of letters, who have given high testimonials of their fitness for general use as a hand book of instruction. He has taken measures to have them printed and they may possibly be just what we as W. C. T. U. workers will want. For several months my mind has been very much exercised on this subject; and there seems to be a necessity for the young people to become as thoroughly educated in the principles and laws by which we are governed, as in their arithmetic, and if the women are to take the right of suffrage, my plea and prayer is that they may never cast a vote unless each one thoughtfully understands the reasons for voting and the obligations voting brings upon her, as well as the results growing out of it. I have been planning to take Young's Treatise upon that subject into our union this month, that there may be more general thought upon this subject. I am heartily in sympathy with the movement for foreign work as suggested by Mrs. S. F. Grubb, and hope much good may be done. There is so much to be done in the various departments, we are almost staggered lest the half be not done; yet with earnest faith we may ask whatsoever we will and it shall be granted us. May our faith be as God's promise of His grace.

KATIE'S THANKSGIVING.

MRS. V. J. KENT.

I am thankful for Mamma and Papa,
And thankful for Daisy and Belle;
And thankful, our Father in heaven
Let dear grandma get well.

I am thankful for cakes and candies,
And clothes, and a nice little bed,
For dolly, and beautiful "Wide Awake,"
That I've read, and read, and read.

And, then would it hurt your feelings,
Dear papa, if I should say,
I'm thankful you'r so much nicer
Than you were last Thanksgiving day?

You know we had no turkey,
Or anything nice to eat,
And mamma cried most all day long,
And kept looking down the street.

I think she was looking for you, papa,
But you never came home 'til night,
And then you said such dreadful words
We were nearly dead with fright.

I remember mamma never said a word,
She could do nothing but weep;
And Daisy and I hid away in the bed,
And cried ourselves to sleep.

But today we are all so happy,
And you are so good and kind,
And a pleasanter home in all our town,
I'm sure you could not find.

I know what makes the difference,
Because I heard you say,
It was signing your name to the Temperance pledge
At the hall—last New Year's day.

A THANKSGIVING PIE.

HOW CHARLIE KEPT THE GOLDEN RULE

ROSE HARTWICK THORPE.

"Please, marm, do you want a boy?"

"No, indeed," said Mrs. Harper, carelessly, without turning to look at the child who had addressed her. "My own boy keeps me in a continual worry, and I don't know what I would do with two."

"I didn't ask to be 'dopted, marm, only hired. Ain't there something I can do about the house? I can scrub steps beau'fully, an' run o' errands an'—an' most anything."

The wistful earnestness in the child's voice attracted Mrs. Harper's attention, and she turned and looked at him. She was standing in the door when he accosted her, looking down the street in hopes of seeing a late milkman. Bridget lacked a pint of milk for the Thanksgiving pudding, because Charlie, her own little boy, had found the milk-pitcher. He usually found things on the busiest days.

"Dear me," said Mrs. Harper, as her eyes fell upon the forlorn little figure at her side. "What a little fellow you are to be looking for employment. Not much larger than my five year old Charlie, and I should be very much frightened if Charlie was out in the street alone."

"But I'm lots older 'n I am big," said the child, stretching his small self to his full height, and balancing on his tip-toes, as he spoke. "I'm nine years old, an' you just ought'er see me work."

"Well, dear, run home to your mother, and wait until you are larger, before you offer your services," she said, as she turned away from the door.

"I ain't too little to get awfully hungry, an' I ain't got no mother to run home to, either," sobbed the child, as a whiff of something spicy and good was blown into his face, when Bridget opened the kitchen door to see if "Missas" had got the milk.

"Don't feel so bad, little boy," piped a sympathetic voice, as a curly, golden head was thrust out of an open window, near by. "Mamma's busy today, an' Bridget's cross, 'cause I drank the milk. How'd I know that 'twas for the pudding? They shouldn't put pudding milk in my pitcher, anyhow. What's your name?"

"Billy."

"Well, Billy, you'll feel better tomorrow, 'cause its Thanksgiving Day, an' you'll have turkey an' cranber sauce, an' mince pie, an' pumpkin pie, an' plum puddin', an' more things than you could eat if you was big's my grandpa."

"No I won't," said Billy, mournfully. "I won't have a single mouthfull o' anything, unless I get some work to do."

"Oh, yes you will," said Charlie, encouragingly. "Everybody does on Thanksgiving Day. They have the good dinner so's to make 'em 'member 'n be thankful."

"I never had a Thanksgiving Day in my life," said Billy. "or anything else to be thankful for."

"You didn't!" Charlie's blue eyes opened to their widest extent; but he could not believe Billy's assertion, and an incredulous look crept into their wondering depths as he added gravely: "I guess that you've forgot, Billy."

"No I haven't either," cried Billy indignantly. "I guess if I'd ever had enough to eat, once in my life, I'd 'member it's long's I lived."

He turned and walked away as he said this, and Charlie watched him, a tender pity shining through his eyes. He then spread his chubby, dimpled hands out on the window sill, and regarded them gravely.

"I wouln't wonder 'n he told the troof," said he after a moment's silent reflection. "His hands aint fat an' round, with little holes where the fingers stick in, like mine. Oh, dear! I do wish he could have a Thanksgiving dinner, just once to see how 'twould seem to him."

Speaking of the Thanksgiving dinner, reminded Charlie that on his last visit to the kitchen, half an hour before, Bridget had just finished a little pie for his especial benefit, and it surely must be baked, by this time.

Mamma was up stairs getting ready for lunch, and Bridget was down cellar after more butter. The odorous kitchen was without a guardian, and Charlie's eyes at once discovered his own little pie (conspicuous for its "lumpy" surface) among the larger ones, on the shelf.

"I s'pose Billy 'd feel real thankful if he had a whole pie himself," said Charlie, turning his Thankgiving pie about and viewing its uneven top-crust with complacent satisfaction. "It's just full of raisins," he soliloquised; "big, fat fellows too, an' 't 'll taste good to me. If I was Billy boy out doors I'd like to have a Charlie boy give me his Thanksgiving pie, 'specially if he didn't know how nice Thanksgiving pies are an' hadn't ever had one. Bridget won't bother to make me another if I give this away, an' the big pies ain't so good's mine; but Billy did look hungry. Yes," decidedly, "I'll give my pie to Billy."

With the pie tightly grasped in his chubby hands, Charlie started in search of Billy. He remembered the direction Billy had taken, and he started down the street, calling "Billy" at the top of his voice.

"I wish I knew where I could find a good, trusty errand boy," said Mr. Harper, as he sat at lunch with his wife opposite. He had no thought that she could help him. He had simply spoken his thought aloud.

The words Billy had spoken as she turned away had sounded in Mrs. Harper's ears all the morning, and the child's pinched face had haunted her.

"Would a small boy answer your purpose?" she asked.

"I don't need a large one," he answered. "I want one who will be spry and trustworthy. I've had two or three applications, but the boys did not suit me."

"I wish I had known about it this morning," said Mrs. Harper. "A small boy came to the door inquiring for work. I have reproached myself all the morning for not giving him something to eat, he looked so thin and hungry."

"Where is my boy?" asked Mr. Harper; "I must see him before I go."

Mrs. Harper summoned Bridget, and sent for Charlie. In a few moments Bridget returned, saying that Charlie could not be found.

Then began an exciting search for the missing child. After becoming satisfied that he was not in the house, Mr. Harper started for a policeman to assist in the search. At the door Mrs. Harper said:

"Those children may have seen him. See that little boy carrying another nearly as large as himself. I do believe it's Charlie."

She rushed past him out into the street, and sure enough, there was Charlie in Billy's arms.

"He got so tired 't he couldn't go any farther," explained Billy. "I thought you'd worry about him, so I toted him along part o' the way, but he's pretty fat an' heavy."

Mr. Harper took Charlie.

"Don't let Billy go till he's had some Thanksgiving pie," cried Charlie, and, when they had entered the house, he added, "Billy said that he never had anything to be thankful for. I 'membered the golden rule, mamma, so I thought I'd give him my own little Thanksgiving pie, with the lots of raisins in it; but I couldn't find him. I runned, an' then I walked. There was lots of boys, but no Billys. By 'n' by I got so tired 'n' hungry that I had to eat the pie myself. I'd just eat the crust all around, so's to save the best for the last, when a big boy snatched it from me, an' I screamed loud 's ever I could. I don't s'pose Billy would a' found me if that boy hadn't snatched my pie. Billy pitched into him, an' cuffed him good, but he didn't get the pie, 'cause the big boy opened his mouth an' put it all in. You just ought to 'a seen his cheeks pod out."

"I was afraid you had coaxed Charlie away," said Mrs. Harper, thinking that she had kept the "golden rule," Billy would not have gone from her door hungry.

"I guess he didn't mamma," exclaimed Charlie; "I went myself, an' you would not have any little boy now, if Billy hadn't found me. I losted myself, but he 'membered where I lived, an' he brought me back quick, so't you wouldn't worry 'bout me. When I got tired, an' my feet wouldn't go, he carried me. Say, papa, can't Billy stay an' have some Thanksgiving dinner tomorrow? Please, mamma, do let him."

"Yes," said Mrs. Harper, gently kissing Charlie's eager face. "He shall eat Thanksgiving dinner with you, Charlie, and you shall have a Thanksgiving pie of your own. Then, turning to her husband, she said:

"This is the boy I was telling you about."

"Where did you find Charlie?" asked Mr. Harper.

"On Pearl street, sir, down by the river."

"And you came all the way with him, just to bring him safely home?"

"Yes, sir; he couldn't 'a found it alone, an' 't wouldn't been right to 'a left the little fellow there."

"See here, my boy," said Mr. Harper, suddenly, "do you know of any good, trusty boy, who would like to earn a couple of dollars a week, doing errands?"

"Yes, sir, I—oh, please, marm, I ain't so very little, an' I'll grow as fast 's I can."

Billy's thin face lit up wonderfully, and his dark eyes sparkled hopefully.

"Little! no, indeed!" said Mr. Harper, kindly. "You brought Charlie safely home, and he is much larger than any bundle you'll ever be asked to carry again."—Interior.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S LETTER.

Dear Boys and Girls:—A letter came to me a few days ago from a dear little Illinois girl, which I am going to let all of you read. I am so glad to hear the nice things the Bands of Hope, and all the children's organizations are doing over the land; for we are in a great work, and the people that are on the other side are working just as hard for the liquor trade, and you must all say "We have enlisted for the war," and keep right on doing all you can for temperance. In the school, among your friends, on the street,—in all places and with all people,—speak for temperance, and stand firm. And write me whatever you and your Band of Hope are doing. Here is one little letter:

FLANAGAN, ILLINOIS.

Dear Union Signal:—Two weeks ago the Band of Hope children met at the Christian church and marched from there to the depot with banners, to meet the Rev. Mr. Baker. The first banner was "Tremble Kilg Alcohol! we shall grow up." The second was, "We shall vote by and by." The third, carried by two girls was, "So shall we." They then marched through town to see the pole raised. The flag was red, white and blue. Then the Rev. Mr. Baker gave a short speech. In the evening at the Methodist church he gave a nice temperance speech. We meet every two weeks on Saturday. Our president is Mrs. Hand. Mary Gilman.

NOVEMBER.

H. M. G.

O sweet October days,
I sung a week ago,
For earth and sky were radiant
With rich autumnal glow,
Each morning dawned in beauty,
And, when the sun arose,
Its glory seemed unrivalled
Save at the evening's close.

O fairest month of autumn,
So clothed in bright array,
Today I mourn thy beauty
So quickly passed away,
And "dreary, sad November,"
With wailing winds and rain,
Seems sighing o'er thy absence,
And weeping, tears in vain.

So like our life—if beauty
And joy come for a day,
Perchance another dawning
May chase them all away.
The light may have departed
From heart and home as well,
And, to our darkened vision,
Life seems a funeral knell.

O blessed compensation,
Sweet hope of life to come,
When to our closer vision,
Will come no days of gloom,
When all we love, and long for,
Of beauty, light and joy,
And friends, best gift of heaven,
Are ours, without alloy.

THE LITTLE CRIPPLE.

JOSEPHINE MAYO.

Mrs. Leroy lived on at the old farm after her husband died, she and her two sons. She was a gentle, motherly little woman, and the boys, who had long ago grown so tall they could look over her head, often called her "little mother."

Tom, was a broad-shouldered, fine-looking boy (or to save his dignity we will say man) of twenty-one, quite content to stay with his mother and take his father's place as much as possible, but Bert had got it into his head that he was cut out for something better than farm work, that "plow boots" were degrading, overalls "plebeian, and feeding pigs the bane of his life.

He would often come to the door when dressed for his work, and looking at his mother with a half-comical, half-pathetic smile, say, "Little mother, doesn't it distress you to see your best looking boy in such unseemly garb?" And the little mother would smile up at him, and answer, "Not half so much as it seems to you, my son, don't be ashamed of your work, dear, for that would distress me;" and Tom coming up behind him would grab him around the shoulders with a "Come along, old chap, don't stand there flirting with the little mother," and then both boys would go merrily off to their work, leaving the little mother a very happy woman.

But the discontent with farm life grew on Bert till he became so restless that Mrs. Leroy was at her wits end to know what to do with him. And then Lou Wilde came to live in D. two miles away. Lou was bright, handsome, unprincipled, fast, had a good salary, and spent it all; just the sort of boy to interest Bert, and finish unsettling him; told him farming did very well for people who had not brains enough for anything else, that it was dirty work, not fit for a gentleman, that Bert was too old to be a "Mollie Coddle." And Bert, though he did not quite believe it, thought Lou an uncommonly smart fellow, began to spend his evenings in town, at the depot, or saloon, wherever Lou happened to be, neglected his work, and started down the road so many boys have gone before him.

Things went on from bad to worse, till at last came the never-to-be-forgotten night when "the little mother" waited for him and he did not come, waited until twelve, one, two, then sent Tom after him while she did the harder work of keeping still.

She heard them at last, Tom's firm quick, step, and Bert's——was that faltering, unsteady step his? She covered her face with her hands to hide she knew not what, but looked up eagerly as Tom came in.

He walked right over to her, and putting his arm around her said, "Little mother, he is not fit for you to see tonight. I will take him up to bed, we can do nothing else."

Did the mother sleep that night? Answer, mothers who have spent the long night hours in prayer.

Of course the morning brought the usual head ache, repentance, remorse, and the kind of good intentions we are told "hell is paved with;" which lasted until the first time he wanted to turn from them.

It was many weeks after this that the old village hack drove up to Mrs. Leroy's gate one afternoon, and the driver first lifted out a little invalid carriage, then a young girl of about sixteen whom he put gently into the little carriage, and leaving a trunk on the grass beside the gate drove away.

She watched him out of sight and then rolled herself slowly up to the door (just as Mrs. Leroy opened it) and said in a tremulous voice, while her eyes filled with tears, "Is it Aunt Myra?" and then almost sobbing, "Did'nt you get papa's letter? I'm Margie Henton." Mrs. Leroy's arms were around her by this time, and drawing her close said, "My poor little girl, all alone, where is papa, and how is mother?"

At this the sobs came thick and fast—"papa—wrote——to—you—she's gone—we're all alone—and he wants you to take care of me—Oh, auntie, auntie, mother died last week." Mrs. Leroy soothed and comforted her as only a mother can, and then called Tom, who took his little cousin in his arms noticing at the same time, with a great pity, her poor little crippled feet not larger than a child's two years old.

Dear little Margie—for she seemed a child in spite of her sixteen years, how they all learned to love her. Some times in her little carriage, some times on her crutches, always busy, always bright, her aunt's "right hand," the boys confidant and comforter; I never saw so perfectly cheerful a disposition."

Bert asked her once "what it was made her so happy," and the answer came promptly, "I think it is God. I used to be very discontented because I could not walk. Well, one day mother had a long talk with me about it, and showed me how wrong it was; she told me that it was my duty to bear the cross God had given me, cheerfully and patiently, not to make my life a burden to every one else as well as to myself." I saw that she was right and tried. It was terribly hard at first, but became easier every day, and I soon found that even my poor little life need not be an entire failure.

"Bertie," she went on, her face growing brighter as she spoke, "I believe I can now be content with my Heavenly Father's way whatever it is. He has showed me so many times that it is best, and it is so comfortable not to have to plan or worry for myself but just leave it all to Him."

And so it was she went on in her bright way. The neighbors learned to love her. And no picnic or party was ever considered complete without Margie beaming from her little carriage, supported on either side by a tall cousin, and the merriest corner of the room was always Margie's.

The only drawback now to their happiness was Bert. The habit of intemperance was steadily increasing, and though he would often stay at home an evening because Margie wanted him, his love for her amounting almost to devotion, still the habit and "Lou" were always standing in wait to drag him down.

Many a long and serious talk did Margie have with him and he was always sorry, always promised to do better, and kept it faithfully till the next time he saw his fascinating comrade. She tried to make him give up Lou, but between flattery and ridicule he kept Bert too well in his power for that.

It was the day before New Year's, and the young people had planned a sleigh ride to the next town, where they would dance the old year out and the new year in.

Bert was to take Margie, and Tom Margie's best friend, Nellie Sargent, but as they had only one sleigh, Bert went into the village after a second one promising to be back by seven o'clock, which was the starting time. Eight o'clock came, and they were just beginning to be worried about him when they heard the bells, and all bundled on their wraps and Tom carried Margie down stairs just as Bert got to the door, and in five minutes they were off, Bert and Margie ahead, and with a good hourse fairly sped over the road.

Margie enjoyed it keenly for a few minutes till she noticed that Bert was driving recklessly and when she remonstrated, he only laughed at her and seemed so altogether unlike himself that she was frightened and begged him to take her home. He only laughed the more and shouted to the horse, and all at once it flashed over her mind what had kept him so long in the village. They went tearing along over the snow till the horse shied and Bert too unsteady to be conscious what he was doing pulled the wrong line. The sleigh was over. The horse gone, and poor little Margie thrown against a tree. The fright and snow sobered Bert and when Tom came up he was kneeling beside his unconscious little cousin bathing her face with snow trying to bring her to life.

Tom with a horrified exclamation jumped from the sleigh, lifted Margie in and they all started for home, where a physician was soon summoned.

But when he came he found a sad household. Mrs. Leroy pale and tearful sitting beside the bed. Tom and Bert almost wild with grief and anxiety waiting for the verdict. They heard it at last: "She may live but I think it doubtful." Then poor Bert threw himself on his knees beside the bed and sobbed out: "Mother, if she dies I have killed her."

And the mother as she tenderly smoothed his hair answered, "Ah! Bertie we little know what sorrow wrong doing will bring us. But we hope our dear little girl will recover, and she will never grudge the pain to herself if it makes a noble man of our wayward boy." He raised his head at that, and after looking at the pale little face on the pillow said earnestly,

"That's what makes it so hard, mother; it is terrible to think that poor child must suffer for my sin. If the consequences would only fall on me I would not complain, however severe they were."

"Yes, dear," answered his mother; "that is the way we often feel, but the consequences of sin never stop with the sinner. We have to bear one another's burdens in that way much oftener than we know. It has been a fearful lesson to you, my boy, God grant that it be a lasting one."

Margie did recover, though it was many months before she was able to leave her bed, and then Bert carried her into the parlor and deposited her on the sofa in triumph. The good doctor said they must be very careful of her still, a warning scarcely needed. She never fully recovered her former health but lived many years, lived to see Bert keep his good resolves at last.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Ded. 7.] Fourth Quarter, No. 10. [1884.

TOPIC: DRUNKENNESS.

Lesson Text.—Proverbs 23: 29–35.

Golden Text.—Be not among wine-bibbers, Prov. 23: 30. Time of writing. B. C. 900.

1. The first glance at this lesson shows that drunkenness is an old, old sin—and, since alcohol produces drunkenness, that alcohol has been long in existence and is an old offender.

While it is true that alcohol, as such, was not discovered till the middle ages, alcohol as an active principle was in existence as soon as the first wine was made. Fermentation produces alcohol. Distillation only separates it.

2. The very next thought that comes to us, is the strangeness of human nature, that five or six thousand years of Divine instruction illustrated by Nature's object lessons, have not yet convinced the world that woe, and woe only, follows in the train of alcohol. It is not from stupidity—it is not lack of understanding. It is the carnal heart, at enmity with God—or if not knowingly at enmity with Him, loving self and its appetites better than God and His beneficent law.

There never was a truer illustration of why men and women use wine and strong drink, than the remark of Quinn the actor who went into a cafe and hearing one man order drink in these words, "Waiter, some brandy, I'm hot," and another fellow immediately with, "Waiter, some brandy I'm cold," ordered for himself in the following frank fashion, "Waiter, some brandy, I like it."

It is the liking which dims the light shed by both reason and revelation on this pathway of sorrow. It is appetite which usurps the place of sovereignty in the human heart, and defies both nature and God.

3. Another easy inference from these facts, is that God's law is not the arbitrary thing some uneasy souls are accustomed to regard it, but rather the manifestation of His tender love. A mother who bids her boy "good bye" as he starts out into the world for himself, gives many an admonition that is as wise as it is loving. The boy never thinks of these as arbitrary. He knows that only the intensest love prompts each one; that they are guide posts to success and honor and goodness. But when God gives to His children these safe and sure laws of conduct, they so often rebel, not knowing that they are inspired by a love in which the dearest, tenderest mother-love ever known is swallowed up as an atom too small for even mathematical measurement. When shall we learn the love of God and the secret of His law?

4. In this lesson we get God's written law of total abstinence—His "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red within the cup." The other day, the writer saw an illustration of this text. A lady was preserving some unfermented juice of the grape sealing it in glass cans as she would fruit, for use in cooking, in sickness and for sacramental purposes. As she sealed up a can she said: "Look through this can at the light. The wine is not red you see, but a dull purple. If I were to allow it to ferment it would soon take on a clear red color." It is only "when it is red" that wine is intoxicating, when it has acquired the alcoholic principle by fermentation. This law of God, "Look not" is not arbitrary, it is full of reason, and the reason is the subject matter of this lesson. Impress it item by item, as can so easily be done by recalling to the class, the familiar instances of each stage of sorrow and demoralization enumerated. "It biteth like a serpent"—the tooth of remorse when intoxication is over; "Stingeth like an adder,"—poisons the blood; "thine eyes shall behold strange women,"—the way to the house of the "strange woman" is paved with whisky bottles; "as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea or that lieth upon the top of a mast,"—dizziness, nausea, uncertainty of place and danger of death are the first fruits of the sin; and so on, illustrating each point from the well known career of a drunkard. Above all, teach that drunkenness is a sin, and that to associate with drinkers is to endanger one's principles, as says the Golden Text.

ARE WE A POLITICAL PARTY.

Among the many unfounded charges that have been made against the W. C. T. U. since its organization none are more absurd than the chief accusation of the present time, that it has become a political party. This charge is based upon the action of the St. Louis convention, wherein the duly elected representatives of the various state and local unions of the country resolved to lend their influence to that national political organization which declares in its platform for Prohibition and Home Protection.

It would seem to the uninitiated, and we claim to be still uninitiated in political crafthood, that a political party must be made up of something more tangible than "influence." Political parties have died and worms have eaten them, but not from "influence" unsupported by votes.

Let us see how resolutions operate in other bodies than our own. For instance, the Congregational Ministers Union of this city early in October passed the following resolution with about the same proportional majority as that adopted at the St. Louis convention:

Resolved, That for the sake of the south, for the sake of this country, for the sake of temperance and prohibition, for the sake of the family and the reform against polygamy, the election of James G. Blaine is the necessity of the hour.

The fairest possible inference is that this body of ministers thereby agreed to lend not only their influence, but their votes, to this "necessity of the hour."

Did such action render the Congregational Ministers Union a political party?

The Rock River conference of the M. E. church, on the other hand passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That we distinctly recognize, and cheerfully acknowledge the reformatory and charitable work of the N. W. C. T. U., and we sincerely pray that it may have increased success in its patriotic and pious endeavors for "God and home and native land;" and we heartily endorse its noble purpose, expressed in the ringing words: "We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

Did such endorsement of our endorsement make the Rock River conference a political party?

Again, several Iowa conferences of the same church declared by resolution to stand by, and vote for the Republican party. Again we ask, Did such declaration of purpose and intention to act, convert those religious bodies into a political party?

Forty years ago large numbers of the Methodist Episcopal church of the United States believed so strongly that human slavery was a sin, that its highest council was compelled to declare against the slave holder as a member of this great church, thereby causing division of the church, and lending aid and influence to the then crystalizing party of freedom. But never was it written among men that this decisive and revolutionary action converted the M. E. church in the northern states into a political party!

History and common sense unite in the verdict that the charge against the W. C. T. U. is a foolish one. We shall pay no further heed to it, and counsel a steadfast non-observance of all disagreeable things said and done, while we work on as heretofore, showing to all gainsayers that if we are a political party, which we certainly are not, it is such a one as the world never saw before, one that has for its motto: "All the world for Christ and Temperance."

A WESTERN JOURNEY.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The very respectable and dignified railway train that stands with panting engine on the C. B. & Q. track, at the great Union depot on Canal St., seems as guiltless of association with the prickly pear and wild antelope of the "plains," as it is filled with practical applications of comfort to the tired worker who boards it at precisely twelve o'clock at noon of November the seventh, bound for that region of cactus and prairie dogs. A pleasant party of us whirl along through Illinois corn fields which have yielded their bountiful harvest, on into Iowa, the land of sealed wine-closets, speaking from the railway point of knowledge, and finally across the muddiest river that flows to the sea, into Nebraska, one of the most magnificent states on which the future holds unforeclosed mortgage. I say it with enthusiasm, but it is the enthusiasm of truth.

Twenty years ago it was my pain to cross this great agricultural plain in an old fashioned "thoroughbrace" stage coach. It was known then as "The Great American Desert," and for eleven days and nights, from six to nine passengers inside, and often the same number on the roof, tested physical endurance and the graces of the spirit in order to reach the land of perpetual sunshine and eternal snow. To day it is my pleasure to take the same journey in a palace car, at luxurious ease, supplied with hot tea and coffee at any hour from the convenient "buffet," and privileged to share in a bountiful lunch with friends dear to my heart. Physical endurance is no longer a matter of trial, and the discipline of the spirit has been relegated to some of the "ills of life," not yet extinguished by "modern improvements."

The great American desert is now in part if not in whole, a fruitful garden, and the development of the whole is but a question of time, and of the resolution of our young men, who, if they but know in "this their day, the things that belong to their peace" will not crowd into the already crowded town or city, but become

"settlers on the soil" of that almost endless stretch of country and possibility which has been opened up by these great continental railways. Eastern Nebraska bears the mark of this resolution well carried out. Cities, villages, and wooded, cultivated farms, cover the eastern third of the state. Then come the "ranches" bristling with windmills and made habitable by comfortable sod houses with their deeply-bayed windows, in which plants thrive and flower in close sympathy with their native earth.

Right through the heart of this rapidly developing country, runs the "Burlington-&-Missouri-river-in-Nebraska" branch of the C., B. & Q., and right at the end of one of its well managed divisions lies McCook, for the nonce my destination. It is a little city set upon a hill, and the lights from the windows of its prettily built houses gleam out with hospitable welcome as I find my way to one of the prettiest homes it boasts, for a Sunday's quiet visit.

Here is the little mistress of the house who with her good husband went out from Dr. Goodwin's great church in Chicago, to help found a church not in the wilderness, but in the midst of a most intelligent community, and who opens her own pretty parlors every Thursday evening as a reading-room for the young people of the village who have only cheerless rooms in boarding houses. Perhaps somebody will recognize her if I say she is the same little woman who, last Thanksgiving day in Chicago, invited the grocer's boy to her first family feast because she was so sure nobody else would think to invite him. After this, it will surprise no one to learn that she is one of the moving spirits of the W. C. T. U. of this thriving town, which is holding a series of Sunday evening temperance meetings with general acceptance, and excellent management.

Early on Monday morning, by the arrangement of my kind host, a double team came to the door, and with a genuine "cow boy," off duty for a little season, for a driver, three energetic explorers set out for a thirty mile ride south into Kansas. There never was a clearer atmosphere, never a broader outlook, never more golden sunshine it seemed to me than that we enjoyed this glorious morning. Deep breaths of the invigorating air, and happy anticipations of the day's doings and revealings, gave us the joy of simple existence.

The blue sky was far, far away—the horizon line melted away into it—there was such a sense of being on top of the round world, and all its infelicities under our feet. One of our number for months past an invalid, none other indeed than Mrs. E. G. Merrill, long the beloved secretary of the Central Union of Chicago, rode sixty miles that day without an ache or pain,—consummate test of the recuperative powers and qualities of this incomparable climate. The prairie is soft with the tufted buffalo grass, save where the departure of the buffalo and the coming of civilization is marked by the patches of "blue joint," concerning whose encroachments I condoled with a young ranchman, remembering the virtues of its famed predecessor on which cattle fed all winter, nosing down to its roots for the little gland of sweetness and nourishment which gives it value.

"O," said he, "that's our salvation. This land is too good for cattle ranges alone. That 'blue joint' makes hay."

The remark was "significant of much" as Mrs. Carlyle would say; significant of the truth that this great plain is to furnish the world's market with agricultural products in the near future.

A little plant or weed, with a wicked look under its velvet leaves, attracted my attention. "That" said our "cowboy" driver, experienced in the ways of cattle beyond even most of his kind, "that is the loco weed. It is to horses what drink is to men. It pizens 'em, not to death, but they stagger round after eating it as men do from drink, and if once they get a taste of it, they're crazy to get another. Some of 'em it makes stupid and some of 'em act vicious and ugly, but sooner or later it kills 'em, sure."

Here was a revelation indeed. Have we not been told that animals are endowed with a sense of the unfit and the unnatural as man, poor man, is not—at least not now? The locoed horse—the drunken man—here is something to investigate, I said to myself, and the driver, as if divining my thought, reined up his horses, leaped out and picked a handful of it, which I have preserved for the scrutiny and analysis of the next naturalist I meet.

The sun is quite a little way past the zenith, when we find we have lost our way on this trackless prairie. We have crossed the Republican and the Beaver, two of the few creeks that water the great plain. We are in Kansas, but several miles west of our destination, and our thirty mile ride stretches into five or six miles more. It is still further prolonged by having to circumvent the newly fenced pastures. Still another testimony to the decision of agriculture that "the cattle must go." We drive on interminably, it seems to me, impatient for the accomplishment of a great desire, but at last after following directions received at the coziest of sod cabins, given in as polite language and as cultured tones as might greet us in some classic university town, we spy in a not far distant "draw" or ravine, the adventurous and almost omnipresent windmill. It is a sure guide to habitation. In reaching it we strike a cross-road, where a pole supports a mail box. A white rag floats out from it indicating treasure within. This peculiar post-office is "confirmation strong as Holy Writ" of what the windmill hinted. Another five minutes and we are driven up before the door of a comfortable, square-roofed frame house, voices are heard and signs of living are seen, while bounding up over the bank of the "draw" comes the boy, brown of face and of attire, whom I would any day go eight hundred miles to see.

After bud, blossom, then fruit (with proper care.) One of the many telling things at Michigan's 6th district convention held the other day, was a banner of white satin, used in the decorations made 35 years ago for the Daughters of Temperance of Northville, and belonging to Mrs. Plumstead. "Add to your virtue, Temperance," was the motto. The daughters then, the mothers now, and their daughters have risen up and called them blessed.

* * *

Miss Willard has found "a ticket at the door" in some of her recent audiences on the present trip. This is entirely against her rule, which is that the meeting must be as free and open as the church on Sunday. I make this plea for her, that such may be the understanding always and everywhere she goes. Gospel temperance talks ought to be free.

* * *

Kentucky gave five thousand votes to St. John. The faculty of the agricultural college at Lexington stood solid for him. Col. George W. Bain was on Kentucky's electoral ticket.

* * *

Mrs. S. K. Leavitt, of Cincinnati, the first woman ever elected President of the National W. C. T. U., and who at once declined the honor, has removed with her husband to Jacksonville, Florida. The white ribbon women there are to be congratulated. Commiserate the W. C. T. U. sisterhood of Beeropolis.

* * *

Mrs. Angele C. Davis, recently corresponding secretary W. C. T. U. of Cincinnati, is now living in Louisville and has been made president of Y. W. C. T. U. there, vice Mrs. Carrie Leech resigning that she may give more time to state work.

* * *

It is a great loss to the reading people of the northwest that Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert has abdicated the "Womans Kingdom" of the Inter Ocean. It is not generally known, but I think it deserves to be among the W. C. T. U. at least, that her reason for doing so was the continued injustice of that journal to the W. C. T. U. Her "kingdom" was not worth so much to her as her loyalty to its subjects.

* * *

Mrs. George W. Bain kindly accompanied Miss Willard on her trip through Kentucky. She is a most faithful state president spending and being spent in the service. The south is a field ready for the harvest. Women are so earnest that in many localities they go to the court house on the day of the local option vote and plead to be represented by those exercising "the sovereignty."

* * *

A bright white ribbon girl says some of our Republican friends are so vexed about women "lending their influence" to a party, that she should think they wouldn't be willing to even say "polly-tics" any more, but would call it "Tommy-tics!"

A terribly truthful summing up is this of Frank Leslie's:

The election is over. Defamation has ceased. The air, cleared of the foul vapors of obscenity and calumny, seems like the pure air on the top of the Alps. If the vile things that have been said about candidates within four months could be collected in one book, they would poison the paper and rot the covers. It has been contention allied to foul aspersion—a demon's sandwich made by pasting the first summer of the civil war and the summer of the Beecher trial together. It is over, and the half asphyxiated land breathes once more free!

"A low sweet voice is a excellent thing in woman"—or anybody else. Nor is this charm incompatible with public speaking. To illustrate: One of our most eloquent women (and most easily heard by large audiences, please notice) was travelling in Maine. It was a warm summer day, and she wished the window of the parlor car opened. Her request was conveyed to the porter in the low pleasant tones of her conversation-voice. A cultured Canadian lady was seated behind her, and attracted by these musical and winning tones, for more than anything else the voice betrays inherent nature, resolved to make her acquaintance. This led to engagements to speak in Montreal, Ottawa, and other chief towns, and opened Canada to our national organizer, Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, of Boston.

It is pleasant to note that Dr. Reynolds of Red Ribbon fame, is coming into Michigan to fulfill a series of engagements, and we trust his field may constantly enlarge for good. His is the gospel of love and persuasion.

* * *

Such a notice as this has been clipped by an observing W. C. T. U. woman, from a country paper: "Hogs raised about distilleries are very often subject to inflammation of the lungs and liver. These troubles may be easily avoided by using ——s, horse and cattle powder in their swill." I wish everybody would take as much pains to prevent inflammation of the lungs and liver in human beings raised on distilling products, as is taken to protect the hogs.

Mrs. Mary C. McClees, National superintendent of kitchen garden work, wishes correction of a mistake as made in the Pathfinder. She says:

"The word home is printed house in several instances, thus altering the aim and great design of kitchen gardens. We all have houses to live in, and so have the children, but homes are rare, and we desire so to educate little girls that they may make such bright attractive homes, that no other stronger attraction will be found in the saloons. To train girls to be home-makers and house-keepers is the object of the kitchen-garden system."

* * *

The Woman's Journal contains the following: "A man was lately fined ten dollars for beating his wife. A few days after, another man was fined fifty dollars for vagrancy. From this a correspondent of the New Northwest infers that it is better for a man to beat his wife than to do nothing." And one of my bright "Down-east" friends comments thus: "Yes, if he 'beats' her in the morning making the fires, in taking care of the children o' nights, in eating a picked-up dinner on Monday, in showing patience and forbearance, under aggravations; in short, if he 'beats' her in the practice of all the virtues, he'd much better do that than 'do nothing.'"

NEW YORK.

ABRIDGED REPORT OF THE STATE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY GIVEN AT THE LATE ANNUAL MEETING.

One more year's record made, its work done, the books closed, we gather for our eleventh annual feast; to record His mercies, whose banner over us this year has been love. Not to ungird for rest and refeshment, but to gird anew for toil, until our work is finished and the Master says, "it is enough!" The record we bring today of growth and advancement, must cheer the heart of every solitary worker present and bring forth expressions of praise for the blessedness of being chosen for such grand service. "Not unto us, not unto us, Oh, Lord, be the glory, but unto Thy great name now and forever!"

Many features of the work are especially noticeable. In Alleghany county there are nine temperance schools, two temperance newspapers, and unfermented wine is used generally in the churches. In Cayuga county, one temperance school has 161 members; there is a good temperance library in each one of these schools. Jamestown, in Chautauqua county, has a Band of Hope of 165 members. Cortland union, in Cortland county, sustains columns in three weekly papers, and supplies each factory with leaflets for each employe on pay day, to be given out with their monthly wages.

Washington union, in Dutchess county, has headquarters, a neat building with audience room, library and kitchen, costing $600, and no debt. Sixty-one copies of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken in this county.

Mothers' meetings have been a delightful feature of the work in some unions of Monroe county. One town in this county having neither church nor post office, but having twenty saloons, has a W. C. T. U. which has raised $197 for prosecuting its work this year, and $700 additional toward a W. C. T. U. hall to be used for Sunday school and religious services as well.

The Evangelistic work of Union No. 1, Kings county, deserves special mention, meetings having been held every evening for ten years; some of the leaders have led one meeting each week during all this time. The hall holds about 400, and every Sunday evening is packed. All through the summer on week nights there have been from one to two hundred, and souls are being saved. Evangelistic work is a special work of all unions in Kings county. The largest membership is the Brooklyn union on the hill, 175 members.

The members of Oswego union, Oswego county, are factors in several philanthropic undertakings, viz. The Shelter for fallen women, prison, jail, hospital and almshouse visitation, etc. They are claiming the promise that, "One shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight," and although working at great odds in regard to numbers, report a pleasant retrospect and hopeful prospect.

In Syracuse, Onondaga county, the union has distributed tracts to all school teachers throughout the county; also to employers and employes.

A general visitation of shop girls was made, and resulted in founding an industrial school with an increasing attendance. Syracuse No. 2, holds meetings semi-monthly. During the months of July and August when many churches are closed, they have held interesting meetings in the city hall, which have reached the young men and drinking classes. Literature distributed to the schools, police cells and other places. Onondaga has a large number of locals, but no report has been received.

By invitation, Mrs. McClees addressed 500 sailors at a meeting held for them by the West Brighton union, Richmond county. The whole summary is as follows:

We have 335 local unions, with an estimated membership of 8,000: a gain of 137 unions and 2,000 workers. We have 147 temperance schools, with 16,000 members; fifteen Y. W. C. T. Unions. Twenty-two counties are organized; seven have been brought into line this year. The county having the largest number of auxiliaries is Alleghany; the one having the largest aggregate membership is Monroe. The largest local Union reported, is Brooklyn, No. 3, which has a membership of 170; the next largest is the New union of Cortland, which has already a membership of 165.

As last year, I have avoided incorporating in my report that which may properly be given by the superintendents of departments of work. As we recount the widening of the work in our state, as we review the increase in the number of our societies and workers, we mentally exclaim, What has God wrought! For what has He brought us to such an hour as this! If we abide in His plan and fulfill His purpose, we shall receive His blessing, and be crowned with ultimate success. As we look back over the twelve months, we see such growth and prosperity as has never been vouchsafed this society before, and we humbly bring it to the Father to bless and multiply an hundred fold.

MRS. E. H. GRIFFITH.

OREGON.

CORVALLIS.—Our Pacific slope is so far away from you, that sometimes we only seem to catch the echo of the general orders. Several times we have read in THE UNION SIGNAL suggestions to be carried out on certain days, and this too late to make any arrangements in accordance therewith. This was the case last Wednesday, the 29th. Our little band, only five, was together for our usual weekly prayer meeting, when one of the members, having received her UNION SIGNAL the night before, brought it with her. We read together the scripture passages mentioned as suitable to the day, and our prayers went up, we trust with the "incense that ascendeth continually to the throne of God."

In talking over the suggestions of the Missouri superintendent, we caught somewhat of her spirit, and had it but been in time we would have carried out her suggestions to the full. Would it not be well, as we are so very far away, when any day is set apart for observance like the 29th of October, that a telegram should be sent to our state presidents from Headquarters? They would pass the message on by mail to the remotest corners wherever there is the praying band of women.

So would the chain of prayer that girds this country have more links, wherewith to call down heavenly help and blessings.

L. A. NASH.

WISCONSIN.

Died, at Dartford, October 21, 1884, Mrs. Jennie Taylor, aged sixty-eight years.

Mrs. Taylor was one of the earliest and most earnest Crusaders, a member of the band that did valiant work in Ripon in the winter of 1874. She was a member of the W. C. T. U. from its first organization, and always felt purest interest in all temperance work as in all Christian work, and up to the last moments of her life she was never too weak or too weary to listen to the details of the work of the union. The following resolutions passed by the Dartford W. C. T. U. tell the story of the loss to us.

WHEREAS, In the providence of God our esteemed sister, Mrs. Jennie Taylor, has been removed from our number,

Resolved, That we her sisters of the W. C. T. U. of Dartford, bow meekly to the will of the Lord believing that He doeth all things aright.

Resolved, That we will cherish with loving remembrance her faithful and ever zealous performance of her duties as president of our Union.

Resolved, That in her death the temperance cause has lost a noble advocate, the church a true and earnest Christian, and her husband a loving and devoted wife.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy be extended to the bereaved husband and relatives.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the husband, and one inserted in THE UNION SIGNAL and Ripon Commonwealth and placed on our secretary's books.

MRS. M. W. BROOKS,
MRS. L. D. OLIN,
MRS. L. C. WHEELER,
Committee.

Very successful entertainments have been given by "Temperance Wide Awakes" at Janesville, and Bands of Hope at Oconto and Medford.

Mrs. E. A. Blair, of Medford, supplies the place of Mrs. Eva C. Griffith, our superintendent of juvenile work as Mrs. Griffith has not yet recovered from her severe illness. Mrs. Blair is already in the field to the great delight of the little folks.

Mrs. Marion B. Baxter, of Michigan, will give three weeks to Wisconsin early in the new year. Mrs. Baxter's terms are very generous and we hope our Unions will send in their applications as soon as possible, that we may make the best possible use of her time. To those who heard her fine lecture at our convention at Waukesha, no word of praise need be said.

The Prohibition club at Madison is already preparing for work in the campign of 1884. An enthusiastic meeting was held in the senate chamber November 14.

COLORADO.

PUBELO.—The local W. C, T. U. observed Wednesday, November 12, by fasting and prayer, holding three services, one in each of the three churches, morning, afternoon and evening. Bells on each side the river tolled every six minutes to call to prayer. Every pastor of the place, except one, participated in the meetings.

This union has held impressive evangelistic services in the jail on Sabbath. The several Bands of Hope are prospering, the weekly meetings of the Union are held among members of the various churches, and hard work and harmony are the order of the day. Mrs. Sperry has returned from the two conventions at St. Louis, and is full of work as usual. Both she and Mrs. McNeil, president of the W. C. T. U., command the respect and esteem of the grand band of women who are working with them to hasten the day of better things for Pueblo.

The Boulder W. C. T. U. realized fifty dollars from a concert given for the benefit of their reading room, the first week in November.

TENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION AT RENSSELAER.

Regular district convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union assembled in this place at the M. E. church, October 9, with fair attendance of officers and delegates. Devotional exercises on this occasion were conducted by Mrs. Wells, state president. Mrs. R. S. Dwiggins opened the convention by an address of welcome; responded to by Mrs. Ripley, of Brookston. Address in behalf of the churches by Rev. T. C. Webster, after which Mrs. Wells occupied the time in a miscellaneous talk, both instructive and entertaining.

"Prohibition," a poem by Kate Harrington, was then recited by Mrs. Alfred Thompsom, with vim and earnestness. After the benediction by Rev. D. Halstead, meeting adjourned until Friday morning.

Morning session opened with Mrs. R. S. Dwiggins in the chair, Mrs. Wells conducting the devotional exercises. District secretary having resigned her place, it was filled by the appointment of C. A. Clark.

Reports of unions next in order.

Brookston showed union in good working order. Membership of 18. Newspaper list of 13. Band of Hope in good condition.

Oxford—Mrs. Rawlings reported children's work in excellent condition.

Fowler—Work in flourishing condition; membership of 30; $7.00 in treasury; good newspaper list; good business meetings; Band of Hope prospering.

Monticello—Mrs. Dr. Wirt reported the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in a most flourishing condition; regular public meetings; good business meetings; Band of Hope in splendid working order.

Mrs. Percupile, president of Jasper county, then reported a good interest throughout the county in the work. Three unions in good working order. She favored us with an excellent written article. Miss Mellie Wright read a letter from Mrs. E. B. Brake, president of Fowler local union. Instructions in the work by state president then followed.

2 p. m. Mrs. Dwiggins in the chair. Mrs. Percupile conducting devotional exercises.

Reports of unions again taken up, Rensselaer taking the lead. Miss Mellie Wright reported work in good condition; membership 68, large newspaper list; $5 60 in the treasury, besides which the union owns a silk quilt valued at $35. Total amount sent in to state since last district convention, $28.75. Band of Hope also well represented.

Watson School House, Mrs. Watson, delegate, reported union as meeting every two weeks; business in good condition. Children are at work here also.

Remington was then reported to be in good condition. A good article was then read by Mrs. Dr. Wirt, of Monticello.

Question drawer was conducted with interest and profit.

The resignation of Mrs. Percupile, who is called east, was handed in, and her place filled by Miss Bolles, of Remington; Miss Lola Moss, county secretary, resigned, and Miss Carrie Irving, of Remington, appointed.

At 7 p. m. October 10, we gathered to hear the address of Mrs. Wells. This was the crowning event of our pleasant and profitable convention. We cannot expect to do this lady justice in so brief a notice, and shall only say that upon the rock prohibition her feet are firmly planted. That her interest in this great question alone brought her forward, and placed her in the front ranks as a public worker and speaker; well educated and highly cultivated, she is well able to grapple with the political questions of the day, and present them understandingly to her hearers. A Christian woman, good and true, the banner of St. John could not have fallen in better hands. May God speed her in the work, and give her everywhere as warm a reception and as interested listeners as at Rensselaer. Gen. Milroy, being present, endorsed Mrs. Wells' speech heartily and with compliments.

C. A. CLARK, District Secretary.

SIXTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. held its eighteenth convention at Carthage, Rush county, October 14 and 15. After opening devotional exercises, conducted by Mrs. Kemper, of Muncie, the following reports of local unions were given:

Muncie union meets weekly; has Bible readings, and readings from Frances Power Cobbe's "Duties of Women," has children's meetings once a month.

Albany has a membership of 41, and a Band of Hope.

Chester has 23 members, one juvenile union, and takes THE UNION SIGNAL and Organizer to circulate among the members.

Arba has a membership of 23. Carthage has 35 members, a literature committee, active and useful, has raised money by serving ice cream during the summer, with which funds additions have been made to the Loan Library; has children's meetings, Organizer, THE UNION SIGNAL and Monitor Journal taken.

Webster has thirty members and a Band of Hope with forty members.

Spiceland reports 41 members, a Band of Hope numbering 175, keeps a shelf in depot for Bible and temperance papers.

Richmond has 140 members, sustains a flourishing reading room, has a colored W. C. T. U., and a Y. W. C. T. U. The former sustains a Band of Hope, the latter a children's sewing school.

Sister Mary Mansfield, of Newcastle, read an excellent paper on the "Training of Children for Temperance Work."

At the evening session, Mary B. Henley gave the delegates a beautiful welcome, which was responded to eloquently by Mrs. Boor.

Short addresses from Elwood Scott, Sisters Holloway and Brown.

A letter was read from sister A. M. Way, replete with encouragement. A telegram of greeting and sympathy was sent to her. Reports of superintendents followed; those of Dr. Mary F. Thomas, on "Woman's work for woman," Hannah D. Francisco on "Scientific instruction," and Dr. Rachel S. Baily on "Heredity and Hygiene," being especially full of thought, advice and encouragement. Mrs. Emma C. Pinkham, of Spiceland, was made superintendent of scientific department, vice Mrs. Francisco, whom other duties compelled to resign. Mrs. L. J. Hill was elected president and Emily R. Hill, secretary of Rush county union. Mrs. Black gave a satisfactory explanation of the system of reporting. Sister Dennis and others spoke of the loss sustained by every W. C. T. U. worker who is not a constant reader of THE UNION SIGNAL and Organizer. Sister Edgerton, on behalf of committee on resolutions, submitted a report covering the various lines of work which was adopted.

A delightful social re-union and love feast followed, which it would be as impossible to describe as to paint a sunbeam. Wednesday evening an instructive Bible reading was given by Sister Boor, and an address by Sister Balch.

CANADA.

ONTARIO W. C. T. U. SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

This anniversary was held in Shaftsbury hall, Toronto, commencing at 2 p. m., Oct. 14.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. J. C. Budd, of Guelph.

The recording secretary then called the roll of officers, when the following responded: president, Mrs. Chisholm; first vice president, Mrs. Tilton; second vice president, Mrs. Cowan; recording secretary, Miss Orchard; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Fawcett; treasurer, Mrs. Brethour; county superintendents, Mesdames Chrysler, Lawrence, Coates, Hocking, Andrews, Rutherford, Keagey, Youmans, Graham, Budd, Freeman, and Miss Meir.

Miss Russell, on behalf of the Young Ladies' Union, Ottawa, presented the Ontario union with a very handsome hand-painted banner, which was received by the convention with much applause. The president asked, "What shall be done with it?" On a motion it was resolved to leave it to the care of the donors—they to send it to the annual meetings of the provincial Union wherever they may be held.

Reports from county superintendents were then called for, and those from the following counties were read: Essex, Kent, Huron, Brant, York, Waterloo and Grenville. The superintendents from the following reported verbally, all showing some work done: Lambton, Elgin, Bruce, Grey, Wellington, Perth, Wentworth and Halton.

Mrs. Tilton then presented the following report of the committee on plan of work:

"Your committee in presenting their annual report for 1884-85, beg to say, that in accordance with the recommendations of plan of work committee at convention of 1883, the province was divided into three parts, Mrs. Chrysler taking eleven counties, Mrs. Youmans, fourteen, and Mrs. Tilton, seventeen; that county superintendents were communicated with. In many of the counties very effectual service was done by these ladies. The secretary's report will give you the number of new unions formed during the year.

"Mrs. Andrews, of the county of Bruce, did very faithful work, organizing twenty-nine unions; her collections amounted to $117 54, expenses $94.44, leaving a balance of $23.10 on hand for future work. Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. McLaughlin, of Boston, together delivered twenty lectures before different unions. Your committee were grateful to Mr. Clapp, school inspector of N. Wellington county, for his very great interest, and for the arrangements made by him for Mrs. Hunt's lecture at the Teachers' Association meeting in Fergus, when over 300 teachers of our public schools had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. Hunt's clear and definite views upon scientific instruction in our public schools. 350 cards, and 1,704 envelopes were sent to different unions, for which $5 99 was received."

A financial statement was made, and the report of the committee on prison and jail work, showing much accomplished. In the latter it was asserted that at least seventy-five per cent of commitments to jails and prisons were through drink, directly or indirectly.

A report of the committee on press work was then offered, showing that in answer to 150 cards sent to editors of the province, asking the aid of the press in the war against the liquor traffic, 56 offered space, thirteen choosing to make their own selections. The declaration of the report is that the press is in the van in the march of progress, and that more papers are willing to give space than workers can be found to fill them.

In the report of the committee on sacramental wine, it was stated that eighty unions were asked to bring the subject before all the churches within range of their working; and out of these, twenty-three responded in full sympathy, and that, while several of the churches did use unfermented wine, those that did not promised to give the subject earnest consideration.

The committee on credentials reported the names of delegates with the unions represented: Delegates, 106; unions represented, twenty-seven. A cheering report was given by the corresponding secretary. Several new unions have been formed, memorials have been sent to influential bodies, many meetings have been held, and much literature has been distributed. The year began with thirty-six auxiliaries, it ends with ninety-five. The membership then was seven hundred, now it is over two thousand. The whole report, together with the president's address was full of inspiration. Special encouragement was given in regard to the W. C. T. unions and the Bands of Hope. In conclusion the president said:

"Let us ask it each one for herself before God, then, faithfully and conscientiously let us place our hand in the grasp of duty, even though its close clasp gives us much pain. The loving touch of the Father's hand shall reach us as we walk, and we shall speak the words he whispers to us, while we look to Him evermore for guidance and for guarding. A future is before us in the history of this temperance reformation where our faith, our constancy and our obedience, will be tested as by fire, but with us will walk a sacred presence that shall inspire, stimulate, and support.

"Beloved, we are in a war between right and wrong. Those of us who, at home, prepare the lint and bandages for the wounded are needed no less than those who go to the front. The enemy has dragged to a dreadful death some of our best beloved, and others he holds as prisoners. We may not parley with such an one; we dare not remain inactive, but let us, each one in her place, do the duty that comes nearest, expecting always the victory.

Now, the spirit, conflict-riven,
Wounded heart and painful strife.
Afterward, the triumph given,
And the victor's crown of life.
Now the training, hard and lowly,
Weary feet and aching brow.
Afterward the service holy
And the Master's "Enter thou."

MICHIGAN.

CIRCULAR LETTER.

Dear Sisters of Michigan's W. C. T. Unions:—The conflicts and controversies of the past political campaign are subsiding and settling to the calm of everyday life and duties, but from this calm of the political sea there still rises that ugly breaker upon which so many hopes are wrecked, so many blessings dashed,—the legalized liquor traffic,—still rock-rooted in our law, still unmoved by any grand surging of the waves of popular sentiment, still unshattered by any charge of dynamite law that could crush it into fragments and scatter it in the sea of burial. Woman's duties too, remain unchanged and there lies before us the same open way of work for God and humanity, from which we may not turn aside so long as patriotism, philanthropy and faith in God possess our hearts, and this defiant breaker remains to threaten the safety of all. As we hope in God for final success, so now let our earnest appeal be to the church which He has established and ordained to be His representative in the world. It is requested of every union in Michigan to have ready to place in the churches of your several towns and localities where Thanksgiving service shall be held, the accompanying form of protest and petition with the request that it be read from the pulpit, and names solicited at such service.

After this kindly seek the co-operation of every church and pastor in your several localities, and have this read from the pulpits at the Sabbath service, and attention called to the petition and names solicited. If possible, have the table in front of the desk spread with suitable paper, ruled to secure names of men and women in separate columns, together with suitable pens and ink. Secure the reading of this in all religious gatherings until Christmas day, if possible, then collect and send to the subscriber. This means care and prompt work for some persons, and possibly may seem an innovation upon the sanctities of our set feasts and solemn assemblies.

The word of God clearly declares, "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?

Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thy own flesh?" Isa. 58: 6, 7.

Absence from home and sickness, have delayed this paper.

PETITION.

To the Legislature of Michigan:—The undersigned, members of the ——— church and society, town of ———, ——— county, in the name of God we here worship, and whose kingdom we desire to see established in the earth, do hereby solemnly protest against the legalized liquor traffic in our state, and petition your honorable body to submit to the people a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks in our state, to be acted upon at an election in the fall of 1885.

FLORIDA.

FLORIDIAN GLEANINGS.

A dear friend writes me that the quiet denizens of Euche Anna are much interested in the attractions of a new and perfect health resort, only eight miles distant, Lake de Funiak, in the highlands of Walton county, six miles east of Pensacola, on the Pensacola & Atlantic R. R.

The lake is a lovely sheet of pure water, a mile in circumference, with a hard beach forming a fine drive its entire circle. The buildings for the use of the Branch Chautauqua Association and for the entertainment of the thousands who are to assist in its opening meetings, are being rapidly pushed forward.

The grounds of the association comprise two hundred acres, all of which will be enclosed and divided into streets and pretty, open squares. Many lots have been purchased by people of wealth who are building cottages for either summer or winter occupation.

The altitude 280 feet above the sea, and the ocean breezes, make it a delightful summer resort, and the semi-tropical climate renders it no less desirable in winter as a temporary home for invalids and tourists.

Mr. Hickey, a courteous gentleman formerly of Washington, has just opened a large and handsome hotel with every modern improvement. As no liquor is allowed to be sold within miles of the town it seems to me that weary workers of the W. C. T. U. might here find a haven of rest.

Pensacola is said to have been remarkably healthy this summer. Much interest has been awakened at the prospect of a visit from Miss Willard, those who have known her by name only rejoicing in the pleasant hope of hearing her plead the cause she loves so well.

One, whose girlhood lies far behind her, has been writing to the girls who live in her old home, of Anna Gordon's winning ways and words. May the plans which have been made prove to be a promised pleasure, not lost but only deferred.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The campaign for compulsory temperance education in Pennsylvania is moving steadily on. The noble band of temperance workers have worked on this line all the year. Mrs. Hunt has spoken nightly since November 8 to enthusiastic audiences in Washington, Homestead, Braddock, New Castle, Mercer, Butler, Franklin, and Meadville. She speaks the 18th in Warren, the 19th in Wellsboro, the 20th in Bradford, the 24th in Honesdale, the 25th in Bethlehem, the 26th in Chester, the 28th in Westchester, the 30th in Clarion, December 4th in Lockhaven, December 9th in Williamsport. The intervening dates are being steadily filled in where they will tell on the legislature.

CALL TO PRAYER.

Unions will please note the call for a Day of Prayer, as issued by the national president, Miss Frances E. Willard. We trust that upon that day, Thursday, December 4, our women will be found in their several prayer meetings, asking for the wisdom which cometh from above and which is needed to guide us in all our work.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

NINTH DISTRICT.—The work in this district has revived gloriously since the summer camp-meetings at Watseka and Eureka. All calls have not been met, yet Mrs. Rounds has held five gospel meetings. Miss Shedd, the president of the district, has organized six Unions, and Mrs. Rounds and Mrs. Henry have held revival meetings at Reddick, where a W. C. T. U. was organized and 104 persons signed the pledged, 90 of them men.

ELEVENTH DISTRICT,—At an adjourned meeting of this district, held at Kirkwood, November 13, it was decided to re-adopt the plan of finance recommended by the state. The new president, Miss Ida Evans, is to give her entire time to work in the district, and it is hoped and expected that she will receive such aid and co-operation as will enable her to so "lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes" that the Eleventh District may soon be thoroughly organized. Superintendents were appointed for nearly all the state departments of work, and as in each case the appointment was made with special reference to the adaptation and personal preference of the superintendent chosen for her particular line of work, we may confidently look for marked advancement all along the line.

FIFTEENTH DISTRICT.—To all who were so privileged as to be present at the executive meeting of this district in the home of its honored president, Mrs. F. C. Jenkins, it will ever be a memorable occasion. To all it was a blessed waiting together before the Lord. His presence was manifest and all received a new baptism of the Holy Spirit. The plans outlined for the coming year are in accord with the untiring energy, the "consecrated common sense," and the unbounded, unwavering faith of the president, and her noble band of women rally loyally, follow unhesitatingly. Some confessed to discouragement and fearful forebodings when they went to this meeting, but all left with fresh courage and full confidence that as their cause was God's cause, they had naught to fear. In this district as in others, a sound financial basis is considered indispensable, the state plan of finance has received cordial endorsement, and the work of raising a fund for district and state work will be begun at once and vigorously pushed.

Mrs. Conklin, of Champaign, is the new president of Champaign county, and Mrs. Dingle, of Rossville, of Vermillion county. The district feels greatly enriched by the accession to its corps of workers of the state superintendent of young woman's work, Mrs. F. S. Best, and speedily made Mrs. Best welcome by electing her district superintendent of that department.

Another executive meeting is contemplated for the southern part of the district at an early date.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR.

There has been such a crowd around THE UNION SIGNAL door of late, that I quite gave up in despair of getting a chance at the "knocker," but here I am at last, and it is not of myself I wish to speak, but of one of our Illinois unions, so young, and yet so vigorous, that I believe it would do other unions good to hear about this child in age, but woman in experience. You will find this union in Warren, Joe Davies county, that charming corner of the state, where nature spreads out her robes in most bewitching loveliness.

This union was organized the 19th of May, 1884 with Miss Mary Bayne, president, the right woman in the right place. With her able corps of officers and workers, the Warren union has accomplished grand work for our cause.

It has rarely been my privilege to see such activity, even among the older unions, and the secret is, each woman is willing and ready to do her very best when called upon for service. Besides the weekly business and prayer meetings of the union, they hold a monthly public meeting on Monday evening. Have established headquarters on the main street of the place, and by lawn sociables and festivals, and in other pleasant ways, have kept the treasury full. They number 125 members, 90 active and 36 honorary, and in the distribution of literature, and general work have made a record of which any union might be proud. But the crowning glory of this union is its helpful sympathy in connection with a Band of Hope, which was organized at the same time the union was formed by Miss Catherine G. Waugh, of Rockford, one of the noble girls who belong to our Y. W. C. T. U.

This Band of Hope is under the superintendency of Miss Addie Northam, who is devoting herself to that work in a way which brings success. The Band numbers 125, organized into classes, and put through regular class lessons. Beside the lesson, they have recitations, class exercises, black-board exercises, or talks, and in a variety of ways enlist and hold the interest of the children. The manual published by THE UNION SIGNAL is now in use by the Band and gives splendid satisfaction. The W. C. T. U. stands by this little company of children to guard and advance their interests, and a more complete working Band of Hope I have never seen. I would like to ask any woman contemplating the organizing of juvenile work in her town to write to Miss Northam, of Warren, and get all the information possible, and I can assure for any who may write, an early and helpful reply from Miss Northam. Their last venture in aggressive work is receptions given to boys every Saturday and Monday evenings in the headquarters of the W. C. T. U. Different ladies take charge in turn, and provide reading, music, or whatever can be used to promote the moral interests of these boys, who but for these receptions would be out on the streets in bad and vicious company.

It was my pleasure to spend two or three days in Warren, late in October, and I was delighted beyond measure at what I heard and saw of these two organizations. The "half can never be told" of the good the noble women of Warren are doing, and with these results in their infancy as a union, what will they not accomplish, when they are, like some of the rest of us, ten years old!

LOUISE S. ROUNDS.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Twelve unions have been organized since Peoria convention.

—Mrs. H. R. Smith leaves in a few days for Florida, on account of ill health. Will remain there during the winter.

—Mrs. Rounds will speak at Olney convention, Dec. 11. Send to headquarters for dates.

—Mrs. S. M. Perkins, one of the national organizers, has written that she can give the state ten nights for lectures. Send to headquarters for terms.

—Mr. Thomas Murphy speaks at Yorkville, Nov. 28, 29, and 30. Mr. M. is one of our most eloquent speakers. Send to headquarters for terms and dates.

—The central union of Chicago have engaged in their lecture course, Mr. J. B. Gough, Miss Jessie Couthoui, Robert Burdette, Mr. Thomas Murphy, Nashville Students, and Thomas Nast. The course opens Dec. 4, with Mr. Gough.

—The state reports are now ready for distribution; copies will be sent to the president and corresponding secretary of each union in the state. Unions desiring more can have them by sending postage to headquarters at the rate of 2 cents per copy, or by paying expressage when a larger number is ordered.

—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the 16th congressional district of Illinois, comprising the counties of Clay, Clark, Crawford, Cumberland, Edwards, Jasper, Lawrence, Richland, Wabash and Wayne, will hold a convention in Olney, Richland county, on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 9th and 10th of December.

—Mr. Lars Owre has sent word to headquarters that he can give some lectures among the Scandinavians. He has done most excellent work in Minnesota and comes well recommended. Send for terms and dates to him at 718, 11th avenue, Minneapolis, Minn., or Mrs. H. E. Gallinger, 1103 south 7th street, Minneapolis, Minn.

IOWA.

CONVENTION AT ROLFE.

A Sunday school convention was held at this place Oct. 10, at which, beside many other good things that were done, the following good action was taken in reference to temperance work:

Resolved, That our prayers and united efforts be made for the cause of temperance as it is impossible to be truly helpful in religious matters unless we are advocates of the grand principles of temperance.

Resolved, That we give our influence for the establishment and support of Bands of Hope and W. C. T. unions, in connection with the Sunday school, that our children may be educated as pure citizens and our women find a service for the Master in assisting to enforce the laws granted by our legislators.

Resolved, That we favor thorough enforcement of the laws, and a cultivation of a higher standard of citizenship.

After the close of the Sunday school convention a number of the ladies of Rolfe together with visitors, assembled in the parlor of Mrs. S. A. Hatton, postmistress of the place, where, after earnest consultation and prayer a W. C. T. U. was formed. Mrs. E. Overmire was elected president, Mrs. A. A. Tilley secretary, and for the present, treasurer of the union. A committee was appointed to solicit subscribers to the W. C. T. U. papers, and to make arrangements to procure the services of the district president, and to arrange for an entertainment by the children of the Band of Hope, from all which earnest work they expect good results.

HARDIN COUNTY.—Convention met at Eldora in the Congregational church, October 29, was presided over by Mrs. Fawcett, our president. Seven local unions were represented and their reports for the last three months show no abatement of interest.

Mrs. Woods, of Marshalltown, was present, and aided very greatly by her noble instruction and earnestness in the cause of prohibition, her experience adding much to the force of her words. The children, two hundred strong, cheering recruits for the temperance army, and a prophecy of good things to be, marched in from school, accompanied by Prof. Johnson.

Rev. Adams addressed them in a forcible and practical way, asking them if they were forming a colony whether they would need a saloonist in their new venture?

The little hands went up universally, saying, "No, he would be of no use." They then sang the hymn, "Only an Armor-Bearer."

In the evening an address of welcome was given by Miss Minnie Williams.

Response by Miss Louie Wickham, of New Providence.

Dr. Elias Jessup gave an able address.

On the following day various questions were discussed, and measures were adopted for assisting in the enforcement of the law.

The ministers of Eldora showed great kindness and encouragement by their presence and assistance.

Earnest resolutions were adopted for aiding in the enforcement of the law, for working for temperance in every way, and thanks returned to all who had assisted to make the convention so great a success. W.

WEBSTER CITY.—At the annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Webster City the following officers were elected: Mrs. B. F. Darr, president; Mrs. L. J. Pierson, vice-president; Mrs. L. L. Estes, secretary; Mrs. B. F. Miller, treasurer. Committees were appointed in charge of the different lines of work and all are ready for active labor.

Decorations for W. C. T. U. Booth at New Orleans Exposition.

In order that there may be a uniformity in these decorations as well as a special meaning in the design, the form of a "shield" has been decided upon for state and territorial W. C. T. U Unions and a banner arranged to hang upon the wall with appropriate decorations and the title of the National department it represents upon it. Mrs. Fannie J. Barnes, superintendent of Young Woman's Department, tells us that she has asked each state Y. W. C. T. U. to select a particular flower as its emblem, and in her national emblem she will group all these flowers together in some beautiful design. The state and territorial shields should have upon them a representation of some staple product, and the name of the W. C. T. U. upon it. They should be about two feet in breadth at the widest part.

The banners of the departments should not be over three feet in length, with proportionate width, and can be as ornate as the superintendents choose, as variety in these will be desirable. Will not the officers of each state and territory have these "shields" prepared immediately and send them if possible to New Orleans by Dec. 1, or as soon after as practicable?

All packages must be sent to the Woman's Department, New Orleans Exposition, care of Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick.

Will not superintendents of departments have their decorations forwarded also, so as to be there Dec. 1, or as soon after as practicable?

All cash contributions must be sent by those who have charge of them to Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer of the N. W. C. T. U., Y. M. C. A. Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Do not wait to collect all you expect to, but forward some money as soon as you get it, as a fund is needed immediately with which to make preparations, and other sums can be sent from time to time as they are collected.

J. R. NICHOLS,
Nat. Supt. State and County Fairs.

DEPARTMENT OF YOUNG WOMAN'S WORK.

To State Superintendents and Others:

DEAR FRIENDS:—Desiring to have a floral design representing the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of the N. W. C. T. U. at the Exposition in New Orleans, we write to ask your immediate co-operation by sending us the name of the flower chosen by your state, with motto or text, also any contribution you may give toward it from 25 cents upward.

Our intention is to have the flowers and texts painted on a large, white satin fan, and if sufficient money is received to have a supply of small inexpensive fans, ornamented with the single flower and motto of each state, which will be sold as souvenirs of the Exposition, the proceeds to be divided with the N. W. C. T. U., our share to go toward a future conference on young women's work.

No state need feel obliged to retain the flower given them in the report of 1882. The following flowers have been already chosen, viz: the rose, pansy, marguerite, helitrope, forget-me-not, and annunciation lily. States having complied with this request are now asked for donations.

We also desire a list of the Y. W. C. T. Unions of each state with addresses of one or more officers. As the Exposition opens Dec. 16, a speedy reply is imperative.

Yours sincerely, FRANCES J. BARNES,
73 East 54th St. N. Y. City.

MRS. F. S. EVANS, Sec., 71 East 54th St.

N. B. Anyone reading this who may wish to help on our project for the sake of the dear young women of our land, is quite free to send us small or large sums of money.

JUVENILE DEPARTMENT.

To the Presidents of States and Territories:

DEAR SISTERS:—While at the National Convention at St. Louis, I found I had gotten the wrong address of several of the state superintendents of juvenile work. As it is a matter of time and labor to write to each president on this subject, I concluded to avail myself of the ever ready columns of our UNION SIGNAL and publish my list as now held, urging that corrections may be sent me without delay, in order that I may secure communication with each of my superintendents, for our mutual profit. I would also urge that any new thought, in the interest and extension of this particular line of the work, be sent to me at once, that this year may show great advance of effort and accomplished purpose.

A circular has been sent me concerning the World'

Fair at New Orleans. It is desired that some emblem expressive of the work of our department be prepared, as there is to be a national representation of the W. C. T. U. at that exposition. We would like to get up something which will worthily represent this, our beloved branch of the work, and therefore ask superintendents and local workers in the juvenile department, to send us small contributions toward such an object, if it meet with their approval. Yours fraternally,

ANNA M. HAMMER,

THE common people have long recognized the fact that certain classes of invalids are most successfully treated in a Sanitarium where they can enjoy rest from business or domestic cares and social duties, and can receive the benefit of a properly adjusted dietary, a careful and systematic regimen enforcing either rest or graduated exercise as the case may require, and constant medical supervision. Quite as important also is the advantage of trained nurses, attendants and assistants which can be better supplied in such an establishment than elsewhere.

The Sanitarium located at Battle Creek, Michigan under rational and scientific medical management, was the pioneer in this country, and is well entitled to the distinction of being the oldest scientific Sanitarium in America.

The institution was organized in August, 1866, and for ten years was deservedly successful as a water-cure. In 1876 it was re-organized under its present management, with a more extended scope, since which time constant additions have been made to its facilities for treatment as they have been developed by experience. The medical superintendent, Dr. J. H. Kellogg, with able assistants, has the care of this institution. For a picture of this massive structure see last page of this paper.

Signal Notes.

Mr. WILLIAM NOBLE has held gospel temperance meetings in Hoxton hall, London, for nearly 2,400 consecutive nights, Sunday included, without a single break, and over 1,000,000 pledge cards have been issued.

LORD WOLSELEY, the commander-in-chief of the British troops sent to relieve Gen. Gordon, is a strong temperance man. By his directions tea will be served as rations to the men selected for the Nile expedition.

AT Ottawa, Canada, they have the news that the town of Michipicotan, Canada, is in a state of siege. The prohibitionists who voted for the prohibitory law have been notified by the anti-prohibitionists to leave town or suffer the penalty of death.

PHILOSOPHY IN A REGISTRY OFFICE.—Scene, registry station, Seventh ward, corner East Broadway and Gouverneur street. Reporter to Officer—Is registering brisk or does it lag? Officer—Quite brisk. Bystander—All are for St. John. Officer—If all were for him more children around here would wear shoes.—N. Y. Sun.

THE Decatur (Illinois) Sentinel says: "Cornel, a town in Livingston county, during a dram shop rule of ten years, paid a pauper bill of $1,100 a year Then it changed to Prohibition, and at the end of four years the pauper expense was reduced to $2.50, which was paid for medicine. Yet some people claim that prohibition don't pay."

RECENTLY a petition for the right of local option bearing the signatures of 2,370 votess and 2,093 women of Allegany county, Md., and representing three-fifths of the individual taxation, was refused by the state legislature. The saloon interest was too powerful. And yet its numerical strength was extremely insignificant being only about two hundred.

FULLY one-half the territory of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, with large portions of Kentucky, Arkansas and Mississippi, are under prohibition, largely through the operation of local prohibitory laws. The legislatures of these states, yielding to the request of local communities, have passed laws allowing the people to rule, and in nearly every instance the "dry ticket" has prevailed.

AT a recent election in Pike county, Ga., there was a vote on local option, and the ballots cast in the election gave 266 majority for liquor. The Prohibitionists finding out that some illegal voting had been done, determined to contest the election. Both sides went into a thorough investigation of the legality of every vote cast, and nearly four hundred illegal votes were thrown out, giving a majority of 62 for prohibition.

DR. NEWMAN HALL, just before his departure for England on the 22d inst., was interviewed, and in reply to a question on the subject of temperance, said: "I wish to express my pleasure at one phase of your social life. Not once have I sat down to a table in my entire American trip and seen wine on the table. It is remarkable, and would be unheard of in England." Dr. Hall has been here since August 18th and has preached fifty sermons, delivered ten addresses, and travelled 4,000 miles.

A FACT WORTHY of special place in temperance records is the speech (through his interpreter) of Tawhiao, the Maori King, at the Crystal Palace temperance fete last week. He spoke of the Blue Ribbon as his badge of gladness, and declared his intention to do all he could on his return to induce his fellow-chiefs to follow his example in adopting it. Major TeWheoro, a member of the New Zealand Government, spoke to the same effect, adding that the Maori chiefs were already doing their best to prevent the introduction of spirits among the natives. The numbers and enthusiasm seen at the fete will doubtless deepen the impression made on the King and his suite as to the importance and influence of the temperance movement, and encourage further action in their own land.—The Christian.

OUR PREMIUM GIFT.

Get You Ready

FOR CHRISTMAS. There will be stockings to fill. Christmas trees to adorn. Absent friends must be remembered, and if you are a Sunday School teacher, under no circumstances can "those scholars" be forgotten. "But what can I get that will be at the same time attractive, interesting and instructive?" Allow us to suggest "MISTLETOE MEMORIES, or what the Poets Say about Christmas." This unique collection of Poems is selected from the writings of H. W. Longfellow, J. G. Whittier, Thomas Hood, Alfred Domett, Charles Mackay, Sir Walter Scott, Jennie Joy, and others. The whole bound in Banner shape, with rich fringe and tassels. The cover of this novelty is printed in nearly eighteen colors (being an almost exact fac simile of landscape studies printed in oil colors on gold pebble board), and ranks exceedingly high as an imported art production of the premier class. The original designs are drawn by H. Maurice Page, and were awarded a Prize of Fifty Pounds Sterling at the Suffolk street (London) Galleries in a competitive exhibit of 6000 entries, by the following eminent judges: J. E. Millais, Marcus Stone and G. A. Storey. For presentation, this art souvenir is vastly superior to a mere Christmas card, as it combines the advantages of both art and literature. SIZE 4 BY 6½ INCHES. Price, Beautifully Silk Fringed, with Tassels, only 35 cents, post paid. Three copies for $1.00. Mailed in envelope and protector, with privilege of returning if not absolutely satisfactory. ORDER AT ONCE.

Every person sending us $1.75, with one name for THE UNION SIGNAL (either new subscriber or renewal) before December 1, will upon demand, receive this beautiful Christmas memento FREE. Address

Miscellaneous Selections.

STRICTLY HYGIENIC.

A rather eccentric, yet eminent physican was called upon to attend a middle-aged rich lady who had imaginary ills. After many wise inquiries about her symptoms and manner of life, he asked for a piece of paper and wrote down the following prescription: "Do something for somebody." In the gravest manner he handed it to the patient and left. The doctor heard nothing from the lady for a long time. One Christmas morning he was hastily summoned to the cottage of his Irish washerwoman.

"It's not meself, doctor, it's me wrist that's ailing. Ye see, I was after goin' out into the darkness for a few bits of wood, when me fut struck this basket. It stood there like a big mercy, as it was, full of soft flannel from Mrs. Walker. She told me that your medicine cured her, doctor. So, if you plaze to put a little of the same on me wrist, I'll be none the worse for me nice present."

"It's a powerful remedy," said the doctor, gravely. And more than once in after years he wrote the prescription, "Do something for somebody."—Phrenological Journal.

A CALCULATION has been made as to the amount spent upon intoxicating drinks in Prussia, and the following result has been arrived at: In the year 1882 the Prussian treasury collected nearly 55,000 000 marks (about $14,000,000) from the tax on brandy, of which about 16,000.000 marks were refunded in the shape of drawbacks for export. Taking the tax of 15 pfennings (about 4 cents) per litre, the consumption of brandy must be about 261,000,000 litres, or 9½ litres (nearly two gallons) for every inhabitant. The quantity of wine consumed in Prussia during 1882 was 2,751,442 gals., which, at the average price of 1 mark 20 pf. per litre, represents an expenditure of 73,080,000 marks (about $18,200,000). The quantity of beer consumed was 103,000,000 gallons, which, at about 25 cents a gallon, gives a total of about $25,750,000 as the whole expenditure upon beer, wine, and spirits, being not far short of one-tenth of the whole annual revenue of the kingdom.

THE Hants Journal says: "Six of the leading liquor merchants of Halifax are calling for a meeting of all liquor dealers in the city. They have published a manifesto having regard to the Scott act, which may soon be brought before the people of Halifax. They advise political combination and action against the act. They deprecate the driving away of the measure of trade which the liquor business secures for the city. The wholesale dealers, they also think, should show sympathy with the retail men in their defence before the law. All this is very significant. It shows that the liquor traffic, like all other business, is to stand or fall by the verdict of public opinion and legislation. We are glad to see liquor dealers appealing to public sentiment." That the rumsellers are on the defensive is one of the most cheering signs of the times. Like our contemporary we are glad to have them appeal to public sentiment, because public sentiment will condemn them in no doubtful manner.

A FEW days ago in a New York police court a fine of ten dollars for drunkenness was imposed upon Miss Mary Hoyt, a lady of select society and the daughter of a millionaire. She had been arrested for disorderly conduct, creating a disturbance and assaulting the police. The trail of the serpent is everywhere; no social rank is free from the curse; and the law, that fines the already sorely-punished victim, sanctions and protects the horrible business that has wrought her degradation and shame. Such is our boasted licensing system.

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 47. CHICAGO, DECEMBER 4, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR'S message has two notable points. He recommends the abolition of all internal revenue taxes save on spirits, and the establishment of a national penitentiary. If government authorizes a national liquor traffic, it should certainly provide a national asylum for its victims.

"I LIKES yer cheek" said a drunkard to an English lady and a clergyman, both of whom were urging him to sign the pledge, and neither of whom was a total abstainer. The lady saw the point at once and signed—and the poor inebriate followed her example, saying: "Well, you're a brick, and I'll sign too, but if you'd said you wouldn't sign unless I did, no more would I." And nobody can blame him.

FOR the benefit of those who expect to send decorations, etc., to the booth of the National W. C. T. U. at the World's fair, the following notice from the New Orleans Times Democrat is inserted:

All articles must be plainly marked as follows: "E. A. Burke, Director General, World's Exposition Grounds, New Orleans, La. For exhibition in Woman's Department." MRS. JULIA WARD HOWE, Chief of Department; MRS. D. A. GIVEN, Local Superintendent; MRS. M. E. AUZE, Resident Secretary.

THE renewal of city saloon licenses for the next quarter brings out the fact that 3,316 whisky and beer shops have been authorized, at $500 each, by the city government during the past three months to carry on their deadly work, against 3,706 last year on payment of $103.00. This number, 3,706, for the year preceding High License covers the entire twelve months, while the number 3,316, covers only the quarter. It is probable that when the year is ended the four quarters will average a higher number, but at present showing, the decrease of saloons is only 390—a little over ten per cent. which we think will scarcely satisfy what Dr. Herrick Johnson calls "the high claims of high license."

THE latest cry from the liquor dealer's organ is that "Taxation without Protection is Robbery." The outcry is directed against the National government which taxes the manufacturer, the importer, the wholesale dealer and the retailer of spirits, thus getting double tax on malt and treble tax on all distilled liquors. The complaint is uttered because while so doing, the government does not protect the seller and the manufacturer who divide with it so generously against the encroachments of prohibition. The inconsistency is clearly shown with which a federal government which has received over two billions of dollars from the liquor traffic in the several states, nevertheless decides that it has no jurisdiction over the matter in those states. The traffic's demand is for an amendment to the national constitution prohibiting state governments from interfering with a business recognized, licensed and authorized by the national government.

Thus do the liquor dealers decide that prohibition is a national question.

THE prayers of the W. C. T. U. are going up to God from all over this nation today. What do they mean? — Not hearts failing them for fear—not convictions wavering, nor principles set aside—They mean this—just what we promised each other at St. Louis, "to meet all our difficulties and dangers with prayer." They mean more—renewed vows—and a consecration enlightened by the things we have suffered. They mean just what "God help me" meant to Luther when he said "Here I stand, I can do no other." They are

"That stoop of the soul which in bending upraises it too;
The submission of man's nothing-perfect to God's all-complete,
As by each new obeisance in spirit, we climb to His feet."

AS THE smoke of battle clears away we discern the new positions of the enemy and the newly adjusted tactics of politician generals as well. A gentleman from Ohio says that it is now probable that the Democratic party will submit a prohibitory amendment to the people of that state, in revenge upon the German voters who deserted the party during the presidential contest; while in New York state, it is said that at the final meeting of the Republican State Committee, it was agreed that the Republican legislature elect should be asked to propoes a prohibitory amendment to the constitution, and that the legislature of 1886, if Republican, should be asked to again submit the same, and in the fall of 1886 the Republican party should support the adoption of the amendment by the people.

This, if true, is all that prohibitionists have asked, or could ask in the matter of present action. It confirms their belief, also, that wherever the largest separate prohibition vote is cast, there they may look for the largest concessions from the dominant party.

IF any cause ever justified zeal even to the verge of madness, and enthusiasm even to almost fanaticism, it is the prohibition of that which makes men brutes. A minister once said, while pleading a case before an ecclesiastical court, while he held the bill of charges in his hands, "I almost feel like drawing a veil over my face as I read this paper." A thousand times over might this be said in reading over the long and heavy bill of indictments against the liquor abomination.

It is said that on reaching a certain place and in certain conditions of the atmosphere, the guide whispers to the Alpine tourist: "Don't talk loud; it might bring down the avalanche." We are toiling to reach a moral altitude so high, and a condition of the moral atmosphere so sensitive, that our talking will bring down the avalanche and overwhelm the citadel of intemperance forever. Meanwhile, as we are pressing toward this, we can do better than Minerva did. She found the secret place where Jove's thunderbolts lay hidden and asleep; but we can open the door to God's "secret place of the thunder," and rouse the appliances of Divine power as we plead, "O! Arm of the Lord, Awake!" The key which opens that door is PRAYER. But Prayer and Work go together. God enters into partnership with man and "We are laborers together with God."

THE National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has taken preliminary steps towards securing, in all parts of the world, a concert of prayer for the temperance cause. The noon hour of each day has been designated, ever since the crusade, as a time for individual lifting up of the heart, and now it is suggested that, in addition to this, Thursday afternoon be the time for a temperance prayer meeting, to be held weekly as may be determined in the different localities. Thus, concerted prayer, by women in all nations, for the overthrow of the poison habits of all races, is rendered possible, and we urge attention to this as the very best kind of a beginning. The temperance ladies have consulted with leading missionaries, as well as workers in that great cause, and have found help and encouragement on every hand. They have also appointed Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, who has for a year been working on the Pacific coast, under the auspices of the National W. C. T. U., to make a reconnoissance in the Sandwich Islands, Australia, and perhaps India, China, and Japan, visiting the missionaries of those countries and endeavoring to introduce the W. C. T. U. methods and to provide for a helpful interchange of sympathy and work by which the influence of the gospel temperance movement shall eventually belt the world. May this earnest, gifted Christian lady be abundantly blessed in her gospel embassy, and find a welcome in the hearts and homes of Christians everywhere.

BURNED IN EFFIGY.

PERSIS LEMON CHRISTIAN.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Nov. 7.—St. John was burned in effigy in front of the Republican office this evening in the presence of 5,000 persons. The figure was then dragged burning through the streets.

Burned at the stake! For what?
Swung from the gibbet, shattered with the ball,
Scorched in the flame of folly's carnival,
Scourged with the galling lashings of defeat,
Pierced by the flying bullets of retreat,
Stabbed to the heart! For what?

For what? What crime hath this grand warrior wrought?
What death deserving treason hath he taught?
That wrathful spirits armed with vengeful ire
Have lit with hate the sacrificial fire?

A soldier true on unforgotten fields,
His sword for liberty he bravely wields.
And when for God and home and native land
The mandate fell for patriot souls to stand,
This man, obedient to the high behest,
For duty stood, and left to God the rest.
Proclaimed the souls great birthright to be free
Proclaimed for man the largest liberty
In conquest over self.

One of a universal brotherhood,
A brother's part he bore, through ill and good.
Sought but to bless, to win to nobler strife,
And hated only sin,—the blight of life.

Yet curses ring out on the quivering air,
And mutterings, such as coward natures dare,
For what? for this he dared for God to stand;
To pray for Home, to plead for Native Land;
To ask of this great nation's royal heart,
To rise and justly do the royal part.
To cast the reeking garments of its sin,
And seek through might of right its cause to win.

Forsooth, methinks, in this sweet land of ours,
Our Goddess fair hath loitered in her bowers,
Our mailed watch hath slept within his towers,
While vandals sought to brand a spotless name,
And darkly stain an honored brow with shame.
While miscreants howled their miscrable screed,—
Pure thought, pure speech, insulted in the deed.

O mighty fallen! party of renown,
That broke the shackles of a subject race,
Go, view the paling lustre of thy crown,
And in the weeds of penance hide thy face.

A mighty thought is growing with the days,
A noble purpose, and a conquering faith.
And through the future's dim, but certain ways,
'Twill stronger prove than life, stronger than death.

Lead on, St. John, triumphant over fate.
Fight on, brave warrior, trusting in God's name.
Hates venomed shafts reach not thy high estate,
God leads His own unscathed through blood and flame.

HOW THE DRAM-SHOP HELPS BUSINESS.

PROF. GEORGE E. FOSTER, M. P.

The sale of intoxicating liquors has long since lost all claim to public support on moral and social considerations. Intelligent and good men are unanimous in declaring it a nuisance in both these respects. Today the sole ground on which it appeals for a legal existence is the financial consideration. "Business will be injured" if the sale of liquor is prohibited; and this cry, as baseless as it is foolish, is echoed by both defenders and apologists of a cruel and destructive tariff, which not only preys upon every legitimate business, but paralyzes in myriad instances those for whom and by whom business exists. If we think carefully over this whole matter we shall easily arrive at the following underlying principles:

(a) Trade or business is due to the relationship of demand and supply. People need certain things; other people set themselves to supply those needs, and thus trade springs up, and business is transacted. If people needed nothing, then there would be nothing to be supplied, and consequently no business would be done. But we need clothes, food, houses, books, tools, furniture; and immediately, in order to supply these, the whole business of clothes making, food producing, house building, etc., etc., springs into activity.

(b) For the sake of convenience trade centers in villages, towns and cities, and people go thither for what they need, and find others there ready to supply them. They exchange or buy and sell, and thus trade thrives and prospers.

(c) The business done will be exactly in proportion to the amount that people want and are able to pay for. If one wants $100 worth of clothes and can pay for them, the clothier and he will do just that amount of business. If not, then they will do less, and similarly with all other transactions.

(d) Business is "helped" when the demand for articles is increased, when the ability to pay for them is made greater, and when the production of them is made easy and cheap. Business is "injured" when the demand is lessened, the ability to pay diminished, and the cost of production increased.

In the light of the foregoing principles, the following propositions are clearly of the utmost importance:

1 The dram shop decreases the demand for legitimate articles of trade. The great staples of trade are what is eaten, worn or used to live in and work with. If the dram shop really "helps" business it must make people eat more, wear more, and use more buildings and tools. But experience proves the very reverse of this to be true. It is the work of the dram shop to teach men to tipple and drink, and the more they tipple and drink, the less as a rule, they are able to purchase in the way of food, clothes houses and implements. The demand for drink increases, and must be satisfied though the family goes without the requisite supply of bread, clothes and the usual comforts of home. As the dram shop gets hold of a man—the provider for a family—the baker and butcher the grocer and clothier, the tinsmith and bookseller, and all traders sell him less and less. The bottle is sent out for whisky where formerly the basket went for bread and meat.

Suppose a trader has a full variety store, and has fifty sober working men with families for his customers. These will spend on an average $300 each with the trader, and so he will do a business of $15,000 per year. Now let the dram shop come, and teach all those to tipple and drink. Will the fifty tippling workmen take more or as much from the trader's store as they did when sober? Nay, but they will now spend on an average $50 a year in the dram shop, and therefore have but $250 to spend with the trader, and his business shrinks from $15,000 to $12,500. The dram shop lessens the demand for the trader's wares, and increases the demand for strong drink. The dram shop is, therefore, a constant and deadly enemy to business inasmuch as always and inevitably it decreases the demand for the legitimate articles of trade.

2. The dram shop decreases the purchasing capacity of the people. It is quite plain that the purchasing capacity of a community is measured by its earning power. How then does the dram shop effect the earning power of a community?

The first result of the dram shop is to cause loss of time, and idleness. Men spend hours in tippling, when they ought to be at work. Men pass days in sprees and "drunks," when they ought to be at their trade. Men lose situations on account of drinking, and are for days and weeks without employment, and earning nothing. Suppose in a town you have two hundred workingmen, earning $1.50 per day. Their aggregate earnings are $300 per day, or $1,800 per week Now, if dram shops are set up in this town, and one-half of the workers learn to tipple and drink, and lose on an average one day per week, the earnings amount to $150 less per week, or $7,500 less per year. In Great Britain it is estimated that the labor power loses one day in every six on account of drunkenness.

Whence come the loungers and loafers, and tramps that congregate on our streets, or roam our country? They are, in nine cases out of ten, the idle graduates of the dram shop.

Whence come the hosts of "drunk and disorderlies," who not only do not earn, but who live at the expense of earners, in our jails and prisons? Why are these not at work? The dram shops have ruined them, and turned them from earners into non-earners.

Whence come the violent, abusive, thieves, vagrants and murderers? Official statistics tell us that seventy-five per cent. of them are the result of drink, and the dram shop is the mill in which drink grinds down its victims from honest, sober, orderly and industrious citizens into criminals of every grade. Close the dram shops, keep people sober and industrious, and the earning power, and with it the trade of the country, would be vastly increased.

3. The dram shop cripples the productive power of every industry. Here is a factory employing five hundred hands. The raw material comes in, the finished article goes out and supplies the wants of society. When does the factory do its best work? When the hands are industrious, steady and skilful. Whatever assists in these respects helps the factory.

A provision store is set up near by. Good, for now the men will get their food cheap, convenient, and of excellent quality, and thus be helped.

A clothier's establishment is provided. Good, for now the men get serviceable clothes with least expenditure of money and time, and so are helped.

A doctor opens an office. Good, for now the men can have advice and attendance, and thus be helped to get well and keep well.

A school house and church are built close by, and give guarantee that the moral and intellectual wants of the men will be looked after. The factory welcomes all these and does better work for their assistance.

Now the dram-shop comes, eagerly desirous, of course, to help the factory. What results? Does it supply any raw material, any new machinery for the factory; any food, clothes, or comfort for the men—any stimulus to noble ambition and honest effort?

None whatever. The dram shop does not deal in such things. It simply opens its bar, displays its drinks, beckons, morning, noon and night, to the passing workmen, and with siren voice invites them in. It grinds its music, flashes its lights, proffers its games, and allures the workman from his home of rest or his place of labor.

One after another drops in, tipples and drinks; the the habit grows, the appetite forms, disorder increases, carousal become the order; loss of time, drunken debauch and crime follow. There is a loss in the industry, steadiness and skill of the workmen; the work is confused, lags in department after department, and in a little time the factory curses the dram shop as its worst enemy. So with every productive industry. Keep the dram shop away, and it does its best work; place the dram shop by its side and its best work is impossible.

The dram shop is the enemy to every productive industry; its whole influence tends to hinder, demoralize, confuse and defeat the best possible results of factory, foundry and farm.

4. The dram shop burdens business with heavy taxes. Business is always better, other things being equal, when it ismost lightly taxed. Heavy taxes drive away business. Take your tax bill and scan its items:

Item 1. For schools—"A just, fair tax," you say, and pay it willingly. As people grow more intelligent, prosperity increases, and property is safer.

Item 2. For fire department. Just think a moment. How many fires occur from drunken carelessness. A victim fresh from the dram shop staggers into a barn or out-house and tries to light his pipe. A blaze starts, and before it is put out, thousands of dollars lost, and so much expense to the department. Mark a goodly proportion of your fire tax to the credit of the dram shop.

Item 3. For poor. Ninety out of every one hundred paupers and occasional poor are so because of the dram shop. Mark ninety per per cent of your poor tax to that institution.

Item 4. For police. What constitutes the main work of the police in our towns and cities? Looking after the dram shops and their products. Vineland, with twelve thousand people, pays only one hundred dollars per year for police. Why? Vineland has had no dram shop for the last twenty one years. Mark a large part of your tax for police to the dram shop.

Item 5. For criminal expenses. Whence come our criminals? The experience of judges, sheriffs, and grand juries, and the investigations of parliaments and legislatures, go to prove that seventy-five per cent of all punishable criminals are graduates of the dramshop. Credit a large part of your tax for criminal expenses to that institution. Now, what have you? You have the fact staring you in the face that the dram shop helps business by lay upon it at least three-quarters of all the taxes it pays. Should business submit to this great burden just that here and there a dram shop might get a lazy living?

But worse still: Every dram seller is an able bodied pauper who lives off of the earnings and business of the country. Suppose Jones puts up a bar, stands behinds it from January to December; takes in two thousand dollars, and gives out nothing but bits of brown paper. Who has kept Jones and his family? The earners and business men of this country. He has produced nothing and given nothing valuable in return for the two thousand dollars. He is an able-bodied pauper.

Suppose Smith sets up a bar; stands behind it from January to December; takes in two thousand dollars, and gives out nothing but whisky. Who has kept Smith and his family? The earners and business men of the country. He has produced nothing, and given nothing valuable in return for the two thousand dollars. He is an able bodied pauper.

What is the difference between the two? Jones was considerate enough to take his living for no return, and harmed nobody. Smith was not contented with simply taking his living but harmed everybody he could. If he had given brown paper instead of whisky, he would have been as innocent a man as Jones. Jones was a harmless pauper; Smith was a destructive pauper—that is all the difference.

Is it good for the business of this coun ry that it has to support ten thousand able bodied men and their families, and, in addition, to bear the burden of taxation and ruin they impose?

"But," say the dram sellers, "you are not fair; do you not see that we must eat, wear clothes, have homes built, and so are continually buying and helping trade? Surely our custom is something, and there are ten thousand of us in Canada!"

Wouldn't you eat and wear clothes, and live in houses if you were not dram sellers? Surely, you don't mean to say that you would then go about naked, or become "Tanners," or live in the caves. And would not your custom be just as good in all these respects then as now? Now you impoverish whole families; do you eat enough to make up to the market what these families must do without?

Now several go in rags, because you get their money. Do you wear several suits at a time so as to make up the loss to trade?

Now, men have to live in hovels, because you get their money for drink; do you live in half-a-dozen houses at once in order to make up the deficiency?

Go to! Close up your dram-shops, and yet you will eat and wear clothes ond live in houses. The only difference will be that you will be honestly earning what you eat, wear and live in. You will be tilling the land, making good shoes, raising good grain, manufacturing serviceable goods, and hurting nobody in the operation.

Better yet. You will be giving society something over and above your living, which helps it, enriches it, develops its manhood, and increases its virtues, instead of, as now, turning its sober citizens into idlers, paupers, and criminals.

ALCOHOL A NARCOTIC—NOT A STIMULANT.

ALICE M. GUERNSEY.

The science of temperance advances so rapidly in these days, that "he must run who reads." One stronghold of the enemy we are fighting, has been the stimulating power of alcohol; behind this protecting wall, weary mothers have sheltered themselves while they drank their ale or porter, ordered by the doctor, "to keep up their strength;" and every old toper or moderate drinker, who felt tired and "gone," took refuge behind this bulwark while he drank the desired "stimulant." Until quite recently, our standard authorities have taught that alcohol is a narcotic in large doses, but a stimulant if taken in smaller quantities; so thoroughly is this idea fixed, that our temperance papers and our temperance speakers utter constant notes of warning against the use of stimulants.

In the present state of general knowledge on the subject, all this is, perhaps, necessary. Indeed, to guard against any possible loop-hole of evasion, our national superintendent of scientific instruction has felt obliged to so frame the laws which she has secured that they may cover "alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics." But please notice that the laws do not say "special prominence to the evil effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics."

The "Temperance Physiology," our new intermediate book, prepared "under the direction" of this department, according to its title-page, must be our special mouth-piece on this point.

Dr. Palmer, dean of the department of medicine and surgery in the State University, at Ann Arbor, Michigan, is authority for the scientific accuracy of the book. In consultation with him, Dr. Palmer said to those having the matter in charge: "It is a mistake of definition, and you are now in a position to teach correct definitions. Take your stand firmly on the gronnd that alcohol is never a stimulant, and you will graduly correct the erroneous notion that is the source of so much mischief."

Acting upon this advice, harmonizing, as it did, with what was deemed the latest and best teaching of science in the matter, pp. 81-2 of the "Temperance Physiology," were made to read as follows: "Stimulants. The term stimulants, when used with reference to the human body, means something which adds to its strength. A true food does this. People have called alcohol a stimulant, because they were ignorant of its real nature. It gives the body no added strength; its only effect on pain and fatigue is the deadening of the nerves, so that one does not realize the disordered, exhausted condition of his body. The apparent increase of energy which alcohol gives, is due to the partial paralysis of a certain class of nerves in the body which act as its "brakes." Alcohol, therefore, is not a stimulant in the proper sense of that word."

"But," says some good sister or brother in our work, "I've seen many a man stimulated by it. Certainly it stirs men up. What is that if it is not stimulation?" A foot-note on these same pages of the "Temperance Physiology," answers the question: "Alcohol has been falsely called a stimulant, because it sometimes makes the person who takes it feel stronger, and seem more quick-witted and talkative, for a short time. But a reaction follows, just in proportion to the amount of excitement there has been, and the person is more or less weak and depressed. Whipping a horse causes him to move faster for a while; yet it gives no fresh strength to the animal, but rather uses up that which he already possessed, so that he overworks and is more tired as the result. Spurring to increased action without giving any food which the body can use to balance the extra "wear and tear," is not the action of a true stimulant, but is a misuse of the term."

In later pages, and in simple words which the child can understand, further explanation is given in regard to the effect of alcohol on the "inhibitory nerves," the "brakes" of the body. They are shown to be speedily deadened by the drug, thus removing their controlling influence; the heart then beals faster, the capillaries relax, and the general change in the body is similar to that in a clock when the pendulum is removed. The apparent stimulation is the result of narcotism—a taking off of the controlling "brakes" whose action is essential to the proper maintenance of the bodily functions.

Since the manuscript of this book was in press, Gustafson's "Foundation of Death" has come to hand. It is most gratifying to those connected with the preparation of the "Temperance Physiology," to note his abundant conformation of the advanced ground they have taken. For example, (Gustafson, p. 102) "Nerve affectants are generally divided into two groups—stimulants and narcotics. The difficulty in properly defining these groups, is similar to that I experienced in defining foods, because in neither case do there exist authoritative definitions. Confusion in terms springs from and produces confusion in thought, and as regards alcohol this confusion will continue as long as strict definitions of, for example, such terms as food, poison, stimulant, narcotic, moderate, temperate, large, excessive, use, abuse, etc., are lacking." After quoting various conflicting definitions of the terms stimulants and narcotics, he strikes the balance by saying (p. 105) "I will define stimulants to mean such food, medicine or exercise as would in itself be energizing. Narcotics, on the contrary, are poisons. of a paralyzing nature, and may be divided into two classes; plain narcotics, or those whose paralyzing effect is patent, and pseudo-stimulants, or those narcotics whose benumbing effects assume the guise of temporary stimulation, inasmuch as their action is expended primarily upon the inhibitory centres. Hence among narcotics are found alcohol, chloroform, opium, tobacco, etc.

Most of these narcotics are, in small doses, pseudo-stimulants, and in large doses, plain narcotics. Alcohol is pre-eminently of this double character; a pseudo-stimulant when taken in small doses, and a plain narcotic when heavily imbibed. With the small—the pseudo-stimulant—dose of alcohol, there is temporarily all the appearance of heightened activity, but the life-forces expend themselves to no purpose—or to a purpose which should not have existed, the necessity to dispose of the intruder.

"The paralysing effect of alcohol on the nerves may be compared to the effect produced on the machinery of a clock, by a gradual reduction of the weight of its pendulum; the machinery runs faster and faster, but this activity is valueless, the real principle, the time-keeping faculty, is paralysed. Thus the animated appearance, the throbbing of the arteries, the peculiar sparkle in the eye, the flush of the face, and the activity manifested by the drinker are signs of danger.* The extra activity is caused by the systematic effort to avert harm, and originates in the incipient paralysis of the nerves, caused by alcohol."

Is it not true that many of us are not thoroughly posted on this point? And is it not time for us to weigh our words more carefully, to distinguish between true and false stimulants, and to carefully guard such statements as, "under no circumstances, should stimulants be used?" The latter, taken literally, would cut off all food, the one great stimulant of the body. Since one of our missions is to educate into right thought, shall we not teach the people this distinction?

Not least significant among the signs of the times, is the fact that authors and publishers have found "temperance physiology" "fashionable," and are now rushing new books in this line upon the market. The N. W. C. T. U. has laid upon the Nat'l. Supt. of the department of Scientific Instruction, the responsibility of endorsing such as are in accordance with our views. Some of our numbor have wondered why so few of the many books bear Mrs. Hunt's official recommendation. To such let me say that it is at no small personal cast of criticism (or worse) that Mrs. Hunt has taken the stand explained herein. Believing it to be the only true statement, and believing that you expect her to stand for the truth, always, she has refused endorsement to books that were otherwise most excellent, simply because of their teachings upon this point. Some of them have changed their statements in consequence; others, we trust, will find it for their interest, so to do. Meanwhile, dear friends, "think on these things."

RETROSPECT.

MRS. L. J. CLARK.

[From the Evanston Citizen, we take the following article by one of the gifted women of the W. C. T. U. of that place.—ED. SIGNAL.]

It is not to be expected that this nation's long complicity with the crime of the liquor traffic is to pass unpunished. The war which wasted blood and treasure, and withered unnumbered hearts a generation ago, still haunts our memories and reminds us that it was God's stern and wholesome rebuke of sin against the rights of brotherhood. Shall we lightly escape if we have connived at the destruction of the entire being in every realm of man's best estate—fatherhood, brotherhood, manhood, with all the woes such destruction entails in this life, and then shuts the gates of heaven forever to his soul? Nay, verily; let us not flatter ourselves that in this great re-adjustment there shall be no loss, no suffering even among the innocent, for the innocent must suffer with the guilty here. So let us not pale or shrink from what may lie before us. Gideon's band was tested at the water's side, after a previous proclamation that all who were fearful or afraid should retire from the ranks, and the brave three hundred who ate and drank with trumpet in hand, were counted by the Lord as sufficient for his work.

* The angry man shows the same signs, the flaming eye, turgid vein, etc., that in the case of alcohol-drinking are claimed as signs of benefit.

Both the W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition party have borne the sifting process lately; or, rather an assorting process, for we know equally brave and true soldiers on either side; but we better know the reliable adaptation of our forces. Should a period of great distress and depression in business follow the defeat of the Republican party, as we are so threateningly assured will be the case, may we not rather ascribe it to a just retribution for the active spirit of avarice which has made the protection of the liquor traffic possible in this enlightened age? May we not believe it to be the voice of Providence calling a halt to the headlong pursuit after sin and folly, of which as a people we are guilty, and from which the success of the Republican party could not long preserve us?

At the first convention of the W. C. T. U., ten years ago in Cleveland, Ohio, a noble sentiment was adopted which is still their worthy motto: "We will endeavor to meet argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, denunciation with kindness, and all our difficulties and dangers with prayer." They have most consistently adhered to this plan of work. They have a past, measured by one decade, the halo of which already begins to glow in the eyes of those who denounce their present attitude; but had they faltered or halted by the swelling Jordan they have lately passed, their inconsistency would have been a monument to their shame, of which Lot's wife and the pillar of salt would have been the only fitting symbol and and synonym. Had they failed at St. Louis to stand by the brave men who so heroically stand for the defence of the principle both are seeking to establish, the home constituency and coming generations would have scorned them for their feeble cowardice. "Let not him who girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." Knowing the weakness of their strength, the W. C. T. U., while having no sentiment of fear, shall make their "boast in the Lord," for of Him they expect great and glorious things. He is a jealous God and will not tolerate in the heart of His people any idol or golden calf, even though it be burnished and decorated as royally as the Republican party with its past glorious record, and is not shut up to any one means of working His will. If every candid man, unblinded by prejudice, would read the report of the late convention of the N. W. C. T. U. at St. Louis, he would get a revelation of the grandeur to which American womanhood has attained that would fill his soul with unspeakable thanksgiving, that God has so signally glorified and honored this weaker vessel and set it apart to such noble service. Their consistent fidelity will tell on the unbiased judgment of candid people, and on the young men who have not yet bowed the knee to Baal, and who will come into their majority before the next campaign.

The Red sea may be just before us; if so, the song of Miriam is also near. Then let us

> "So forecast the years
> To find in loss a gain to match;
> And reach a hand through time, to catch
> The far off interest of tears."

If shadows o'er thee fall,
Faith still can see
The Father's smile through all—
Sunshine to thee.

Then always look above,
Whate'er betide,
And choose with heart of love
Life's sunny side.

A LOOK BACKWARD AT THE NEW HAMPSHIRE CONVENTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The rain beats drearily against the window, and the chill November day gives a brighter glow to the cheery blaze of my open fire. Looking into its heart of flame, I am reminded of something I set my heart, if not my hand, to do, away back in the bland October days—telling you of the brave women of New Hampshire as I saw them in state convention.

In the very last and the very loveliest of September days this was held at Milford, one of the ideal towns of which there are many among the granite hills.

Such a panorama as nature out-rolled above and around us the evening of the last day, might well be the despair of an artist though his pencil be never so skilled. A heavy shower fell just as the children gathered for the afternoon meeting, but at sunset the dun-colored clouds were turned into tapestries of crimson and gold, purple and amber fringed, and broidered with tints unspeakable. The water, which adds much to the beauty of the scenery around the church where the meetings were held, caught the reflection, and we seemed set between upper and nether splendors of color. Higher and higher the clouds flung up their billowy masses, while the lower edges grew fairer and fainter, and ineffably tender as the soft dusk wrapped us about with its mystery of silence.

But no idyls of nature, however charming, could lure these intense New Hampshire women long from the serious work they had in hand. This convention was one of the happiest and most practical I have ever attended. There was a quality not unlike the granite of their own steadfast hills, softened by a tender grace of kindliness in all their doing.

Mrs. Knox, the president, is a type of the true New England woman, and no larger praise can be given. By her graceful presiding and strict, though almost imperceptible, adherence to parliamentary rules, the convention work seemed to regulate itself. "That government is best which governs least." When rightly interpreted, this saying applies as truly to conventions as to families. What national superintendent does not know Miss Wendell, whose busy brain and pen send electric messages from one end of the state to the other and keep the machinery in constant motion? With more pleasure than I can tell I looked into the serene, strong face of Mrs. Armenia White, of Concord, who so long led the women of the state when the work was new and difficult, and gave most royally of her talent and strength and money. Miss McIntire, of Exeter, full of zeal and love for the cause, I shall always remember gratefully for the intelligent and hearty interest she ever gave when president of the state to my department of work, when its aim was only a possibility, not as now a blessed reality.

Be sure I have put all such in my calendar of saints. And I must not fail to speak of one who could not be at the convention because kept away by school duties, Miss Anna Bussell, of Nashua, superintendent of Sunday school work for the state, most faithful and efficient, taking the time from rest or recreation between her arduous school duties to inspire and supervise this temperance work for the Sunday school children throughout the state. Nowhere, I apprehend, in all our manifold realm of service, do we find more heroic self denial than among the busy, over-burdened teachers who so right royally are helping us wage this warfare against intemperance. He who sits over against the treasury, notes what we each cast in, but to those who are seen only with human vision there waits many a surprise which the judgment day will reveal as regards the rank and file of our temperance army.

Mrs. Senator Blair cheered the convention with her kindly and gracious presence, though she could not be induced to make a speech, or even be presented to the audience. For her own sake and that of her noble husband, she is always heartily welcomed and beloved by our Woman's Christian Temperance Union, not only in New Hampshire, but throughout all the land.

One of the most attractive features of the convention was the children's meeting, arranged for and prepared beforehand, and a part of the regular program.

Mrs. A. T. Lewis, state superintendent of juvenile work, proves her fitness for that position by the success of her Juvenile Temperance Union in her own town. They came out some two hundred strong, marching to the music of drums carried by four little boys in bright uniforms, and on their silken banner, festooned with lovely bouquets, was the children's watchword, "Tremble King Alcohol, we shall grow up," and on the reverse side, "No tobacco for us." "We will not profane God's name." The spacious church was filled and the admirably-trained children delighted the large audience with their temperance songs, recitations, etc. I wish this might be a part of every W. C. T. U. convention planned for beforehand and a part of the regular program. Not every town has a Mrs. Lewis or a Juvenile Union of two hundred, but such a meeting might be the suggestion of one. This children's society in Milford brought Mrs. Lewis three hundred bouquets for distribution in the county poor house on prison day. What lovely significance has such a fact!

From Milford I went to Plymouth, N. H., my childdood's home. Though I went to visit a sister and was there but one afternoon, Mrs. Rounds, the wife of the principal of the Normal school, arranged a meeting of the teachers and pupils of this school at four o'clock, and at the close we organized a Cold Water Army of one hundred or more. The children of the town are the pupils of the Normal and almost every one joined the society. Mrs. Rounds' lovely daughter was chosen president and several of the Normal teachers vice presidents. Both Prof. and Mrs. Rounds are deeply interested in the temperance question and are a power for good at this important point.

As I looked from an upper window of this Normal school, "beautiful for situation," upon the familiar and lovely scenery, heightened by the soft splendor of that autumn day, the Haystacks (now named Lincoln and Garfield), looming up in the distance, at the gateway of the Franconia Notch, a tent-like mass of blue, the tender sky over which floated masses of clouds of fairest amber and pearl, I recalled the days, long ago, when a dreaming girl, on just such September afternoons from the piazza of the old academy standing on this same spot, I used to look beyond the hills to the great world, not longingly, for I always shrunk from the thought of losing the home love and shelter, but wondering if, when I should go out into its great unknown it would hold for me any real, good, earnest work.

I thought too, as I remembered my own girlhood, of the many young women gathered in schools like this, that were sending out the same eager, wondering question and I wished I might say to each one of them that "the half has never been told," or dreamed, of what life holds of blessing and joy for the soul that makes not its own, but God's will, the inspiration of living. Not rarest song of summer bird or autumn's oriflamme of color, or fairest shimmer of airiest cloud, or aught that the broad universe contains, can compare in beauty with the life that is one in worship and in work, however humble or obscure, with Him whose glory all nature proclaims, but whose dwelling is with the heart contrite and humble.

TEMPERANCE IN A HINDOO GIRLS' SCHOOL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On the 18th we celebrated the thirteenth anniversary of the opening of the school. We always observe the day in some way, and this year, besides a holiday and a thanksgiving and consecration service, we gave in the evening a "temperance entertainment." The "Blue Ribbon" has reached India, and in connection with the new interest it has awakened we are holding monthly temperance meetings and trying to bring the subject to the attention of all classes. This month the school girls did everything but preside, which duty Dr. Waugh kindly performed for us, and also the putting on the ribbon and taking the names of those who came up to sign the pledge. This would not be quite a modest thing for a Hindustani girl to do in a public meeting, and Miss Blackmar, who has begun this part of the work, took charge of it. All the hymns and recitations were about some feature of temperance work. The girls wore "Blue Ribbons," and a banner over the platform had the motto in blue and white, "Dare to do Right." I wished Mrs. Thompson and Mother Stewart, Mrs. Clason and Mrs. Ingram, and all the other temperance workers I met at home could see how the girls they are helping educate out here are joining with them in this world-wide reform. There is no place where the need is greater. One little English girl, whose recitation was perhaps the best of the evening, is the daughter of a pensioned soldier whom I have often seen lying by the roadside, while Hindoos passing by looked at the degraded Sahib in pity and scorn. A lady is educating her and her sister younger than herself. The little thing said to me the next day after the meeting: "Don't you think I can get father to put this ribbon on when I go home?" Other girls, native Christians, tell me that the evil is creeping into their homes and destroying not only fathers and brothers, but mothers and sisters. Even Hindoos, who have been teetotalers for ages, and Mohammadens, who are taught in the Koran to abhor wine and swine's flesh alike, are becoming rapidly imitators of their English rulers in drinking habits, but with their weaker bodies they oftener suffer with excess. Our school girls have always been taught their duty on this subject, and in the different communities where they live their influence has been against the evil. I wrote to some of them this year, and asked them to tell me something of their temperance experience, to be read at our anniversary. I send you one of the letters I got in reply. There were others of the same tone, but not being in English I cannot send them.

INDIA, SHAJEHANPORE.

My Dear Friends:—I am glad to tell you that I was brought up from the same institution in which you are learning, and the same Miss Thoburn who is your teacher was mine. She desires me to write a few lines to you concerning the evil of drinking, and to let you know if I have been keeping the promise to abstain from wine which I made some years ago when I was in the school. I am glad to let you know that I am keeping the pledge up to this time, God helping me. My husband is a teetotaler too, and this is one reason that we are so happy. Others think they are happy over their wine, but in reality they bring upon themselves a world of sorrow. They lose their health and reputation, bring their families to shame and poverty, and fall victims to disease at a premature age. I thank God that all our Christian brothers living here do not drink, and consequently are saved from all these evils which wine brings with it. I am ever thankful to God for His goodness in bringing me under the charge of God-loving and God-fearing parents and teachers, who instructed me from my childhood, setting such good examples before me that they are still fresh in my memory, and I am being saved from many sins because of their teachings.

I have a little boy two years old. I pray to God to help me bring him up in the same good way. I have seen many Christian children following the bad example of their parents as they grew up, for what good effect can be expected from men's good teachings if they be imparted without good examples. Other children, however, whose parents and teachers are pious, learn bad habits from their bad companions, so you see it is necessary that our society should be reformed. There should be none among us to set an evil example, for Christ said, "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones it were better for him that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea."

Hence it is incumbent upon us to abstain from every bad habit, and drinking being a bad habit, we should all of us sign the pledge at once, for our own good, as well as for the good of others. God grant that this evi may be entirely banished from our Christian community. Your sister in Christ, POLLY MUHERJE.

I had to copy this letter because the original was worn while passing from hand to hand among the girls, but the English is just as it was written.

She is a daughter of Joel T. Janvier, the first native preacher of our India church. He was interpreter and helper to Dr. Butler when he first went to India in 1857.

OUR NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Is woman's ballot to be the "power that makes for righteousness" which is claimed for it? The ardor of some who have hoped so, has been considerably chilled by the action recently taken by leading suffragists in Boston concerning candidates for the school committee. To the women of Massachusetts has been conceded the right of voting for members of local school boards, and this year a larger number have qualified themselves for this duty than ever before. We have in our restrictive liquor legislation, a law, presumably passed in the interests of the moral safety of our children, forbidding the granting of a license to any saloon within four hundred feet of a school house. Last April the children from a school building on Washington street, were removed on April 30, in order that eleven liquor dealers in the vicinity might take out licenses on May 1. This was the second offense of the kind, and had encouraged evasions of the law elsewhere, such as changing the door of a school building on a corner from one street to another, as the statute only specifies that the saloons must not be on the same street.

This fall, the time of service of three of the committee who had consented to this removal of the children expired, and a large number of representative citizens, members of the Law and Order League, with a majority of the temperance registered women, determined to rebuke this betrayal of public trust by refusing to place the names of these three men on the school ticket for re-election. At a convention called by the registered women on last Saturday, the nominating committee brought in a majority report to this effect: but to our chagrin a minority report was presented strongly advocating the claims of one of the guilty parties; and speeches were made by different suffragists, urging the rights of property involved in the business; referred to the necessity of a broad charity, that it was well in wrath to remember mercy; and pleas of a similar nature which showed where their sympathies were, though they were particular to state that they did not approve the action of their candidate. However, the temperance advocates were equal to the emergency, and the large majority who refused to endorse by their vote men who cared more for the interests of the liquor dealers than of the children, showed that the mother heart could be trusted to decide rightly. Nevertheless, the fact that so large a number of leading suffragists should ignore this moral issue, has injured their cause among Christian women more than any attack from enemies outside the camp.

The state convention of Congregational Sunday schools met in Park street church in this city during the past week. Miss E. S. Tobey, state president W. C. T. U., presented the claims of temperance teaching in the Sunday schools, and a vote was passed recommending the introduction of quarterly lessons on this subject in the International series.

At the same time a convention of all the Sunday schools in New Hampshire was held in Nashua, and the evening was given up to Mrs. Knox, state president of New Hampshire, and Mrs. Gordon, of Boston, who advocated the same important action.

By the way, what moral or religious interest is promoted by the lecture, "That Boy's Sister," which a leading Sunday school worker is delivering at all the Sunday school conventions to which he is invited? His sneers at the W. C. T. U. and their work awaken the just indignation of every true-hearted woman. B. M.

A CLERGYMAN'S LETTER

TO HIS DAUGHTER CONCERNING THE PRESENT DISTRESS.

I see by your letter that like many others you are trembling a little for the Ark of God; but He is mighty and can take care both of the Ark and of His people who are faithful. Such providences as this are allowed to try our faith and patience, and to give to God an opportunity to glorify Himself by some special interposition which will show that it is His wisdom and power that secure the final triumph of the right.

The Republicans curse us, declaring that we are the cause of Cleveland's election. We deny this. We did all we could in accordance with our sense of right and duty, to secure the election of another man. There is no causal connection between our voting and Mr. Cleveland's election. If every voter or a majority of voters had done as we did, Mr. St. John would have been elected. So by what Dr. Wayland calls the law of general consequences, we prove that we did right. If others refused to join us in the right, so much the worse for them, not for us. And because they refused to join us in doing right that is no reason why all should join them in doing wrong. Suppose a robber tells me that if I do not help him rob my neighbor he will kill him; instead of complying with his iniquitous demand I try to have him arrested, but I fail and he kills my neighbor, and takes his money —am I guilty of his blood? Absurd and wicked such a conclusion would be! The Republicans attempted to put us into a position where we must do evil that good might come. To this we would not consent, because God forbids this, Rom. 3: 8, and because, from the nature of the case, no real good can ever come from doing evil, evil in the sense of sin. They say we have only made the temperance cause worse off, etc. Our answer is, God will see to that. Duty is ours, and results are God's.

When Moses said to Pharaoh, "Let Israel go," the haughty king only multiplied their oppressions, and the poor, ignorant Israelites went to Moses and charged upon him the blame of their aggravated sufferings. They could not distinguish between cause and occasion, and they were not willing to suffer the trouble and losses consequent upon their struggle for freedom. But God commanded Moses to press right on with his work, and stood by him and gave him victory at last. So now if the evils of intemperance should be exaggerated under Democratic rule, we are not to blame for such results, and we need not fear but that God will give us victory. Read the 8th chapter of Revelation and you will see that the prayers of God's saints were laid upon the altar and then fire from that altar was cast upon the earth and reacted in earthquakes, and thunders, and lightnings, and great convulsions. So now these convulsions in this nation, and other nations, are only God's answers to the prayers that the W. C. T. U. have been offering these years for the removal of this awful evil and curse. So I say, look up and rejoice, for God is answering your prayers by terrible things in righteousness, and rest yourselves upon Christ's blessed promise (Matt. v., 10-12), and also upon that other precious promise (2 Tim. ii., 12): "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." I hope none of my friends will be so weak and unbelieving as to think for a moment of accepting any compromise measures. Where morals and religion, the right, are concerned, all compromises are wrong. No such question, it has been well said, is ever settled till it is settled right. God will not let it alone if man would. God is king over the nations, and He will have His way, the right way, all men and all nations to the contrary notwithstanding. The history of God's dealings with a nation in regard to slavery confirms and illustrates this statement. Our wisest statesmen (so called), made compromises and cried peace, but there was no peace. The prayers of the poor slave had been lifted to the God of Sabbaoth, the Lord of Hosts, and the coals from the altar were cast upon the earth and there were convulsions, and the thunder of cannon, and the lightnings of the gleaming sword and the voices of contending armies, desolating our fair land, and carrying to premature graves our citizens, until the government set the slave free. So God held the nation to the right. Let us beware of compromises. Let us do right and trust in God, and as sure as God is God, almighty and merciful, our cause will triumph. Affectionately yours, D. READ,

THEIR SOUTHERN JOURNEY AGAIN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The half was not told in my account of our southern trip, in last week's paper. I want to say in addition that at Natchez, as well as Vicksburg, the Jewish Rabbi was present and that he was most cordial in his manner and expression. After our meeting closed he came to me and taking my hand, said: "I want to tell you that you have my sympathy, but there is one thing you ought to try to get the Christian clergy to do and that is to banish alcoholic wine from their communion tables." But, said I, "Did not the Jews use fermented wine at the passover feast?" "Never," he replied, "and I never use it in any of the observances of my church." I found that this Rabbi had known Mrs. Chapin in Georgia and that they had worked together there.

I am sure the new Y. W. C. T. U. of Baton Rouge will prosper. I met Miss Barlow, its president, and was pleased to find that she was from Connecticut, having been a teacher in the school for so many years conducted by the Misses Bangs in the city of New Haven. The Connecticut W. C. T. U. ought to take a special interest in this Y. W. C. T. U., as will I. Yours sincerely,

"TURN TO THE RIGHT AND KEEP MOVING."

MRS. HELEN G. RICE.

On the Brooklyn Bridge, as a crowd surged by,
That wonderful structure proving,
This placard greeted each traveller's eye,—
"Turn to the right, and keep moving."

'Tis a motto for you, dear boys and girls,
Whose value is worth the proving;
Through this busy world, as you pass along,
"Turn to the right, and keep moving."

You will come to many a turn in life,
Where two ways wait your approving;
But avoid the left, though it looks most fair;
"Turn to the right, and keep moving."

On the left hand road snares wait for your feet,
Its promises fair disproving,
And the end thereof is despair and death;
"Turn to the right, and keep moving."

The wine cup is there, with its deadly spell,
Profanity, truth outrunning,
And the noxious weed, with its poison breath,
And all that you should be shunning.

With your hands extended for others' needs,
With your lips all sin reproving,
With your eyes fixed ever upon the goal,
"Turn to the right, and keep moving."

Boston, Mass.

A GIRL IN BLUE.

This was just the way Helen looked when her cousin Carrie peeped in at her from the crack in the door that led to the dining room. And this was much the way Carrie talked to herself about it:

"There she sits in her elegant new morning dress, nothing in the world to do out to amuse herself, and I must stain my hands paring potatoes and onions and I don't know what for dinner. A dress with a train, and she only sixteen! only two years and a few months older than I am! How would I look in a train? I never expect to have such an elegant dress as she has on this minute, and it is only her morning dress. Tonight she will wear the lovely garnet silk trimmed with white lace. Think of me in my old blue flannel! It is all I have to wear. I don't see why there should be such a difference between cousins! I wish Helen had stayed in New York. Why she wanted to come to the country in the winter is more than I can understand. She isn't homesick a bit. I just believe I'll stay at home to night. Almost all the girls will wear new dresses, and my old one will look older than ever beside Helen's grand one."

"Carrie," called that young lady's mother, and Carrie went to the kitchen.

There she gave her hands to the potatoes, and her thoughts to the discouragement around her. At last she spoke of them aloud:

"Mother, I don't believe I'll go tonight after all."

"Not go to Kate's party! Why, what has happened? Is the child sick?"

"No'm, I'm not sick; only discouraged. I don't want to go and wear that old blue dress, and that's the truth. I shall look different from any of the others, and seeing me with Helen will make everybody notice it more."

"My child, Helen's father is worth a million, and your father isn't worth a thousand dollars besides what it takes to support his family."

"I know it ma'am; I'm not finding fault, only I don't want to go and be looked at, that's all."

The mother looked very sober, and something beside the steam that puffed out of the pudding dish made her eyes moist. Carrie split a large potato savagely in two, and looked gloomy. Then the mother said, speaking low:

"Won't you disappoint a good many people tonight, daughter? Isn't Kate depending on you to help with the charades and the music?"

"I can't help it mother. People must not depend upon me. Most every girl has a new dress for tonight, and I can't be going there just to help other people have a good time when I know I shall be feeling mortified all the evening."

"Can't you? Why, daughter, even Christ pleased not Himself."

After that, not another word was said in that kitchen for nearly an hour. Carrie finished the potatoes and ran away. Where she went, or what she did, mother did not know; but when she came to set the table her face was pleasant to look at, and she stopped on her way to the pantry to kiss her mother.

"I'm going, mother, and I'll have as nice a time as I can, and not grumble a bit."

She looked very pretty in her blue dress, with its deep lace collar and bright ribbons in her hair. At least her mother thought so, though when Helen came down in all the glory of her garnet silk and gold bracelets, there was certainly a difference.

It wasn't a young people's party entirely; in fact it was a sort of family gathering, to which all the city aunts and uncles and cousins had come; and there were some elegant dresses there, and Carrie, in her old blue one, did really feel a good deal alone. Yet she went cheerfully through the evening, helping with the charades and the music—helping in a dozen quiet little ways that nobody knew about, and yet trying to keep out of notice as much as possible.

Cousin Helen played and sang, and did both very nicely, while Carrie only played accompaniments for others to sing.

Later in the evening there was a whispering between two of the city cousins and presently it became known that Mr. Ames, who was Uncle Howard's college friend, was a wonderful singer and would entertain the company if anybody could be found who would play for him.

"I wish he would sing 'The Storm King,' for us," said Aunt Alice; "it is the most wonderful thing! I would like to hear it. Helen couldn't you play it for him?"

"I! No, indeed; his music is all awful hard, and he is awfully particular; and that piece I don't know, any way."

But Aunt Alice was determined that her mother should hear "The Stom King." She talked with Mr. Ames, and then she moved among the guests trying to find one who was willing to play the accompaniment. Not a cousin could be found. They were all afraid of the great singer and the difficult looking music. At last the girl in blue got ashamed of herrelf.

"Aunt Alice, I will play it," she said, coming out from the corner.

"You!" said Aunt Alice in surprise, for Carrie was one of the youngest of the cousins. "Do you know it?"

"No, ma'am, I don't know it; but I can play from the notes."

Then did Helen look at her young cousin in respectful astonishment.

"Can you play pieces that you do not know?" she asked her.

"Why yes," said Carrie, laughing. "I can if they are not very hard. I ought to. I have taken lessons steadily for three years."

"Well, but I have taken lessons for almost five years, and I can't do it."

"Carrie is very faithful with her practising," said Carrie's mother, with a pleasant smile.

And Carrie played the accompaniment, which really was difficult, and played it so well that Mr. Ames, the great singer, told her he had never had a player who pleased him better.

And don't you think she forgot all about her blue dress, until her attention was called to it in a very strange way.

"She not only plays remarkably well," said Mr. Ames to his wife, "but she is the best dressed young girl in the room."

"Yes," said Mrs. Ames, "I noticed that; all the rest of the young people are over dressed. She must have a sensible mother."

They did not know that Carrie stood just behind them and heard it all. But really I think it did her good; just as honest compliments often do good. It made her realize that there were two sides to the question of fine dresses.—The Pansy.

HOW MABEL BROKE HER PLEDGE.

META E. B. THORNE.

Little Mabel dearly loved her Band of Hope, and would no sooner have broken her pledge than her right arm, and yet she did! I will tell you how.

She went to play with Jennie one day, and they had the most delightful time in the great garden, under the trees, in the arbors, and at last, wearied, ran in door to rest.

On the lounge lay Jennie's mamma, who was an invalid, and besides her on a little table stood a glass half full of some dark colored liquid.

"O, mamma," cried Jennie, "I want some! May I have this?"

"Why, yes, if you like;" and before the words were said, Jennie had swallowed the contents of the glass.

"Why, Jennie, how greedy!" exclaimed her mamma, "you never offered Mabel a drop. Come here, Mabel, here is some for you," and she poured out a small glassful from a beautiful flagon.

"What is it?" asked Mabel, shyly, "Is it good, Jennie?"

"O, it's splendid! I just wish mamma would give me twice as much!"

So Mabel raised the glass and sipped a portion of its contents,———but being unused to it did not relish its peculiar taste, and set it down asking again:

"What is it, Jennie?"

"Why, don't you know? It's wine, the doctor orders mamma to take it. I wish he'd tell me to take it, too."

Poor Mabel! Her pleasure was spoiled, and she quickly ended her visit and set out for home, eager to pour out her troubles in her loving mother's arms. When she had told her story, her mother said:

"Well, my dear, it was indeed very sad that my little girl should have so carelessly broken her pledge, and I see no other way but for her to go and confess it, and repeat the pledge anew," (for this was the rule in such cases).

So on the day of the next meeting Mabel went early, and going up close to the side of the leader, whose especial favorite she was, she whispered, while deep blushes covered her face, and hot tears blinded her eyes, "O, Mr. H—., I'm so sorry, I've done such an awful thing! I've broken my pledge. Please let me say it over, and I'll be so careful, I'll never break it again."

So she repeated it with the most serious earnestness, and the whole occurrence made such a deep impression, that she never forgot it, and as for carelessness in the matter, why she shuddered at the mere thought.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—I witnessed such a beautiful incident on the cars a few evenings ago, that I want to tell you about it. A bright little girl sat just across the aisle from me, and a gentleman was talking with her, and delighted with her pretty ways and happy speeches. Her mother was several seats behind her with a little brother and a baby in her arms; for the car was crowded. After much playful talk the gentleman asked the child if she would not go home with him and be his little daughter, as he had none, and was very lonely. At this, she became grave, and refused. He pressed the matter, and finally urged that her mother had other children, and could do without her. The brave little darling stood right up on her feet and said: "No! my mamma wants me, don't you mamma?" she cried, in the clearest of tones, looking back at the sweet face of her mother with undaunted faith. A thrill ran through that crowded car and I felt as if I had learned a new lesson in trust. Dear boys and girls, every one of you remember, God wants you to live and to work for Him. No matter how many children He has, you are just as precious as if there were only you. And when you work seems very small, and as if no one would ever know that you tried to do something for the Heavenly Father, just remember and say to yourself: "He wants me," and go on bravely. Every time you go to the Band of Hope meeting and are in your place, that is something. Don't you see, if God should call your name, you could answer "Here!" right from the post of duty? And if you do the least thing for temperance (and the best way is to live it every day in your home and everywhere), the Father will see it, and love you for your obedience; for He tells us that if we love Him, we will "Keep His commandments." keep trying.

Captain Deborah.

THE SECRET OF DEATH.

EDWIN ARNOLD.

"She is dead!" they said to him; "Come away.
Kiss her and leave her—thy love is clay!"

They smoothed her tresses of dark brown hair;
On her forehead of stone they laid it fair;

Over her eyes that gazed too much
They drew the lids with a gentle touch;

With a tender touch they closed up well
The sweet thin lips that had secrets to tell;

About her brows and her beautiful face
They tied her veil and her marriage lace;

And drew on her white feet her white silk shoes;
Which were the whitest, no eye could choose.

And over her bosom they crossed her hands—
"Come away!" they said—"God understands."

And there was silence, and nothing there
But silence, and scents of eglantere,

And jasmine, and roses, and rosemary;
And they said: "As a lady should lie, lies she."

And they held their breath as they left the room,
With a shudder, to glance at its stillness and gloom.

But he who loved her too well to dread
The sweet, the stately, the beautiful dead,

He lit his lamp and took the key
And turned it—alone again—he and she.

He and she; but she would not speak,
Tho' he kissed, in the old place, the quiet cheek.

He and she; yet she would not smile,
Tho' he called her the name she loved erewhile.

He and she; still she did not move
To any one passionate whisper of love.

Then he said: "Cold lips and breasts without breath,
Is there no voice, no language of death

"Dumb to the ear and still to the sense,
But to heart and to soul distinct, intense?

"See now I will listen with soul, not ear;
What was the secret of dying, dear?

"Was it the infinite wonder of all
That you ever could let life's flower fall?

"Or was it a greater marvel to feel
The perfect calm o'er the agony steal?

"Was the miracle greater to find how deep
Beyond all dreams sank downward that sleep?

"Did life roll back its records, dear,
And show, as they say it does, past things clear?

"And was it the innermost heart of bliss
To find out so, what wisdom love is?
"O perfect dead! O dead most dear,
I hold the breath of my soul to hear!

"I listen as deep as to horrible hell,
As high as to heaven, and you do not tell.

"There must be pleasure in dying, sweet,
To make you so placid from head to feet!

"I would tell you, darling, if I were dead,
And 'twere your hot tears upon my brow shed—

"I would say, though the Angel of Death had laid His sword on my lips to keep it unsaid.

"You should not ask vainly, with streaming eyes,
Which of all deaths was the chiefest surprise,

"The very strangest and suddenest thing
Of all the surprise that dying must bring."

Ah, foolish world; oh, most kind dead;
Though he told me, who will believe it was said?

Who will believe that he heard her say,
With the sweet, soft voice, in the dear old way:

"The utmost wonder is this—I hear
And see you, and love you, and kiss you, dear;

"And am your angel, who was your bride,
And know that, though dead, I have never died.

ONE AFTERNOON.

T. C. R.

On Wednesday afternoon good Sister B. came over in her neighborly way. After the errands were told I said: "You and Mr. B. were at the Prohibition meeting Monday night?"

"Oh yes, and I did have to use any amount of tact to get him there."

"Well," I said, "I did not want to miss one word of the address, but I would find myself looking that way, hoping for some sign of conviction."

She quickly replied: "He was converted, and the next morning voted the Prohibition ticket."

A little later in the afternoon, Mrs. R. came in on a little matter of business, after adjusting which, she asked if I had been to the meeting Monday night? adding, "My husband has been very much interested in the Prohibition meetings, but you see he has never taken out his papers? never seemed to care much about voting; I could see he was very much exercised about something and Tuesday morning, while washing, he said: "Dolly, I just wish I had my papers; I would vote the Prohibition ticket." "Why," I said, "have you never felt like voting before?" "Maybe," he answered. "My wife has not been as loyal as she might have been," but as the mother of ten children I thought differently. However, there we both stand now, for the sake of the boys God has given us!"

It was my fortune to spend most of my life where one of the decisive battles of the war was fought, and near my home on the sloping hillsides, all of the soldier's engaged in the second day's fight bivouacked in the early morning. I heard the reveille sound, and going to the window could see in the grey dawn, the bugles going up and down—along the line. Instantly every one was up, ready for the tap of the drum and the roll call, which to many was the last, followed. Soon the flags unfurled and everyone fell into line, faces up, steps steady, marching, not to victory, but to deadly conflict, with a common foe; as I looked, I thought, so it will be sometime with the women of America; they will all need to march to meet a common foe, and I love to think of the great army of them, quietly taking their places, heads erect, steps steady, singing:

"Marching, as to war
With the cross of Jesus,
Going on before."

WHAT THE GIRLS SAY.

MISS CARRIE SCOFIELD.

The question that puzzles me most in this work is how to gain the interest of our society girls, the girls who in, many respects seem to have the most influence, the girls of education, polish and refinement—not but what we have a great many just such girls, but as a rule—understand, now, I am speaking of them as a class—they are the ones who hold themselves aloof. It seems to me this is the way it is in Wheeling, the young ladies who have the most influence seeming to have the least interest, but with a little careful and delicate management I am sure we will soon have a union started there. The time is coming, and it is not very far off, either, when we shall be mighty proud to be numbered among the temperance girls of the nineteenth century. But do we as yet begin to realize what a power is ours? Has the startling truth yet dawned upon us that we make a society just what it is? Have we yet thought what a mighty revolution there would be if we American girls would stand as one grand army and demand of the young men with whom we associate the same sweetness and purity of life that they demand of us? Oh, that the full meaning of those old, beautiful words of Charles Kingsley could be indelibly written upon the heart of every living girl: "Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever; do noble things not dream them all day long, and so make life, death and that vast forever, one grand, sweet song." Girls, can there be anything grander than a true woman? Is not this the birthright of each and every one of us? Do we begin to realize this? Do we even think of living up to our high privilege? Are the most important things in life to us the elegance with which we dress, the ease and grace with which we dance, the sprightliness and volubility with which we pour forth small talk, the quickness and deftness with which we play at cards, the number of beaux we have? Or are they the fullness of love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance? Girls, whoever we are, wherever we are, whatever we are, God demands us to be true.

TALKING about campaign scares, many a good woman when Jefferson was a candidate for president hung her Bible down in the well for fear it would be taken away from her if the people should elect the infidel.—Ex.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Ded. 14.] Fourth Quarter, No. 11. [1884.

TOPIC; VANITY OF WORLDLY PLEASURES.

LESSON TEXT.—Ecclesiastes 2. 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wisdom excelleth folly as far as light excelleth darkness.

TIME, B. C. 980.

1. "Gatherings of experience" might well be the title of this book. Ecclesiastes meaning "gatherings" or "collections." The varied resorts of a soul given up to self, are here portrayed, and the consequent rewards. First comes mirth, "a good time." How many young people and old ones too seem to live mainly in the pursuit of "fun"! Here is the testimony of one who had kingly opportunities to obtain all he sought, and this is his verdict, having tried all, "I said of laughter, 'It is mad,' and of mirth, 'What doeth it?'"

2. Then comes wine, and yet not as most men engage in the proving of its utility. Solomon gave himself to wine in a critical way, seeking to know what was good not only for himself, but for "the sons of men." His experience given in Proverbs shows that while experimenting as he thought, like a philosopher, the great mocker, wine, victimized and deceived even him.

3. Houses and lands, vineyards and gardens, orchards and fountains, servants and cattle, silver and gold, all these were tried in turn. Here the preacher might be said to have entered upon a less selfish experiment. His houses would bring gain to others. His vineyards and gardens might furnish labor to he poor. His servants and cattle would be well cared for, but the object of the experiment is still the same—still a ministry to self only. His great income of over $16,000,000 a year was a veritable "belt of gold" sinking him deeper and deeper into the sea of self-love and selfish indulgence. It is one of God's laws that not what we get, but what we give, makes us happy.

4. A little higher in the scale of self-seeking if indeed there are any grades in this sin, is the text turn of Solomon's thougnt toward happiness. viz., to the delights of the less sensual pleasures, such as music and art. A great many people who are too conscientious to indulge themselves in sinful pursuits, take hold of "musical instruments of all sorts" just as Solomon did, for pleasure only and for selfish gain. They fancy that they are living upon a higher level than the self-seeker who gives himself to wine and to the accumulation of silver and gold, and in one sense they are, for the gratification of the more spiritual senses, if such there be, is a nobler kind of pleasure than the tickling of the palate, or the satisfying of the body. But the motive of the search governs its classification. If self be uppermost, even the high pleasures of art fall below their proper level and enjoyment. The best relish to earthly food of all kinds and grades, is "a heart at leisure from itself."

5. "Vanity" is a strong term to apply to the largest possible measure of earth's so-called felicities. In the original, it means "a breath" and denotes that which passing away leaves no adequate or satisfying result behind. A breath does not last. Another must succeed it, and another and another, or life is gone. So, too, with the pleasures that self feeds on. There must be more of them or the spirit fails; and finally when all have palled, the very name of pleasure is hated.

6. "What can the man do that cometh after the king?" If he who had more wealth and more opportunity than any man who ever lived could devise nothing in the way of pleasure to satisfy the heart of man, who shall be likely to minister in this way to his kind. If he, who tried all avenues to happiness from mirth to culture, could find no satisfaction, and after the most complete experience, judged that "wisdom excelleth folly as far as light excelleth darkness,"—is any one likely to give new truth to humanity from such a search? It only the young would heed the teaching, how many a bitterly-learned lesson might be saved. And to those who persist in learning only by such sad and regretful experience there is this comfort, that they are being "taught of the Lord," and that His mercy prescribes every lesson and measures out instruction for their folly, and loving guidance for their rebellion.

Prospectus for 1885.

IN entering its eleventh year THE UNION SIGNAL congratulates its readers on the store of good things laid up for the coming year. As the first promise of a newspaper is NEWS, we have made arrangements for a systematic survey of the whole temperance field in the engagement of reliable and racy correspondents for each section of the country as follows:

NEW ENGLAND will be represented faithfully and graphically by MRS. DR. GORDON, of Boston, Mass.;

THE MIDDLE STATES by MRS. MARY LOWE DICKINSON, of New York City.

THE SOUTHERN STATES by MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD for the Eastern, and MRS. LIDE MERIWETHER, for the Western South.

THE GREAT WEST will be "taken note of" by MRS. CLARA HOFFMAN, of Kansas City, Mo.

These correspondents will not supersede the "old reliable" news-gatherers in the states and local unions, but will give a general summarizing of research and survey at least once a month in the shape of a sketchy NEWS LETTER. In addition to this, the National Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. C. B. Buell will, from her high tower of observation, give frequent NOTES ALL ALONG THE LINE. We shall incorporate another new feature this year in the line of

"HEALTH TALKS," by prominent Physicians and Students of Hygiene—and are arranging for a series of papers on HOUSEHOLD RELIGION from our ever-welcome contributor, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith. A liberal supply of Literary and Scientific Articles will be furnished by such pens as those of

PERSONAL APPEAL TO WORKERS:

HAS THE UNION SIGNAL been a blessing to your homes? Has it cheered any despondent hours? Has it nerved your heart for the strife against evil? Has it been an educator? Has it given weapons of argument and proven armor for the war of the Home against the Saloon? All this we have striven to make it. And for the New Year we are planning still better and broader things. Will you not, in view of all that the paper has done in the past, as well as all it hopes and promises to do in the future, make extra effort this year to place it as an educator in every home?—to make it the pioneer of your organized effort—the "avant courier" to announce the near approach of a W. C. T. U. where none is yet formed—and "The gospel of good tidings" to communities as yet unblessed with Prohibition of the open Dram Shop.

A WESTERN JOURNEY.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The young man who takes his first few hundred dollars of savings or inheritance out upon the Nebraska and Kansas plains, first secures his homestead, pays $2 land office fees, cuts 18x22 inch blocks of sod, piles them up with somewhat of masonic skill till they form the thick walls of a comfortable house—digs out a barn in the side hill, and roofs both over with planks followed by another course of sod bricks. Houses like this can be seen in many localities with quite a grass crop on the roof, reminding one in a small way of the grove-topped ruins of the palace of the Cesars. A team of horses and such cattle as he may be able to afford, are his next purchases. Perhaps there may be a school section of land coming into market, on which he can pay ten per cent cash and the balance in twenty years at six per cent and no taxes. He can fence the same with barbed wire, at a cost of $300 more and get his money back the first year by pasturing the herds which can no longer roam at will, at 25 cents per head per month. Pasturage lasts through the four seasons and cattle thrive on out-of-door diet all the year round. Just what has so changed the desert like character of the country I find it a little hard to discover. The old saying: "the rainfall follows the plow," seems to be discounted by both settlers and the scientists. A convention of the "weather wise" was recently held in Eastern Nebraska and it was there decided on good and sufficient evidence that no increase in the average rainfall had taken place since the more general settlement of the state. A theory which seems to have wide acceptance is that in the hard and baked condition of the soil prior to these days of the farmer's furrow, all the water that fell was speedily drained off into the "draws" which are green and grassy even so late as November, but that now the turning over of the sod stops the drainage and saves the moisture to the plain. Whatever may be the truth in this matter, the waving corn fields attest a new regime.

But enough of agriculture, though if Horace Greeley were alive and could see the Nebraska and Kansas plains, I am sure he would as never before, urge young men to "go west."

A night's ride in a sleeper, and I wake up in full view of the glorious mountains, not however, till from my window, in the early dawn of that to me, eventful morning, I had seen in the pink and gold sky, the crescent moon in all its silver glory, keep watch and ward over the bright and beautiful morning star, which like Tennyson's young moon, was almost in its arms—and then fade away as the sun rose. It was there, however, in the far-off sky, all the same, and I knew it, and I said in my heart, "So in life's night, have I had views of a personal protecting care. Day came and happiness with it, dimming my vision, but the presence was there and is there just the same."

Denver City—as it used to be called when it had less than 3000 population, is now, when it has 75,000, only plain Denver. A very good illustration of how things of no note strive for the meretricious aids to notability which are all discarded when real value arrives. It is not plain Denver in one sense, however. It is one of the most beautiful of cities. Such residences, school buildings and churches, are rare in the old cities of the east and middle west. Irrigation has caused shade trees to thrive and the Holly water works make the lawns look like those of Chicago's prettiest suburbs. The city of bare streets and wind swept door yards, that I left eighteen years ago and even then with regret, is gone forever, but in its place is a well built, wide spreading, populous, commercial centre whose people are as cultured, as alive to the best gifts and highest graces as any on the face of the earth.

Here among old and long cherished friends, in the midst of associations most tender and sweet, I passed four of the pleasantest days the late years have given me. Here I met Mrs. Telford, the energetic editor of Colorado's brave little Challenge, and Dr. Kate Bushnell, superintendent of Hygiene in the State W. C. T. U. and earnest evangelist among the Chinese of the city—for which her residence in China and her knowledge of the language most exceptionally fits her. It was a little curious that here too, the curious "loco weed" met me again—not in propria persona, but in the facts given me by ex-Governor Evans, the second Chief Executive Colorado ever had, as well as the best—viz:

1. The Colorado legislature offers a bounty on each hundred weight of this poisonous weed—hoping to exterminate it, and save from its ravages the dumb beasts that even legislatures are bound to protect.

2. The Mexicans of the southern part of the territory who, "by this craft, have their wealth," have been known to "dead lock"—all legislative proceedings when the repeal of the loco bounty law was under consideration.

3. These same Mexicans are known to cultivate and grow the "loco" in large quantities, so as to increase their gains.

The analogy here so strongly marked will readily occur to your thought and it is not necessary for me to "point the moral or adorn the tale."

Restrictive legislation which offers a premium on cupidity seldom restricts. Which reminds me of Nebraska again. While in McCook this little dialogue occurred:

"You have an unusually fine school house for so small a town?"

"Yes, but its just running over with scholars, and we haven't teachers enough to meet the demand. However, a new saloon is to be licensed soon and then we can have another teacher."

O, education, what crimes may be committed in thy name! The price of a new teacher means horrors to some of those beautiful homes that would blanch the cheek and check the beating of kindly hearts, if they could be known—and the sin and sorrow and shame wrought in that one high-priced dram shop will outweigh in the judgment, all the gains of intellect made possible by its existence. But the episode gave zest to my purpose to spend a day at Lincoln, the capital city, on my homeward way, and to learn all that I could in so short a time of the workings of the High License Law of Nebraska. At Lincoln, I sought for Mrs. Angie F. Newman, equally true and equally dear to missionary and to W. C. T. U. workers, but found that a serious accident had crippled her so severely as to make surgical treatment at Kansas City a necessity, and days of suffering are finding her there, as heroic as ever. Another absentee was Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender, one of Nebraska's lady lawyers, from whom I was sure I could get desired "points"—but she was in a neighboring city looking after the interests of a poor drunkard's wife whose civil damage suit Mrs. Bittenbender had carried on to successful issue, but for one disagreeing juror—the honesty of whose verdict is strongly questioned.

Through the kindness of Mr. Newman, I found Dr. S. H. King, president of the State Constitutional Amendment association and his wife, a no less active and honored worker by his side. Mrs. King is known far and near as a fine and fearless speaker, and the Doctor, with quiet, but firm determination, knows no such word as fail in his efforts for constitutional prohibition in both state and nation.

Here too, were ex-Mayor and Mrs. Hardy, of like faith and works, the former a recent legislative candidate on the prohibition ticket, and honored with a large vote. And here too, to my great surprise, was Mrs. Downs, president of the New Jersey W. C. T. U., making glad by her presence, not only her only daughter who is "her mother's daughter" in every sense of the word, but the W. C. T. U. of Nebraska as well, which has made good use of her temporary sojourn in the state. There was strong concurrent testimony from all these to the effect that a thousand dollar dram shop license, while it may in some instances diminish the number of saloons, does not, so far as their wide-spreading investigation shows, diminish the consumption of intoxicating drink. An investigation of the criminal statistics of the state before and after high license which is soon to be made, will discover whether high license has been instrumental in reducing crime, and a letter promised to UNION SIGNAL readers from Mrs. Bittenbender, will serve to show many of the law's "tricks that are vain."

From all that I can learn also, I failed to discover that the school teachers of Nebraska are better paid than those of neighboring states, even though liquordom does foot the bill.

In York county, by the vigorous and determined efforts of the citizens even high license is kept at bay, and the school houses and the pedagogues of this county are as fine and flourishing as any, while the only man really suffering for business is the county jailor. The taxpayers find it more to their interest to levy a direct school tax than to meet the pauper and crime bills consequent on legalized dram shops. These facts I learned from Judge Morgan, an old settler of the county, and one whose faithful work in driving out this destroyer of the peace, has been heroic beyond telling. He is now reaping its rewards tn the prosperity of county interests, and even longs for new conquests in the western part of the state, where I met him looking up land interests. His example and testimony may inspire some new settler in that newer region to do what he says any county surely may—"begin right." The sad "might have been" that reflects from many of our beginnings in this matter of liquor licenses can be changed to a glad "Will be"—if only freemen do their duty.

With a thankful heart for what a good man in his prayer, the other day, called "travelling mercies"—and for the solid enjoyment of twelve days of such recreation as I have seldom known, the "coming-in" was as blessed as the "going out," both preserved by Him who promises that so it shall be "from this time forth, and even forevermore. Mrs. J. C. Bateham, of Pamesville, Ohio, is superintendent of the department of the national W. C. T. U. which seeks to save the Sabbath from desecration. It was the newness of the appointment I suppose, which caused its omission from the editorial setting forth of "Our new superintendencies."

Watch—care is just now the outward and visible manifestation of the inward grace of the W. C. T. U. to its leaders. I don't know how many of them have been "watched" lately, but Mrs. Mary T. Burt is the latest heard from. An elegant chronometer marking exact time, is a very appropriate gift from her constituency to this elegant woman of exact-ly correct ideas.

The following orders has been issued by the O. & M. R. R. to its employes: "The smoking of pipes, cigars, or cigarettes, by agents in charge of ticket or telegraph offices, or by trainmen on all trains carrying passengers, is prohibited from this date while such employes are on duty." Now an order prohibiting the use of tobacco in all cars occupied by ladies would relieve that non-tobacco using class from many disgusting and filthy conditions now found on the floor of passenger cars, and allow them to breathe the pure air, for which they pay, in sleeping coaches. ON DUTY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Somerville.—A W. C. T. U. of 200 members and a reform club of 150 members are letting their light shine, and gathering many into the temperance fold by taking advantage of every opportunity. Clubs have been formed by these agencies in Millstown and Frankfort. Devotional meetings well attended and public sentiment is being educated against the evils of intemperance and the good results of sobriety.

Medford.—The W. C. T. U., though small, is exerting an influence that is being felt in this place. Our president, Mrs. Cowperthwaite, is untiring in her efforts for temperance and prohibition, and encouraging her little band of workers onward.

Dunellen.—The W. C. T. U. has rented a building formerly occupied as a liquor saloon. The former proprietor has signed the pledge, and is now vice-president of the reform club. He was a man that never attended church; but now is a regular attendant at the M. E. church, and it is hoped that he will soon become a christian. The W. C. T. U. meetings are held every Friday. When the children come in, the juvenile school is called to order. Seventy girls and boys have signed the triple pledge. A prayer meeting is also held on Sabbath afternoon at 4 o'clock. The Lord has specially blessed our work here.

Asbury Park and Ocean Grove.—The W. C. T. U. has held its fourth annual meeting at "Down's Cottage." It enters upon its fifth year as auxiliary to the state organization, and its seventh year of local temperance work. Fifty paying members keep its treasury in working order. Each local society pays annually into the treasury of the state union about twenty cents per member. All the state unions pay tribute to the great "National," and so the litte wheels keep the great wheel revolving.

Plainfield held its seventh annual meeting in Reform Hall the 27th of October. Notwithstanding the storm, a good audience assembled. Rev. A. V. V. Raymond, of the Trinity Reformed church, presided. Exercises opened by an anthem, led by Mr. Dunham. Rev. Wm. Richards, pastor of the Crescent avenue church, read the scripture and offered prayer. Rev. Mr. Raymond read secretary's report, and Rev. Mr. Goodrich the treasurer's report, both of which of which were very encouraging and hopeful for the future. Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss was introduced to the audience, and referred to the joy it gave him, to be with them once again and to hear, when in other lands, of the grand work being done in the cause of temperance by the self-sacrificing, earnest men and women of Plainfield, with whom, heretofore, he had held such sweet communion. In far off, benighted lands he had seen degradation, want and wretchedness, but felt sick at heart when he came back to this christian and civilized land to see in the great cities, and confronting him everywhere, those places that cast a blot on our civilization, and not to be found in those lands of less privileges in which he had traveled. Mrs. J. T. Ellis, state corresponding secretary, followed Dr. Bliss in words full of wisdom and appeal to the hearts and consciences of the temperance workers, urging the necessity of greater effort till the nefarious traffic which the United States government encircles in its arms, shall be wiped out. Fight valiantly, the day may soon come when the old familiar song of John Howard Payne, "Home, Sweet Home," shall have its meaning, and many shall rise up and called blessed the workers, "for God and home and native land." The officers for the ensuing year are: Mrs. J. W. Yates, president; Mrs. P. M. French, vice-president; Mrs. Wm. B. Maxon, recording secretary; Mrs. George Babcock, correspoding secretary, and Mrs. Dr. H. H. Lowrie, treasurer.

MICHIGAN.

CONVENTION OF THE SIXTH DISTRICT.

The eighth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of this district, met at St. Johns 12th and 13th of Nov., and was full of life and interest. The M. E. Church in which it was held was decorated with blooming plants, and a tree of living green, from whose branches hung stars with the names of the different departments of the work of the National W. C. T. U. upon them, which, with a banner presented by the Y. W. C. T. U., made it a most beautiful ornament. Upon the wall in the rear of the president's stand was a banner, which thirty-five years ago was carried by the Daughters of Temperance in a procession at Peritsville. It is now the property of Mrs. A. Plumstead, of St. Johns. The Wednesday morning session was devoted to the usual routine of business. In the afternoon a paper upon "Jail Work" was read by Mrs. G. H. Holman, of Flint, followed by discussions upon various lines of work. During this session M.s. A. S. Benjamin, President of the Fifth Congressional District, was received and warmly welcomed. During the remainder of the convention she added much to the interest by her timely remarks and ready wit and humor. At the evening session an address of welcome was given by Mrs A. H. Walker, of St. Johns, which was responded to by Mrs. D. M. Garnee, of Davisburgh, who also favored us with two original poems. Then followed the President's address by Mrs. C. H. Johnson, of Flint. Thursday morning devotional exercises, report of district superintendents, report of flower missions by Miss L. Farres, of Flint; paper "The Press" by Mrs. H. P. Jennings, of Fenton; paper "Sunday School Work" by Mrs. Dr. Fairbanks, of Flint. Election of officers followed, which resulted as follows:

President, Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint; Sec'y., Mrs. O. L. Vreeland, St. Johns; Treasurer, Mrs. L. L. Morrison, Holly. Afternoon session: Memorial services for Mrs. V A. Allen, of Lansing, led by Mrs. Baldwin of St. Johns, and an extract from the Lansing Republican was read by the President, Mrs. C. H. Johnson, paying a high tribute to her work for the master in the church, missions, temperance work and in every thing seeking the good of others, not her own. The grief and sorrow manifested by those who knew her led others to think that it has been said of her, "well done good and faithful servant, come up higher." A badge of mourning was worn during the entire convention by the President, and the star of literature—of which she was State Superintendent—was heavily draped. Paper presented on "Juvenile Work" by Mrs. Bedan, Pine Run; paper on "Heredity" by Mrs. Dr. Mill of Harvell; paper on "The Relations of the W. C. T. U. to the Temperance Work of the Present Time" by Mrs. J. B. Stewert, St. Johns. Evening session: Address by Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, President of the Fifth Congressional District, who told the whole truth in regard to the Liquor traffic. No parties were assailed but in a plain and forcible manner the evils of the traffic were placed before the citizens of St. Johns. There was a large attendance. The St. Johns Temperance Glee Club, a male quartette, rendered most beautiful music suitable to the occasion. A resolution thanking the people of St. Johns for their kindness, courtesy and hospitality was presented by the president, and thus ended a most enjoyable convention.

FOURTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

This convention assembled at Ithaca, Gratiot county, November 13 and 14, 1884. The morning session was held in the large and well furnished rooms of the Ithaca W. C. T. U. In the absence of Mrs. Freeman, Mrs. E. P. Church, of Greenville, conducted the morning session. A devotional meeting consisting of singing, scripture reading, recitation of scripture verses, and a season of earnest prayer, constituted the morning program.

At noon Mrs. E. J. Freeman, the district president, arrived. After usual devotional meeting, the business commenced with Mrs. E. J. Freeman in the chair.

Roll call of officers and appointment of committees then followed.

The following unions were represented by more than fifty visiting and voting delegates: Alma, Ithaca, St. Louis, Mt. Pleasant, East Saginaw, Saginaw City, Carson City, Greenville, Edmore, Bridgeport, Beaver Creek, Owosso, Elm Hall, North Star, and Lainsburg.

The reports, given were fraught with interest and tended to give renewed strength to all engaged in W. C. T. U. work.

The evening session was held in the M. E. church, of Greenville, presiding. An address of welcome was given by Mrs. Pettengill, of Ithaca. The response was made by Mrs. J. R. Doughty, of Mt. Pleasant. After music by the choir, the district president, Mrs. E. J. Freeman, gave an earnest and able address. An original poem by Mrs. E. M. McLeod, of Laingsburg, followed. A collection, music, and the benediction closed the evening.

Friday morning session began with a devotional meeting, conducted by Mrs. J. F. Drigg, of East Saginaw. Reports of committees, local unions, and juvenile bands, were given, also remarks of general interest by the president. Reports of county vice presidents called foa, and all were most interesting, Gratiot county, Mrs. J. H. Thayer, vice president, being declared the banner county.

In the afternoon the report of the treasurer, Mrs. N. L. Miller, of Saginaw City, was given, after which came the election of officers. Result as follows: President, Mrs. E. J. Freeman; secretary, Mrs. J. R. Doughty; treasurer, Mrs. N. L. Miller. The following are the county vice presidents elected for the next year: Montcalm, Mrs. E. P. Church; Saginaw, Mrs. J. F. Driggs; Shiawassee, Mrs. E. M. McLeod; Isabella, Mrs. H. B. Pierson; Midland, to be appointed; Gratiot, to be elected by the unions of Gratiot county.

The further reports of committees was then submitted, including the committee on resolution, on constitution, on Sunday school work, etc. A vote of thanks was given to the president and other officers for the efficient manner in which the work has been conducted during the past year.

The evening session was held at the opera house, Mrs. Freeman presiding. Devotional exercises, after which was read an able paper by Mrs. E. P. church, of Greenville, on the "Influence of the Local Union." Singing by choir, "Rise up to Labor." An address was given by Mrs. Bryant, of Washington, entitled "New York by the Light of a Lantern," which vividly depicted the occupants and interior of the dives and slums of vice in the fourth ward and Mulberry street of that city.

A handsome floral offering was then presented to Mrs. E. J. Freeman, our beloved district president, in behalf of Gratiot county, in a very appreprate speech made by Mrs. J. H. Thayer.

A collection was taken. Then singing, prayer, and the benediction closed the convention, which had been throughout both profitable and interesting.

Mrs. J. R. Doughty, Sec. of Convention.

WYOMING.

Laramie.—It is almost one year since Mrs. Shields, of Col., organized our Laramie local W. C. T. U. I was elected as President. My time of office has nearly expired, and before retiring from that office, I thought perhaps a brief review of one year's work might be of interest.

The first year of our organized existence has been a rather trying one.

It has laid upon us new duties and untried responsibilities; and these labors have devolved upon shoulders already bowing beneath our load of domestic cares.

Our membership has grown from 10 to 250, and a Band of Hope of 130 members was organized the last day of June. I have attended regularly these meetings, and hope and trust some good temperance instruction has taken root in the minds of our boys and girls. But only eternity can unfold how much or how little has been accomplished. We trust instruction has been received which will prevent some from choosing the downward road; for we are working in the name of our Divine Master and have his assurance, "my word shall not return unto me void, but shall accomplish that whereunto I sent it."

The Band of Hope formed an attractive procession on the 4th of July, with appropriate banners and flags.

The evening of Sept. 17th, they gave a public entertainment, which was very largely attended, and gave great delight to all present. Here is our best hope, the training and saving of the children.

We have provided the people with public temperance meetings, and quite a number of lectures by the best temperance speakers.

We have distributed a good deal of temperance literature and have awakened a general interest, and secured the aid of a large majority of the leading men of the community.

We have also had an opportunity to exercise our prerogative of citizenship, and by our 464 ballots cast for the temperance ticket, have tried to do something to lessen the evils of intemperance. I believe it is almost unanimously conceded that if we were to have a city election at this time we could elect a radical temperance ticket. Mrs. J H. Hayford, President.

WEST VIRGINIA.

In the Baptist General Association, held at Charleston, W. Va., the evening of Nov. 9th was set apart for a grand temperance mass-meeting. The report on temperance is most earnest, and pledges the members of the association, as representatives of the thirty thousand Baptists in West Virginia, not to relax effort until an amendment to the State constitution shall be secured forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants as a beverage. And to this end, they humbly pray the next legislature to submit such an amendment to a vote of the people. The report closes with the call to take for a watch-word for temperance and christian workers, Prohibition—"Prohibition for the home, prohibition for the church, prohibition for the state."

The last clause of the report furnished the three topics for the three leading addresses of the evening, the first, by Rev. G. M. Shott; the second, by Rev. J. W. Carter; the third, by Prof. A. L. Purington; all most eloquent and stirring.

"The fire from this three gun prohibition battery but opened up the way for a rattling fire all along the line, in the five minute speeches by Revs. F. F. Robertson, P. H. Murray, and others, and Dave D. Johnson, who as chairman of the State Temperance Executive Committee, presented and urged the matter of circulating the petition for the submission of the amendment."

It was universally agreed that the meeting was a grand success. C.

Burning Springs.—We meet every Wednesday evening at the M. E. church and allow gentlemen to attend every meeting; not only members but all that will come. During the week the choir prepares music selected from the Prohibition Songster, and after prayer we have a good song followed by a recitation, reading and essay; and each week some member is selected to make a short address after which comes the regular business, followed by an inspiring song. During the singing of this piece the pledge is circulated and signers solicited, and there has been but one night to my knowledge that we have not added one or more to our list, if we have any plans or subject of unusual interest to discuss we appoint a meeting at the home of one of the members. Our object in conducting the society in this manner is to provide moral, elevating and instructive entertainment for our young men and boys. Corresponding Secretary.

PROHIBITION IN WEST VIRGINIA.

The temperance people of Virginia believe in striking while the iron is hot, and are now busily engaged in circulating the following petition:

To the Honorable, the Legislature of West Virginia: The undersigned voters of the state of West Virginia respectfully pray your honorable body to pass an amendment to the Constitution of West Virginia forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within the state, to be used as a beverage, similar to that passed by the house of Delegates of 1883, and that you will provide for submitting the same to a vote of the people at the next general election.

The prohibition amendment referred to was passed by the House of Delegates of 1883, but defeated by the Senate, and read as follows:

SECTION 46. The manufacture, keeping for sale, and sale of all intoxicating liquors, to be used as a beverage, are forever prohibited within this state; and the legislature shall, without delay, provide by appropriate legislation, for the due enforcement of this prohibition. The manufacture, sale, and keeping for sale of the aforesaid liquors, drinks, mixtures and preparations for other purposes than as a beverage, shall be regulated by law, under sufficient penalties and securities.

MISSOURI.

HANNIBAL.—Not a "chiel," but a chief has been among us, rallying the clans, not with torch and drum, but with strong earnest words, appealing to the consciences of men. George Woodford was here a week, giving his last lecture on November 3. He supported the Prohibition ticket boldly, and there was no cowardly evasion of political issues, but the key note of his work was: "We may not elect a man this year, but we may save many men." And our hearts were filled with joy as the saved gathered at the pledge table. That was "election" for them. Then and there, they chose whom they would serve, and on the last night many of them contributed to the expenses of the meetings, showing how soon a man has money after the leak in his pocket is stopped by the pledge. It would be difficult to decide which of the seven lectures was best, but here, where drunkenness is under a "wise system of regulation," we can perhaps best appreciate "The Fallacies of License." In that time of fever and excitement "Christ stilling the tempest," fell upon our troubled hearts like a voice from out the storm saying: "Peace, be still!" God grant that now, as of old, the wind and the waves obey!

BESSIE V. CUSHMAN.

KANSAS CITY.—The Central W. C. T. U. are to have another lecture course this winter. It is intimated that this society expect to organize an educational bureau soon, and among other features have a first class course of lectures every winter. The price for these lectures will be small, and the lecturers the best in the land. The W. C. T. U. met November 18, at their headquarters, and though the day was miserable and a small attendance the consequence, still considerable business was done. The president, Mrs. Dr. Bell, read the parable of the sower and the seed. After the devotional exercises the approaching lecture course was canvassed and arrangements made for selling tickets. Those ladies who have been engaged canvassing reported great interest among those who attended last year, and an increasing desire to aid the society in its educational and beneficent work. It is now supporting its Kindergarten, night and sewing schools, besides giving just the needed help in many other lines. The first entertainment will be the Potter sisters, December 4. They have a national reputation; they read and impersonate.

CAINSVILLE.—The W. C. T. U. is rejoicing in the possession of a beautiful new hall, which was dedicated with very interesting exercises, November 20, by Rev. J. H. Burroughs. The property is worth $500. It is nicely seated, papered and carpeted, and only about thirty dollars still to be paid on it. The day of the dedication the collection amounted to over one hundred dollars, notwithstanding nearly all present had already given liberally. The union was organized only about fourteen months since, has fifty members, and is prospering in every way.

CALIFORNIA.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE EDEN W. C. T. U.

This meeting was held at San Lorenzo Thursday, November 13. The union was organized by Mrs. M. C. Leavitt, and comprises the three towns of San Leandro, San Lorenzo, and Haywards. The meeting was quite largely attended by guests from other localities, a number of the state officers and superintendents of state departments were present. A most interesting programme had been prepared for the occasion and was well carried out. The exercises were opened by prayer, and a very graceful welcome address was given by Mrs. A. C. Duncan, and was responded to in some well-chosen words by Mrs. L. A. Kelley, of Oakland. After the yearly reports of the secretary and treasurer, words from workers were listened to with much interest. The superintendents of the different departments of work, gave very interesting reports of the progress of the work, after which Mrs. B. Sturtevant Peet, president of the union, gave her very valuable and interesting annual address, which was responded to by a shower of boquets from the members, and a beautiful floral offering was presented by the union, expressive of their high appreciation. The little girls who acted as pages and did errands with such willing feet and bright faces, have begun their labors in the great temperance reform at the right time, and will be well equipped for the warfare long before they are veterans—in years.

A beautiful mallet, made from several different kinds of highly polished California laurel, was presented for the president's use by the ladies of the San Francisco union. In the evening a paper on "Heredity" was read by Marie Cole, and a poem by Mrs. M. Griswold, of Alameda, and followed by an able address by Mrs. M. T. McCall, of San Jose, on "Gains in the Conflict." The utmost harmony and kindly feelings prevailed throughout the meeting, and all were rejoiced for the birth of this union, and that so many enjoyed the first birthday party. Many thanks are returned to the hospitable ladies of San Lorenzo, who opened their beautiful homes to the invited guests.

MRS. H. H. HAVENS,
Cor. Sec. State Union.

MASSACHUSETTS.

We write on our banner for November 16—"God with us." In a rum-cursed town, and right after election, we have had successful temperance meetings. Space forbids the story of the careful planning which "organized success." How we studied each word of press and placard and church notices saying "W. C. T. U.," only where we thought it would help and not hinder the cause! How we prayed that God would incline the hearts of the singers to give us special help! How we worked to interest the children, both Catholic and Protestant! How grandly the pastors stood by us! And how gloriously God rewarded our faith!

Misses Tobey & Gordon, our beloved state president and secretary, were with us. In the morning, Miss Tobey gave a Bible service at the Congregational church, on "Consecration." Said one who heard it—not a professing Christian—"Every word was true as Gospel, and you knew it came from the heart." In the afternoon Miss Tobey kindly volunteered to help the overworked pastor of the M. E. church, by a similar service, taking "Rest," as her theme. At 4 p. m., we held a children's temperance meeting, with good singing, three bright little recitations (two of them from THE UNION SIGNAL), and addresses from Misses Tobey & Gordon. The children were all aglow, and we plan to nurture the seed so faithfully sown. In the evening, was a union temperance meeting in the Methodist church. An arch back of the pulpit bore our motto, and the flag was draped beneath it. On an easel at one end of the platform, was the "Liquor chart" with its startling columns; a similar easel at the other end bore a banner with the motto, "Guard the Home."

The president of our local union presided, the resident pastors were on the platform, and, another of our victories, the officers of the local union were also there. A union choir, with solo and trio, gave us excellent music, and Miss Tobey talked temperance to a packed house, aisles as well as pews. The dear workers of Massachusetts need have no hesitation in arranging meetings for their new president. She won all hearts here.

Young ladies with white-ribboned baskets took up the collection. Of this I need only say that one gentleman said: "I declared I never would give anything more for temperance (for political reasons), but I had to that night."

So we thank God and take courage.

WISCONSIN.

BELOIT.—An interprise which is the outgrowth of much anxious study was entered upon the 26th of July last, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The new undertaking was christened the "Young Woman's Friendly Association of Beloit," and its object declared to be "to bind together in one society the young women for mutual help (intellectual and secular) and for sympathy." "Any woman may become a member by the payment of two cents a month or twenty-five cents per year."

In Beloit are various factories, for shoes, boxes, mittens, overalls and cigars, employing numbers of girls and women. Norwegian and German and Irish, as well as American, work in the families of the citizens of the place. The young men are provided with their reading room and library, their cosy reception room and Gospel meetings; why not the young women?

The society was organized and three rooms in the business heart of the city were hired. These were furnished with carpets, tables, organ, pictures and all the needed articles for a pleasant and enjoyable resting place. Notice was duly given through the public prints whose editors kindly placed their columns at our disposal.

Classes were arranged as follows: Monday evening, writing and composition. Tuesday evening, fancy work. Wednesday evening, vocal music. Thursday evening, dress making. Friday evening, plain sewing. Saturday evening, elocution. Competent teachers are provided for thorough systematic work in all these classes.

Besides all these, a class of Norwegian and German girls receive instruction in English, reading, spelling and writing.

Twice, a little festival has been given, each of which was attended by over ninety persons. At one, ice cream was served; at the other, cake and grapes. The small fee (a dime) which was charged defrayed the rent of the rooms and some other items of expense.

One of the merchants nobly offers coal for the winter; others, help of various kinds in just as needful ways.

Bit by bit, inch by inch, the way has been opened, and friendly hands have been extended to us on every side. We cannot help feeling great encouragement to presevere, hoping for the best results.

The president of the W. C. T. U. is also our president. Two vice-presidents are taken from the factories.

I came September 1st, and am acting secretary and treasurer, beside having a general charge of the rooms and all the classes, filling up any breaks which may occur in the ranks of the teachers. Since that time over 400 have been in attendance at the rooms, and there is a steady growth of interest manifested by increasing numbers in spite of many outside attractions. Half a dozen is the lowest number for one evening and forty the highest, often fifteen and twenty are present.

We are trying to establish a reading room and library for the girls. Both city editors have sent in their weekly papers and assisted in various ways. Stationery has been given us by one lady friend and a few books. We are hoping to gather more. Old books may be new to us and will be most acceptable, either magazines or the more solid volume.

MONTANA.

FIRST ANNUAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

This meeting was held in the Grand street church, Helena, August 19 and 20, 1884.

Mrs. R. H. Hewey called the meeting to order at 10 a. m. and conducted the devotional exercises. In the absence of the president, Mrs. Dr. Clark, and the secretary, Mrs. A. H. Priest, Mrs. Hewey was elected president pro tem., and Mrs. James Kirkpatrick, secretary pro tem.

At roll call the following territorial officers were present:

Mrs. L. C. Browne, Helena, treasurer.

Mrs. A. M. Walker, Butte, superintendent young woman's work.

Mrs. R. H. Hewey, Helena, superintendent influencing the press.

Mrs. James Kirkpatrick, Dillon, vice-president second udicial district.

A good number of delegates was present. The president appointed committees on finance, declaration of principles, courtesies, address to the people.

After the discussion of topics to be embodied in the address, followed by singing and prayer, the meeting adjourned to convene at 2 p. m.

The afternoon session opened at 2 p. m. with singing and prayer. The minutes of the morning meeting read and approved, after which reports from the committees were called for. The committee on declaration of principles reported as follows:

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is formed for the purpose of educating the young, forming a better public sentiment, reforming the drinking classes, and removing the saloon from our streets by law.

We believe that the foregoing objects involve the following principles:

1—Total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage on the part of the individual.

2—The total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a drink.

3—We believe that, as woman is the natural conservator of home, it would be a great reinforcement to the cause of home protection if on all questions pertaining to the liquor traffic she were endowed with the ballot.

The question of prohibition and the best means of securing it awakened deep interest, and was the subject of a lengthy discussion.

The report of the committee on finance was next called, and was accepted as read.

Mrs. Dr. Clark reported by letter the following unions organized by her: White Sulphur Springs, Miss Alice Nichols, President; Billings, Mrs. S. A. Wallace, President; Livingston, Mrs. E. M. Morris, President; Bozeman, Mrs. G. B. Morse, President.

The reports of local unions were satisfactory and encouraging.

The convention resolved to memorialize the next Congress to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the limits of the National Park, and the secretary was instructed to refer said memorial to the N. W. C. T. U. to be presented in such time and manner as shall seem to them wise and proper.

The convention met at 9.30 a. m. The time until ten o'clock was occupied by a prayer and praise service, conducted by Mrs. Howey and Mrs. Wood. The minutes of previous session read and approved. On motion it was decided to suspend the rules and elect officers by a rising vote. Election resulted as follows:

President and Supt. of Organization, Mrs. G. B. Morse, Bozeman; Corresponding and Recording Secretary, Mrs. Davis Wilson, Bozeman; Treasurer, Mrs. A. M. Walker, Butte City; Vice President first judicial district, Mrs. E. M. Morris, Livingston; Vice President second district, Mrs. J. Kirkpatrick, Dillon; Vice President third district, Mrs. M. J. Hall, White Sulphur Springs.

The committee on nomination of superintendents of departments being called, reported the names of the following officers: To influence the press, Mrs. R. H. Howey, Helena; Children's and young woman's work, Miss Alice Nichols, White Sulphur Springs; Scientific and literary work, Mrs. Chynoweth, Bozeman; Foreign work, Mrs. L. L. Wood, Helena.

The president next called for the reprot of the committee on the address to the people of Montana. It was read in full by the chairman, Rev. L. L. Wood, and accepted as read and submitted to the secretary for publication in the Montana papers.

The superintendent of juvenile work, Mrs. J. J. Garvin, sent in a report as follows:

Miss Willard, while in the Territory last year, organized Bands of Hope at Missoula, Helena and Dillon. The Band of Hope at Helena was merged into the Band of Hope Juvenile Temple, which is doing good work, has a membership of about sixty-five, and is superintended by Miss Ida Sweat. The band at Missoula had a membership of fifty-eight at last report, and was superintended by Mrs. H. V. Wheeler. The Dillon band had forty members, and was in charge of Miss Millie Coffin. In March, 1884, a band was organized at Virginia City, hro ugh correspondence, with a membership of eighteen. They now have twenty-five members. Rev. W. E. King is superintendent, and Mrs. Sarah Herndon assistant.

The meeting was opened at three p. m. with singing and prayer, after which the plans of work in the territory were discussed.

The committee on courtesies brought in a report embodying thanks to the Montana press, the rail road authorities, the members of the Christian church, in which the convention was held, the ministers, the chairman of the committee on the appeal to the territory, and to the president, Mrs. Howey.

The president requested that all delegates to the next annual meeting be furnished with properly signed credentials, and that all reports be as concise as possible. She also called the attention of the convention to the especial lines of work chosen for the ensuing year, namely: The juvenile and young woman's work; the scientific and literary work; the foreign work and influencing the press; and emphasized the fact that to these were the energies to be directed.

After singing "Blest be the tie that binds," the convention adjourned to meet at Bozeman, August, 1885.

MASSACHUSETTS.

STATE CONGREGATIONAL S. S. ASSOCIATION.

The Massachusetts Congregational Sunday School Association, of which Hon. Thomas W. Bicknell is president, held a convention at the Park street church, Boston, November 12th and 13th. Those who read Miss Willard's account of the National Teachers' Association held in Madison last July, will remember President Bicknell's kind endorsement of W. C. T. U. methods. His "liberality of spirit and loyalty to the temperance cause," have again been shown by giving the topic "Temperance Teaching in Sunday Schools," a prominent place in the exercises of the Sunday school convention. By the invitation of the executive board, Miss Elizabeth S. Tobey, president of our state union, gave a most excellent address, which was followed by an earnest discussion. The following resolutions were passed without an opposing vote:

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the efforts of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union to secure thorough and systematic temperance instruction in the Sunday schools, and to this end earnestly petition the International Sunday School lesson committee for the provision of awarding temperance lessons in the regular course.

Second, That, while caring for and faithfully prosecuting all other forms of Sunday school work, we feel called upon to emphasize the tremendous importance of teaching temperance in our Sunday schools, and urge pastors, superintendents, teachers and parents to give it a large place in their efforts in behalf of our children and youth.

We rejoice that Massachusetts has expressed herself in harmony with other states, as desirous of having systematic temperance teaching in the Sunday school.

Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball was with us a few weeks ago, speaking in Boston and vicinity, and we shall welcome her again in December, knowing that her thoughtful and earnest addresses will draw the attention of our church people to this important department of our work. There has been great activity at "Headquarters" the last week. We mean, with God's blessing, to secure the compulsory law for "Scientific Temperance Instruction," and members of the Y. W. C. T. U. have assisted in getting ready for the mail the numerous petitions, letters and circulars sent out to local unions and to ministers. Mrs. Alford has been making arrangements for the lectures of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, who will be in our state by the 14th of December. Will all who observe the noon hour of prayer remember us and this special line of work, for it is not an auspicious time in which to circulate the petitions, and some of our most faithful workers shrink from the task. Still we have every reason to be encouraged. Successful meetings and conventions have already been held in various parts of the state, and last week Miss Tobey gave eleven addresses, visiting several towns. On the last three Sabbaths she has occupied the pulpits of various churches, in which the pastors, both Congregational and Methodist, have endorsed most heartily the work of the W. C. T. U. In response to the "Call to Prayer" sent out by our national president, the following circular letter has been sent by Miss Tobey throughout the state. ELISABETH P. GORDON.

"For God, and Home and Native Land."

HEADQUARTERS OF THE WOMAN'S STATE C. T. U., 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS., NOV. 26th, 1884.

Dear Sisters:—It seems most appropriate and fitting that the W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts, should heed the "call" of our national president for a day of fasting and prayer. We ever need to keep the fact in our memory, that the great conflict between good and evil into which we have been called as soldiers, is the "Lord's battle," that He is still leading, when the smoke of battle hides Him from our eyes.

"He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto Him, 'What doest thou?' 'If God be for us who can be against us?' Though our hearts are full of confidence in Him and we are trusting Him to fulfil His promise, 'I will make darkness light before them and crooked things straight: these things will I do unto them and not forsake them.' Yet we need to unite in earnest petition for a special baptism of His spirit of love and patience, of wisdom and power, that we may be fully equipped for the work of the year before us. Let me urge you therefore to observe December 4th in union with our sisters all through this land, as a day of special prayer, holding public services for one or more hours, and also observing it in the quiet of your homes—'In quietness and confidence shall be your strength.'" Is. 30: 15.

Yours in full assurance of faith, ELISABETH S. TOBEY,
Pres. W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts.

Services will be held at Bromfield St. church, Boston, December 4th, from 2 to 5 o'clock p. m. All invited.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

JOHN R. CLARK comes into the 11th district W. C. T. U. of Michigan, for temperance work for two weeks or more. He will be at Traverse City, Nov. 30, Dec. 1 and 2; at Petoskey, Dec. 7, 8, and 9.

MRS. R. A. CAMPBELL, Pres. 11th. Dist. W. C. T. U.

THE W. C. T. U. of the ninth congressional district of Indiana, will hold a convention at Lebanon, December, 10 and 11. An interesting program is arranged for the ocasion. Among the speakers are Helen M. Gougar, the president, L. D. B. Cowan, Kate K. Kenyon, Helen M. Semphill. Address and Chalk-Talk to children, by Mary E. Balch, together with interesting reports, recitations, etc.

NEW YORK.

TROY.—The ladies of our "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" have been holding their weekly meetings since September. Upon each Wednesday afternoon the jail work is cared for by those who are appointed, or who voluntarily render their services in this way.

FROM THE SUPERINTENDENT OF "WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS."

To the State, District and Local Presidents:

DEAR SISTERS:—"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." The work of this department is peculiarly one of quiet and unobtrusive methods. We can not avail ourselves of the means used in so many of the other departments. We cannot appeal to the masses; and thereby we lose the potent effect so apparent in stirring large assemblies. We have no Willards, or Lathraps, or Fosters, or Hunts, or Buells, to thrill by their eloquence or persuade by tender pathos. A few speakers in German or Scandinavian can be secured by the payment of money, which, alas! is not yet a factor in the work. Neither do we have the help of the vast numbers of tracts, leaflets, papers, periodicals, and magazines that flood the country on temperance interests in the English language. We have no UNION SIGNAL sending out suggestive articles each week upon so many branches of the work. We have no paper, no periodical of any kind. We labor under the disadvantage of having but little literature of any kind in any of the foreign languages, and what we have is quite expensive, most of it more than double what the same is in English. We do not have the help from the press or pulpit that other departments have, for in neither the religious nor the secular education of Europe has the standard of morals on this point been as elevated as that of our own country. Our people sin wilfully. These "people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," for their priests, preachers and teachers instruct that wine and beer are the creatures of God, beneficial for both soul and body—when taken in moderation. From all this, it becomes apparent that the only really available methods of work for us, consist in direct and personal influence, and to effect this, thorough organization, becomes a prime necessity. While so much personal effort is needed a network of organization alone can produce tangible results. State superintendents should be appointed; and in the northern, western and some of the eastern states, as many state superintendents as there are large bodies of different nationalities, is advisable. Minnesota shows her wisdom, engendered by experience, by having three state superintendents — German, French and Scandinavian. District superintendents are useful also, not only for their own efforts, but to look over the ground and suggest where local superintendents are needed and to aid them in their work. In the counsels of our most experienced workers, it has been decided that English speaking women are more available and effective in these positions from the fact that foreigners receive them better, and this gives them greater weight of influence; but combined with these, should be workers from the classes we wish to reach, if possible. These workers going hand in hand will carry greater possibilities. For these, superintendents, women of fine executive ability and magnetic force, as well as strong religious connections, are desirable. Dear sisters, will you not aid in this organization? There is not one of you that does not deprecate the effect of the foreign vote on the temperance issues. Not one that does not sigh and pray for the time to come when the nation's politics will be purified and made clean. We can effect this sooner by attacking the citadel from the domestic side than by any other way. Let me have your sincere efforts in organization, and your earnest prayer for our success will be half answered.

To the State and Local Superintendents:

DEAR SISTERS:—In undertaking this work our chief preparation must be a renewed consecration to God and His work. No labor has ever come to you that in the outset you felt so powerless to do. But "wisdom cometh down from above," and I entreat you to ask largely that your joy may be full. Let us go forward in simple obedience believing that God will give us what we ask. No doubt it required a dood deal of courage to go around Jeriho for seven days blowing rams' horns, but the requisite faith manifested, and the steady obedience observed, resulted in a great triumph.

I have arrived at the conclusion that except in isolated cases, it is not feasible to form unions of foreigners alone. Better seek to draw the women into our own organizations, until they are prepared by experience for separate action. Our best methods of work are "house to house visiting," personal influence and appeals, and the creating of an interest on the part of mothers for a better condition for their children. The visiting of ministers, teachers and leaders, and efforts to incite and awaken them to the importance of the question. Always wisely and discriminatingly distributing what literature we have. Whenever it is practicable "Bands of Hope" can be established, though it is still better to obtain the consent of the parents to allow their children to attend those already established by the English speaking department. Night schools are prolific of great good, and these can be carried on by young people, principally by young men interested in the Christian Association, with the additional force of instruction in the "Effects of Alcohol," by some one speaking the proper language. In some places "Mutual Benefit Societies" are accomplishing much good. One or two dollars a month are paid in, which ensures care in sickness or a sum to families after death, but one of the conditions is to sign a pledge to abstain from liquor, and this if broken, forfeits benefits from payments already made. It proves a double incentive to good behavior. If "mothers' meetings" could be carried on with our foreign women, it would be a wonderful help to them, better in the present state than anything else, because more available to sow good seed. The laws of heredity could be taught in simple terms, the obligations and responsibilities of parentage of both sexes, and the training of children enlarged upon. Seeds could be dropped advocating temperance instruction in our schools, the baneful effects of beer and tobacco, the good influence of cheerful homes, and all these in connection with evangelistic teaching.

Our strength lies mainly in direct, personal influence and Christian helps. In communities where Chinese, Spanish speaking people or Italians prevail, Sunday schools for adults accomplish much good. When speakers can be obtained at reasonable rates, they should by all means be secured. We now have means of obtaining tracts and leaflets in nine different languages which I have made arrangements to have mailed to any address desired at cheaper rates than we could have our own translation made. These are Spanish, Italian, French, German, Holland, Welsh, Danish, Swedish and Finnish.

A dollar or two from each union in a state will give a limited supply at least to our foreign work and help us to create an interest among these people to supply themselves. We hope by some means to secure a firmer financial basis for the future. But in the meantime we know that "God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved; God shall help her and that right early."

SOPHIE F. GRUBB,
Nat. Sup't. Work Among Foreigners.

DEPARTMENT OF JUVENILE WORK.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE W. C. T. U.—I must again ask your assistance, in order that we may carry out a plan proposed for the Juvenile department, at the coming World's Fair, at New Orleans.

It has been suggested that we form a chain made with cards, upon which are written or printed the names of Bands of Hope, or members of such bands, who have taken the pledge. Now if each one interested will do her part, you can readily see what an array of names we will have. My idea is that each local superintendent of Band of Hope or any other worker, send to me a small pasteboard card, two and a half inches long and three-quarters of an inch in width, with the names of Bands of Hope or individual members thereof, and I will see that they are linked together and reach their destination. The cards can be of any color, but of good quality, to prevent breaking. In addition to this, if the subscriptions come in as we hope and dessre, we will see that a fitting emblem is sent to New Orleans, to represent our best beloved department. Yours, for the "wee ones,"

ANNA M. HAMMER.

23 Rowland st., Newark, N. J.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE W. C. T. U. of Aledo, Ill., opened a polling-place on election day to receive the votes of the women of Aledo and vicinity for the Prohibition candidate. Thirty-seven votes were polled.

A W. C. T. U. has been organized recently at Pendleton, Oregon, and beside other good work, is maintaining a column in the East Oregonian of that place.

A LARGE temperance meeting was held in the Holly Tree Inn, foot of Market street, Wilmington, Del., Sunday afternoon, November 16, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

A LETTER from New Orleans makes favorable mention of Mrs. Buell's visit to that city, and of her good work for temperance and expresses a hope for her return, and a hearty welcome awaiting her.

A TEMPERANCE reading room has been neatly fitted up on the first floor of the old Academy building in the ninth ward, Brandywine Village, Del. Donations of books and papers will be thankfully received.

THE W. C. T. U. of Peoria, Ill., has taken the beautiful rooms formerly occupied by the Y. M. C. A. for its headquarters, at $900. per year. Strong friends have pledged ample help in this brave venture.

IN Maine, as in Iowa and Kansas, the zeal of the mothers and sisters and daughters for absolute constitutional prohibition is recognized, and the importance of woman's agency in the whole movement, moral and legal, is acknowledged.

LADIES who wish to do painting in preparing their Christmas presents or to learn kensington, oil, water color, or china painting, etc, should not fail to order a copy of the book, "Amature Art." Attention is called to the advertisement of same in another column.

THE Band of Hope organized by Mrs. Annie Day at Pueblo, Col., at the state convention in September, has trebled its membership and started two more bands. Money was raised to organize a Band of Hope (which numbered twenty-two), and to help the foreign work also, in Starkville. In that little place there are 200 Mexicans and nearly 300 Italians.

A NEW W. C. T. U. is formed in Washington, D. C., with Mrs. Mary E. McPherson as president, which has taken legislative work as a specialty. They propose to have lectures in parlors on legislation, on law, and on hygiene for mothers. The new union is christened Hartwell, in honor of the superintendent of legislative work.

THE W. C. T. U. of Lincoln, Illinois, being refused the use of the M. E. church, for the purpose of holding services recommended by the Prohibition National executive committee, the ladies left the church in a body and visited and held short services in every saloon in the city, and then repaired to the Christian church where regular services were held.

MRS. ADA C. BOWLES is the only authorized agent of the state union in Berkshire county, Mass., and is meeting with great success in the work of organization. She has lectured in nearly every town in the county, has recently organized a company of cadets in the public schools of Cheshire, and expects soon to gather the girls of the same schools into a Band of Hope.

THE Western Wave has this very suggestive incident: A touching argument was that of a friend. The parent put the question—"Boys, what shall we do with our grapes this year?" It was answered by the noble youngest son:—"Don't make them into wine, father, for I love it." The wine was not made and the son was saved.

THE Monthly Bible Reading Leaflets sent out by Hannah Whitall Smith, Superintendent of the Evangelistic Department of the National W. C. T. U., and hitherto published by David C. Cook, of Chicago, are henceforth to be published at the office of THE UNION SIGNAL, No. 161 LaSalle street, Chicago, Ill., beginning January, 1885. Where subscriptions have been paid, please notify the new publisher, stating the date to which payment has been made, and the Leaflets will be sent until then. Afterward, it is hoped your subscriptions will be renewed. Those who have not subscribed, but who wish to continue to receive the Leaflets, will please send in their subscriptions now. Price 12 cents per year single copies, sent monthly; 10 cents per year for five or more copies. Send stamps or postal orders.

Signal Notes.

The sailors frequenting the Sailor's Home in Calcutta took a vote lately on the subject of the drinking bar in the institution, when eighty-four voted for its retention.

In the new time table of the New Brunswick railway, it is stated in effect that any employe found under the influence of liquor, either on or off duty, shall at once be dismissed from the service.

Our readers will find advertised in this number of The Union Signal a valuable book, "Children of the Bible," by Fanny L. Armstrong with an introduction by Frances E. Willard, Pres. N. W. C. T. U.

The brewers and liquor dealers of Zanesville, Ohio, lately petitioned the common council for permission to keep open saloons on Sunday between 12 and 6 o'clock p. m. The question was submitted to the people, who promptly vetoed it by a vote of 2,674 to 1,189.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, the quantity of spirits produced and deposited in distillery warehouses, was greater than the production the previous year by 1,422 431 gallons, and the revenue collected has increased $2,536,610 from spirits, and $1,184,338 from fermented liquors.

Phillips Brooks recently, at a Boston meeting, said: "No word of mine shall ever be lifted up against fanaticism of any kind in the temperance cause. If there is any cause that justifies what appears to be fanaticism, it is this cause. There is nothing more disgusting and disheartening than to hear ease-loving men, living selfish luxurious lives, railing against temperance fanaticism."

Cardinal Manning, in speaking of the liquor traffic, declared: "It is mere mockery to ask us to put down drunkenness by moral and religious means when the legislature facilitates the multiplication of the incitements to temperance on every side. You might as well call upon me, as a captain of a sinking ship, and say: 'Why don't you pump the water out?' When you are scuttling the ship in every direction."

Labor has been improved 100 per cent. in the counties in Georgia, where prohibition has been adopted. The business men are fast becoming prohibitionists, as a matter of business, and now wonder they could not see before that the money they spent in saloons belongs to those doing a legitimate business, and giving value received in return for the cash. Men are now saving money, and looking forward hopefully to the time when they shall own houses and lands for themselves. Speed the day.

An ocean of beer flows from the three fountains of England, Germany and America. England sends forth a stream of 990,000,000 gallons, Germany 900,000,000, and the United States 700,000,000 gallons. The Atlantic and Pacific are never drained, but this ocean of over 25,000,000,000 gallons of beer is annually drained into human stomachs, crazing the brains, corrupting the hearts and damning the souls of millions, all by the consent and under the seal of endorsement of the governments.

The N. Y. Christian Advocate speaks thus pungently of the "insolence of the liquor traffic:" "While demanding protection from the law, it is perpetually evading and breaking the law. It ships goods abroad to avoid the payment of taxation, and sells secretly to evade license fees and police inspection. It bands itself together to dispute the execution and constitutionality of offensive legislation, and shirks its share of the burdens which fall on legitimate traffic. More than great corporations, even, does it scrutinize candidates and employ legislative attorneys. No evidence can convince its agents of the social evils of which it is the parent, or raise them to the comprehension of what society would be were the traffic stamped out. It is manifest that society endures more from the liquor domination than from any other tyranny."

OUR PREMIUM GIFT.

Get You Ready

FOR CHRISTMAS. There will be stockings to fill. Christmas trees to adorn. Absent friends must be remembered, and if you are a Sunday School teacher, under no circumstances can "those scholars" be forgotten. "But what can I get that will be at the same time attractive, interesting and instructive?" Allow us to suggest "MISTLETOE MEMORIES, or what the Poets Say about Christmas." This unique collection of Poems is selected from the writings of H. W. Longfellow, J. G. Whittier, Thomas Hood, Alfred Domett, Charles Mackay, Sir Walter Scott, Jennie Joy, and others. The whole bound in Banner shape, with rich fringe and tassels. The cover of this novelty is printed in nearly eighteen colors (being an almost exact fac simile of landscape studies printed in oil colors on gold pebble board), and ranks exceedingly high as an imported art production of the premier class. The original designs are drawn by H. Maurice Page, and were awarded a Prize of Fifty Pounds Sterling at the Suffolk street (London) Galleries in a competitive exhibit of 6000 entries, by the following eminent judges: J. E. Millais, Marcus Stone and G. A. Storey. For presentation, this art souvenir is vastly superior to a mere Christmas card, as it combines the advantages of both art and literature. Size 4 by 6½ inches. Price, Beautifully Silk Fringed, with Tassels, only 35 cents, post paid. Three copies for $1.00. Mailed in envelope and protector, with privilege of returning if not absolutely satisfactory. ORDER AT ONCE.

Every person sending us $1.75, with one name for The Union Signal (either new subscriber or renewal) before December 1, will upon demand, receive this beautiful Christmas memento FREE. Address THE UNION SIGNAL,
161 LaSalle Street, Chicago, Ill.

Miscellaneous Selections.

FANATICISM AND MODERATION.

A great meeting of church (P. E.) temperance society was held in Grace church, N. Y. September 24, the main address being delivered by the Bishop of Rochester. There are those among us who hold up the "moderation" of this new but efficient temperance society as a point worthy of imitation by all older and more experienced workers. Such would do will to carefully consider the closing utterances of the bishop's remarks. Speaking of the extreme and so-called "fanatical" measure of some temperance workers he said:

"Readers of history will, I think, agreee with me, that every great, philanthropic movement that the world has seen, while it may have been impaired a little because 'fanatical' in demonstration, has hereby been helped ten thousand times more. William Wilberforce was a 'fanatic,' John Howard was a 'fanatic!' And what 'fanatics!' Oh, that you and I might have lived and worked by their sides! You have in this country at the present hour men of like stamp, whom I know you all respect and love. Go with them as far as you can in this magnificent cause; if you can't go as far as they go, at any rate bear with them, honor them, and, I charge you, set your hearts and your minds diligently to the task of appreciating them.

This church temperance cause in which you and I are enlisted, is, I believe, very dear to the heart of the Lord Jesus Christ. No one can do too much for it. Twenty years hence your only wonder will be that you were contented to do so little."

WINE-DRINKING AND CHOLERA.—The fearful ravages of the cholera in Italy again emphasize the importance of abstaining from intoxicating beverages. The national church festivals, occasions of much wine-drinking on the part of the Italian populace, have been found noticeably to increase the mortality from cholera. In Naples the municipal authorities, on the occasion of one of these festivals, which occurred September 7 and 8, ordered the closing of the wine-shops along the line of marching, but despite this precaution there was much drinking, and "the result on the 9 h was a highly increased mortality." Imprudence in eating as well as in drinking is, of course, also a source of peril to health in cholera seasons as at other times; but at the present time in Europe, as on former occasions, it is again being demonstrated beyond question that the people whose bodies are most permeated with alcoholic poison are also most exposed to cholera mortality.

SIR HENRY THOMPSON, F. R. C. S., writes on the evils of intoxicants: "The result of observations during twenty years of hospital and private practice in every rank, is the conviction of my mind that there is no greater source of evil, moral and physical, in this country, than the use of alcoholic beverages. By this I do not mean the extreme indulgence which produces drunkenness. I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of the most painful and dangerous maladies which come under my notice to the ordinary and daily use of fermented drink, taken in the quantity which is conventionally deemed moderate."

THE Prohibitionists have bought a column in the Franklin County (Ill.) Chronicle. The W. C. T. U. will also do aggressive work in this county.

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Worth Thinking Of.

What Ayer's Cherry Pectoral does:—

It prevents the growth, to serious illness, of a dangerous class of diseases that begin as mere trivial ailments, and are too apt to be neglected as such.
It alleviates even the most desperate cases of pulmonary diseases, and affords to the patient a last and the only chance for restoration to health.
It breaks up a cold, and stops a cough more speedily, certainly, and thoroughly than any other medicine.
It spares mothers much painful anxiety about their children, and saves the little ones' lives.
It cures all lung and throat diseases that can be reached by human aid.

How Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Does Such Good.

It expels the mucus from the throat and the air passages of the head, and cleanses the mucous membrane.
It allays inflammation, puts a stop to tickling in the throat and coughing, and enables the patient to rest.
It heals sore throat, reduces the swollen tonsils, and restores natural tone to the affected vocal cords.
It soothes to natural and refreshing slumber, during which Nature regains strength to combat disease.
It clears out and heals diseased air cells in the lungs, and helps Nature to repair the waste made by the corrosion of pulmonary disease.
It puts a stop to the cankerous decay of Catarrh.

Why Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is so Perfect a Medicine.

Because it is a scientifically ordered compound, of great potency, the product of years of study, observation, and experience in the treatment of throat and lung diseases.
Because it is prepared from the purest forms of the drugs employed in it, chemically combined by a process of such perfection and accuracy as would be unattainable, even by the most skillful pharmacist, dealing with small quantities.
Because it is not only the most effective medicine for the uses to which it is designed, but, owing to the enormous quantities in which it is made, is sold at so low a price that it is placed within the reach of every household.
Because it is an active curative agent, that must be taken by drops, as prescribed in the directions accompanying each bottle, and not a mere palliative syrup that may be swallowed by mouthfuls.

Where Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Stands Before the World.

It is popularly known to be a medicine that has cured laryngeal, bronchial, and pulmonary affections where all others had failed.
It is a favorite household remedy to-day with people whose lives were saved by it, when they were young, a generation ago.
It has held the first-place in public estimation for nearly half a century in this country, and is more and more highly appreciated, year after year, both at home and abroad.
It evokes daily, from all over the world, expressions of gratitude for lives saved by its use.
It is everywhere recommended by reputable druggists, who know, from conversations with their patrons, and from their own experience, how almost magical are its effects for good.
It is regularly prescribed by many physicians of the best standing, and is recommended by Professors of Medical Colleges to their students, as invaluable for all diseases of the throat and lungs.

A tiny maid in satin shoon,
Danced beneath the Christmas tree,
Singing, singing, singing;
Clear as the lark's was the merry tune,
Sung by the Maiden Wee,
Ringing, ringing, ringing.

Listen! bend low y ear,
And the words of the lassie's song you'll hear:
"O, the birds sing sweet o'er the summer flowers,
And the birds sing sweet in the Christmas bowers.
But the birds that sing on the Christmas tree
Sing songs of love for you and me,
And the notes all change into loving words
For the gifts we see are the Christmas birds.

"Driven from Sea to Sea."

A Story of Vital Interest to every American Citizen.

Sent to any address by mail, postage paid, for $1 50. 234 pp., large 12mo., cloth, 30 Illusations.

Chaplain C. C. McCabe says: "If this book could have a million readers it would help to make such crimes impossible beneath the stars and stripes."

"It deserves a place by the side of Uncle Tom's Cabin."—Geo. W. Julian.

David Swing compares it with some of the best English authors and gives it the highest place.

Gen. B. F. Butler sent a copy to President Arthur and said: "I think it will do the same service to the country in regard to the misuse of our land system that 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' did with regard to slavery."

Helen Wilmans, formerly one of the editors of the Overland Monthly, says: "I think it will come to be called, 'The Great American Classic.' I never in my life read anything whose every page and line and word carries such conviction."

Congressman Shiveley says: "It doubtless will cause a sensation deeper and more profound than that produced by Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The Woman's World says: "It unquestionably is the great work of the age."

The New York Daily Graphic says: "The book is intensely interesting."

The Weekly Magazine says: "Clear, elegant, and forcible in style. The interest awakened is compared to the stirring effects produced by Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Walter H. Sharpe, formerly editor of the New York Advocate, writes: "Its style equals that of Dickens; its logic overwhelms and its points are convincing."

WITH AN ELEGANT WARDROBE OF 32 PIECES.

Consisting of Reception Dresses, Evening Dresses Street Costumes, Morning Dresses, Cloaks, Hats and Bonnets, Hand Satchels, Sun Umbrellas, Music Portfolios, Overcoats, Sailor Suits, Military Suits and Drums, Street Jackets and Dress Suits, Watering Place Suits, Traveling Costumes, &c. These dresses and suits in this elegant wardrobe represent Nine Different Colors, and they are lovely beyond description, several of them being from designs by Worth, of Paris. There is one little Boy and two Girl dolls in each set, with pretty faces and life-like, beautiful features, and their wardrobe being so extensive that it takes hours to dress and undress them in their different suits. Every child, and in fact every mother that has seen them go into ecstasies over them. Children will get more real enjoyment out of a set of these French Dolls than out of articles that cost $10. Every person that buys them sends immediately for more. A Lady writes us that her little boy and girl played for five hours with a set of these French dolls and they felt very bad indeed to think that they must stop and eat their supper, and if mothers only knew how much amusement there is in these dolls they would not only give 12 cents but 50 cents for them rather than not have them. Sample set, consisting of three dolls with their wardrobe of 32 pieces by mail, postpaid, for 12 cents. 2 sets 6 dolls, 64 pieces, for 20c. Thirteen sets for $1. If you send for one or two sets we will send our Secret Book 6 and Full Directions how you can make more than One Hundred Dollars a month out of these dolls. This is an opportunity too valuable for you to lose.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 48. CHICAGO, DECEMBER 11, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

PLEASANT acknowledgments come to us of the indebtedness of the workers in British Columbia to the National W. C. T. U. for its three commissioned helpers in that promising field—Miss Willard, Mrs. Foster and Mrs. Leavitt.

THE Vermont W. C. T. U. has recorded its protest in the state legislature, against the passage of a license law which has been introduced in the lower house.

DR. NORMAN KERR adds his testimony to that of Dr. Richardson concerning untruthfulness as a prominent characteristic of the dipsomaniac. He says that habitual excessive indulgence in strong drink will turn the most truthful persons into unblushing falsifiers, and that the overthrow of the truthful quality is most marked in women who thus indulge.

VICTOR HUGO tersely settles the woman question, for himself at least, and apparently for all Paris which appealed to his decision. He says: "To lock up women or to give them liberty? That is the dilemma, I am thinking. The locked-up woman—mystery. The free woman—hope. Therefore I press your royal hand."

THE Plenary Council of the Catholic church which has just been held in Baltimore, gave much attention to total abstinence and prohibition. Bishops Ireland and Spaulding of the west were ably re-inforced by men of eminence in the east, who gave unequivocal testimony to the value of temperance work.

THE Boston Traveller tells us that the largest cargo of New England rum ever shipped from the United States, recently left the port of Boston for Africa. We used to hear of missionaries on deck, and rum in the hold of sea-going craft, but the times of this ignorance were supposed to be well past. Now, however, that the great interior of the dark continent is being opened by missionary explorations, His Satanic Majesty's most potent plenipotentiary gets appointed to the new court. Men of God, and of the church, "a little more grape" on the enemy, and less on defenders of the faith!

IN this connection it is pleasant to note, and pleasant 'tis that there is something pleasant to be noted, that the African Trading Company of the Zambesi and the Shire, will not allow liquors transported in their ships. These heathen shame us, brethren. Converted to God, they will no longer be allies of the devil. Madagascar, only half a century out of barbarism, puts our Christian nation to the blush in its rigid prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors. The noble answer of its ambassadors to one of England's chancellors, is yet ringing in our ears: "Better an empty exchequer than a degraded people."

THE late report of the Commissioners of Internal Revenue has much of interest for temperance readers. And while we cannot yet boast or congratulate ourselves as England does, concerning the material reduction of the revenue from the liquor traffic, we can note the fact that the increase in production and withdrawals during the past year does not bring up the total production to that of 1882. Last year a decrease of nearly 32,000,000 gallons of spirits was noted, while in the year ending June 30, 1884, there has been an increase of about one and a half million gallons. An increase of nearly double this amount is reported however in the withdrawals for consumption, but there is this encouragement that last year, the tax paid for withdrawals was more than a million dollars over and above this. These are gains visible to the naked eye.

MAINE needs statutory amendment of her prohibitory laws, says The Christian Mirror, in the following items:

"1. To put the premises where liquor is proved to be illegally sold or kept for sale within the custody of the state, holding them responsible for the fines and costs levied against them and liable to confiscation, as vessels are for smuggling goods.

"2. Extending the same liabilities to railroads, steamboats, sailing vessels, express companies, and all other vehicles, public or private, which knowingly bring liquors for unlawful purposes into the state.

"3. Making the fitting up of a room in the manner and appearance of a liquor saloon, and the show of bottles, empty or containing colored liquids, as a sign that liquors may there be had or as a decoy, prima facie, proof of a violation of the law.

"4. Increasing the penalties for a first conviction to such amount, both by fine and imprisonment, as shall be effective for the purpose, without the necessity of alleging a second conviction.

"5. Holding all persons in apparent charge of a place where liquors are illegally kept, or by their presence and countenance aiding and abetting the same, as prima facie, particeps criminis, and liable, unless they can prove they were not there for an unlawful purpose, to arrest and punishment for the same."

These are good sign posts for the traveler bound prohibition-ward, in every state.

THE unfair count and the ballot box theft seem not confined to United States politics. Recent events show that over the border in Canada, political human nature is not too good for this sort of injustice and robbery. For example, two counties of the province of Ontario had petitioned by the signatures of 4712 bona fide electors, 500 more than were required by law, for the submission of the Scott act, or prohibitory law, to the voters of the counties. The petition was deposited in the sheriff's office, according to a legal provision, for public inspection prior to being forwarded to the secretary of state. A deal of public inspection resulted in the abstraction of a number of the petition sheets containing over one thousand names. This will probably necessitate the withdrawal of the petition, and the preparation of a new one, the time occupied by which, together with the preliminary notices that must be given, will throw the putting in force of the act if passed, into another license year.

In many ways and by curious processes, the average voter is to learn that prohibition officials are an essential factor in the enactment and enforcement of prohibitory laws. Men put in place and power by brewing and distilling interests will never be safe guardians of petitions that have all the legal authority necessary to the precipitation and inception of prohibitory law.

IT is a great help sometimes, in the heat of battle, to find how it is in the opposite camps, and to be able to discern whether courage and hope, or fear and trepidation animate the breasts of those who are on that side. At a critical time in the assault on Fort Donelson, when there was a lull in the fiery storm, Gen. Grant, accompanied by an orderly, went around to make a personal reconnoissance of the enemy's works. Seeing at a short distance from their path a prostrate confederate, only recently killed, he said to his aid: "Go and bring me his haversack." Opening it and looking in he said: "Three days' rations; they are going to run!" He immediately returned, and sent to Gen. Buckner the famous demand for an unconditional surrender, in default of which the attack would be reopened at once on all his lines.

This advantage has of late been given us. While on one hand sorely disappointed politicians, by a thousand voices at once, are savagely dinning into our ears that the Prohibition vote has set back our cause, some say a decade, others a quarter of a century; on the other hand, those we are directly warring against have "spoken out in meeting" among themselves, revealing the true inwardness of a far different condition of things. They understand the situation as being fraught with danger to the traffic, danger of the most alarming proportions, "a cloud in the horizon" portentous of the swift-coming storm of desolating destruction which shall lay them waste. Their utterances are a trumpet blast, sounded in desperate earnestness to rouse and rally the forces.

BESSIE'S QUESTION.

ALICE F. C. REID.

Ah! my brown-eyed Bess, with your golden hair;
So you sometimes wonder if you shall bear
Out of this life so free and fair,
Some of the glories of earth and air,
Some of the splendors of sea and shore,
A part of your soul for the evermore;
And you ask, my Bess, with your wistful eyes,
If out of your heart, once seen, there dies
The sun-filled rapture of evening skies.

If you are purer because of the flight
Of snow-flakes into the silent night;
Or, if you are better because you have known
How the soft green mosses enfold the stone;
Or stronger because of the wild, low cry
Of the north wind under the midnight sky;
Or more patient because of the silver feet
Of the rain that falls in the dusty street.

Do you wonder if vainly, the love that lies
Beyond the gates of the purple skies,
Into the heart of the winter snows,
Dropped this day like a royal rose?
O, poet soul! In the sweet to come
Will the voices you loved on earth be dumb,
Will the golden gloom of the moonlit sea
Have no deeper meaning for you and me?

The gleam in the blue of the morning star,
The song of the surf on the harbor bar,
The flash of a sail on a sunny sea,
Or the face of a flower that has rocked a bee,
Are these forgotten and leave no mark?
Do they drift forever into the dark,
And leave no trace on your longing soul,
Where the waves of death shall above you roll?

O, dreamful heart! When you meet the night
You shall bear some part of the radiant light
That has flooded this day and made it bright.
And when you shall stand on the hills untrod,
Afar in the morning land of God,
You shall know that the brightness and visions sweet
Are these dreams and thoughts that have seemed so fleet,
Only less tear-dimmed and more complete;
For love will live tho' the day has fled,
Like a sweet white rose in a hand that's dead!

IN THE HEART OF A TOWN.

ELIZABETH CUMMINGS.

It chanced that for fifteen months I lived in apartments overlooking the busiest square in a village of about five thousand inhabitants, and it has occurred to me, that as I saw glimpses of life there that I never saw before and have never seen since, some bits from the panorama that then passed before my eyes, may be interesting to women sheltered in quiet homes on spacious and retired avenues.

It was autumn when I established myself, and one day late in October, just at dusk, I was startled by a wild, shrill cry. Running to my window, I saw for the first time in my life, an intoxicated woman. It was raining. The streets were icy and the wind was blowing a gale. The woman's old calico gown left her bare feet and ankles exposed. Her arms were nearly bare, too, for her sleeves were in tatters from scuffling with the officer, who was, as gently as he could, trying to get her to the town lock-up. She wore neither shawl nor bonnet, and her gray hair hung disheveled upon her thin shoulders. The moment the officer loosed his hold of her she flung herself upon the pavement. When he lifted her up and attempted to lead her she kicked and beat him. At last securing her hands, he tucked her under one arm and quickly bore her out of sight, shrieking and cursing.

I cannot make this dreary and horrible picture in words what it is in my remembrance. The gray sky, the sodden earth, the driving rain, and that shameful, piteous figure, in which the dreary hour centered, I shall carry with me so long as memory lasts.

One bitter January day I was drawn to my window by the jeering shouts of boys, who alternately cried, "Brace up, Gran'pa!" and, "Go it, Bobtail!" and other phrases of like import. An old wagon, drawn by an old gray horse that wore a harness which was a marvel of rope tying, was passing. An old man sat in the vehicle. His mouth was half open, his hands rested idly on his knees. It was easy to see that the horse was carrying his master home. He was acquitting himself of his responsibility well, and went along at that queer trot old horses fall into when left to themselves, and the last I saw of the old man he was still jolting from side to side, in the fashion known among children as "going limber".

Not long after this, in going across the street to the postoffice, I passed a stairway which I had always supposed led to an innocent cellar. An elderly woman and a young man, perhaps twenty years old, were struggling together near it. The woman had her arms tight about the boy's neck, "For the love of God, Johnny dear, don't go down there again!" she exclaimed in an anguished whisper, as I came up. The boy had evidently been drinking. With an oath he violently wrenched himself free and hurried down the stairs. The woman, her lips bleeding, her face white as death, would have fallen if I had not caught her. It was—the boy's mother.

At the hotel table at which I sat was a rosy-cheeked young man of German parentage. He was perfectly well bred, very well informed, and was doing a good business. Soon after I first met him he married an interesting and well brought up young lady, of German descent. But Mr. Carl, I will call him that, was entangled in bad company, and not many weeks after his wedding, it was whispered that he came home one evening—drunk. Early in March, one Sunday evening, I heard Mrs. Carl coaxing her husband to go to church with her. It was Lent and she was a devout church woman. He gave her some trifling answer, and went out. About half-past nine o'clock, happening to pass through one of the side halls, I saw Mrs. Carl standing at a window. Her figure looked so dejected, I went up to her with the intention of saying something friendly, that she might feel that though she was among strangers, warm human hearts were beating all around her. Involuntarily following the direction of her steady gaze, for she did not heed me, I looked down into a basement window across the alley, and saw her husband deep in a game of cards, while just beyond him glistened a bar.

It would take too long to tell the days of wretchedness I saw poor Mrs. Carl spend. She was a loving woman, and a pious woman, but she was young, and perhaps not overwise. (It is easy to say one has not been wise when you see how his endeavors have turned out.) She was about to become a mother, and no doubt her heart cried out to her that she must save her husband; so one day when she saw him go from his shop to the most fashionable, and therefore, perhaps, the worst, drinking place in town, she put on her bonnet, it was her wedding bonnet, and followed him. He had been drinking before that day, and just as he raised a brimming glass to his lips, she laid her hand upon his arm. "Don't drink it, Carl," she said, gently. "Please come home with me."

Nature had not made Mr. Carl a fiend, but his answer to her was to drain his glass to the dregs, and then, setting it down he called for raw brandy. The clerk hesitated. The hardened frequenters of the place held their breath. One could have heard a pin drop. "Go home," snarled Mr. Carl, turning upon his wife with a look a bull-dog would shrink from. "I'll follow you when I get ready."

Mrs. Carl was a lady and without a word she went. Expostulation only increased Mr. Carl's determination, and after swallowing about a pint of brandy, he followed his wife.

It was a perfect day in early June. There was the perfume of young leaves and the songs of birds in the air, and every window was open. Mr. Carl locked the doors behind him, but he could not lock people's ears, and for two dreadful hours, while he ransacked profanity and foulness for words in which to abuse his wife, every woman within hearing wept and shivered, while at his doors, two sturdy policemen listened, ready to burst in and protect his wife from physical violence.

Not long after that they went to house-keeping, and what torments Mrs. Carl endured in the silence of her home I do not know, but the last time I saw him was at her funeral. He had lost his business, and subsisted, somehow, unknown. They had drifted back to the middle of the town, and had kept house in a few rooms over a butcher's shop. His rosy cheeks were purple. His shapely form had become a huge bulk. He was a sot.

The last of these glimpses from my windows, which I shall give, is what I saw one election day. The local option statute had been passed by the legislature, and one of the parties had nominated for town and county offices, men avowedly total abstinence in principle. The other party had nominated men notoriously the reverse. There were twenty Indian families in the town-ship. It rained—as it has since, important election days, and fearing that the braves would not brave the damp, even in the interest of whisky, the anti-temperance party sent carriages for them, and saw that they were well fortified with fire water before they approached the polls, which, by the way, were just opposite my windows. The pavement had been torn up from the square, and it was a small lake of red mud. One after another the Indians voted. At last came a very fat, very dirty, and very disreputable brave, popularly named "Snotty". I do not know that he had any other title. Two ardent temperance haters steadied him on his legs, and he deposited his ballot. That over, they let him shift for himself. After tacking between the gutter and the shops a short distance, he zigzagged to the square, and sat down in the softest puddle he could find. The law again took cognizance of him, and he was pryed up and carried to jail. The Indians acting no doubt according to their light, voted against temperance, solid, and it may be of interest to mothers to know that the whisky party prevailed, by less than a dozen votes.

The older I grow, the more certain I am that the simple truth about some man or woman, living, perhaps, just around the corner, is more dreadful, or more beautiful, than any story conjured up even in the brains of a poet, and so I feel that no words of mine can add anything to this recital of what I saw in the heart of a town.

ONE NIGHT IN A BAR ROOM.

The New York Herald recently detailed a reporter to spend one night in a well-appointed, so-called respectable dram shop. The one chosen was situated in a block of five houses, three of which were occupied by saloons. It was in a neighborhood of fifty houses, twenty-two of which were given up to the sale of intoxicating drink.

It was ten o'clock in the evening. The saloon was in full activity. All the billiard and pool tables were in use; there were few vacant seats at the side tables. At the table nearest to the bar two young men were playing pool. One of them, a sallow, scorbutic youth, bore the unmistakable stamp of the bar-tender; the other was apparently a young workingman imbued with an ambition to become a "sporting character." They were playing for a small sum of money on the game and for the drinks. The bar-tender, an expert with the cue, was just playing badly enough to lose one game out of four and to encourage his companion to go on. Watching the game was an elderly man, with curly gray hair, a reddish mustache and goatee, and a withered skin. He wore a dark suit of clothes, old, threadbare and not very clean. He was making comments on the game as it proceeded, his remarks having always a favorable leaning toward the young workman. A sad-eyed stranger who had sauntered up took a chair close at hand.

"By Moses, but that was tough luck, wasn't it, Colonel!" exclaimed the bar-keeper as he missed, with malice prepense, a tolerably easy shot.

The elderly man addressed, winked at the speaker, behind the other player's back, as he retorted with a drawl:

"W-a-a-l! A miss is as good as a mile."

The young workman drew back his cue and aimed to put the twelve ball in the upper left hand pocket. He failed miserably, but the twelve ball struck with force, flew around the table, and, carroming off another ball, lodged in the right hand side pocket.

"Bravo!" was the exclamation with which the Colonel hailed this most palpable "scratch." "That's one of the best shots I have seen in a month. Don't tell me, my boy, that you did not try for it. I saw you calculating on that carrom before you made the shot. Well done, I say."

Luck now favored the young man. Before again missing he pocketed two more balls and was within a few points of being out. The bartender, seeing the chances were desperate, at last brought his skill to bear. In a masterly fashion he pocketed every ball except one, which was left in a difficult position. The other player aimed at it, sent it flying round the table, and left it almost in front of a pocket. An instant later the bartender had disposed of it.

"Too bad, too bad!" exclaimed the Colonel; "never mind, my boy, you'll have better luck next time."

"Guess I shan't play any more," remarked the young fellow, consulting his small change. "He's got too much luck to-night."

As the bar-keeper of the saloon approached to serve the drinks due on the game, the Colonel edged toward the young man, eyeing him with a furtive, anxious glance. To an observant eye the Colonel's little game became very apparent. The Colonel was angling for an invitation to drink.

"Mighty hot in here, seems to me," he remarked. "I feel all played out. Don't know what makes me feel so dry, either."

"Will you wet your bill, Colonel?" asked the young fellow, airily.

"Wa-al," responded the Colonel, with an air of hesitation, "I-ah don't care if I do. Bring me the old dose, Mr. Bartender, with a little bitters in it."

After the drinks had been consumed and the young workingman had left, the Colonel and the other man turned toward each other:—

"You came out pretty well on that racket, didn't you?" remarked the Colonel. "How much did you make?"

"Only two and a quarter," returned the other.

"You did not give him rope enough. You played too strong. You ought to have let him win that last game."

"I guess he blew in about all he had."

"Wa-al, you've done pretty well. I guess you'd better set up the drinks, Tony."

"Not much. Go and play some other sucker for them. You've rung in pretty well on the drinks already, seems to me."

"Bosh, man," retorted the Colonel, with an air of injured dignity. "What do I care for the drinks? I just took them, sir, for—ah—the benefit of the house."

Rising indignantly, the Colonel walked away and made his exit by the "family entrance."

At this moment two young men advanced to the pool table and began making preparations for playing. One of them, a tall, good looking young fellow, with a brown mustache, remarked to his companion:

"Remember, Frank, just one game for a quarter and the drinks. I shan't play any more. The little one is pretty sick and I promised Lil I'd be home early."

"All right, Will," answered the other carelessly as the game opened.

All this time there was a succession of customers at the "Family Entrance." Several of them came back at repeated intervals. Noticeable among them was a pretty, fair haired little girl who presented herself with a large, glazed water pitcher, which she carried to be filled with lager.

"Will you play a game of cribbage or casino?" asked the sad-eyed man of the Colonel, who had drawn near.

"I never play cards, sir," answered the Colonel stiffly.

"Will you have a drink with me?" added the sad-eyed man, abashed.

The Colonel eyed the speaker slowly for an instant, but seeing the proposition was made in the utmost good faith he rubbed his hands softly one over the other, assumed an unctuous smile and answered:

"Wa'al, I don't care if I do."

The pool players concluded their second game. They were both pretty expert and played rapidly, both being evidently fond of the amusement. At the conclusion of each game they drank freely.

"That makes game and game," remarked the player with the brown mustache. "You claimed your revenge after I beat you on the first game. Now we're quits. I guess I'd better go home."

"O, let's play a third game to decide the thing," answered the other.

The young man addressed hesitated a minute, then took up his cue and went on.

A few minutes later the door of the "Family Entrance" was softly opened and a pale young woman with a somewhat careworn face put in her head and shoulders. She beckoned to the pool player with the brown mustache. The latter stepped toward her.

"Oh, Will," said the woman, "you promised you'd come home before this. Do come, right away. The little one don't seem to be getting any better."

"All right, Lil," answered the husband, half impatiently, and half good humoredly; "I'll be through here in a minute. I'll be right along—just a few minutes—run away, dear."

The woman reluctantly withdrew. Once more the little girl with the water pitcher appeared.

"They seem to be having great times tonight over at Mrs. Cavanagh's," remarked the Colonel, nodding toward the child. "That's about the tenth time that young'un has been here with the growler."

Then, bending over toward the little girl, he asked:

"What's going on up to the house tonight, Kittie?"

"Sister Sue's dead," answered the child, "and some of the neighbors has dropped in."

"Ah!" remarked the Colonel in a low tone and casting a side glance at the pitcher. "There'll be a nice rumpus over at Cavanagh's before the night is out, I'll bet. This drink's a terrible thing, isn't it?"

"It is, indeed," replied the sad-eyed man. "But, by the way, Colonel, won't you take something?"

"Wa'all—ah—I don't care if I do," answered the Colonel, with an air of indecision.

The pool players came at this moment to the end of another game.

"The drinks are on me!" cried the brown-mustached man to the bar-keeper, as he knocked impatiently on the floor with his cue. "Let's have 'em quick. Great Cæsar!" turning to his companion, "you won that game by a frightful scratch. You've got to give me my revenge. Bet you double this time I beat you."

"All right," answered the other.

They resumed their play. The luck ran badly against the brown-mustached man. He lost two games in succession and began to show signs of rising ill-temper. He kept on, however, with blind obstinacy, bent on retrieving his ill-fortune and winning back his money. When his friend banteringly advised him to stop and try his luck some other time he angrily insisted upon continuing. The drinks they had taken were telling on both men.

Again the pale young woman presented herself at the "Family Entrance." Her husband ordered her to go home.

A very tall, slim young man, in a short jacket and without a coat, entered the saloon, and, stepping up to the bar, put down a small paper parcel which he held in his hand. He engaged the bar-keeper in a low whisper. The man's manner was full of earnestness, as if he were speaking on some subject of the greatest moment. The Colonel watched him with an amused smile.

"There's a pretty bad case of what drink will do with a man," he said, keeping his eye fixed on the new arrival. "There's a man who is as bright and smart a fellow as you'd meet in a day's march. He's utterly lost through drink, though. He's a mighty handy fellow with his pencil, and does something in the line of designing, I thing. He writes, too, a good many of those queer patent medicine advertisements. He can't keep any situation, but he frequently gets special orders, and then he makes a hatful of money. He'll spend it all in a twinkling, drinking himself and treating others. Perhaps a couple of nights later he'll sleep in a bar-room chair because he hasn't got enough money to pay for his lodging. It's surprising how liberal he is with his money in treating and how stingy he is in other ways. I once knew a man ask him for a quarter to get a meal with. He refused, but offered the man a drink. The other fellow seeing he couldn't get anything better, took the drink. They got to talking and drank until they were both blind drunk. This man must have s[pent] the other fellow's drinks, and yet he [had] a ten cent piece to get a meal with. D[o] that a man who lushes always likes to hav[e] drink with him?

"It's queer what drink will do with a man. This fellow is now trying to get the bar-tender to accept those woollen socks he's just taken out of that parcel for a drink. Now, perhaps you'd like to know the history of those socks. Well, they were knit for him by his mother—such a nice old lady! Fancy the trouble the poor old soul must have had to make those socks, and now this fellow wants to trade them just for one drink. I know all about it, because he lodges just at present up stairs, and I was at the desk when she brought a lot of things for him this morning. I met him in the saloon on the corner trying to dispose of some of the other things a while ago."

This conversation between the bar-keeper and the young man ended by the former impatiently transferring the paper parcel to a receptacle behind the bar and passing over the whiskey bottle. The young man filled his glass almost to the brim. The bar-keeper whisked the bottle angrily off the counter.

"Why don't yer swaller the bottle?" he snarled.

The young man assumed a conciliatory smile, and hastily escaped to a side table with the precious draught.

It was now long past midnight, and yet the bar-room was in full activity. Parties of carousers sat at the various tables, a few playing cards, others noisily merry. The two pool players were still at the game. Luck was relentlessly turned against the brown-mustached man; he was losing game after game in succession. His face was flushed with anger and drink. All his natural good humor had disappeared.

Suddenly the door of the "Family Entrance" was opened and he pale-faced wife again beckoned to her husband to step into the hallway and speak to her. He obeyed the summons, leaving, in his impatience, the door half open behind him. From where the Colonel and his companion sat, the two figures could be seen and their conversation overheard. The man began angrily:

"What brings you here again?"

"Oh, Will!" exclaimed the wife, "aren't you ever coming home?"

"Not till I get good and ready."

"But, when the child is sick and I am so lonely——"

"Don't bother me. Get out——go home."

"You've been drinking too much, Will. Come with me, do. Remember there's the doctor's bill and the rent, too, coming due in a few days."

"Curse you; will you get out of here?"

The man, furious at her persistence, raised his hand menacingly. The wife heeded not the threat. She again began to plead. He cut her short.

"Go, I tell you."

"But, Will——"

"Won't you go."

"For pity's sake, listen——"

Blinded with rage, the man brought down his hand with cruel force upon her face. His fingers struck her lips, cutting them against her teeth. She staggered under the force of the blow. She put her handkerchief to her lips to stanch the blood and looked up at him with a pitiful look in her brown eyes. He seized her by the shoulders and pushed her toward the outer door of the hall. She made no resistance. She walked off, holding her handkerchief to her face with a dazed and helpless air.

The husband returned to the pool table, but the play did not continue much longer. As soon as he had lost the game he threw down his cue.

"I don't feel like playing any more," he cried. "I'm going over to Long John's place; there's some boxing going on there tonight and I feel like taking it in. Besides, I expect to meet Watson over there. He's been talking against me and I'll either make him take back what he's said or I'll break his infernal —— —— neck, by ——. Will you go with me?"

The other, flushed with liquor, eagerly assented.

"Watson's a dirty loafer," he replied. "He wants a good licking. I'll go with you."

Gulping down another drink, the two started out.

"They'll wind up in the station house, likely as not,"

, musingly, "with a charge against ranging all the way from simple to murder. Ah! drink is a terrible old toper, whose system was so thoroughly soaked with liquor that drink seemed to have no effect upon him, began to discourse upon the evils of intemperance as he toyed with his freshly primed glass. Without apparently being in the least conscious of the inconsistency between his actions and his words, he went on with a relation which, in the vivid experiences it embodied, was as powerful an indictment against alcohol as could well be framed.

The Colonel stopped speaking. He might well have continued, with his own case for the text. Here was an old man, gray and wrinkled, every cent of whose meagre earnings was offered up on the shrine of rum, and who was slowly drifting into the hospital, the asylum, or one of those squalid Mulberry street dens—drink's lowest levels—where the insatiable thirst of the drunkard is pandered to with liquor at three cents per can.

As the Colonel raised his glass, the little girl with the large pitcher again appeared at the "Family Entrance."

The pitcher was broken. Part of the handle was missing and a large piece was chipped out of the spout.

"How did this happen?" asked the Colonel.

"Mother and Mrs. Connell quarrelled and got to fighting, sir," answered the child. "The looking-glass and the table and the clock is broke too."

"Just as I thought," muttered the Colonel.

"How much?" asked the bar-keeper, taking the broken pitcher.

"Fill it full," replied the child."

The Colonel was about to speak again, but was interrupted by the noise of three men seated at a table a short distance away. These three persons, who had drunk themselves into a bestial state of intoxication, rose unsteadily from their seats and indulged in boisterous horse-play. They amused themselves by repeatedly knocking hats from each other's heads. Finally one of them, a callow youth barely out of his teens, threw his own hat on the ground and jumped on it until it was crushed into a limp and shapeless mass. Then he sat down and his mood softened.

"You're a gentleman, Jim," he hiccupped, addressing his companion. "I'm a gentleman. Jack's a gentleman, damned if he isn't."

This inane utterance he repeated over and over again. The bar-keeper came forward and requested him not to speak so loud.

"Fill 'em up again," was the only response he made.

Then he became sickingly sentimental. He threw his arm around "Jack's" neck and wept drunken, maudlin tears. He became almost hysterical. The spectacle was an abhorrent one. Utterly disgusted the Colonel's companion hastily withdrew.

Outside the air came pure and fresh and cool, after the clammy atmosphere of the saloon. The city was asleep on the bosom of night. The great marts of commerce, the vast avenues of trade, the halls of justice, education, science and the arts, the noble institute across the way, the churches—all were deserted, silent and dark, the saloons only were in full activity. Drink, relentless potentate, was alone exacting from its slaves unceasing service.

A JOURNEY OF THANKSGIVING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—For two weeks I have been working in Kentucky and Ohio. Flourishing unions are being organized at Paducah and Owensboro, two chief towns of the former state. Mrs. Wells, of Indiana, is to follow me in the places visited, and a dozen or more beside. The response of earnest women, leaders in all forms of Christian benevolence, in the towns named, was equal to anything I have seen, in ten years' work. Mrs. Col. George W. Bain, went with me "part of the way" and I greatly enjoyed her gentle companionship.

In Ohio, the W. C. T. U. is wisely "biding its time." The attitude of most of our good women is described in the following extract from one of our leaders at the east, whose influence is second to none. She says in a private note to me:

"I am confident the wise thing for our W. C. T. U. in the next few months is to be still. There is an immense spiritual power in stillness. I never weary of that philosophic saying 'all things come to him who knows how to will and to be silent'."

This is the same as Isaiah's blessed words:

"In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." "And the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."

"Somehow I wish every body could just be still everywhere, for just a little while, after all the clamor and strife. We can, at least. Let us set a good example! The words, 'Be still, and know that I am God,' come to me as God's message to the National W. C. T. U. in all its borders, at this time. 'Let the heathen rage;' they do not harm but help the cause. Only let them have all the raging to themselves."

And "if the people imagine a vain thing," they will see the mistake and do us justice later on.

In Hamilton, our local union is keeping quiet in deeds as well as words, but that is no new fashion, for it is young and never had more than a handful of brave hearts with very little knowledge of our methods, and lost sight of in an overwhelming foreign population. Brewers dominate the community and rule the school board, to say nothing of the general politics.

In Wilmington, I had a charming home with Mr. and Mrs. Clevenger, the latter a daughter of the late Judge Harlan. Here I met Miss Rachel McGregor, the president of our local union, who gave me most interesting accounts of her father's persecutions in early days when some political parties were younger than they are now. He stood by their flickering fortunes and helped with his strong lungs to blow them to a flame. No petty indignity that could be devised was spared him. He was obliged to keep his children out of the public schools on account of the annoyance to which they were subject; he was laughed at for "throwing his vote away," "staying forever with the minority," "voting in the air," "putting bad men in power," etc., the very same expressions being employed then as now. At Lebanon, I was entertained at President Holbrook's, whose name is famous in educational annals and whose normal school has, in the last forty years, attracted 75,000 pupils. But that visit merits a letter by itself. Mr. and Mrs. Prof. Roark, and many others whom I met, interested me greatly, by reason of their cultured individuality. The "Woman's Club" (a literary society) showed me great kindness and "I was glad I came." On the road to Portsmouth, all of Thanksgiving day, busy with New Testament and pen, I have seldom spent the anniversary more pleasantly. I was so glad to be an American and a white ribbon woman; to have part and lot with the bravest, gentlest, most invincible band of patriots that live; to behold the vision of a really Christian government and to believe that in my lifetime the liquor traffic shall be made an outlaw, an Ishmaelite, a social pariah upon the face of the earth! To my own heart I give this verse, the text of a sermon which made an indelible impression upon me twenty-five years ago, and let me pass it on to you, sisters beloved, "like bread at sacrament."

"Study to be quiet." This does not mean inaction. Let us go on with our work in all practicable ways, but with great quietness of spirit and of tongue.

Always yours in the faith, FRANCES E. WILLARD.

IN THE TERRITORIES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The past three weeks, mostly spent in New Mexico and Arizona, have done what I thought was impossible, deepened my love for the W. C. T. U. and my appreciation of its work.

It seems to be the heaven ordained instrument for the salvation of those frontier towns. There the Catholic element largely predominates, and there also whisky rules supreme. In every town we find a cluster of feeble Protestant churches. The overwhelming odds against them ought to make them stand firm, united against the common foe. But each church is so weak that its own fight for life absorbs all its energies, and makes it jealous of its neighbor. Hence there is little concentrated religious effort, indeed, little aggressive Christianity. Sabbath-breaking and intemperance are the great sins of the land, but, with few exceptions, the churches had seemed powerless against them because of their absorption in their individual struggle for existence and because of their lack of unity. The great need was something to organize and unify Christian effort. This is just the work of the W. C. T. U., the work it is doing wherever a union is planted throughout the New West.

Take, for example, Trinidad; not two years ago a union was organized there, few in number and weak in influence they felt themselves to be, but strong in God, their Helper. Trinidad, like most frontier towns, knew no Sunday, saloon and business houses open all day long, the former doing, if possible, more business than on week days, and as a consequence there were more fights on the streets. The women of the W. C. T. U. felt they must use what little influence they had against this desecration of God's day, and circulated a petition to the city council to close the saloons on Sunday, and presented it. This aroused the liquor men and they circulated a counter petition; the fight waxed hot, but the women stood firm; ministers and respectable business men rallied around them and the result of it was the Sunday closing, not only of saloons but of all business houses. The Sabbath I spent there was as quiet as Sabbaths used to be in Galesburg before we had any saloons. Doubtless the women alone would not have accomplished this good result; but without the union as a rallying point, the work would not have been undertaken, and of course not accomplished.

While visiting her brother, Prof. Gordon, of the New West school, Bessie Gordon organized the Band of Hope. It now numbers 200; think what a power these 200 boys and girls, trained in the ways of purity and sobriety, pledged against liquor, profanity and tobacco, will be ten years from now!

At Albuquerque, I found one of the best Bands of Hope I ever visited; most of its life it has been in charge of Mrs. Evelyn Snyder, the efficient territorial president, and is now in charge of her mother, Mrs. Lewis, a teacher in the New West school. The Band is divided into classes and thoroughly taught, using Mrs. Willard's Band of Hope Manual as a text book. A brighter set of young people I have seldom met, and their answers showed them thoroughly posted.

These ladies have started a Band of Hope at Socorro, which I was not able to visit. Band of Hope work seems to be the department best suited to these frontier towns. In many places a band if once organized, could be sustained where a union could not. But the trouble is to organize them and find ladies blessed with enough grace, grit and gumption to carry them on. For it takes an amazing amount of each to carry on work out there. We at the east, have no conception of the difficulties under which our sisters there labor. To say nothing of the difficulties arising from the state of society, and I never half appreciated these difficulties till I went there, the element of distance presents an almost insuperable obstacle. The towns are literally hundreds of miles apart, and passenger rates on the Southern Pacific are ten cents per mile, and on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe road, six cents per mile. But many places can not be reached even at these rates, you must go by stage; besides the wearisomeness of this mode of travel and the loss of time, the expense is even greater than by railroad, averaging about twenty cents a mile.

The convention at Phoenix illustrates the difficulties of travel. The nearest railroad point is Maricopa, thirty miles distant, and over the intervening cactus fields you must go in a stage or "jerkey"—rightly named—in the night, because the Central Pacific has but one train a day each way, and that passes Maricopa, going at seven at night and returning at six in the morning, and the stage meets it.

Mrs. Clendenin, the territorial president, came from Whipple Barracks, over one hundred miles distant, in an ambulance. Her husband, Col. Clendenin, accompanied her; they brought with them the three delegates from Prescott. What those ladies endured in the way of rough travelling, camping out and sleeping in dirty Mexican huts, would frighten most of us out of our wits. The trip nearly used up the Colonel, accustomed as he is to the "hardships of war;" but the ladies were all on hand bright and early, at the opening of the convention morning, looking as fresh as June roses.

The Phoenix union has for over a year reading room. In that busy, crowded lit numberless saloons and gambling hells openly running day and night, seven days in the week, it is the one place except the saloons, that offers welcome to the hundreds of homeless men continually passing its doors, and shows them that some man or woman cares for their soul. It is on the principal street; we passed it every day going to our meals and never saw it empty. Here are papers from all over the country, backgammon, chess and checkers. The respect which the enterprise has earned for itself is shown by the fact that while no one is in charge of the room during the day and the doors stand wide open for all to enter, nothing in it has ever been disturbed or injured.

Phoenix had no Band of Hope when the convention came there, but before we left we organized one, the ministers and leading members of all the churches co-operating in it. It is very fortunate in having as its assistant superintendent Dr. Eliza Ingalls, a graduate of Michigan University, admirably fitted to give the scientific instruction, while the general oversight of the band is in equally good hands, those of Mrs. Fulton, wife of the Presbyterian pastor. MARY ALLEN WEST.

THE KANSAS STATE TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Miss Willard is right when she says, "not in a generation has such a cross-fire of denunciation whistled through the air." The Republican papers, with one consent, regardless of truth, send volley after volley at the National Prohibition party and its chosen leader. In Kansas, his home, no voice, or but weak ones, are raised in his defense, chiefly because his opponents have control of the press of the state. Nevertheless, he is not friendless, even here. I have read with deep regret the editorials of the Inter-Ocean, on the St. John movement. How have the mighty fallen! A paper started to counteract, in the interest of the people, the interest of a partisan press, has been won over to the enemy. I honor Mrs. E. B. Harbert for abdicating her throne.

No statement could be more warped and twisted and retain the semblance of truth, than that given to the readers of the Inter-Ocean under the heading, "St. John in his own state." I was in attendance upon the state temperance convention mentioned. The animus of the leaders was apparent from the opening. Friends of the Prohibition party, including Governor St. John, who was in attendance at the afternoon session, had no desire to provoke partisan discussion. When the resolutions were reported from committee, not a member of which represented the third party, aside from complimentary resolutions to retiring officers, three were read. The first denounced the Democratic party for opposing prohibition; the second applauded the Republican party for sustaining it in Kansas. That should have satisfied every one, especially as they were adopted unanimously, without discussion. The third, however, proceeded to resolve that so long as the two great parties maintain their present position in this state, the formdation of a third party was inexpedient; it also invited those who had strayed, to return and "act with us in the future." During discussion on this resolution, Gov. St. John arose to ask, "From what have members of this union gone, and to what are they invited to return?" This was audacity too great to be tolerated, and determination to silence the Governor was apparent upon the faces of the leaders. Friends of the third party insisted that the Governor should speak on the question, which he did, and when the vote was taken upon the resolution, from which the invitation to return had been curtailed, it stood 102 for the resolution to 54 against—which means that more than one-third of the representative prohibitionists of Kansas, in convention, protest against a non-partisan union, composed of Republican, Democratic and Greenback Prohibitionists, being made an annex to the Republican party. The partisan Republicans are very bitter in their denunciations of the third party movement, and pour their wrath upon the chosen leader, who is in no way responsible for their defeat. James G. Blaine drove as many were bo[illegible] from the Republican ticket by his announcement evidently fo[illegible]d not voted for prohibition in Maine, as St. each game they [illegible]m them, but they do not turn their batteries "That makes [illegible]he vituperation and abuse of leading Republican papers is pitiable. The Atchison Champion, owned and published by our newly-elected governor, is puerile in its attacks and is largely quoted. But these things will not weaken our cause. The storm will make it take firmer hold and deeper root. We must be careful, however, to keep well-balanced, and not to let the abuse of an individual lead us to lose sight of the principle, which we must defend. No unguarded word should be allowed to fall from lip or pen, but patiently, persistently, cheerfully, faithfully, we must move steadily forward to victory. Yours for national prohibition,

FANNY H. RASTALL.

PROHIBITION IN CANADA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Just now the good people of this province are greatly agitated upon the subject of Prohibition. A large number of counties, and two cities, have adopted the Scott Act, which means prohibition for those particular localities. The work is being systematically arranged and energetically pushed, and Parliament will have something to do to look after the petitions which will be sent up, by and by. In order that the minds of your readers may be refreshed as to what the Scott Act means, I submit the following synopsis.

The Canada temperance legislation known as the "Scott Act" so generally discussed in 1878, is in substance as follows:

It provides for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors except for exclusively medical purposes, or for bona fida use in some art, trade or manufacture, and the sale of wine for sacramental purposes by some druggist or vendor licensed by the lieutenant of the province. For medicinal purposes, a certificate of a duly qualified medical practitioner will be required, who will have no interest in the sale. For sacramental purposes, a certificate of a clergyman will be required. For purposes of art, trade or manufacture, a certificate signed by two justices of the peace of the bona fides of the application will be required, coupled with an affirmation of the applicant. The number of licenses not to exceed one in a township, two in a town, and one for every four thousand inhabitants in a city. Producers of cider, distillers, brewers, manufacturers, and traders exclusively in wholesale trade, duly licensed, may sell in wholesale quantities—not less than ten gallons of spirits or eight gallons of ale or beer—but only to druggists or other vendors duly licensed, or to such persons as they have reason to believe will convey the same beyond the limits of the city or county in which the Act is in force. It will be incumbent upon those selling in wholesale quantities—in case of prosecution—to furnish satisfactory evidence of having good reason to believe that liquor sold by them would be removed beyond the limits of the city or county in which the Act is in force. Druggists and vendors must file certificates and keep a register of all names of the purchasers and quantity of liquor sold, and make an annual return of all such sales to the Collector of Inland Revenue within whose revenue divison the city or county is situated. The vote on the act will be taken by ballot as at parliamentary elections, and will be taken in one day.

No smaller territory than city or county can try it. No intoxicating liquors shall be sold or given away on the day of polling, under a penalty of $100 for each offence.

The Act if carried cannot be repealed until after three years from coming in force, and then only upon one-fourth of the duly qualified electors petitioning therefor and the adoption of the petition by a majority of the electors under the ballot.

It will be the duty of the collectors of Inland Revenue to bring the prosecution, but it will be the privilege of any person to do so. The penalties for the violation of the Act are not less than $50 fine for the first offence, not less than $100 for the second offence and imprisonment for a term not exceeding two months for each subsequent offence.

There is evidently room for amendment to this Act, as the time it remains in force is not long enough, and will necessitate constant agitation.

One thing here is a wonderful help. A man cannot have a vote just becaues he is twenty-one years of age, but before he can vote, he must have a certain property qualification. This does away with that idle, floating vote which troubles us so much in the states, and one can readily see how it makes temperance legislation easier.

I am pleased to learn of the good feeling which exists among the clergy here. Catholic and Protestant joining hands to lift up the fallen and stay the liquor traffic. There are a large number of W. C. T. Unions in this Province, and they are doing much to build up public sentiment. The women, however, are more conservative than we across the border, but those I have met are full of all noble impulses, and just such[illegible] may be proud of.

John B. Finch has been here and [illegible] The papers charge him with having ope[illegible] campaign in Toronto. There has been so[illegible] controversy, and as the result Mr. Finch has issued a challenge to one Mr. Kyle to meet him in public discussion to try the following questions:

1. The public place where alcoholic liquor is sold is a public nuisance; judged by its own record it ought to be suppressed. Finch to affirm, Kyle to deny.
2. The license system, judged by its results, is inadequate to remedy the evils of the drink system. Regulation does not regulate. Finch to affirm, Kyle to deny.
3. Prohibition increases drunkenness, crime, and pauperism. Kyle to affirm, Finch to deny.

The discussion to come off in the opera house in this city, the proceeds to go to some charitable institution. There is a rumor that the challenge will be accepted.

The people go wild over Mr. Finch here, and applaud every time his name is mentioned. Col. George W. Bain divides the honors, however, and everybody waits anxiously for him to appear.

The audiences are attentive and kind and have a most graceful way of saying that they like their speaker by rising and giving an unanimous vote of thanks.

From all indications it would seem that Canada will have prohibition before we do. The people here manifest the most lively interest in our political affairs and a general impression prevails that the third party did right in standing up to be counted.

Yours for God, and home, and native land,

MARIAN B. BAXTER.

A MINNESOTA ECHO.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I enclose you an old poem, simple and quaint. I thought after reading our honored national president's "Call to Prayer", December 4, that this poem might stand as the echo to her gentle, loving, Christian words. She says, "to be tolerant to the intolerant is a difficult grace, and yet its exercise is imperiously demanded of us."

And so, if you approve, we will let this old Christian Echo voice the reply of the White Ribbon Army to the sweet bugle call to prayer of our beloved Miss Willard, our leader in Christian womanliness as in aggressive and progressive gospel temperance.

Red Wing, Minn. H. A. HOBART.

THE CHRISTIAN AND HIS ECHO.

True faith, producing love to God and man!
Say, Echo! is not this the gospel plan?
"The gospel plan."

Must I my faith and love to Jesus show,
By doing good to all, both friend and foe?
"Both friend and foe."

But if a brother hate, and treat me ill,
Must I return him good, and love him still?
"Love him still."

And if he watch, my failings to reveal,
Must I his faults as carefully conceal?
"As carefully conceal?"

But if my name and character he blast,
If cruel malice, too, a long time last;
And while I sorrow and affliction know,
He loves to add unto my cup of woe;
In this uncommon, this peculiar case,
Sweet Echo, say! Must I still love and bless?
"Still love and bless."

Whatever usage ill I may receive,
Must I be patient still, and still forgive?
"Be patient still, and still forgive."

Why, Echo, how is this? Thou'rt sure a dove.
Thy voice doth teach me nothing else but love!
"Nothing else but love."

Things being so, whoever me reject;
My gracious God me surely will protect!
"Surely will protect."

Henceforth I'll roll on Him my every care,
And then both friend and foe embrace in prayer.
"Embrace in prayer."

But after all these duties I have done,
Must I, in point of merit them disown,
And trust for heaven, through Jesus' blood alone?
"Through Jesus' blood alone."

THE DRINK BILL OF THE NATION.

One of the best rudimentary lessons in temperance which has ever been brought to the public eye and ear, is the chart, now familiar in all parts of our country, showing the National Drink Bill and its relation to other national expenditures. The long, black column which represents $900,000,000, spent annually in drink, looms up so menacingly in this period of our financial distress, that political economists, statisticians and financiers are beginning to take an interest in its startling revelations.

The first step of their scrutiny, however, as is usual with the investigation of statements made by social reformers, indicates incredulity. And we do not wonder. It things have gone on from bad to worse in the fashion and to the degree which these figures suggest, their occupation and their profession have not been of that value to community which they have led us to expect. Their natural effort is to discredit statements which if true, tend to discredit their own worth. The Inter Ocean, basing its argument on the census of 1880, proves to its own satisfaction at least, that our figures are false; the showing of the census being that the whole amount paid annually by brewers and distillers for producing the liquors which go to make up the Drink Bill, is only $142,122,048.

Now the report of the commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year ending June 30, 1884, shows that 75,435,739 gallons of spirits and 588,957,189 gallons of fermented liquors were produced and withdrawn by payment of tax during the year. Now if the census of 1880 is to be relied upon in this matter for the year 1884, the liquor thus produced, must have cost the producers less than five cents a gallon. It is very clear therefore that the census figures do not include the tax of ninety cents per gallon on spirits, and one dollar per barrel on beer, paid the government, which tax paid in 1883-4, added to the $142,122,048, makes an acknowledged total of $227,587,935. This then is simply the cost of producing. A profit must be added which will scarcely be less than 50 per cent. of the original cost of production, before the government received its share. Add this, which amounts to some $71,061,024 more, and we have the drink produced by the brewers and distillers of the country put upon the market at the round sum of $298,648,959, very nearly three hundred million of dollars.

The Inter Ocean gives the total number of traders in spirits of all kinds, bar tenders etc., at 114,000 and calculates that each of these will have by the figures of our chart, entitled The Nation's Drink Bill, an income of $8,000 per year.

Now the Internal Revenue Report gives us 208,970 special tax payers for the year 1883-4. These special tax payers are brewers and beer sellers, distillers, wholesale dealers in liquor and saloon keepers—each one of whom represents at least two more engaged with him in the business as employes, the whole constituting an army of not less than 600,000 men. Divide the $900,000,000 of Drink Bill equally among these and each man will have only the modest revenue of $1,500 a year. Not so very extravagant surely—and not so tempting as to entice young men into the business, as the Inter Ocean so gravely intimates is being done by prohibitionists in their effort to properly represent the drink bill of America.

But go back to the bill itself. We have a round three hundred million of dollars as the cost of producing and putting on the market the alcoholic liquors manufactured in our own country, and not exported out of the country.

The wholesale dealers ought to make as much from the sale of the liquors bought by them, as the brewer and distiller from whom they were purchased. Add fifty per cent as their profit and we have $450,000,000 as the cost of the goods delivered to the retail dealer or saloonkeeper. Now it is the boast of this individual that there is "an eight-cent profit on a ten-cent drink" or 400 per cent. Admit that he does not tell the truth, and that all his actual profit will be covered by 100 per cent, which with adulterations, watering etc., is but a modest estimate, and the $900,000,000 claimed as the Drink Bill of the country is easily reached—without taking any account of the imported liquors which enter into our national consumption of alcoholic beverages.

Or, if it be more satisfactory, take the simpler mode of estimating this fearful expenditure, followed by the Christian Union of March 27, 1884. Let the 75,435,739 gallons of spirits produced last year, be averaged as costing the consumer $6.00 a gallon. (A glass of distilled liquor such as brandy or whisky, averages one-half gill. It is sold at from 15 to 25 cents a glass. There will be at least sixty glasses in a gallon. At only 10 cents a glass, the gallon yields $6.00 worth).

We have on this basis of calculation a bill for distilled drinks amounting to $452,614,434.

The fermented liquors, 18,998,619 barrels, or 588,957,189 gallons, will average a cost to the consumers of not less than $1 per gallon, and a total of $588,957,189, and here we have our $900,000,000 provided for again, with a surplus of nearly a million and a half dollars, and without touching the cost of imported drinks. In this estimate we have not excluded the small amount withdrawn from distilleries for scientific and manufacturing purposes, but as this is reported by the commissioner as less than 250,000 gallons, it is vastly more than offset by the exclusion of imported drinks which could scarcely cost us less than $100,000,000, as the imposts alone, one year ago, exceeded $8,000,000. Analyze it as we will, the published statement of our "dark account" stands unrebuked by accessible facts. If any real evidence can be brought to bear on its unreliability, we shall be glad to know it, but we have no hope of any that can mitigate its possibilities of woe.

A SON'S TRIBUTE.

The following manly and eloquent letter has a legitimate place in these columns. It has all the more value in that it was not written till after the presidential election, and is in no sense a campaign document:

TO THE PUBLIC: I have read carefully the affidavits purporting to have been made by J. M. Brewer and Margaret Brewer, his wife, bearing date Oct. 25, 1884, published in The New York Tribune about the 26th day of said month, which affidavits related to the domestic relations once existing between my father and mother and his treatment of myself, and were accompanied by a copy of a decree of divorce in favor of my mother, and awarding to her the custody of their child. I unhesitatingly pronounce said affidavits, except as to the marriage and divorce, as absolutely and maliciously false. The animus of the charge made is easily understood, it being well known that my father was a candidate for president at the recent election. Said affidavits are to the effect that my father deserted my mother and myself and had never contributed a cent to my support. Also that he refused to furnish me with medical and other attendance while suffering from a severe injury received in 1872. That his desertion of my mother wrecked her life and brought her to a premature grave.

I am at present nearly thirty-two years of age, and am the identical child mentioned in Brewer's affidavit and copy of court record, and, while I have no personal knowledge of the trouble between my father and mother, I desire to state that those who were familiar with the facts have exonerated him from blame in that matter, as they have her. Further, instead of my father neglecting me, he has educated me, provided necessary comforts, and I lived for years with him in his family, where I was kindly treated by him and his present wife—my stepmother. No distinction whatever was made by him in the treatment accorded to me and my half-brother and sister. I studied law in my father's office, and was admitted to practice while with him, and he has at all times been kind and affectionate to every member of the family. The latch-string always hangs on the outside at his house, and no one in distress ever appealed to him in vain so long as he had a penny to divide. During my infancy I was of course in care of my mother under decree of court. She supported us by her own labor. She needed no aid, she would have accepted none. This was our status until I reached the age of about eight years, when she married Robert T. Henderson, now residing at Hazleton, Ind., by whom she had several children, and with whom she lived up to the date of her death, some ten years ago. After the second marriage of my mother, I lived a few years with my grandmother and Mr. Brewer, and from that time with my uncle, M. M. St. John, and my father, until I married and established a home of my own. That there was a time when my father would not have taken me and provided for me is absolutely false.

In the matter of residence during my boyhood, my wishes were consulted, and the reason I did not turn to my father sooner was because Brewer and my grandmother had instilled into my infant mind prejudice and fear of him. Not even my dead mother spoke ill of or reproached my father in my presence or hearing, nor did she reveal to me the secret of her early troubles with him. He has been equally reticent, and with their troubles of thirty-three years ago the public can certainly have no further concern. My mother was never intimate with Margaret Brewer; they did not live in the same state, they did not meet socially, and they were never in harmony. That my mother ever made a confidant of Mrs. Brewer, or implored her to see that she was decently buried is a lie, pure and simple. There was not and could not possibly have been any reason for so doing. Her husband, Mr. Henderson, was amply able to and did see that she was decently buried. She died at Hazleton, Ind., as stated, was buried at Olney, as she herself had requested, and Mr. Henderson paid all the expenses; and George Lutz, who officiated at the burial, will so inform anyone. I was amply able to have done the same. We never were objects of charity. The individuals bearing the name of St. John have, so far as I know, always been able to provide for and take care of themselves, with a little left over for the use of friends in need. The statement that my father wrecked my mother's life, broke her heart, or was in any way responsible for her death, is entirely gratuitous and on a par with the other falsehoods uttered in said affidavits. She was not the kind of a woman to let any man break her heart or wreck her life. She was brave, and honest, and virtuous, and fought the battles of life, and she died at about the age of 42 years from a malignant disease which baffled the best medical aid that money could procure. Such attacks as those made in the Brewer affidavits can have but a temporary effect. That was the purpose in this case. For John H. Brewer I have only kind words—none of reproach. He has been made the tool of designing villains. He is old and childish and easily influenced for bad. I respect him for what he was, not what he is, and if anyone had said, "he is ungrateful," I should have voted no.

HARRY C. ST. JOHN.

NEW BOOKS.

A new edition of FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND; by Rev. S. G. Lathrop, comes to us from the publisher, F. H. Revell, Chicago. It will have a tender interest for many readers just at this time, when its author has so recently passed into the Beyond toward which he looked with such anticipation from the sunny slope of a useful life. The book is largely a compilation of the best thoughts of all the centuries on old age. How to grow old in body with physical grace as well as spiritual is a theme that takes up many of its pages, and the deeply spiritual outlook on another world and its glories, is far-reaching and full of comfort for the aged.

TITUS COAN, a memorial volume from F. H. Revell, Chicago, is written by Mrs. Lydia Bingham Coan, the wife of his later years, and herself the daughter of an honored missionary to the Sandwich Islands where she was born. The little volume is full of interest as a picture of early mission work in the Islands and of the wonderful transformation which this noble worker was permitted to see during his own life of faithful toil to that end. It is made up largely of Titus Coan's own writings, in letters and diary.

Two excellent companion volumns are Moody's TO THE WORK; and WAY OF GOD, also from F. H. Revell, Chicago. The first is a stirring plea for consecrated workers, from the man who believes that he who can set a hundred other men at work, is himself the best laborer. It is a powerful unveiling of the hindrances that exist in Christ's church, to the coming of His kingdom. The second consists of several addresses which have been delivered both at home and abroad, all pointing as did John the Forerunner to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world."

THE TRIPLE "E," by S. R. G. Clark, ("Yensie Walton") published by D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, is a pretty story of a young girl to whom the name "Triple E," has been playfully given because of her three initials. It is a story of duties bravely undertaken and faithfully accomplished, of hardships borne with Christian fortitude, and victory at last.

LIFE, WARFARE AND VICTORY, by D. W. Whittle, F. H. Revell, Chicago. For many years, Major Whittle, first with the lamented P. P. Bliss, and later in company with the sweet singer, McGranahan, has been widely known and beloved as an Evangelist and Bible reader of great power. For some time past there has been a demand for a volume of his addresses and Bible readings. They are here brought out in such a neat and attractive form as to insure many readers, not only from the wide esteem in which the author is held, but because of their decidedly helpful character.

Be cheerful! Times change and men change with them. Says G. M. A. of Massachusetts:

In '58-9, my father was pastor of an M. E. church in southern New Hampshire. When election day came, he went to the polls and voted, like an honest man. Said one of his leading members, shortly after, "I never knew how much religion I had, till I found that I could see my minister go to the polls and vote, and yet I did not get mad over it."

* * *

The day will come when a Christian can see his minister go to the polls and vote for a prohibition ticket and "not get mad over it."

* * *

The Calvary Baptist church of Pawtucket, R. I., has captured from the W. C. T. U., Mrs. H. D. Walker, former general secretary of the union in the state, for its pastor. The Calvary Baptist church is wide, as well as wise.

* * *

Mrs. Bent's dear mother, Mrs, Jerusha B. Stevens, of Portland, Me., has been removed from her happy home on earth, to the eternal mansions above. The light that never was on sea or land fell full on her face as her spirit departed, and the casket was radiant long after the gem had been taken away.

What can be said to this?

As a consistent temperance woman, I have never felt it any more culpable to use boiled cider than cider vinegar. We do not wish to make distinctions where there is no difference, in these days of live issues, and if there is any real difference, I should be glad to have it made plain. I procure sweet cider and boil it down.

* * *

I should say that there is a difference in the two cases. Cider vinegar is cider which has passed beyond the vinous and into the acetous fermentation, consequently there is no alcohol in cider vinegar. Boiled cider, if the apples are sound from which it is made, and if put to boil direct from the press, and if boiled long enough, can hardly contain alcohol either; but there are a good many "ifs" to be observed.

* * *

Those were golden words of that dear president, Mrs. J. R. Jones, of Philadelphia, who (on behalf of the W. C. T. U. of Philadelphia) gracefully thanking Mrs. L. M. Glover, of the "Blue Ribbon Order of England", for an elegant address delivered at a Sabbath afternoon meeting, said to Mrs. Glover: "Tell the women of England that the W. C. T. U. of America stands upon principle and not policy.

* * *

A late invention may be seen in the American Inventor for November, 1884. The description says, "It consists of a transformable beer and water cooler, and mixer of stale and fresh beer, by which stale beer may be revived, so as to change it from a dead loss to profit to the dealer." Alas, for the poor "beer guzzler." Is he to be fed on stale slops of beer instead of the lusty beverage of Gambrinus? Shall "personal liberty" be so imposed upon? Verily his "taking in," has begun in his own camps.

* * *

The very prettiest thing I have seen this year in the way of a Christmas book, is Miss Lathbury's beautiful "Seven Little Maids," both pictures and verses by herself. The seven come trooping down out of the birthday week, as merrily as bells ring out from Christmas steeples. Silk fringed and tinted with such hues as give each picture the impression of a water color sketch—verses as dainty and artistic as the pictures, it will be a joy forever to the good child that gets it from Santa Claus. Buy it by all means for your Maidie—especially if she be a "Sunday Child"—blithe and bonny, and wise and gay.

* * *

Almost at this same top notch of beauty, are Miss Colman's Christmas cards, temperance cards, every one of them. Don't be slow about ordering them, they are as "toney" as any this year.

DELAWARE.

W. C. T. U. STATE CONVENTION.

...ion met in the M. E. church of Smyrna, ...ember 11, at 7:30 p. m.

... T. E. Martindale occupied the chair.

... address of welcome was made by Rev. J. B. ... pastor of the church. The exercises of the evening ...ed of choruses, solos and recitations by the Band ...lope, under the direction of Miss Jennie Smithers ...nd Miss Grace Quigg, followed by the special address of the evening, from Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, national superintendent of young woman's work.

Delegates were present from various churches, Sunday schools and unions of the society. The congregation was large and interested. Mrs. Barnes held the undivided attention of her audience for more than an hour. Her remarks were first addressed to the boys and girls. After taking for her text, "What has the harvest been," she gave a resume of the work of the W. C. T. U. in a pleasant, engaging manner, enlisting the young ladies of the audience in more earnest work for the temperance cause, the harvest in the future bearing the fruit of the sowing. The evening closed with a short address by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster.

Wednesday morning opened with a consecration meeting at 9 o'clock, led by Mrs. Barnes. At 10 o'clock the regular business commenced, the president, Mrs. Martindale, taking the chair, when the roll call of officers was made, most of whom responded to their names. The credential committee reported some forty-six delegates in attendance. Several committees were appointed. "Address of Welcome," given by Mrs. Kate Smithers, cordial and kind; responded to by Miss M. S. Hillis in a feeling manner. Report of Miss Semple, superintendent for work among the colored people, which was read in her absence, showing good work commenced, and a purpose to extend organizations throughout the state.

Wednesday afternoon after devotional exercises, several visitors were introduced to the convention, Mr. and Mrs. Foster, Mrs. A. G. Cox, Rev. J. B. Quigg and Mr. Cooper; each making responses, with thanks for the pleasure of being with the ladies of the W. C. T. U.

The president then read her address, followed by the report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary L. Cox, of Middleton, giving the work of the past year a resume, showing 18 unions, with an aggregate membership of 558, with six juvenile unions, numbering some 600 pledged children.

The treasurer, Mrs. J. B. Quigg, of Smyrna, read her report, showing after paying all indebtedness, a fair balance in the treasury. Mrs. Foster addressed the convention, and throughout its sessions rendered valuable aid in suggestions etc.

In the evening a mass meeting was held, addressed by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, of Iowa, who held the undivided attention of her audience for an hour and a half, upon the subject of "Prohibition." Speaking in a lucid, pleasant manner, meeting argument with argument and convincing and persuasive logic.

Thursday morning after the exercises came the routine of business, consisting of reports from the various superintendents of departments, showing the work done, and the plans for the future. The report of "prison, jail and flower mission," was an interesting feature, to which was added remarks from Mrs. Davidson, of New Castle, of the work done there each week at the jail, touching the hearts of all present. After which the committee on "principles and plans of work," submitted a report which was unanimously adopted.

This report declares the entire persuasion of the convention to total abstinence and prohibition, and a determination to use influence in every way possible to secure protection for home and families from that unscrupulous enemy—the liquor saloon.

Also to give more attention to the department of children's and young woman's work, endeavoring to enlist young women in the formation of Bands of Hope, the systematic study of hygiene and the adoption of flower mission and kitchen garden methods.

To urge the work for scientific instruction respecting the nature and injurious effects of narcotics and intoxicants, and expressing the delight with which is hailed the adoption by the state board of J. Dorman Steel's Hygienic Physiology as a text book in the public schools.

Also a determination to petition the ensuing legislature for measures giving the submission of the Prohibition question to the people; directing the executive committee to prepare and circulate blanks for the enlisting of every local union in this work. And affirming and remonstrating strongly against licensing the liquor traffic.

Urging the importance of introducing quarterly Sunday school temperance lessons. Endorsing THE UNION SIGNAL as the organ of the N. W. C. T. U. and pledging hearty support and extension of its circulation. Also recommending the Delaware Prohibitionist as a worthy candidate for public favor, and a means of communication in local work.

Recommending that one of the national organizers be employed to further the forming of local unions.

Thursday afternoon a highly interesting paper was read by Mrs. Kate K. Brown, of Wyoming, subject. "Want,." (which we hope to see printed in full.)

Then came the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted in the following: President, Mrs. Anna H. Martindale, of Dover; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary L. Cox, of Middletown; recording secretary, Miss M. S. Hillis, of Wilmington; treasurer, Mrs. J. B. Quigg, of Smyrna.

Expression of thanks was given as follows:

"Finally, the W. C. T. U. of Delaware would offer their heartfelt thanks to the community of Smyrna, which has so cordially received them during the convention; to the pastor of the church for his sympathy and for his aid in the details of carrying on the work; and to the trustees of the church for the hospitality received from them; to the ladies of the town who have opened wide the doors of their homes for the entertainment of the delegates; and to the community at large who have shown their interest in the work by their attendance at the meeting, and by their aid in contribution to the funds of the treasury." Adopted unanimously.

After some miscellaneous business, prayer, and singing "Blest be the tie that binds," the convention adjourned by motion.

INDIANA.

THIRTEENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The semi-annual convention of this district W. C. T. U. met in Michigan City, Indiana, on November 20 and 21, 1884. There was a fair representation from all organized parts of the district. Harmony, enthusiasm, good cheer, and all that goes to make a pleasant meeting abounded.

The papers read were without exception of superior merit. We had with us Mrs. Nora E. T. Gause, of Ft. Wayne, throughout the convention, and we recommend her to all as help of the highest order. Her natural and varied ability combined with a peculiar grace and beauty of manner has given her a place secure in our hearts.

On the first evening Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap delivered one of her strong and stirring lectures. On the last evening the W. C. T. U. of Michigan City gave a reception in the M. E. church. Toasts were offered, each of which brought out a glowing response; short essays, impromptu speeches, and splendid singing, proved a feast of reason while the ladies of the local union served excellent cake and coffee. Everybody felt "at home" and all agreed that it was a delightful evening. The following resolutions were adopted:

In order to educate the coming men and women who are now the youth, in true temperance principles, we will establish Bands of Hope and Industrial Schools wherever possible.

Also that we will persevere in our effort to secure scientific instruction in our public schools, and to gain the more complete co-operation of our Sunday schools. We will work more earnestly to advance the W. C. T. U. in all its departments.

We will continue to plead with those who believe the rum traffic can be regulated. We will earnestly try to impress upon the minds of voters that the laws of our country should not protect evil and that wherever the saloon is allowed there will be misery and crime.

While in our arms we hold the nation, our hands are denied the ballot which means protection to us and ours, we will use our utmost efforts to induce our women to ask justice at the hands of our lawmakers.

We gratefully remember the favors shown our society by the officials of the Wabash R. R.

We tender our thanks to the good people of Michigan City for their generous hospitality; to the press for its favors; to the officers of the M. E. church; to the singers, and to everyone who has in any way contributed to the success of the convention. H.

ARKANSAS.

NOTES OF WORK.

The temperance work still progresses in Arkansas. After convention was all over, and a few days were spent in St. Louis endeavoring to secure a little rest, the work was again begun in this state.

Three meetings were held at Gainesville, and three temperance societies were organized—a Peoples' Temperance Union, a Y. P. T. U. and a Band of Hope. All started nicely. There is a good sentiment in Gainesville, and no saloons tolerated in the town.

Two meetings were held in Jonesboro, and a P. T. U. organized. There are some earnest, persistent friends of temperance in Jonesboro; but the town as a whole is a stronghold of the liquor traffic. This same form of words all through will well describe Paragould and Harrisburg. Four meetings were held at Marianna; and though saloons have a strong foot-hold, there are some earnest, excellent workers for the cause in the town. Two temperance societies were formed there, one for the white and one for the colored people.

Found very little interest at La Grange, though there are no open saloons in the village.

Could not organize, as the people did not seem ready, but they promised to do something for temperance in the Sunday school, and may yet organize.

Found matters in an indifferent state at Helena. Some excellent, temperance people there, but no organization, or public temperance work being done. There was one meeting arranged for me, and some others talked of. I did considerable stirring around, and the result of the stirring was five good meetings held in the city, four in the Baptist, and one in the colored Methodist church. The audience at the first meeting was small; but they rapidly grew, till at the third meeting, we had a very large and enthusiastic audience, and at this meeting a live organization was effected, including many of the best citizens, and several city officials. Both sexes and all ages were received, and the society starts off well officered and with a list of fifty-four members, nearly all adults. The three city papers had kind notices of the work; the success of the meetings was a surprise to us all.

Good work will yet be done in Helena, and plenty of it, in spite of the power and aggressive character of the liquor traffic there.

A temperance society was also organized among the colored people.

In reviewing the work already done in Arkansas, I feel like asking each dear soldier of the white ribbon army to join with me in singing the temperance doxology.

I am now at Southland college, the guest of our dear, brave friends and co-laborers in this and every good cause, Calvin and Alida Clark. As they are "Friends," I have left off all titles from their names, as I am sure they themselves prefer. I have already addressed three meetings here, with "more to follow."

I find I have addressed twenty-three meetings in the past twenty days which, with the seventeen meetings addressed prior to the St. Louis convention, make just forty meetings in the forty days I have spent in the state of Arkansas.

I am sure the dear readers of our W. C. T. U. paper, will agree I have not spent much time in idleness, especially when they remember the travel, fatiguing and trying experiences, and real downright hard work involved in it all. I ask their earnest prayers for the continued success of this work, which opens out to us on every hand, and which is so much needed all through the state.

Thanksgiving day was spent here at Southland college and a royal day it was.

My next article will be a record of the doings of that day, for indeed it is well worth telling.

I. C. DE VELLING.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

PRESCOTT.—Among the list of contributors in THE UNION SIGNAL of Nov. 20, I see with pleasure the name of Miss Henrietta G. Moore. She is the devoted worker who kindled the sparks of temperance enthusiasm in our little village of Prescott. The next day after she delivered her interesting lecture here, we organized our W. C. T. U. with the names of fourteen ladies. Our number has increased to about twenty, our most active work being confined for the present to our Band of Hope, which is in reality a temperance school. We have adopted a plan by which persons of any age can join us. We thought it best. We have two pledge rolls, the "triple pledge" and the "total abstinence." Those advanced in years usually choose the latter.

Understanding the nature of childhood, we have endeavored to vary the list of exercises and keep their interest alive in every way. We have just received the stars and small ribbon badges which I ordered. They will be very proud of them. It is amusing to see their glances of gratified pleasure when accepting even the simple ribbon badge which we have been using. We have given each member one of Julia Colman's catechisms. Have given one concert, which was a success; will soon have another.

Our influence as improving the public moral sentiment was seen at the last election. I have received letters from the nominees of both parties, Democratic and Republican, and they were mostly satisfactory and reflected credit on the candidates. In some cases they cheerfully endorsed the question which was propounded to them, "Will you favor the passage of a law prohibiting the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage?"

The temperance reform is steadily growing, its influence can be seen everywhere. We women have voted, and with hardly an exception we are met with respect and encouragement. The press has assisted us and has our thanks and appreciation.

M. A. ROSS, Pres. W. C. T. U.

CONNECTICUT.

ELEVENTH ANNUAL STATE CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Connecticut opened at the north Congregational church at Middletown, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 18. The state union was organized in this city and held its first convention here, and this was its decennial anniversary.

The parlors of the church were tastefully decorated. A banner of "Welcome" with '74 and '84 below, woven in evergreens, greeted every eye. The occasion was celebrated by very interesting exercises. The meeting opened with singing, followed by the reading of the scriptures and prayer; our anthem, "For God, and home, and native land," was sung very beautifully by a quartette. A fine "Historical sketch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," was given by Mrs. G. A.

Moody, of Plainville, who was present at the state organization, eleven years before; while a portrait of the first state president, Mrs. H. B. Brown, who long since passed to higher service above, added interest to the history of the past. The decennial hymn was then sung, followed by "A Prophecy" by Mrs. C. B. Buell, our corresponding secretary, bright and hopeful, from her own standpoint of strong faith for the future. At the close of Mrs. Buell's address, our state president, in a fitting speech, presented her, in the name of the state union, with a beautiful gold watch and chain, and two $10 gold pieces lying in the case. It was a complete surprise to Mrs. Buell, it having been quietly arranged by friends in every county.

After another song, we were invited to spend a social hour and partake of ice cream and cake generously furnished by the Middletown ladies.

The session Wednesday morning was opened by a devotional meeting, led by Mrs. S. K. Luce, of Niantic.

A fine address of welcome was given by Mrs. Dr. Morgau, followed by a welcome to the convention, from Rev. P. M. Snyder, pastor of the church, which was known forty years ago as a "cold water church." A beautiful response in verse was given by Mrs. L. H. Washington, of Essex.

Reports from county presidents and other business followed. In the afternoon our state president, Mrs. S. B. Forbes, Rockville, gave a beautiful annual address, and I wish there were time and space to give it to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. Reports of our corresponding secretary, treasurer, state organizer and departments of work followed. A delightful paper on "Observations and Experiences of a year in Europe," was read by our former president, Mrs. M. C. Treadwell, now of Sing Sing, New York.

In the evening we were favored with a deeply interesting Bible exposition by Miss E. W. Greenwood, of Brooklyn.

The session Thursday morning was wholly taken up with reports of our various departments of work, all showing good work well done, and a bright out look for the coming year. In the afternoon the officers for the next year were chosen; all the old officers were re-elected. The last hour was given to the Middletown Band of Hope, exercises conducted by Mrs. Buell, consisting of recitations and singing by the children, and short addresses by Miss Greenwood and Miss Landfear.

In the evening Mrs. Emily McLaughlin gave a stirring address which made our hearts beat fast for God and home and native land.

The last session of the convention was held on Friday morning. Deep feeling seemed to pervade all hearts; and after a few remarks by our president and a closing prayer by Mrs. Durand, the convention adjourned until next year ,when we meet at New Britain.

The convention throughout was most delightful; the clergy of the city cheered and aided us by their presence and remarks. Prof. Franklin of the city enlivened us by his fine singing, and we separated for our respective homes to light the fires of temperance on every hill-top and in every valley of our beautiful Connecticut.

NEW YORK.

DUTCHESS COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Dutchess county W. C. T. U. held its twentieth quarterly convention at South Dover, on November 20 and 21. There was a good representation of officers and delegates present from different towns, and an interesting meeting was the result.

The first evening was occupied with the addresses of welcome and response, and the consideration of the following subject: "The Liquor Traffic versus the Prosperity of the Nation." The subject was divided into five parts: 1st, "The traffic;" 2nd, "Its relation to the desecration of the Sabbath;" 3rd, "Its effects upon the home;" 4th, "Upon the church;" 5th, "The conclusion of the whole matter." Each of these topics was briefly and clearly set forth by the person to whom it was assigned. The summing up showed very conclusively that the liquor traffic is a great national curse, penetrating every section of the country, undermining the sanctity of the Sabbath, the home and the church; therefore the nation cannot prosper unless there be a grand unity of effort to uproot it.

The sessions of the 21st were occupied in miscellaneous business, listening to reports of local work, explaining different departments of work of the W. C. T. U., always so much needed in a new locality. Every moment seemed important, so that there was no drag. Each session was opened with a devotional service, and the convention closed with a consecration meeting.

Miss Emily E. Underhill, the delegate from Westchester and Dutchess counties to the national meeting at St. Louis, was present and gave an admirable report of the same, charming the audience with interesting details of that wonderful meeting. Her audience were in tears at times and then again in ecstasies of joy over results obtained.

A new union was organized by the organizing secretary of the state of New York, called the South Dover W. C. T. U., auxilliary to the Dutchess county W. C. T. U. and through it to the state. There are eighteen members, and the officers are as follows: President, Mrs. E. B. Pierce; secretary, Mrs. H. Stevens; treasurer, Mrs. H. M. Preston.

Mrs. E. L. McLaughlin, of Boston, addressed a large audience in the evening; subject, "The Sure Promise of the Future." Her address seemed just fitted for the occasion, and every one was pleased and instructed. It was the testimony of the workers that this was one of the best conventions ever held by the Dutchess county W. C. T. U.

ALABAMA.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION AT SELMA.

The second state convention of the W. C. T. U. was held in this place the 13th and 14th of November. We have certainly proved that women can hold a convention in which gentlemen are interested, as was proved by their attendance and expressed approval. As our mass meeting was to be held in Gilman's Hall in the evening, we decided to open the convention at the same place. Suitable mottoes adorned the walls, while over the stage was the national motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," in blue letters on a golden ground. Other ornamentations were wreaths of ivy with ferns and flowers. Owing to some mistakes the delegation from abroad was small, only twelve reporting. At 12 o'clock the convention was opened with devotional exercises. After some preliminary business, the reports from the various unions were read by Mrs. Sibert, of Gadsden. Here I would say, if the women in all our unions would work as the Etowah delegation have, it would not be long before the white flag of prohibition would float over the entire state. At the request of the president some encouraging words were spoken by Dr. Mitchell, of the Second Methodist church, and Mr. Franklin, superintendent of First Presbyterian church Sunday school.

The convention adjourned until 3 p. m. when the president read her annual address. A resolution of regret was passed that the state corresponding secretary could not be with us and also that she could not accept the office again. After the transaction of necessary business the convention adjourned to meet in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian church at 10 o'clock the following morning.

At 7 p. m. of Thursday, by previous arrangement, the white ribbon army with the Band of Hope, assembled in a room adjoining, singing, "Temperance boys and girls are we," led by one of the little boys playing the cornet. After a song by choir, "Shout the battle cry," an address of welcome was made by Mrs. Judge Brooks, president of Selma union, and responded to by Mrs. Dr. Bryce, of Tuscaloosa, state vice president. Then followed a song, after which Judge Brooks, one of the most eminent lawyers in our state, introduced Mrs. Sallie Chapin who held the audience entranced for an hour. The hall was crowded and many were compelled to stand, yet there was no evidence of weariness. "Her address was marked by tenderest touches of pathos and here and there breaks of humor which produced the gentlest reaction from the sadness her woeful tales of distress had induced." This was followed by the national anthem, after which the meeting was closed with benediction by Dr. Mangum, of First Methodist church. At 10 o'clock Friday morning the devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Chapin reading and remarking on each verse of the 146th Psalm. After singing and prayer the morning was occupied with reports of committees etc., etc. The first business of the afternoon session was the election of state officers and superintendents of departments. Unlike our brethren, the ladies objected to office. Strange as it may seem no one wanted the presidency. Mrs. Woodliff having declined to serve, Mrs. Ellen C. Bryce, of Tuscaloosa, was declared the unanimous choice of the convention. She has been an untiring worker as central vice president, and she accepted under the most modest protest, and Mrs. Chapin introduced her to the convention as our president. Miss Ida Brooks then stepped forward and in a few well chosen words, presented a basket of flowers which she gracefully received and acknowledged.

What of the results of our convention? Present results are, increased interest among the old members and about seventy new members. One young man remarked, "I can hear nothing but temperance talked of down town." The efforts of the temperance workers seem to be rousing the liquor men to band themselves together for their own protection! to defend their rights. What rights? The right to destroy homes, the right to break the hearts of mothers and daughters, wives and sisters. Another result was, to bind in close sympathy this band of workers who recognize no such word as defeat. We know no north, no south, no east, no west; but a common sorrow binds our hearts together, and ours to the great Heart of hearts in whom is our strength.

WILLARD W. C. T. U. OF CHARLES CITY.

On September 13th, 1884, Mrs. Aldrich, state president of W. C. T. U., in response to an invitation from ladies of Charles City held a meeting at the Congregational church and organized a W. C. T. U. of thirty-two members, adopting the revised constitution. A list of hononary members was also received.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Mary E. Owens; secretary, Mrs. Helen R. Duncan; treasurer, Mrs. Stela Miles. Vice [illegible] elected as follows: Mrs. J. C. Shipp, M[illegible] Mrs. Robena Wilson, Mrs. Margaret [illegible] John Truck, Mrs. E. M. Smith. The foll[illegible] work were adopted as best suited for our loc[illegible] selected from those recommended by our state [illegible] committee. A local superintendent for each was [illegible] Evangelistic, Mrs. J. C. Shipp; juvenile, Mrs. Ellen L. Slocum; Benedict Home, Mrs. F. Burnham; scientific temperance, Miss Edith Maxwell; legal, Mrs. Helen R. Duncan; temperance teaching in the Sabbath school, Mrs. Augusta Pickett; temperance literature and agency for UNION SIGNAL and Iowa Capital, Mrs. Mary Hackley. We meet every Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, adopt the parlor or home circle meetings. Some one of the above subjects is brought before our minds each week, by the superintendent of that line of work, also a reading on "Alcohol and Hygine," from Miss Colman's book and others. When this is finished we shall take up other topics.

By vote of the union the distinctive name given to this organization is "Willard" W. C. T. U., in honor of our national president and her grand plans whereby she has interested and enlisted so many women in temperance work. This society now number forty paying members, besides several nominal members and an active honorary membership. Our women are earnest in the work. One member, a few days ago, gave five dollars, another, one dollar, and so on, to be used in temperance work. Our state dues are paid in advance for the year.

THE UNION SIGNAL is a welcome guest in a few of the homes and is fast making friends in many. We hope to be able to send you a good subscription list in the near future. We are now only three months old; we hope to come up to full stature by the time we reach a year. The following resolutions have been unanimously adopted and ordered placed upon the records of our union and published in our city papers.

Deeply appreciating the necessity for more effective temperance work, and desiring to see more of our women engaged in the cause of temperance, therefore be it

Resolved, That we earnestly solicit the co-operation of all who are willing to work faithfully in the temperance cause, without regard to distinctions of religious faith.

That it shall be our aim to cultivate cordial relations with all other temperance organizations and to co-operate with them in the enforcement of the prohibitory law.

That we most earnestly desire to do what we can for this cause in the home, social circle, and the church; and by means of instructive public lectures, social meetings, entertainments, readings, etc., to aid in so moulding popular sentiment in favor of temperance principles, as to render it not only necessary, but easy to obey the prohibitory law; and, further, that we, as an organization auxilliary to the county and state, do most cheerfully co-operate with our county W. C. T. U. officers in their efforts to advance the lines of work adopted, prominent among which is the juvenile, in all its various branches.

That we believe in sustaining the unity of a county organization, as thereby Floyd county can add one more strong link to the chain that binds the temperance women of the State together.

WEST VIRGINIA GLEANINGS.

CHARLESTON.—The interest in W. C. T. U. work is not as deep as we wish it were. This is partly due to the fact that some of the most earnest workers have been kept at the bedside of sick friends. They are arranging to hold their meetings in the evenings at the homes of the different members and have the gentlemen come and do their part as honorary members. We hope the meetings will be both pleasant and profitable.

MALDEN.—W. C. T. U. meets with many discouragements on account of the open violations of law. We trust our sisters will hold fast to the right with a faith that laughs at impossibilities and cries, "It shall be done!" The great Lawgiver will not permit His laws to be trampled under foot.

WELLSBURG.—W. C. T. U. expects to organize a young ladies' union sometime this winter, and we think it will be a power in that community.

RITCHIE C. H.—The union is alive and vigorous, but not half as earnest as its wide awake secretary would like it to be.

MOUNDSVILLE.—W. C. T. U. is arranging to hold special services at the penitentiary, on Thanksgiving Day.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

"Our flag is stainless, pure and bright,
Its folds ne'er trailed the dust,
Our chief has been baptized in fire;
Our cause is right and just."

Miss Willard's call to prayer is greeted with thanksgiving by our state workers, and that "waft from Idaho" touches all hearts. Once again let THE UNION SIGNAL readers see it. "If we temperance women and prohibitionists ever are successful in a national election, don't let us 'torch light procession' over our victory, but each go to his own place of worship, and there sing the doxology so loudly that it can be heard around the world." Waft, waft ye winds, this beautiful thought, till all the world shall hear and heed it.

GLOUCESTER CITY.—The W. C. T. U. have decided on another step forward, one which will meet a long felt want of this place, and on Saturday, the 22d inst. at 3:30 p. m. they will open a coffee and soup house at their rooms, corner Hudson and Willow streets. The needy [illegible]kets furnished them by the ladies of the [illegible]will be served at 5 and 10 cents at their [illegible]fferent ministers of the city will officiate [illegible]g exercises. The night school under the [illegible]udge Guant, with a gentleman and lady [illegible], is well attended, having some 210 scholars.

[illegible]NTCLAIR.—Mabee and English held a few meetings at this place beginning on Thanksgiving day.

PLAINFIELD.—Is to have a kitchen-garden department in her temperance work. Miss McClees, of Yonkers, our national organizer of kitchen gardens, has been with us several days instructing a class of ladies for teachers in this line of work. Each pupil must sign the pledge and join the white ribbon army and then commences instruction in the art of making prohibition bread, etc.

MICHIGAN.

LUDINGTON.—The temperance work which has been carried on in this place, under the leadership of Alexander Cooper, has been very successful, and it is difficult to estimate the good done, or the influence that will go on. The work was begun somewhat timidly, for the W. C. T. U. were not sure of the full co-operation of the people, but the crowded houses and generous collections at each meeting prove that the hearts of our people are true to temperance and ready to sustain the work with whatever help is needed. Over five hundred signed the pledge during the meetings in the Methodist and Congregational churches, and many more names have been added at the meetings held in the fourth ward. The membership of the union is nearly doubled, which so encourages and strengthens us that we feel fully repaid for our efforts.

We are very grateful to the pastors of the several churches for the help they have so heartily given, and the interest shown by being present at all the meetings when possible, particularly to Rev. Mr. Keyes, who so kindly took charge of the music.

Mr. Cooper has done a good work, and is certainly the right man in the right place. Mrs. Cooper was able to assist her husband a portion of the time, and taught us, in her own winning way, the largest charity. Our loving interest will follow them to other fields of work, and we pray that they may not weary in well-doing, being sustained by God.

The skating park was filled on the last Sunday of their stay with us, and the address on "Moderation" was so pointed and convincing that many came forward and put on the blue ribbon who had before resisted.

It would be a delight to give many incidents connected with the meetings; in particular of the joy on many faces as father, husband or son took the first step toward a better life, but our thoughts already turn to the future; to the needs for prayer, for forethought, time and money in behalf of the work. These brothers we are trying to save must have helping hands extended, and Christian influence thrown around them until they are able to stand alone against the temptations which meet them at every step. W.

MUSKEGON.—Through the year our ladies have done what they could in the way of securing temperance lecturers, distributing temperance literature etc., and are now trying to get temperance text-books into the schools which the W. C. T. U. so much desire.

In August, Mrs. Fisher, of Detroit, spent a few days with us and organized a band of Cadets of Temperance. Our Band now numbers about a hundred. They have an able drill-master in the person of a veteran soldier.

ADELLA C. FIRMAN.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

NANAIMO.—Miss Moore's visit to the Diamond City was in every respect a marked success. All her audiences in Nanaimo, three, and Wellington, one, were large, attentive and appreciative. I regard her as a most devoted Christian and an intelligent and earnest, as well as accomplished temperance, advocate. Her services here have done much good in awakening an interest in the temperance reform. I have not heard of one unfavorable criticism of the woman or her work. She has won the best hearts in the place by her modest, earnest and devout manner. We, with whom she stayed, were delighted with her. She is quite unselfish. Her closing sentences in her last lecture here were most touching. The true Christian spirit shone in her face and burned in her words, and when at the close of the lecture she, in true Presbyterian style, said: "Let us pray," and led us all in such a simple, confiding, tender presentation of our cause and the newly organized "union" to the Father of Mercies, my eyes, at enerate, gave out completely. She then called upon them to sing in closing, "Blest be the tie that binds," etc. May God bless her every day in her divine work. B.

Y. W. C. T. U. NOTES.

Somerset Y. W. C. T. U. has held a second "Drawing Room." Between forty and fifty were present. After a sacred solo (Judith) the scriptures were read and another solo was sung. One of Cannon Farrar's Talks on Temperance was read, also a very good article called "Views of a Distinguished Chemist." After another solo the evening was spent in a social way, and we all think it was a decided success and are much encouraged.

WHITESIDE COUNTY W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

This convention was held at Morrison on November 18 and 19, for the purpose of organizing the county. Quite a number of delegates and visitors were present and deeply interested in the progress of the work. A cordial address of welcome was given by Mrs. Rev. Wood, of Morrison, and Mrs. L. S. Rounds, of Chicago, happily responded. Each session was preceded by a half hour's devotional exercises.

Mrs. Huff, of Sterling, read a good paper on "Woman's Influence"; Mrs. Ira Lewis, of Dixon, told us "How to save the children from the curse of strong drink." Mr. Baldwin, of Rock Falls, made some very appropriate remarks. Miss Emma North, of Morrison, entertained us with a very fine recitation.

The Band of Hope meeting on Wednesday afternoon was in charge of Mrs. Rev. Frothingham, and made very interesting and instructive.

The evening meetings were well attended and were ably and eloquently addressed by Mrs. L. S. Rounds. On the second evening, though there was much outside to attract, yet there was a good audience. They listened with rapt attention and the truths uttered by the speaker seemed to be given with an inspiration that sent them directly to the heart of the listener. At the close of the address, when the ladies were being invited to become members of the union, three gentlemen arose and asked the privilege of joining. Of course they were cordially received as honorary members.

The county was organized; and the following officers elected: Mrs. Rev. Wood, of Morrison, president; Mrs. Ella Paddock, of Prophetstown, secretary; Miss Emma Snyder, of Sterling, treasurer. I am sure the work has received a new impetus that will show good results.

M. J. M.

BLOOMINGTON.—A grand re-union of Prohibitionists was held at Washingtonian hall, Nov. 25, for the purpose of comparing notes on re-consecration to the cause of national prohibition. The following was the program: Forenoon. Music, by Washingtonian choir; prayer by Rev. H. D. Clark; address of welcome, by Rev. Con. Haney; recess for congratulations; music and short speeches.

One of the pleasing features of the re-union was the basket picnic dinner. All were invited to bring lunch baskets to the hall, where hot coffee and tea were served free to those who wished to enjoy the social noon hour together.

AFTERNOON.—Song; Prayer by Rev. John Everly; Address by Hon. D. H. Harts; Music; Recess, twenty minutes; Short talks.

EVENING.—At 7:30 there was a grand temperance mass meeting addressed by Rev. G. M. Goode and others. Everybody cordially invited. While this was gotten up as a county reunion, others were not excluded, but workers of other counties were cordially invited to participate with us.

This occasion was a success. The noon lunch was delightful. We spread long tables, and enjoyed the contents of the well-filled lunch baskets and hot coffee and tea.

One of our young ladies who had been invited to help serve, expressed her regret at not being there, "for they were such a nice looking set of people."

This calls to mind the remark of a cousin of ours coming to visit us from Newark, N. J., a physician of some prominence, but one of the Blaine temperance men, who felt called upon to help "save the country." Our cousin happened to be on the same train with Gov. St. John, and recognized him by people coming aboard the train to salute him, sometimes riding to the next station. This was the Dr.'s remark: "I tell you, they were a nice looking set of people." That seemed to make the greatest impression on his mind, which only confirms the thought, that Prohibition votes ought to be weighed as well as counted, and weighed with glasses on too, to see how they look.

CARLINVILLE.—We had our election of officers recently which resulted as follows: Pres. Mrs. S. S. Hunter; Cor. Sec. Mrs. M. Holmes; Rec. Sec. Miss Sue Dick; Treas. Mrs. S. K. Merrick; Supt. Evangelistic work, Mrs. Caldwell, who also has taken charge of our reform Bible class. She is taking part in our active work and we are delighted to put her among our list of workers. We had eight prohibition votes cast in Carlinville, over which I greatly rejoice, and I verily believe our Union is starting out with new impetus and vigor. And now, although many are being persecuted all over the land for fearing God and daring to stand alone, let us rejoice and take fresh courage; for Jesus said:

"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

I feel encouraged, for I see "the dawning of a better day." M. HOLMES, Cor. Sec.

FREEPORT.—The women of the W. C. T. U. of Freeport, Ill., have invited the women of all the churches, and the community at large, to meet with them every Friday afternoon through the month of December, to hold a series of mothers' meetings. It is hoped that much good may result from this effort to unite the prayers of Christian women for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of the young people of the city.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Mr. Alexander Cooper has just returned from a successful work in Michigan, and is now ready to fill any engagements in Illinois. Send to Headquarters for dates.

—Mrs. Gertrude Singleton held an enthusiastic meeting last week at Homer, in the eighth district, where she went to visit the union. Good results must always follow such earnest work. Send to Headquarters for dates.

—Valuable tracts upon the suffrage question can be had by unions applying to Headquarters—sent out from there for the cost of postage and mailing, ten cents per 100. No. 1, Woman Suffrage in Wyoming; No. 2, Suffrage Essential to the Republic; No. 3, The Bible for Suffrage; No. 4, Short Answers to Common Objections. Send for them.

—Each union will receive two reports. Those desiring more can have them by sending postage at the rate of two cents per copy, or by paying expressage when sent in large numbers.

—The lecture given in the Baptist church of Sterling by Rev. W. T. Stowe, was an able and useful effort. The subject was "Education and Temperance." No allusion was made to the political phase of temperance. The argument and facts of the speaker were out of the ordinary line of addresses on the subject, and appealed largely to educators, parents and young people. Forcible though chaste language, apt illustrations, and an intense earnestness in the lecturer made the occasion one of interest and profit. Send to Headquarters for dates and terms.

—Miss West's tract, "Temperance in Public Schools," can be obtained at Headquarters by Illinois unions, for ten cents per 100, or for expressage. Each union should be well supplied.

A full supply of all the State leaflets always on hand. Send for them.

NEWS IN A NUT SHELL.

THE W. C. T. U., of Northfield, Vt., has a well filled column regularly in the Green Mountain News.

Albuquerque, New Mexico, has a grand Band of Hope, with a grand leader at its head, Mrs. Lewis.

Mrs. Ada H. Kepley, of Effingham, Illinois, State W. C. T. U., superintendent of Foreign Work, is the inventor and patentee of a "Traveler's Treasure Belt," which is at once simple and practical.

Phoenix, Arizona, W. C. T. U. sustains a free reading room, which is a great blessing to hundreds of homeless men, to be found in all frontier towns. During her visit there, Miss West formed a Band of Hope.

Mrs. J. T. Ellis, corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. Union, of New Jersey, was the recipient, lately, of a handsome walnut desk, presented by the ladies of the union as a slight token of their appreciation of her untiring devotion to the interests of the union, as well as of their personal attachment to her.

Mrs. Best, Illinois' superintendent of young woman's work, suggests that the Y. W. C. T. Unions, keep open house on New Year's day. She says: "Congregate together, put into your plans your very best thoughts as to how you shall make this first day of 1885 speak in behalf of the sweet graces of a pure youth-hood."

Mrs. Clara H. Smith, of Elmwood, Ill., has been lying dangerously ill at Chester, Ill., since the National convention. All her engagements in Kentucky and many Illinois had to be cancelled. She takes this method forming those places that are still waiting for dates for her illustrated lecture, also the many friends in Illinois and Missouri, who have written to her about coming to them with her lecture while she lay on her sick bed, that as soon as she is able to hold her pen, she will write them in regard to future dates and time of taking up the work again.

A GOOD work is being done by the W. C. T. U. of Germantown, Penn., in connection with its coffee-house and reading-room, in a central position. Besides furnishing between five and six thousand meals during the past year (as shown in its annual reports), and thus gaining an advantage over the taverns and saloons in the neighborhood, weekly gospel temperance meetings have been held, which have strengthened the reformed men, and have restored some who had fallen. An increase of means would greatly widen the beneficence of this institution. The union has recently established a temperance lodging-house for passing travelers. The president is Hannah Whitall Smith, treasurer, Laura P. Corse.

IT has been arranged that five prominent Unitarian clergymen of Boston, with Rev. Dr. Hale at the head, shall each deliver a lecture upon what they term "The Gospel of Practical Reform," and each of these lectures is to be repeated in five different churches. The lecture of Rev. Rufus Ellis, D. D., upon "The Duty of Enforcing the Laws about Saloons and Gambling," Sunday evening, Nov. 9th, was a strong presentation of the dangers and temptations which are tolerated in our midst in violation of law, and an eloquent appeal to all christian people of all denominations to a united determination to enforce obedience to our laws.

LORD CLAUDE HAMILTON, M. P., for Tyrone, Ireland, speaking of a district of sixty-one square miles inhabited by 10,000 people, traversed by high-roads to market towns, and without public houses, says: "The result has been that whereas those high roads were in former times the constant scenes of strife and drunkenness, necessitating the presence of a considerable number of police, at present there is not a single policeman, the poor rates are half what they were before, and all the magistrates testify to the great absence of crime.

THE Presbyterian Synod of Dakota, held in Yankton, in September, adopted earnest resolutions enjoining every minister and elder to labor in every lawful way for constitutional prohibition; and that, having heard the cause of the W. C. T. U. as represented by the president during the session of the Synod, they heartily endorsed their efforts, and recommended that every minister preach at least once a year on the subject of temperance, and take up a collection for the W. C. T. U.

THE W. C. T. U. of Clay county, Iowa, held the first quarterly convention Nov. 15, and it was a grand success. Fine addresses were given by Martha J. Jones, county president, Rev. Mr. Waldron, and Hon. Aaron Kimball, of Cresco. The Spencer W. C. T. U. expects to have Mrs. Helen M. Gougax to lecture about Dec. 6 and 7, and is full of determination to prosecute temperance work. The next quarterly convention will be held at Greenville, Dec. 6.

MRS. E. S. BOYD is now president of the Territorial W. C. T. U. of Wyoming, Mrs. J. H. Hayford, corresponding secretary and treasurer, both of Laramie City, and Mrs. M. A. Bristol, of Cheyenne, recording secretary. The temperance women are voting for temperance men for office, from constable to delegate to congress.

DEPARTMENT OF SABBATH DESECRATION.

DEAR SISTERS:—It was doubtless through inadvertence that in the editorial glance at "Our New Superintendencies," in the UNION SIGNAL, the latest of all the national children, the department of Efforts to Prevent Sabbath Desecration was omitted. The department was created at the St. Louis convention and I was appointed national superintendent. (See THE UNION SIGNAL no. 43 page 4.)

Being obliged to leave the convention before its last evening's session, this action was communicated to me by the secretary, and after a few days delay, I signified to her my acceptance. The mails may have been in fault that the word failed to reach THE UNION SIGNAL.

Sabbath observance has for years been a subject of special interest to me, and though all unworthy, I am glad that Providence has opened a door through which I may hope to stimulate my sisters to greater efforts to save our Sabbath from desecration.

The work is of immeasurable magnitude and importance. The liquor dealers covet and intend to have our Sabbath and in the cities have largely secured it, so that while the week's wages are still unspent, there may be a holiday with open bars, when as they well know, more liquor will be sold than in the whole week beside.

But all branches of the Sabbath question are interwoven. Every railroad train that thunders past, breaking the sweet Sabbath stillness, is an open defiance of God's law, every mail transported and opened on the Lord's day is lowering the Sabbath sanctity and demoralizing the people. Alas! what shall we say for the Christian men and women who for their own convenience patronize the one and receive the other and clip off both ends of the Sabbath at their will. Alas for the decay of public conscience and must we say it, of Christian conscience.

Already I am in correspondence with many who are specially interested in this line of work, and hope ere long to devise some plan by which our six thousand unions may co-operate in some measures by which the Sabbath may be rescued and saved.

Pray for your new superintendent, sisters, and aid me by your counsels, and above all let us each one "over against her own house, build up the wall" of a well kept Sabbath.

MRS. JOSEPHINE C. BATEHAM.

SOUVENIR FUND.

RECEIPTS FROM SALES OF SOUVENIRS AT ST. LOUIS.

Gold thimble, $5; small pencils, $1; picture, $1; tidy, .50; lace barbe, .50; silk bag, $2.00; match scratchers, $1.00; nut picks, $1 00; diamond ring, $25.00; spoon, $5.00; pencil, $1.50; silver cup, $5 00; toilet set, $2.50; crazy quilt, $15.00; cup, $2.00; old spoon, $2 50; cups, $1.00. Total, $71.50.

Five dollars was realized from the sale of fruit which decorated the platform, and five dollars was received from Mrs. S. C. Jackson, superintendent of fairs for Iowa. There were many difficulties in the way of making sales, but those in charge feel that a good sum and fair prices were realized under all the adverse circumstances.

The unsold articles, many of which are valuable, were placed in charge of Mrs. Buell, and she will gladly receive bids for them. ESTHER PUGH, Treas.

N. W. C. T. U. FRANCHISE WORK AT "WORLD'S FAIR."

Will not each state—already committed to Franchise work—provide immediately for the distribution of suffrage literature at the World's Fair at New Orleans. A most excellent opportunity is thus offered to further this branch of our work. "All packages must be sent to the Woman's Department, New Orleans Exposition, care of Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick."

Also let every individual interested contribute to a National Franchise Fund. Please send without delay your cash contributions marked "Franchise Fund," to our National treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cleveland, Ohio, who will keep a list of names and contributions, both of which will be of great value to the superintendent of this department, Mrs. Z. G. Wallace.

BUSINESS NOTICE.

WHAT B. Atwater, Practical Stenographer, says about Dr. Miller's system of short hand: Having witnessed a young lady write from dictation at her sixth lesson in the Laconic system, I take pleasure in stating that I certainly think it a remarkable exhibition of speed and legibility. After giving six months study to Phonography I could not do so well.

NOTICE our premium gift. Misletoe memories is an exceedingly pretty souvenir of Christmas and will make a very acceptable present, price 35 cts. post paid. Three for one dollar. We offer this as a gift to every person sending us a new subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL with $1.75.

MR. J. E. DOWNEY, of J. E. Downey & Co., whose advertisement appears on the 2nd page of the cover, at one time head of the firm, Downey, Brouse, Butler & Co., of Indianapolis, is thoroughly reliable and well backed financially.

LITERARY NOTICE.

ONE of the daintiest conceits of the season is Beacon Lights for God's Mariners, compiled and illustrated by Elizabeth M. Little, author of "Pansy Text Book," and published by S. E. Cassino & Co., Boston. It is a compilation of texts and hymns for each day of the month, the illustrations, all of a nautical character, being in silver or sea green. We have seen nothing to compare with it in its exquisite beauty. The text and poetic selections have been made with excellent judgment. It is something so unique and entirely different from any other publication that it will be prized by all who come in possession of it as a veritable gem of art.

THE UNION SIGNAL

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE N. W. C. T. U.

FOUNDED 1874.

Prospectus for 1885.

IN entering its eleventh year THE UNION SIGNAL congratulates its readers on the store of good things laid up for the coming year. As the first promise of a newspaper is NEWS, we have made arrangements for a systematic survey of the whole temperance field in the engagement of reliable and racy correspondents for each section of the country as follows:

NEW ENGLAND will be represented faithfully and graphically by MRS. DR. GORDON, of Boston, Mass.;

THE MIDDLE STATES by MRS. MARY LOWE DICKINSON, of New York City.

THE SOUTHERN STATES by MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD for the Eastern, and MRS. LIDE MERIWETHER, for the Western South.

THE GREAT WEST will be "taken note of" by MRS. CLARA HOFFMAN, of Kansas City, Mo.

These correspondents will not supersede the "old reliable" news-gatherers in the states and local unions, but will give a general summarizing of research and survey at least once a month in the shape of a sketchy NEWS LETTER. In addition to this, the National Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. C. B. Buell will, from her high tower of observation, give frequent NOTES ALL ALONG THE LINE. We shall incorporate another new feature this year in the line of

"HEALTH TALKS," by prominent Physicians and Students of Hygiene—and are arranging for a series of papers on HOUSEHOLD RELIGION from our ever-welcome contributor, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith. A liberal supply of Literary and Scientific Articles will be furnished by such pens as those of

Dr. SARAH HACKETT STEVENSON,
"ELIZABETH CUMMINGS,"
Dr. MARY WEEKS BURNETT,
Mrs. MARY H. HUNT,
MARY ALLEN WEST,
Miss LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL,
Mrs. MARY E. C. WYETH,
KATE HAMILTON,
FRANCES E. WILLARD.
Mrs. MARY A. LIVERMORE,
Mrs. SARAH K. BOLTON,
Dr. BESSIE V. CUSHMAN,
Mrs. EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER,
ALICE M. GUERNSEY,
Mrs. SALLIE F. CHAPIN,
Mrs. S. M. I. HENRY,
Mrs. ESTHER T. HOUSH.
REV. LEWIS MEREDITH,

DR. HENRY M. BANNISTER, of the Eastern Illinois Hospital for the Insane, and several English writers of eminence.

"Gospel Politics" will be advocated as in the past by eminent leaders and writers, some of whom are

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP, REV. DR. A. J. GORDON, REV. DR. A. J. JUTKINS, MISS E. L. SAXON, GEN. CLINTON B. FISKE, MRS. MARY T. BURT.

A DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS AND GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS TO THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC will include Editorial Articles,—Letters from the Eminent English Statistician, Mr. WILLIAM HOYLE;—Articles on CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION, by Mrs. JUDITH ELLEN FOSTER, and Discussions of the LICENSE QUESTION, by Prof. GEO. E. FOSTER, M. P.

The Tastes and Interests of the Children and the Home, will be carefully consulted in the pages devoted respectively to these important constituencies, while the Sunday School and the Band of Hope, will receive large attention and help. Temperance S. S. Lessons written by eminent divines, will be published each quarter. Stories, Biography, Travel and Adventure, all tinged with and bearing upon the thought of EDUCATIONAL TEMPERANCE WORK will interest and instruct "OUR YOUNG FOLKS." And now permit a word of

PERSONAL APPEAL TO WORKERS:

HAS THE UNION SIGNAL been a blessing to your homes? Has it cheered any despondent hours? Has it nerved your heart for the strife against evil? Has it been an educator? Has it given weapons of argument and proven armor for the war of the Home against the Saloon? All this we have striven to make it. And for the New Year we are planning still better and broader things. Will you not, in view of all that the paper has done in the past, as well as all it hopes and promises to do in the future, make extra effort this year to place it as an educator in every home?—to make it the pioneer of your organized effort—the "avant courier" to announce the near approach of a W. C. T. U. where none is yet formed—and "The gospel of good tidings" to communities as yet unblessed with Prohibition of the open Dram Shop.

Address THE UNION SIGNAL, 161 La Salle St. Chicago.

Signal Notes.

THE Prohibition vote of Pike county, Illinois, was 78. The county is strongly Democratic and the Prohibition vote came in about equal numbers from the old parties.

A CERTAIN liquor dealer in East Wilmington, Delaware, is trying hard to get a liquor license; but the people of that community who love order and quiet are doing their best to defeat him.

THE Prohibition League of the 22nd assembly district of New York city, is strongly organized for permanent work. The officers are: president, Jeremiah T. Brooks; secretary, M. J. Ryan; treasurer, Wm. McK. Gatchell.

IN the Methodist Episcopal Conference at Mitchell, Dakota, recently, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we will never consent to the adoption of a constitution for the future state of Dakota which does not contain constitutional prohibition.

ONE of the largest and most enthusiastic meetings held during the late Unitarian National Conference, was in the interest of temperance. The trumpet gave no uncertain sound. This meeting was addressed by Dr. Eliot, of St. Louis, and others, and strong total abstinence resolutions were passed.

AMONG the names on the role of St. John voters are such men as Drs. Talmage, Cuyler, Deems, and Cummings, Joseph Cook, President Seelye, Jesse B. Thomas, Howard Crosby, John B. Gough, Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Drs. James M. Sherwood, Bishop, Kerfoot, Pullman, Gordon, of Boston; and many others, "good men and true."

THE Prohibition Association of the 23rd ward of Brooklyn, N. Y., only organized in September, but have enlisted "for the war," and have already commenced a vigorous campaign The association officers are, president, Asa F. Smith; vice president, Edwin B. Cole; secretary, Cecil H. Howard; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet N. K. Goff.

THE young chimpanzee, Remus, in Central Park, New York, has his own little house, furnished with a bed, mattress and blanket, a table and chairs, a looking-glass and wash-bowl. It is said that he sits at the table and dines with his keeper, taking his bottle of red wine with a very human-like relish. He was recently brought from Liberia, and when full grown will be about four feet and a half high.

A GENTLEMAN of Leavenworth, Kas., who was present at elections in Cheyenne, Wyoming, for several years, and witnessed the voting of women, speaks in the most favorable terms of their influence. The voting took place in a public hall, which had been adorned by the hands of the women with flags, mottoes and flowers. The best of order and politeness prevailed. In Leavenworth there are four polling places, two of these are at livery stables, one at a saloon and the other at the city hay scales. He desires woman suffrage in Kansas, in order that an improvement may be made as to a proper place for voting as well as the bringing in of better order.

PEOPLE who are interested to know whether prohibition does or does not prohibit, may like to know some of the devices to avoid the prohibition law in Kansas. For instance, one is to make the express offices the bonded warehouses of the liquor dealer. Shipped in packages containing two quarts and upwards and marked for certain points in the state thus: D | E | A | T | H. The purchaser having been provided with a slip of paper purporting to have been sent to him from a near or a distant city, reading thus: Please deliver to the bearer one package marked (D), upon paying the amount of $.... seventy-five cents, will secure the package containing two quarts, marked (D). Then another calls for (E) and pays $1.50, and so on, until the whole town or neighborhood is supplied, and (DEATH) in its five or more packages is delivered. Thus the cry is sent forth, "Prohibition does not prohibit."

Miscellaneous Selections.

THE MURDEROUS SEA-FLOWER.

One of the exquisite wonders of the sea is called the opelet, and is about as large as the German aster, with a great many long pentals of a light color, glossy as satin, and each one tipped with rose color. The lovely pentals do not lie quietly in their places, but wave about in the water, while the opelet clings to a rock. How innocent and lovely it looks on its rocky bed! Who would suspect that it would eat anything grosser than dew or sunlight? But those beautiful waving arms, as you call them, have to provide for a large open mouth, which is hidden down deep among them—so hidden that one can scarcely find it. Well do they perform ther duty, for the instant a foolish little fish touches one of the rosy tips he is struck with poison as fatal to him as lightning. He immediately becomes numb, and in a moment stops struggling and then the other arms wrap themselves around him and he is seen no more. Then the lovely arms unclose and wave again in the water. Fit emblem of the saloon. The arms reached out so invitingly and welcome to the embrace of death. Struck with poison — benumbed and grasped—the victims are carried down to the open mouth of hell.

THE Catholic Total Abstinence Union is redoubling its efforts since its late national convention in Chicago. Its "Official Bulletin," No. 43, declares: "Everywhere there are signs of preparation for the coming winter campaign against intemperance. The impetus given to the movement by the able members of the heirarchy who lent their aid to the deliberations of the convention is being felt in every quarter. A vigorous and aggressive warfare is to be waged. The habitual disregard of law and religion by saloon-keepers is to be no longer overlooked. The sale of liquors to minors and intemperate persons, the violations of the Sabbath statutes, the offensive attempts by saloon-keepers to shape legislation against the best interests of the people, are to be held up before the public in their true light, as injurious to public morals and productive of grave injury to Catholic interests. We are not to be fanatical, says the convention, nor shall we identify our organization with the prohibitory movement, but we can make odious the violation of law by saloon-keepers by doing all in our power to create a public sentiment adverse to it. Let us, therefore, make a strong effort at once to build up our societies, organizing men, women, and children wherever possible, until the Catholic public is thoroughly awakened to the dangers of intemperance."

AS AN aid to men desiring to break away from their appetite for strong drink, the Philadelphia Ledger suggests the following: "For such, let the house-mother always have on hand something hot, or tonic, or refreshing to tide over for the hour the agonizing demand of the body for stimulation. Hot drinks—coffee, sometimes tea, cocoa, either ground or in the form of shells or cracked cocoa. This is nutritious as well as satisfying. Hot broth, beef tea, or beef essence can be bought, but are far better made at home; hot milk, and ginger tea, etc. Aerated drinks—lemon soda, zoedone and lemonade, can be kept in the house, and are harmless, the tang being by fixed air. Refreshing drinks are cold milk, buttermilk, whey, drinks of lemon and other acid fruits, and what is just as effectual and much cheaper, dilute phosphoric acid. A few drops in water, sweetened, makes a pleasant drink, and ten cents' worth will last for months. Oat meal water, just a handful in a pitcher of water. This is both refreshing and strengthening, especially in summer.

THE Scott law, Canada's local option prohibitory enactment, was voted upon in four counties recently, and carried in all. Over forty counties in the Dominion are now under prohibition through the adoption of this law, and yet the Canadian temperance men demand a prohibitory act covering the manufacture and sale of liquors.

OUR PREMIUM GIFT.

Get You Ready

FOR CHRISTMAS. There will be stockings to fill. Christmas trees to adorn. Absent friends must be remembered, and if you are a Sunday School teacher, under no circumstances can "those scholars" be forgotten. "But what can I get that will be at the same time attractive, interesting and instructive?" Allow us to suggest "MISTLETOE MEMORIES, or what the Poets Say about Christmas." This unique collection of Poems is selected from the writings of H. W. Longfellow, J. G. Whittier, Thomas Hood, Alfred Domett, Charles Mackay, Sir Walter Scott, Jennie Joy, and others. The whole bound in Banner shape, with rich fringe and tassels. The cover of this novelty is printed in nearly eighteen colors (being an almost exact fac simile of landscape studies printed in oil colors on gold pebble board), and ranks exceedingly high as an imported art production of the premier class. The original designs are drawn by H. Maurice Page, and were awarded a Prize of Fifty Pounds Sterling at the Suffolk street (London) Galleries in a competitive exhibit of 6000 entries, by the following eminent judges: J. E. Millais, Marcus Stone and G. A. Storey. For presentation, this art souvenir is vastly superior to a mere Christmas card, as it combines the advantages of both art and literature. SIZE 4 BY 6½ INCHES. Price, Beautifully Silk Fringed, with Tassels, only 35 cents, post paid. Three copies for $1.00. Mailed in envelope and protector, with privilege of returning if not absolutely satisfactory. ORDER AT ONCE.

Every person sending us $1.75, with one new subscriber for THE UNION SIGNAL before December 20th, 1884, will upon demand, receive this beautiful Christmast memento FREE.

...Hair Vigor cures baldness. ...Hair Vigor restores youthful ...s and color to faded and gray ...r. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair and the good it does is by the VIGOR it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses HAIR of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair VIGOR is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. • Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. • For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

F. CROSBY & CO., 56 West 25th st., New York.

The well-known Dry Goods house of JAS. ARMSTRONG & Co., has for nearly two years occupied the building Nos. 138, 140, 142 and 144 State street. In this short time by their fair dealing and by carrying only first-class goods, such as they could recommend, they have won the confidence of the masses. Their goods are marked at prices suitable for these hard times. They do not believe in misrepresentation or exaggeration. Their advertisements are generally simple statements of facts. This stock is large and varied. They are very popular sellers of silks and dress goods. Their stock of Cloaks and Shawls is one of the finest in the city. Mr. Jas. Armstrong the senior member has long been connected with the Dry Goods business and in the course of his career he has crossed the Atlantic ocean fifty-six times. He has bought goods all over Europe for the house of A. T. Stewart, of New York, with whom he was long connected. He has built up a large trade and is now recognized as one of the leading Dry Goods merchants of the west.

THE elegant art emporium of Vergho, Ruhling & Co., is crowded from morning to night with delighted purchasers of Christmas and Holiday presents. They have the largest and most complete stock of Holiday goods in Chicago. Nothing second hand or stale. Their enormous trade enables them to sell at the lowest possible price. There is no house in Chicago that can compete with them. Mr. Archie Cracraft the gentlemanly and efficient business manager has a thorough knowledge of the requirements of the holiday making people of Chicago, and has selected his stock with much discrimination. Pay them a visit and your Christmas presents will be much handsomer and you will spend less money on them than ever before.

THE Jaros Hygienic Underwear advertised on the first page of this paper is recommended and worn by Prof. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanatarium.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.
Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated
North-Western Dining Cars,
the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.
All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.
It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.
Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 49. CHICAGO, DECEMBER 18, 1884. $1 75 PER YEA

PROF. C. GILBERT WHEELER, one of the most skillful chemists of this city, says that he does not know of the drug in medicine which cannot be prepared for use as well without alcohol as with it.

DAKOTA is knocking with short, steady raps at the door of the national household. Will not the gracious mistress of the house, Columbia, send down word by her servant, the U. S. Congress, that she is not at home to any but prohibition territories? Let us see.

IT strikes us that the W. C. T. U. in the five states which have secured the compulsory temperance education law, can not do better than to appoint a committee from its best members, who shall visit the schools in all their different grades and see how the good work goes on. This will brighten up the scholars, put the teachers on their mettle, and emphasize public interest in many ways.

A SERMON on the Mormon iniquity, preached by the Rev. Dr. Noble, before the New West Education Commission, is before us, in pamphlet form. It deals unsparingly with the sin, and justly with the methods hitherto employed in the attempt to eradicate it, but wisely concludes that not education alone, nor gospel influence alone, will put down the terrible iniquity, but that it must experience a "grinding between the upper and nether millstones of just and skillfully framed laws."

ON another page may be found a Christmas appeal on behalf of the inmates of Illinois penitentiaries, and the free circulation of the UNION SIGNAL among them. May it not apply as well to other states and their prisoners? We are in continual receipt of grateful letters from the prisoners of Joliet and Chester, for the generous gift of the paper by the Illinois W. C. T. U. and have no doubt other penitentiaries and their inmates might be equally thankful if as well supplied, also other state institutions.

THE liquor dealers of Cleveland came together the other day to discuss the operation and non-operation of the Scott law. Among other curious things said and done during the discussion, somebody asserted that "this is a fight in which we liquor men must stand side by side with our prayers and our pocketbooks. We are going to have a liquor war in this state and it will be a hot one. It is the Democratic party against the Prohibitionists." He was immediately hushed on the charge of talking politics.

JOSEPH COOK reaches the heart of things in this appeal, in his lecture on "Lawlessness": "Let the parlor be aroused!" And not only in the sense of drawing a line between the good and the bad as to the visitors we admit to our hospitality; but let the homes be aroused to the danger "within our gates!" To the heart-breaking possibilities contained in the cut-glass decanter on the elegant side-board. To the wild beast lurking in the private cupboard of the cultured gentleman's "snuggery," where his friends drop in for a smoke and a chat, and a drink. To the growing sullenness and indefinable change that are creeping over the spirits of the once light-hearted and loving husband, together with the blood-shot eye and trembling hand. To the devastation that overhangs many a lofty home, crowded with all that art and beauty can bring, and threatens to make it pass away like "the unsubstantial fabric of a dream." Yes, "let the parlor be aroused!"

A PEN dipped in fires of indignation could not fitly describe a recent scene enacted near the Jerome Park race course, New York city. Numerous boys are employed in the racing stables as jockeys, and are as a rule, growing up in absolute ignorance of everything good. Their whole life is with the horses, and amid the vicious associations that cluster about their stunted experience. A writer in the American describes a party of five little jockeys whom he came upon in a road-side inn, near the place referred to above, playing pool for the drinks, which was invariably whisky. They were between ten and fifteen years of age, all drunk. No one interfered in the disgraceful situation, but as the writer says, with bitter sarcasm: "The scene was much too funny to be disturbed. The blasphemy was so piquant when uttered by smooth lips, the coarse jests so much more diverting than those of men, and the drunkenness so jolly because the inebriates were callow. A box was set for a lad to stand on in attempting a shot. He missed the ball, lost his balance and fell under the table. That raised a roar of laughter, so comical was it to see a ten year old sot."

SECRETARY LINCOLN recently forwarded to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, a petition from fifty clerks of the surgeon general's office, asking that the large number of bar rooms surrounding their place of business be closed—in order to reduce the manifold temptations of young men in government service. The assistant surgeon added his own endorsement stating that investigation satisfied him as to the bad character of the dram shops in question, and adding that every day drunken men could seen reeling from these establishments, and their proximity to the Army Medical Mus and the hundred clerks employed in the surg general's department, is a standing nuisance disgrace. The surgeon general gave his sanction to the plea, and it passed on to the c missioners who ignore the whole protest, re- licenses to these same keepers, and say that "Th have a good police record and have otherwi fully complied with the requirement of t license laws." The saloonists so licensed a now advised by the Washington Sentinel, prosecute Captain Pope, the assistant surgeo for damages to their reputation by his statemer that their establishments was a nuisance a disgrace.

The question recurs on all such instances, W Congress protect its own service by passi Senator Blair's bill prohibiting the manuf ture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the D trict of Columbia.

FROM high official authority, namely Co General Vogelen, at Frankfort-on-the-Mai a dispatch to the state department on inte ance in north Germany, we learn some sta facts. The claim is often made by the advo of whisky and beer, that the Germans a proof that these things can be indulged in wit out harm, and that it is only by the abuse these "good things of God" (?) that evil effec follow. How false this claim is, in the case the nation quoted, is shown by a few pages fro the shameful history: The number of drink places in Prussia has risen from 119,945 in 1 to 165,640 in 1880. The number of persons became insane in consequence of excessive dr ing (delirium tremens), in Prussia, from 187 1879 was 3,453, or 14.84 per cent. of all dem ed persons. Of 33,837 convicts of the s period, 41 per cent. were known to have c mitted the crime while under the influence liquor. Of 4,450 suicides, 508 were the resul excessive drinking. More than 50 per cent pauperism there is due to the same cause.

Forty years ago a strong movement was ganized to check this vice, but the revolution 1848 distracted the attention of the governm and people from the subject.—In 1866 laws re lating taverns and drinking places were made more stringent, but the trade law of 1869, adopted by the Imperial Government, tied the hands of those who would enforce many of the provisions of the former. We rejoice that Germans are arousing to this matter, and look for a refor all along the line.

A BATTLE HYMN.

KATHARINE D. KIRKPATRICK.

The fires sweep o'er, the cyclones blow;
They shrivel with heat, or bend them low,
But spring again—the grasses.

We bend us low, we shrink with pain;
When tempests lull, we'll work again,
Till Prohibition passes.

Shoulder to shoulder, man by man,
Un-knowing section, sect, or clan,
Unfearing sin's crevasses.

Maiden by maiden, wife by wife,
E'en children pressing to the strife,
We'll break the poisoned glasses.

Then up the ladder of our time
Th' emancipated race shall climb,
And sing for joy—the masses.

A FIELD SURVEY.

JAMES B. HOBBS.

The great battle is over. The smoke has cleared away d we are able to take an account of the dead and ounded. We find there are none. We have suffered defeat. Rather, we have gained a victory. We went to the contest with great expectations. We had rea- s for being hopeful. The liquor traffic was and is a at evil, a great crime. The church and the better ss of all parties were opposed to it. They were evi- tly in sympathy with any honorable means which ked toward its suppression. The church numbers enteen millions of members, all of whom ought to be posed to this nefarious traffic. If all the voting mem- s had arrayed themselves on the side of Prohibition, y would have made an army of at least three millions. ides these there was a small army of reformed men, l men, citizens of all communities and of all parties, re not members of churches; all together they would made up a force sufficiently powerful to have buried quor traffic beyond all possible resurrection. But ey did not do. These church members, reformed and citizens, chose to stand by their own parties; more, they became our bitter enemies. Ministers of e Gospel denounced us. They called us fools, fanatics. e moral party men joined themselves to their idols and aped bitter reproach upon us. Many church members d the same. Party newspapers denounced us, misrep- sented us, did all they could to stir up opposition to us, til the people believed that we were indeed "fanatics, , moral idiots;" and when the test came, only those had the courage and manhood to face all this oppo- n, marched up to the polls and cast their ballots for principles, and now when the vote has been counted nd that our army numbers 150,000. But these are bound together by bands of steel. They form a d army. They are in line. No force brought against n can move them. They are keeping step to the tune pposition and the tramp of these men is shaking the or traffic to its very foundations. The distillery, pro- ed by the government of the United States, is shaking top to bottom. The saloons, protected by our state rnment, are trembling. They appreciate the power strength of these 150,000 brave men, and they see r doom. It is as plain to them as the dawn of a sum- morning. They see written in lurid letters upon the "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." hese 150,000 men are but the nucleus of a grander y. The question of a third party has been settled, and settled forever. It is a party which no power can put down. It is national, and will be national in face of all opposition. This question of the nation vs. the rum traffic will unite all good citizens. Tens of thousands of men have voted with their former party for the last time. Henceforth this army of 150,000 men will not lack for ends. Recruits are coming in from all directions. The er denunciation of the press, the opposition of ministers and citizens, the boycotting of the business men, have only served to unite more firmly the ranks of this noble army, and to convince the men of sober sense and consideration that the cause of prohibition is right, that this terrible rum traffic cannot be regulated, cannot be controlled in any other way than by total annihilation.

After more than forty years of moral suasion, of high license, of local option, this evil has been growing year by year. All these efforts have failed to check its growth. Churches, temperance lectures, gospel temperance meetings, headed by men and women, the woman's crusade, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have done wonders, but the saloon interests have gone on prospering and manufacturing drunkards much faster than all these good men and women could save them. The good men and women could see that something else must be done, and they begin to see that if we would purify the waters we must first purify the fountain. That if we would cure an evil we must first remove its cause.

Never before in the history of this or any other nation has the cause of temperance been so feely and universally discussed and understood; never have so many intelligent men taken this subject under consideration; never before has so much literature bearing on the question gone into the hands of the people; never have so many temperance men and woman taken so decided a stand; never have there been so many ready to do and sacrifice for the cause. Therefore we have the greatest reason for encouragement.

We have no cause for rejoicing at the success of the Democratic party. Neither do we rejoice at the downfall of the Republican party. Indeed the success or defeat of either was not a question of ours. Ours was a party of prohibition, and as both of these parties opposed prohibition their success or defeat did not concern us. But the Republican party will never gain another national victory unless it adopts the principle of submission of this question to a vote of the people.

The great question that is before our people is the disposition of the rum traffic. The parties of the future will be Rum or No Rum, and if the Republican party expects ever to gain another national victory, it must take up this question. The Democratic party has already taken its position in favor of rum. The Republican party must take the other side or be forever in the minority. The great party of the future will be the Temperance party. It may be under the leadership of the Republican party. It may be under the leadership of the Prohibition party. Possibly a new party will start into life embodying the principles of the Prohibition party, and the better principles of the Republican party. Whichever it may be, the principle of prohibition is sure to win.

There are men, and good men, who do not realize that the battle is over. That the question of a third party has been settled. These men say they will not help support the prohibitionists. That they will never vote with them. Well, what will they do? Will they let the temperance cause die, will they henceforth vote with the liquor party? They can do what they like. They can leave undone what they like. That is their business, not ours. We shall do our duty. We shall go on fighting this traffic to the end.

All temperance men agree in this, that it ought to be suppressed. We disagree as to methods. Some of the timid say, "Kill it easy, kill it by inches. Commence at the bottom and work up to it. Cut the dog's tail off a little at a time." We say, "Cut the tail off just behind the ears." Some cry local option. But this has been tried for years. It works well in spots. It is like trying to cure a skin disease by healing the least affected spots and leaving the worst ones to fester and grow corrupt. Local option does not cure. The traffic continues to increase, as shown by the government reports.

Moral suasion is the great hobby of many. This is a means to the end. But this has been tried pretty effectually for the past fifty years or more. Temperance societies, the Woman's crusade, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, church societies, individual efforts, all together have done a wonderful work. Thousands and tens of thousands of drunkards have been reclaimed, public sentiment has been aroused. But the great work of destruction still goes on. Where these instrumentalities have succeeded in saving one drunkard, the liquor shops have made ten. The consumption of liquor goes on increasing year by year. In 1840 the consumption of malt liquors in the United States was thirty-one million gallons. In 1883 it was five hundred and fifty-one million gallons!! Should not this terrible increase teach moral suasionists the need of supplementary effort? But moral suasion should not cease. Even though insufficient, it is one of the means to be used. No means should be discontinued that results in the salvation of human souls. Let this great work go on. Let it be augmented. Temperance reformers should put forth increased efforts to save. We can go on purifying the waters.

High license is another device. It is a child of the Republican party, adopted into the family to prevent the question of prohibition entering the fold. After its adoption, it was dressed in the beautiful garments of finance and sent forth into the world before its maturity. Its name and beautiful appearance gained the applause of the multitude. But its birth was premature, its life is sickly, and it will have an early death. Its life has been a fraud and a failure. There never has been a more deceptive measure introduced into temperance politics. It was put forth to deceive prohibitionists. Offered to them as a sop in lieu of prohibition, and succeeded in quieting them for a while, but now they see it in all its deformity.

The question for us to settle is this. Is the rum traffic an evil? Is it a crime? There is but one answer. It is the crime of the age. It is the mother of crime, of prostitution, of poverty, of disgrace. If a crime, why license it? As well license prostitution, as well license murder, as well license stealing. It is said in reply, that law has power to regulate these, but that we must have the liquor traffic, and as we must have it, let us tax it. Then I say why not tax all the other crimes; we have them and the law does not stop them, therefore tax them and pay the expenses of prosecution. Tax murder. Tax adultery. Tax robbing. Tax larceny. The government would realize a vast revenue from all.

As to the first, does the law regulate? Is there any less liquor sold under high license than under low license or free liquor? Is there any "corner" on liquor in any state? Any one who knows anything about the condition of our cities and towns under high license government will answer, No. The records show that the sale of liquor under high license goes on increasing. Instead of prohibiting, it actually causes an increase in its sale.

High license tends to make the liquor traffic respectable. A man who has a license to sell intoxicating liquors has as much right to sell as any merchant has to sell any kind of merchandise, and receives as much protection as any man of business. The very fact that he has a government license makes him more independent and fearless of the consequence of his business.

Does licensed liquor make less paupers? Does it make less drunkards? Is it more harmless in its effects? Does it cause less misery, and shame and sorrow? Does it vitiate the morals of society less than untaxed liquor? Most assuredly not. High license liquor is just as bad in its effects as any other liquor.

The revenue of $4,500,000 collected from the saloons in this state is referred to as showing the wonderful advantage of high license. It is claimed that it helps to pay our taxes; indeed, that the amount collected from the saloons of Chicago amounts to nearly half of all the other taxes. With it the police force can be paid. It pays for police courts, judges, prisons, etc., etc. If the advocates of high license would count the cost of the liquor traffic, the money necessary to pay the costs of this traffic, in police, police courts, justices, attornies, magistrates, prisons, and the cost of keeping prisoners after conviction, it would be found that the cost would greatly exceed the amount derived as revenue.

Some time since I was talking with a man from the central part of this state. He was a high license man and a Republican. He was advocating the cause of high license. I questioned him as to the workings of it in his own town. He told me in substance that they had nine saloons in his town; that the license was fixed at $800 each, the nine yielding a revenue of $7,200. This he considered clear gain. Then I asked him about the police and arrests. He said that the number arrested each day averaged about three; this would amount to about 1,000 annually. The cost of prosecution and other expenses, he said, would amount to about $500 each. "This," said I, "amounts to $500,000 as the cost of your liquor traffic. I cannot see any financial advantage in that." Neither did he.

By further inquiry, I found that under local option the city had been for three years without saloons, and that during that time a police force was unnecessary and the jail was empty. The workings of the law in this town I think fairly represents the condition in many other towns. But the $4,500,000 received from the saloons really does not come from the saloons. It comes from the pockets of the poor, the laborers, and the criminals; as much the largest proportion of the money expended for liquor comes from this class. The money that comes from them is the bread, clothing, and homes of this people. It is taken from them by the saloonists and paid into the treasury of the city. With the blood money of its citizens, Chicago paves its streets; builds its city hall; pays for its public works, its health department, its police. O, shame, shame on Chicago!

Judas betrayed his Lord with thirty pieces of silver, but when he saw his Master hanging on the cross, his conscience smote him. He ran to the temple, to the high priests, threw the money down, saying: "I will not have it. It is blood money. Take it back." What did the high priests do with it? Pave the streets of Jerusalem? No! Pay the police of Jerusalem? No! Pay the board of public works of Jerusalem? No! They bought a burying ground for their criminals!! O, shame on Chicago, shame on the state of Illinois, when they resort to such means to rob poor human nature, causing so much misery, and shame, and sorrow, and disgrace and crime, to replenish their depleted treasuries! Let our hands be free from this awful crime. Let not our hands be dyed in the blood of our fellow citizens.

License the rum traffic for money! License the rum traffic to stop it! As well touch a match to powder to stop its burning; as well tear down the dam to stop the water from flowing; as well fill the air with miasma and disease to stop the pestilence! How can humanity be so deceived?

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union merits the approval and support of all good citizens. It has done more for God and humanity than any other organization of its size and age. It was born out of the necessity of its time. Among its members are some of the most intelligent and influential women of the land. Ever since its organization it has stood in the front of the battle, fighting this great evil, the liquor traffic, rescuing the fallen, leading them back to life and respectability, restoring thousands of men and women to peace and prosperity. Its weapons of warfare are prayer and song and entreaty. Its members use them in every good cause. They used them in the late election. They prayed for the good of our land. They prayed that God would so guide and direct the councils of the nation that the best results would follow. In some states, they probably prayed for the Republican party; in others, they prayed for the Democratic party. But where some of them prayed for the success of the party that favored the extinction of the liquor traffic, they are accused of committing a great crime, overturning the government. For this they are abused; they have church doors closed against them; they have houses closed against them; they are refused support in their work.

But these women are courageous. They are women of faith; their trust is in God and though the world turn against them, they will still work on in their own way, for "God and home and native land." They will work on until this great work has been accomplished, and when completed it will stand as a monument to their courage and sacrifices, and their faith. It is our duty to stand by them, to trust them. Their feet are planted on the word of God, their hands are placed in God's hand, with His spirit breathed upon them they will go forward, and that to victory.

JACK'S MOTHER.

ANGELE CRIPPEN DAVIS.

The road wound up the hill from the bridge over the creek. All along the crooked, zig-zag, rail fences, the dead sumach bushes stood shining in the keen November blasts. When the top of the hill was reached, I saw a stretch of bare, brown fields, under a gray sky. Near at hand, was a hay-rick, with some cattle cowering against it to keep warm.

Everything was so still. Only the wind shaking the dead leaves in the oak trees. Only the far off crow of a rooster in a distant farm-yard, and the bark of a dog from across the creek.

The house stood a little way from the road. A gray, weather-beaten, frame affair, with no sign of life about it, save the smoke from a chimney. I went to the side door and knocked. A tall, gaunt woman with spectacles pushed upon her forehead, came and opened the door.

"Come right in and take a seat and set down," she said, hospitably, at the same time drawing a chair before the fire.

The room was but scantily furnished. A bed in one corner, a table, a few chairs, some nails in the wall upon which to hang clothes. No carpet, a little stand in the corner holding a few books, and above it, on the wall, was hung a slate, with a boy's cap over it. The high mantle-piece above the fire, held a wooden clock, some flat-irons, and bottles, while Ayres' almanac, in yellow cover, was suspended from a tack.

The woman drew a chair before the fire opposite me, and took up a blue yarn stocking she was knitting.

"Seems like I could talk better if I've got my knittin'," said she, "and then I've promised these here stockins' by tomorrer night any how, and I must keep my word."

"Of course," I replied, "and you must not stop because I am here,—what a nice fire!" I continued, stretching out my feet to the flames.

"Yes, it's a great mercy to be able to keep warm. I set here at night sometimes, Tom and me, and I tell him how thankful we had ought to be. Tom's nothing but a cat, but he's a sight o' comp'ny for me. I'd be awful lonesome if it was'nt for Tom."

Hearing his name, just at this juncture appeared a great yellow cat arching his spine and rubbing himself against his mistress' feet. Then lying down in front of the fire, he sleepily half shut his eyes, and alternately purred and washed his face.

"Some folks aint fond o' cats," said Tom's mistress, beaming on him through her spectacles, "but I think cats is dreadful knowin', seems like Tom, now, could do a'most anything but talk. It beats all what that cat knows."

"I like cats," I said, stroking his soft fur, while he lay at full length in an ecstacy of enjoyment.

"You don't say! Well I never would a believed it," she exclaimed. Though as to her reasons for such skepticism she said nothing. "I expect you must feel awful empty ridin' so fur through the cold," she continued, "I've got some fried cakes I made this mornin'. They ain't nothin' extry, but a body gets careless about cookin' when they ain't nobody but theirselves to cook fur."

She went out of the room, and brought back a plate of doughnuts with some bread and butter.

"Now jest help your self and eat all you've a mind to. Taint much, but you're dreadful welcome."

So I sat in front of the fire and ate the doughnuts, while Tom stared at me with green eyes and meowed for bits. The fire blazed and crackled up the chimney. The woman's knitting needles clicked and clicked, but never stopped for an instant.

"There!" said she presently, "I've got this heel off my mind. I'm knittin' 'em fur Deacon Peters. Mis' Peters, she's a clever woman, and there aint no better man than the deacon. But he's very partickler about the fit of his socks, an' sometimes I don't narrer to suit him. But the Peterses is all nice folks. She sends fur me to help through harvest time, and at hog killin', an' if they have comp'ny. If there's anything extry goin' on at the Peterses they have me over." This is told with a touch of mild complacency. "It's a great help to me. Many's the little thing they send me over through the winter, an' when they've got garden sass, Mis' Peters never forgits me the summer through. To be sure, they've got thousands of everything to eat, but taint everybody that would remember me, if they had."

"You have no near neighbors, have you?" I asked.

"None nearer'n three-quarters of a mile down the crik, an' I wouldn't care if they was further off. I ain nothin' agin 'em, but they're such a trifling set, the Browns; Mis' Brown she's an easy soul that wouldn hurt a fly, an's too lazy to keep her children's faces clea Talkin' to her don't do a mite o' good. She'll kind laugh, an' things'll go right on the same. When the are sick, I go an' set up nights with 'em, an' make 'em yarb teas an' such like, but I don't care about neighborin with 'em."

"Isn't it lonely for you, living here by yourself?"

She pushed the spectacles up on her forehead, and fo a minute the busy needles stopped.

"Sometimes tis, an' then agin taint. I've got Tom you know, an' besides, when a body is my age, they've good deal to think over."

"I should think it would be lonesome in winter," replied, glancing out of the window. I saw the leave whirling in the wind, the low, grey clouds scudding across the sky, the cowering cattle, and against the sky line, on the hill beyond, three or four sheep huddle together. What a barren, desolate waste it must be i winter, when the cold, white snow-shroud lies on th dead bosom of the earth.

Her glance followed mine through the window, and rested for a minute on the dreary landscape. Then she said, soberly,

"Taint much to look at, I know, but I'm used to it, and that makes a sight o' difference. I don't mind it much of winter, neither. I'm mostly busy through the day. When it comes evenin' I put down the curtains an' shut out the dark, an' Tom an' me take right smart o' comfort before the fire. I go to bed airly, too, an' I aint in much of a hurry about gittin' up in the mornin'. But it's harder in spring, when I hear the wild geese flyin' overhead, and the frogs air a-peepin' and hollerin', seems like I kind o' git restless then. An' it's lonesomer yit of summer evenin's, a listenin' to the whippoorwills. That minds me of when my man an' me was courtin'. We used to set in our front door an' hear the whippoorwills a callin', up the valley. That was the summer before we was married. Let me see," she said reflectively, with the knitting needles moving slower, "we was marrie thirty-two years ago the twenty-fifth o' last Septemb My Jack is nigh on to thirty-one years old." This she added, speaking more to herself than me, and lo ing in the fire.

"Have you lived here all your married life?" I asked.

"We went to house-keepin' here, an' it looked so comf'table and nice. We was young, too, an' didn't never realize they was trouble in the world. My man was awful good to me, a good pervider, an' so handy about the chores. He was tickled to pieces when our baby was born. I had to keep a tellin' him it was flyin' in the face o' Providence to be so set up about it. La me! things is dreadful hard, 'pears like. He ketched a bad cold when the baby was on'y six months old, an' had pneumony an' died. I took his death dreadful hard, dreadful. Seemed like as though I couldn't give him up. 'Peared as if I wouldn't be reconciled no way. If it hadn't been for my baby, I never could a took heart. But by an' by I got to takin' such comfort with Jacky, an' he growed up such a pretty boy. Smart, too. Beat all, the way that bo took hold o' figgers. He ciphered clean through Ray 'rithmetic, part third, 'fore he was fifteen year old. H could do sums, made up out o' people's heads, that th school-master dasent tech. That's why old Si Mannin give him sech a good offer to clerk in his store. That was the beginning of it all. My poor boy liked comp'ny, an' they was wild fellers, them Mannin' boys was, I begin to git kind o' worried, but I didn't know. No, I didn't know," she repeated, her hands trembling so, that she laid her knitting-work down in her lap.

"One Saturday night he didn't come home at all. I tried to think t'was all right, mebbe somethin' kep' him an' he couldn't come. I didn't sleep though, I kep' at thinkin' about his dead father, an' a livin' over his baby days, till I couldn't shet my eyes. The next day he didn't come. I waited all day, cooked what he liked fur dinner, but he wasn't here to eat. I couldn't stan' it any longer when dusk come an' didn't bring him, I'd been afraid, some how, to let any body know. But I said now to my-

, 'somethin' has happened to my boy.' So I jest rted down the road with Jack's dog a follerin' me, to k for him. T'was in the summer, an' the elder-berry hes was in blow, I could jest see 'em showing out nite through the dark."

"But I didn't see nor hear nothin'. of Jack. Once I ught I heard somebody a crossin' the bridge, an' I ned but 'twas still agin, though Jack's dog picked up ars an' started down hill a-whinin'. I turned an' went ack to the house. I thought I'd shet up the doors an' go own to Peters's an' git somebody to go for Jack. I was the kitchen, when Carlo tore in, a barkin' an' pullin' dress; says I, 'Carlo, what ails you? G'long off.'"

"But he wouldn't go, so's I went with him to pacify m. I didn't know, you see; I follered him down the ill, him a barkin' an' a lookin' back to me. Somebody as a layin' on the bridge; Carlo stood over him a wag-n' his tail, an' a whinin'—'Twas Jack—I thought he as dead at first. But he wasn't. I'd a ruther he had n. He couldn't get no further, an' had fell, when rlo found him. 'Twas him I heard." The knitting-ork had fallen to the floor unheeded. The trembling nds interlocked their fingers.

"He was dreadful sorry, an' I hoped he wouldn't do t agin. But he did, an' he got worse an' worse. I thought my heart was broke when his father died. But that wasn't as bad as this. He lost his place an' couldn't git nothin' to do, I never said a cross word to him. You see I was his mother, an' I couldn't forgit when he was my little baby.

"One mornin'—that was the hardest—I found he'd slipped off in the night, without tellin' me good-bye, jest left a little note sayin' he was discouraged, an' was oin' to leave for somewheres no body didn't know him. It's twelve years ago, an' I aint never heard a word. There's his slate an' cap on the wall. He used to hang em up in that same place. Seems like he was comin,' o see 'em there. That's all, I'm jest waitin' fur him."

She took the knitting-work from the floor, and began remblingly, to move the needles. But her eyes were so lim, she put it down.

"Sometimes," she said, "I get so tired an' discour-ed, I'm afraid I'll have to go before Jack comes. An' en agin, I feel like the Lord can see how a mother s, an' he'll send him before I die."

he cat got up and stretched himself. The wind d in the chimney, and filled the silence that had n in the room.

Jack's mother rose from her chair, and laid her shak-ng hand on the back of it.

"I wonder," she said, in a half-choked whisper, "if even God can really know how hard it is to wait?"

"ARE WE A POLITICAL PARTY?"

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The article in your issue of November 27, "Are we a Political Party?," interested me greatly, and set me to thinking. The conclusion that we are not a political party, seemed correct, but the question remained, What are we?

As I have thought it over and over, new ideas have wned on me, making old ones clearer than before, and nging conclusions that seemed sound, and giving to a clearer reason why we are not a political party, than ound in the aforesaid article.

Webster defines political, as pertaining to public policy politics; relating to state affairs; concerned in national measures; especially pertaining to a state, in distinction rom a city or municipality; as a political writer.

Now is not our W. C. T. U. in fact a society organized for the dissemination of a moral and political truth? We often say that the overthrow of the liquor traffic has been our aim from the crusade. That certainly is a political object, a political revolution in one sense; for when accomplished, it will be a revolution in legislation concerning the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Our W. C. T. U. certainly is engaged in work and fort "pertaining to public policy or politics," and we pe, and expect, to make it felt in that direction more and more. It holds a certain position "relating to state affairs;" in Iowa we intended, and tried, to "lend our influence" so as to aid in efforts calculated to entirely change the past legislative policy of the state upon this question; certainly it is our position now, relating to state affairs, that makes the Iowa W. C. T. U. consider it unwise to ally itself to the Prohibition party movement; if for no other reason, because such an alliance not only could not help us in the prosecution of our work, but would antagonize the very ones that can help and have helped us. We are "concerned in national measures" and working to influence national legislation; therefore, I conclude that the declaration, in our St. Louis resolution, that we are a "non-political organization," is not really true, and was adopted only because we had not clear ideas upon this subject, so new to us, that of defining our position, in regard to political affairs. That resolution did not, in my judgment, make us a political party, for those who adopted it have not yet the exercise of the political right of authoritatively expressing their opinions at the ballot box, the very method by which all political parties decide questions of public policy; but it did make us a partisan political organization inasmuch as it expressed our political party preferences, and declared where we would throw our political influence, with what political party, and pledges us to the work not only of advancing prohibition, but of making a Prohibition party for that purpose.

The resolutions adopted by those ecclesiastical bodies did just the same thing for those ministers, and they had votes to follow their declarations with, we have not.

I hold it to be just as true of women as of men, that they cannot be professed partisan allies and coworkers with two political parties at the same time, hence the unwisdom of the St. Louis action, because in the interim necessary by the laws of growth, with the aid even of the influence of our W. C. T. U. organization, to make a triumphant Prohibition party, we want to secure the co-operation in various temperance measures, in all of our states, of the very political parties whose present existence we in that resolution practically, if not in words, declare ourselves determined to break up.

It is true that a political party must be made up of something more tangible than "influence," but the implied conclusion that the "influence" of the W. C. T. U. will be "unsupported by votes," is not true in fact either as our desire or expectation, and if not political crafthood it must be political blindness that would so represent it, for we expect to make votes by influencing every voter we can. "To pay no further heed to," and to "counsel a steadfast nonobservance of all disagreeable things said and done" because of the action at St. Louis, may do for those who have crossed their political Rubicon, burned their bridges after them and determined never to change their minds, but it is hardly in accordance with the spirit of the declaration made by those who when sure of a more than two-thirds majority in convention, could say, "If we find ourselves mistaken we will frankly acknowledge it, and if you of the opposition are mistaken you will have to come to us."

Criticisms, harsh even and unkind, if observed, may help us all to a clearer perception of the wisest method of advancing our prohibition principles, and it is just possible that those who favored the adoption of that St. Louis resolution, and those who opposed its adoption, may yet through comparison of views find some way of expressing their devotion to the cause of prohibition in which they can all unite, "and work on as heretofore."

I confess the statements of those who favored, and the criticisms of those who do not favor the action at St. Louis, have helped me, and I think it well for us to heed the words, "Come now, and let us reason together."

MARY J. ALDRICH.

A WORD TO OUR WORKERS.

"And the Lord said, * * * speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Rocks around them, mountains above them, an enemy behind them, and the Red Sea in front of them, yet still—"Go forward."

Were ever any people surrounded by greater difficulties? Many of the Israelites had lost faith and courage, and, (as we are all apt to do), they just came to a "standstill" and with bitter words began to upbraid their leader, Moses, for their seeming misfortunes. "Wherefore," they cried, "dids't thou lead us into this wilderness. It had been better for us to have still served the Egyptians." But these people forgot that Israel was under God's direction, that Moses was only an instrument in God's hand. God had raised up Israel for a special purpose, and that purpose would be fulfilled, faulty and stiff-necked though individual members of the nation might be, rash and impatient though even the meek Moses was on some occasions, still God was leading His people even into the wilderness, and His command was, "Go forward," even into the billows if need be, and "I will divide the waters before you."

Dear temperance workers, it has come to me that many of you are thinking that just now the W. C. T. U. is in this Red Sea wilderness, with the enemy behind and the waters in front; and perhaps your hearts have failed you and your bitter cry has been raised like Israel of old, "Wherefore have we been led into this wilderness to die?" But you also forget that you, too, are God's people, that the W. C. T. U. has all along with earnest prayer been committed by your leaders, as well as by yourselves, to the guidance of the Most High; that the Red Sea must always be crossed by God's people before they can enter the promised land. And so God's command is as much to us today as to Israel, "Go forward, and I will divide the waters before you." I know we are all inclined to think that every new danger is the greatest danger, and every new combination of difficulties the insurmountable one. But is it so?

My work in my own state, Pennsylvania, has, ever since my connection with the W. C. T. U. four years ago, been largely pioneer work, which all will admit is the hardest of all work to do. I have organized fully one hundred new unions in that state alone, a large majority of them on my own responsibility. I have also been pioneer organizer and lecturer for the State Constitutional Temperance Amendment Association, pioneer worker for temperance instruction in teachers institutes, and for the last year and a half pioneer worker for a state temperance law for our public schools. I therefore know something of what it is to have to meet and overcome all sorts of difficulties and prejudices, and I can truthfully say that I find no difficulties before us now much greater than those that are past.

Let me, for the encouragement of the temperance women of my state, give a short reminiscence of my work in "the former days." Three years ago, after the failure of our first effort in Pennsylvania for the submission by our state legislature of a prohibitory constitutional amendment, our State Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment Association, of which I was a member as one of the executive committee, earnestly requested me to become an organizer for that non-partisan association. But the outlook was dark indeed. Temperance people were discouraged by the first failure. There was not a dollar in the state C. T. A, A. treasury, with which to pay even the traveling expenses of an organizer; and fearful of debt, I with the rest of the executive committee voted for a law that if an organizer failed to collect expenses while organizing, they should not draw any money out of the state treasury even on subscriptions which they themselves had obtained. Now let me give the history of the organization of one county which is a fair sample of the difficulties we met in almost every other county.

Armed with an official credential from the state association, I wrote to the principal W. C. T. U. of the county requesting that as a union they would assist me in getting signers to a call for a non-partisan Constitutional Temperance Amendment convention, and also to assist in arranging for a series of appointments to lecture in their county on this subject. But the most excellent president wrote back kindly but positively declining, saying the W. C. T. U. of———, did not feel competent to do more than the "regular work of a W. C. T. U." Then I wrote to influential men who had previously bestowed much praise on my "moral suasion" work and lectures, but they, too, declined to assist. Finally, I went in person to the county seat, and yet for three whole weeks I failed to find a single influential man who was willing to become publicly identified with the measure. Even some ministers of the gospel refusing to sign the call for the non-partisan C. T. A. convention. The editor of the leading Republican paper of the county, when asked by a prominent gentleman to publish a little article, simply explaining the aims of a Constitutional Amendment Association, roundly denounced Prohibition Constitutional Amendment Associations and myself, for attempting to form such a thing in that county. The wife of a country minister had at last, as a personal favor to me, consented to make my lecture engagements through members of her denomination. But though I offered to go without any remuneration except such as might be given to me at close of the lecture, she found great difficulty in making the required number of engagements. Now, I ask is the way of any of you today more hedged in by difficulties than this? But we simply went forward, lecturing and securing the election of delegates wherever we could get an audience, publishing articles on constitutional amendments daily and weekly in all papers that would admit them, never taking time to answer criticisms or find fault ourselves. And what was the result?

In a short time one of the grandest men of the county, a college president, came forward and let it be publicly announced that he was thoroughly identified with that work. Newspapers began to publish long notices of our meetings and at the end of five weeks there was held in the conservative old county seat of that county, the largest county temperance convention ever held in Pennsylvania. Duly elected delegates from each political party were present from almost every election district of the county. Delegates were there from almost every W. C. T. U. of the county. Fully ten newspaper reporters, representing as many papers, were present all day taking notes of the meeting. And the next day that daily paper whose editor had so denounced the whole measure, came out with a three column report headed, "Monstrous Prohibition meetings," "Eleven Hundred Citizens in Attendance," "The people must be heard," "They have a right to an opportunity of voting on a Prohibition Amendment," etc. And to this day, no county exceeds that county in its interest on the temperance question. Now what is the moral of this tale? Suppose when I first met these numerous obstacles, I had become discouraged and sat down with folded hands, or worse still, written around over the state discouraged reports or fault-finding letters against all who had not seen matters as I saw them, or did not do as I desired them to do. Would not the result have been inevitable failure of not only the C. T. A. work, that year, in that county, but also of much of the work in the state? And that noble record made by the ever faithful Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. of a petition sent to our legislature bearing the names of two hundred and fifty thousand petitioners, might never have been made.

Dear sisters, what we need now, is simply to have more faith in God and "go forward" with our allotted work whatever it may be. In Pennsylvania, it is making sentiment and getting petitions signed for scientific temperance in our public schools. And let me say for the further encouragement of our state workers in this line, that I have been lecturing on this theme almost constantly since the election, notwithstanding special difficulties thrown in my way, wherever our women have had the courage to make appointments, and advertise them as they previously did, I find no diminution in my audiences, no decrease of interest. When at the close of a lecture I ask for a vote of those in favor of our proposed Scientific Temperance law, every man, woman and child springs as readily to their feet as they did before the election. Legislators as cheerfully pledge me publicly and privately to support our bill in the coming legislature. In short, I am fully persuaded that all we need, in order to write success on our banners, is to hear and heed that Divine command, "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward."

"DECEMBER'S AS PLEASANT AS MAY."

It is the eve of Thanksgiving day, beloved co-laborers, and I am longing to write a letter to you. I have desired each week for a month past to come to you with some words of advice about your winter work, and to thank you each and every one for the help you have so continually and cheerfully given me during this year through which we have just passed. In the summer, when I lay so ill, it gave me solid comfort to think about the state superintendents and to know of what simon-pure stuff they are made; to feel whatever was God's purpose for me, His spirit would water the seed we have planted, and cause it to grow to a great tree "that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit." But "man is immortal till his work is done," and God has other things for me to do. He knows I only want what He sees best, so I receive my re-appointment from our executive committee with fresh impetus, and gladly take up our beloved flower mission branch of the W. C. T. U. and throw my energies into service "for God and home and native land." I sincerely trust that every state superintendent in this department will go and do likewise, as I feel I can do far more effective work without change. I know and love them now, and you all understand this is half the secret. I often wish it was possible to get as close to each individual member, but in order to do this I would have to correspond with all, and that would be impossible. It would be a real source of pleasure to me if I could know how many flower missions are in active operation in each state, and I want every one interested to remember that I am here, and want to give my whole self to any needs that God would let me fill.

Is it generally understood that we are to keep up our work all the year round, and that during the winter we are to carry to the needy all the sunshine and practical help possible? No doubt there will be many a time when such necessities as can only be relieved by money or substantials will arise, but the help that is needed will more often be, not alms, but new hope, true sympathy, and thoughtful cheer. How often a word wisely spoken will lift a burdened one out of despondency and cause the heart to sing for joy. Augustus Hare used to say, "We must get at the souls of the poor through their bodies," and this is surely true. Good words can not relieve hunger nor cold, but when once the body is fed and warmed, there is most apt to be a warming of the heart with gratitude, and a reaching out after better things. Look after the sick, read to the aged, take bright, cheery faces to the darkened well; and carry Christ in your heart to all. I think we have no right to doubt that this is God's work, and that He has honored it; if only each one interested in the work could see my scrap book, which was compiled for the convention, because there were many more beautiful and practical incidents reported to me than I could have presumed to ask the convention to give time to hear. It did not reach St. Louis until after the convention, as my representative, Mrs. Munnell, had the misfortune (I won't call it misfortune, for nothing happens to God's children) to lose her trunk, in which she had the book. If it was not that I feel it would be an extravagant thing to spend that much in postage, I would send it to each state superintendent, as a source of encouragement. One very noticeable feature of it is the air of culture which the correspondence shows, and the busy hands that are guiding it. O, dear workers, I thank God for the superintendents that He selected for me.

Let your visits continue every week, or every other week, and carry with you to the needy ones, flour, meal, tea or coffee, good vegetables, or anything you have. Always have one of our text cards attached to every basket or bundle you carry, and let good reading matter, temperance tracts and books, be put securely in it. Carry your pledge cards, and when practicable, use them. Look after your proteges, see that they are nicely fixed for church, if able to get there; and have such services as can be carried out if they are invalids or infirm. Feed the hungry, clothe the destitute, and through it all and with it all, bring your Master's spirit to these hearts and teach them of the Divine love which prompts you to come to their help. Practical ideas will develop as you go on, and you will soon see wonderful things as outgrowths.

We will not have any concerted work for Christmas or New Year's, as the one day's national work is all I am at present able to attempt, and I need my small stock of strength for personal guidance now, as each day brings its own work. But it would give me joy to know that every flower mission in the land will try to make cheer and joy wherever it is possible. There is so much one can do if one only wants to "shine" for the Father, and oftentimes the cups of cold water call for the sweetest blessings. Beautiful things will suggest themselves to our women.

I hope to be able to write you once every six weeks or so, through THE UNION SIGNAL. It is my desire to send a letter to each state superintendent and in this way reach all of you. But I am very unreliable and have come to the conclusion I ought not to promise anything. If I weary you longer today you may not be glad to hear from me again, and I will take the benefit of the doubt and only add that my prayer to God for you is, "that ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding. That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God." In tender love, Your friend,

BOOK NOTICES.

"THE MAN WONDERFUL IN THE HOUSE BEAUTIFUL," is a title of great felicity. It is written, not by man and wife, but by husband and wife, Dr. C. B. plus Dr. Mary A. Allen, of Ithaca, New York. It is dedicated "to the memories of our revered mothers," and is throughout pervaded by the purest atmosphere of home. Under the figure of a house, this book treats of all parts and functions of the body. Some of the chapter headings are as follows: The Foundations, The Walls, The Servants, The Observatory, The Kitchen, The Dining Room, The Engine, The Laundry, etc. In a fresh, pleasing style, the whole gospel of hygiene and the triple pledge is taught, and by vivid illustrations fastened like a nail in a sure place.

"BREAKFAST, DINNER AND SUPPER," is a new cook book growing out of the temperance revival. It is edited by Dr. J. E. White and Mrs. M. L. Wanless, and published by Dr. White, in Battle Creek, Mich. Against wine at dinner it takes strong ground, also against pork as a food. The book is packed with recipes and household suggestions of practical value.

LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION, an address by the Rev. Newman Hall, D. D., delivered at Chickering Hall, is sent us by the National Temperance Society, in neat pamphlet form. It is an able Gospel plea for total abstinence and is a most valuable pamphlet for general circulation, and especially among young men.

The National Temperance Society has also issued its usual TEMPERANCE ALMANAC AND TEETOTALER'S YEAR BOOK, 1885. Compiled by J. N. Stearns. This invaluable temperance document, combining almanac and teetotaler's year-book for 1885, will be found to be one of the most convenient and important publications for the price ever issued on the subject. In addition to the astronomical calculations and calendar, will be found: The latest internal reveune statistics, official, from the department at Washington. Statistics of intemperance, national liquor revenue, indirect cost and loss from drink, our nation's drink-bill, liquor-traffic in the union, brewer's congress, English statistics, prohibition does prohibit, a great national question, etc. A carefully-prepared table, showing the list of all the temperance periodicals in the country, together with the price, place of publication, and the name of editor and publisher. A table giving the names of the officers of the Woman's National and State C. T. Unions, with their post office address, also directories of the Sons of Temperance and Good Templars Orders in the United States. The same society also send out a new Christmas exercise entitled "Our Motto," at only five cents each, excellent for Band of Hope entertainments.

"Leave God to order all thy ways,
And trust in Him whate'er betide;
Thou'lt find Him in the evil days,
Thine all sufficient help and guide,
Who trusts in God's unchanging love,
Builds on a rock that naught can move."

LITTLE THINGS.

A little spring had lost its way
Amid the grass and fern;
A passing stranger scooped a well
Where weary men might turn.
He walled it in, and hung with care
A ladle at its brink;
He thought not of the deed he did,
But judged that toil might drink.
He passed again, and lo! the well
By summers never dried,
Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues,
And saved a life beside.

THE SMOKING MINISTER.

PILGRIM.

"O mother! mother!" exclaimed little Harry Graves, as, his hair flying, his cheeks flushed and his whole appearance denoting intense excitement, he rushed into the sitting-room and threw himself on a stool at his mother's side, "what do you think I have seen?"

"I'm sure I can not tell," was the answer; something very wonderful, judging by your looks. Why, Harry, my boy, Effie would call you her wild Indian should she see you now. What is it?"

"Why, mother, it was our minister smoking! I saw him."

"Aren't you mistaken, my son. I don't think Mr. H. smokes."

"Well, he was smoking tonight, for I saw him with my own eyes. You see, Jem and I were coming home and passed right by his house. He and another man were sitting on the back piazza, and, as true as you live, were both smoking."

Willie, an older brother who had been busy with his books, looked up with a merry twinkle in his eye.

"Well, mother, what do you think of that? If Mr. Hunt, the wise, good minister, smokes, can't Willie Graves, who lays claim neither to wisdom nor goodness, be permitted to follow in his steps? You know you have often held him up as an example to us."

"No, my son! Imitate as much as you please, our pastor's virtues. As to faults, Willie Graves has quite enough of his own, without seeking others."

"But mother, would so good a man as Mr. H. smoke if he thought it wrong?"

"It is wrong, whether he thinks so or not. Almost any physician will tell you that, to the young especially, the habit of smoking is deleterious in the extreme. Tobacco, possessing like alcohol minute doses of arsenic, causes, says one, 'impairment of growth, nervous debility, and physical degradation.' It pains me to learn that one I respect so highly as our pastor has fallen into this habit. It surely is inconsistent with the principles he advocates. I think he would be the last one to advise his people to imitate him in this respect."

"But mother, have you ever known a person to be seriously injured by smoking?"

"Yes, Willie, one case is fresh in my memory. It is that of a young minister, talented and eloquent, and possessing in an unusual degree those genial traits that caused him to be universally beloved. He was strictly temperate in every respect but this; he was an inveterate smoker. This minister, whose life was full of promise, and who was for a long time a bright light in the denomination to which he belongs, has been for several years scarcely more than a wreck. It is true he has contracted the habit of using stronger narcotics than tobacco, but his best friends think that the excessive use of the weed, acting on his nervous temperament, has been the chief cause of the great change so long apparent in him."

"You speak of stronger narcotics, mother. You know it is said by some that a smoker is more likely to contract the habit of drinking than others; do you think this is so?"

"I hardly know. One thing is certain;—nearly all drinkers smoke; but it is equally true that many, who become addicted to the latter habit, are strictly temperate in other respects. How far the habit of smoking excites a craving for stronger stimulants, I can not say. In the case of the minister I have spoken of, had not the excessive use of tobacco clouded his intellect, and killed his moral sense, he never would have become a slave to opium—a slavery hardly less to be dreaded than that of strong drink.

"That smoking is a foolish, useless and injurious habit, but few will deny. God never meant the pure, sweet air he gives us to breathe to be impregnated with the fumes of tobacco. But it is a sad fact that we are becoming a nation of smokers. Even the little boys, scarcely old enough to leave their mother's side, may be daily seen on our streets, puffing away at some vile cigarette. And no wonder when those from whom we expect better things, even the ministers appointed our instructors, are themselves slaves to this habit."

"Why, little mother, you are quite a preacher. Well, preachers, you know, like to see some fruit of their labors, so I'll promise to be your first convert. My chains are not very strong as yet, so I'll break away before they become tightly forged. From this day, the 'vile weed' and I will part. I'll be a slave to no such habit, but for the future touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing."

During this conversation, little Harry had been listening intently, now he burst out:

"Good for you, Will! Now mother won't look sober any more as she does when she sees you with a cigar, and Effie won't say, 'brudder Willie's tose don't smell dood. I won't tiss him if he smots.' But I guess Mr. H. better look out and not talk to us fellows about drinking cider. I love sweet cider; but he said we mustn't drink it 'cause if we do we shall want it when it isn't sweet. If he smokes, I just wonder how he can preach on temperance."

So do I.—Morning Star.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S LETTER.

Dear Boys and Girls:—A week ago Sunday you remember the Sunday school lesson was on "Drunkenness." I want to tell you about the Sunday school of the First Baptist church in Chicago, where the Rev. Dr. Henson is pastor, and where this good man and Superintendent Everingham stand as loyal leaders in temperance. This is the program for that day:

REVIEW.

December 7, 1884. Lesson 10. Proverbs, xxiii, 29-35.

Sing 279.—"Where is My Boy Tonight."

Supt.—We learned last Sunday that virtue, by its attractive purity and beauty would win us to lives of innocence, holiness and happiness. Today we are to look into the "drunkard's looking glass" and see him as he is, and we see portrayed in the frightful picture the very worst of all the vices, for drunkenness includes them all.

What do we learn in the lesson intoxicating drinks will produce?

All.—Waste, want and woe, both in time and eternity.

Supt.—How does strong drink cause waste?

Boys.—Waste of time, waste of wealth, waste of brain, waste of health.

Supt.—How does it occasion want?

Girls.—It creates the drunkard's home, which want and wretchedness make a hell upon earth.

Supt.—How does strong drink give woe?

Bible Classes.—It eats away the brain, until the wretched victim has no mental power to resist the disease caused by indulgence. Then comes despair and the drunkard's end.

Supt.—Is it possible that this worst emissary of the devil exerts a wide-spread influence?

Boys.—The annual cost of the liquor traffic in the United States is sixteen hundred and fifty millions of dollars. The meat-bill of the city of New York for a year is thirty millions of dollars, and the liquor bill sixty-eight millions.

Supt.—What can you say of the number of places licensed to sell spirituous liquors?

Girls.—There are in the United States and territories 130,000 places licensed, and 300,000 persons employed in them. Add to these the number employed in distilleries and wholesale liquor shops, and we have 570,000 while there are but 150,000 ministers and school teachers.

Supt.—Can the Bible Classes give some figures in regard to criminals, etc., made by strong drink?

Bible Classes.—The liquor traffic annually sends 100,000 persons to prison; reduces 200,000 children to a stage worse than orphanage; sends 60,000 to a drunkard's grave, makes 600,000 drunkards, and brings woe, disease, misery, crime and premature death all over the country.

Supt.—What does the drinker take, when asked to take a drink?

Boys.—Woe, wounds, sorrow, suffering, danger, death.

Supt.—What then are the evils of intemperance?

Scholars.—It injures the body and ruins the soul. It disables the mind, it unfits for daily life, it brings poverty, and it leads into bad company.

Bible Classes.—It is opposed to religion and morality. It injures family and friends, it tempts others, it leads to crime, and it fills poor houses and prisons.

Supt.—How can we avoid being drunkards, and what is the cure?

Boys.—Don't begin; touch not, taste not, handle not. Keep away from drinking places, and from the company of those who drink.

Girls.—Sign the pledge; give ourselves body and soul to the Lord Jesus Christ; make the church and Sabbath school our second home.

All.—Work against intemperance; read the best books on temperance, and use all the helps of prayer and religion.

Sing 166.—"Who is on the Lord's Side."

It is the custom of the school to rise as the closing question is asked. This time, Superintendent Everingham requested that only those should stand up who were willing to pledge themselves to be total abstainers and to work for temperance. How many do you think "stood up to be counted?"

Every single one! And the superintendent, lifting his right hand to heaven, solemnly pledged himself to keep the vow thus made; and by the unanimous action of the whole school a glorious regiment of our temperance army was brought into the fighting ranks, "for the war."

Captain Deborah.

A BRAND SNATCHED FROM THE BURNING.

It was the new saloon that made Joe Pierce fall. He was too proud-spirited to enter a dirty-looking place with the sign "saloon" over the door.

But by and by there came a fine brick building. Blooming flowers filled the unblinded windows. Inside were showcases filled with tempting cakes, cookies and confectionery.

Outside swung the sign "Bakery." Oysters, lemons, oranges and many other things were found there that could not be purchased elsewhere in town. And this was not all. In the back part of the room was a partition with a curtained door, and behind this there was more drinking done than in any other saloon in town.

Business men that would not be seen going into a "regular saloon" stepped in here after a loaf of bread, a few lemons, or a can of oysters and while there, who would know if they did take a glass?

By and by their errands became regular and after a while they went in without any errands. In less than a year three business men of that town became drunkards. Among them was Joe Pierce. Poor Joe! he was easily tempted. His father and two of his brothers were drunkards. Of one of his brothers it was often said, "It would be a blessing to the town if he were dead."

Joe was an ambitious fellow and struggled hard with his natural appetite for liquor. He was thorough in his trade and had earned a fine house and lot besides supporting his family well. One day his wife was sick and thoughtlessly sent him after bread at the new "Bakery." The saloonist, a jolly, good natured German with an eye to business, thought farther than Rosa Pierce did when she sent her husband for bread. He knew of the natural propensities of Joe's family, of his struggle for a manly life. He casually inquired of Mrs. Pierce's health; then suggested that he had some wine that would build her right up. Pouring out a glass full he asked Joe to test it.

So it was that as Joe left with the staff of life under his arm, he left his pledge, honor and struggle, the substantial part of his soul, behind him, overcome by the tempter. The saloonist had looked well to business and prospered by it. In less than two years Joe's home was drank up and his trade poor.

One night when on a spree, instead of going to the half-torn down building, where he had moved his wife and boy, he crept through the window into his shop, lighted a little lamp that he used for evening work, and threw himself on the floor scarcely knowing where he was or what he was about.

About eleven o'clock the cry of fire aroused the town. Joe Pierce's shop was in flames; men, women and children dressed hurriedly and rushed down to the spot. Other property was in danger and after banging at the shop door and not succeeding in breaking the lock, they concluded there was not much in there to save any way and went to work to protect the other buildings from the fire.

The wind was high and brands blew a distance of several blocks.

The roof was about to fall in when Rosa Pierce came running, in wild excitement, and set all in a commotion by saying that poor Joe must be within. She rushed around the shop to the back, jumped through the window and dragged her husband, nearly suffocated by the smoke, to the window. No man was brave enough to enter the building, but many stood outside the window and hastily dragged the two out just as the roof fell in.

It was a sober man in more senses than one, sober from drink and sober in thought, that walked up and down the sidewalk in front of the ruins of his shop, the next morning.

People said: "Now he will drink harder than ever." But as he steadily walked to and fro hour after hour, his thoughts were indeed "sober second thoughts."

He thought of the comfortable home he had had two years before; of his wife's careworn, sorrowful face of late; of his little boy weeping bitterly just a few days before because some one had called him "a drunkard's child", and he thought of his loss of trade. What real enjoyment had he gained? None, and now to pay for his two years' debauchery he was left destitute, without a penny in the world.

Then he pictured to himself the future as it would probably be if he continued to drink. He glanced down the alley where stood a rough board hut with an old rusty pipe sticking out from the roof, instead of a chimney. To this he would have to move immediately. There, in that bare, desolate room, with the snow and rain beating in under the door and at the loose windows, he imagined his wife slowly but surely dying of cold and hunger.

Next, he saw the neighbor women come in with mournful faces and treading lightly over the loose but clean floor arranging with tender hands the dear dead, body.

Yes, this would surely happen, she was not now the bright, cheerful Rosa Pierce she used to be, although she tried to be brave and cheerful.

Let him continue to drink and within a year, he believed that his boy would be motherless, and knocked around from place to place because he was only "old Joe Pierce's son."

At last he saw himself with delerium tremens, afraid to live and more afraid to die.

These thoughts decided him, and turning suddenly he started down the street to his old employer, one who had taken him as an apprentice and under whom he had worked even after he had learned his trade, for several years. Entering the shop he walked up to a gray-haired gentleman and firmly said: "I am resolved never to drink another drop. Will you take me in your employ until I earn enough to buy a set of tools."

"I will do better than that by you," the gentleman replied, "you know your trade as well as I. You are younger than I am and used to have more trade than I did. I will take you in partnership with this consideration, the first time you are drunk dissolves our partnership."

Again Joe entered business and true to his pledge, once more he has a comfortable home and a happy family.

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON.—NO. 8.

December 28, 1884.

BY REV. DANIEL DORCHESTER, D.D.

TOPIC: TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

LESSON TEXT. Jeremiah xxxv 1-10, 18, 19.

1. The word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,
2. Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the Lord, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.
3. Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habazaniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites;
4. And I brought them unto the house of the Lord, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shallum, the keeper of the door:
5. And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites, pots full of wine, and cups; and I said unto them, Drink ye wine.
6. But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons forever:
7. Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.
8. Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters;
9. Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed:
10. But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.

* * * * *

18. ¶ And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts and done according unto all that he commanded you;
19. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

GOLDEN TEXT. Jeremiah xxxv: 6. "We will drink no wine; for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons forever.

HOME READINGS: Monday: Prov. 23: 29-35; Tuesday: Rom. 14: 14-23; Wednesday: Dan. 1: 1-16: Thursday: Isa. 28: 1-13: Friday: Gal. 5:16-26; Saturday: Jer. 35: 1-19.

Historical.

1. When did these events occur?

Ans. About 607, B. C.

2. Who were the Rechabites?

Ans. A tribe of Kenites, supposed to have been descendants of Jethro, Moses' father-in-law (Comp. Num. x: 29-32, with Judg. i: 16; iv: 11).

3. Where did they live?

Ans. Formerly on the borders of the desert, east of the Jordan; but, at this time, in Jerusalem, v, 11.

4. What was their religion?

Ans. Gentile worshippers of Jehovah, circumcised, within the Abrahamic covenant, though not reckoned as Israel, and not bound by the Mosaic law.

5. What became of them subsequently?

Ans. Were probably absorbed into the tribe of Levi (Neh iii: 14). The phrase "to stand before me," v: 19, is interpreted to mean "to minister before me." (See Deut. x: 8, and xviii: 5-7.)

Outline of Leading Facts.

1. What was the Lord's command to Jeremiah?

Ans. v: 2.

2. What did Jeremiah do?

Ans. vs: 3-5.

8. Did the Rechabites obey?

4. What reason did they give?

Ans. v: 6.

5. How much was comprised in the Rechabite obligation?

Ans. vs: 8, 9.

6. Did they faithfully keep it?

Ans. vs; 10, 14, 16, 18.

7. What reward followed?

Ans. vs: 18, 19.

8. Was this a Divine or a human injunction?

Ans. v: 6.

9. What reason was given for the obligation?

Ans. v: 7, last clause.

10. What had Jonadab probably noticed, as to the effects of wine drinking?

Ans. That it leads to dissipation, disease, and ruin in nations, tribes and individuals.

11. Did not God know that the Rechabites were total abstainers?

12. Why then did he direct Jeremiah to "put before them pots of wine?"

Ans. To give his wayward people an object lesson, illustrating steadfast obedience and abstinence.

Inferential Lessons.

1. Are there any other examples of total abstinence in the Old Testament?

Ans. The Nazarites (Num. vi: 2,3), Daniel and his companions (Dan. i: 8), and probably many others, whose names are not given.

2. Are there any such examples in the New Testament?

Ans. John the Baptist (Luke i: 15) and Timothy (1 Tim. v: 23.)

3. Why do you infer that Timothy was a total abstainer?

Ans. Because St. Paul urged him "to take a little wine," as a medicine. He evidently was not accustomed to drink wine.

4. Were any of these persons abstainers by divine command?

Ans. The Nazarites.

5. Read their vow. (Num. vi: 3, 4).

6. Was not this the strictest teetotalism?

7. Are there not other instances in which wine drinking is forbidden?

Ans. Prov. xxiii: 29-32; xxxi: 4-5; Isa v: 11, 22-24.

8. Do not the scriptures, in some places, seem to speak approvingly, and, in others, disapprovingly, of wine?

Ans. They do; but, for the most part, in strong condemnation.

9. How can we account for this seeming disagreement?

Ans. The term wine, according to the best biblical scholars, means the juice of the grape, fermented or unfermented. Dr. Norman Kerr says: "There are two modes of interpreting scripture references to wine. By one mode, our Divine Master made and the Bible sanctioned the social use of wine, containing poison in an intoxicating proportion. By the other mode, the wine the Bible condemns is the wine with intoxicating properties; while the wine the moderate use of which the Bible approves, and which our Saviour made, was not poisonous but wholesome."

10. What is known about unfermented wine?

Ans. Unfermented grape juice, freshly pressed by hand, was used. (See Gen. xl: 11.) Josephus' version is: "By the king's permission, he pressed the grapes into a goblet, and having strained the sweet wine (gleukos) he gave it to the king to drink." Bishop Lowth (Isa. v: 2) refers to Gen. xl: 11, and calls it "the fresh juice pressed from the grapes, which was called oinos ampilinos—wine of the vineyards." (See Dr. Adam Clark on Gen. xl: 11.) Prof. Tishcendorf (Apochryphal Acts and Matthew) quotes: "Having pressed out into a cup three clusters from the vine, be communicants with me."—Rev. Joseph Cook.

11. What is the injurious element in wine?

Ans. Alcohol, which is produced by fermentation.

12. What do the best scientists teach in regard to alcohol?

Ans. That it is not food, nor an assimilator of food, but it is indigestible, a disorganizer of the tissues, and a poison.

13. May not the mild liquors (wine and beer) be used moderately without injury?

Ans. No; 1st, They contain from 5 to 28 per cent of alcohol. 2d, Few persons can long use them moderately, for the alcohol vitiates the appetite, producing a desire for more and stronger liquors.

14. Are not mild liquors sometimes recommended as a temperance measure?

Ans. Yes, and we are pointed to Germany, but fallaciously. Reliable data, from 1837 to the present time, show that, while the Germans drink more beer than any other nation, they also use more of distilled liquors than the United States or England. (See McCullough for 1837; Dr. Wald, of Konigsberg, for 1850; and reports of the Sanitary Congress at Geneva, in 1882, as quoted in the "Liquor Problem in All Ages," by Rev. D. Dorchester, pp. 571-573.)

15. Does the moderate use of the mild liquors shorten life?

Ans. This has been clearly proved by the London Provident Insurance Co., which insures its patrons in one of two sections—the Total Abstainers' and the Moderate Drinkers' sections. No drunkards are insured, but, if a man says he uses mild liquors moderately, he is accepted in the Moderate Drinker's section. The expectation of life is calculated for both sections alike, on the basis of age. During sixteen years, for every 100 expected deaths, in the total abstainer's section, only 70 occurred; while in the moderate drinker's section, for every 100 expected deaths, 99 occurred. Only one survived in the latter section, and 30 in the former. Jonadab was not wrong in thinking that teetotalism would make his people "live many days in the land." v. 7.

16. After all, were not the Rechabites extremists, in excluding all kinds of wine, and even vines and vineyards?

Ans. They felt the need of thoroughly excluding the wine-drinking temptations, which had ruined so many, even great nations, and were willing to sacrifice the minor advantages of the grape, as fruit, for the greater benefits of sobriety, good order, health and happiness.

17. Would society be benefitted, if all alcoholic liquors were banished from the earth?

Ans. So radical a question should be answered by high authority. Sir John Burdon Sanderson, M. D., Professor of Physiology in University College, London, while under examination before the House of Lord's Investigating Committee, said: "My belief is that, upon the whole, the human race would be situated just as favorably, if the use of alcohol did not exist. I think that for two reasons: in the first place, because the evils preponderate over the benefits—that is certainly one reason; and the other consideration is, simply, that all the benefits are dispensable benefits."

18. But would medical practitioners be able to treat diseases without alcoholic liquors?

Ans. Probably many physicians do not yet see how they can wholly dispense with them; but the best physicians have already greatly reduced the quantity of alcohol used in the treatment of disease. Alcoholic liquors are coming more and more into disuse, and the number who have discarded them altogether is increasing—a significant indication of good times coming, when it is hoped all will be Rechabites.

MORSELS FOR REFLECTION.

The late election offers much food for reflection to all who are looking for the redemption of our land from the dominion of the saloons.

The exceeding closeness of the contest between the two great political parties, into which our voting population has for many years been almost equally divided, gives point to what we now have in our mind to say to our readers.

It is charged against those who voted for Gov. St. John that they are responsible for having changed the political complexion of the administration, and given it into the hands of their enemies. Or to state the case in another way, their failure to vote for Mr. Blaine, rather than their voting for Gov. St. John, is what caused the defeat of the former. The result of the election would have been just the same had they remined at home and not voted at all.

Mr. Blaine's defeat, therefore, if it is in any sense attributable to the Prohibitionists, results wholly from the negative character of their vote. The claim of the Republican party, as we understand it, is that that party is more favorable to the temperance reform than is the Democratic party. Therefore it is urged that the Prohibitionists did an unwise thing in deserting their friends and in permitting their enemies to win the victory.

If this charge be true, it proves a fact which the Republican party in most of the states, especially in its strong holds, has hitherto almost wholly ignored, namely, that the temperance element when united, holds the balance of power.

It cannot with any show of reason be claimed that the St. John vote represents any considerable proportion of the temperance sentiment of the country. The great majority of its voters are yet in the old parties, and it behooves them both if they would retain them to prove their friendship by their good deeds.

The Republican party must see that a process of disintegration has already commenced within its own ranks, which is not likely to be arrested by calling ugly names, nor by the burning of candidates in effigy. If its claim that all the St. John men are renegade Republicans is true, then nearly one out of every twenty-five of its voters throughout the entire north is a renegade.

The significance of even this small defection is seen in the fact that if those who voted for Gov. St. John in the three states of Connecticut, New Jersey and New York had all voted for Mr. Blaine, those three states would have gone for him instead of for Mr. Cleveland; and even if such an inconsiderable number of them as twelve hundred who voted for Mr. St. John in New York had voted for Mr. Blaine, he would have been elected.

Another significant fact is that this defection was no greater (and generally not nearly so great) in those states wherein the Republican party has taken distinctive grounds upon the temperance question, than it was in those wherein that party has wholly ignored it. Assuming that the St. John party, as is claimed, is made up of renegade Republicans, then the extent of this defection is represented in the several northern states, wherein there was an organization of the Prohibition party, by the following table; the percentage being the proportion which the vote of Mr. tS. John bears to that of Mr. Blaine.

It might be an interesting question for politicians to consider why this alleged defection from the Republican ranks should have been only seventy-eight hundredths of one per cent. in the state of Iowa, while in Illinois, separated from it by just the width of the Mississippi river, it was three and fifty-eight hundredths per cent.; why in Kansas, the home of St. John, it was only two and ninety-one hundredths per cent., and yet in Nebraska, where high license prevails, it should have been as high as three and seventy-two hundredths per cent. In like manner it might be profitable to compare Maine with Massachusetts, Ohio with New York, or Indiana with Michigan. Had the agitation of the temperance question anything to do with these results?

Another suggestion is this, that in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, where the St. John men held the balance of power, the defection from the Republican ranks was no larger in proportion than in some of the other states,—Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Michigan and Wisconsin, ranking higher in per centage than New York where ali the alleged mischief was done

Take up another line of thought and read from the clear and candid statements of Mr.

Blaine in "Twenty years in Congress," regarding the struggle of forty years ago. In place of 1844 in the following extract read 1884, in the place of Mr. Clay put the name of Mr. Blaine; instead of the annexation of Texas read the liquor traffic; for the Alabama letter substitute Mr. Blaine's refusal to commit himself on the question of prohibition; make the candidate St. John instead of Birney, the battle ground remaining the same, and a parallelism is unfolded that ought to be heeded by wise and wary dealers in place and power.

Mr. Clay realized that it was his position on the Texas question, as defined in the Raleigh letter (opposing annexation), which was endangering his prestige in Kentucky. This fact, added to the pressure upon him from every other slave-holding state, precipitated him into the blunder which probably cost him his election. A few weeks after the nomination of Mr. Polk, Mr. Clay wrote what has since been known as his Alabama letter. He declared, that, far from having any personal objection to the annexation of Texas, "he would be glad to see it annexed, without dishonor, without war, with the common consent of the union, and upon just and fair terms." This letter received the popular designation of Mr. Clay's political death warrant, from the disastrous effect it produced on his prospects in certain free states. The immediate and palpable effect was an increase of power and number to the Abolitionists. To Mr. Clay this was its most destructive result. The moment the letter of surrender appeared, thousands of anti-slavery Whigs who had loyally supported Mr. Clay went over at once to the Abolitionists. To the popular apprehension, Mr. Clay had changed his ground and his new position really left little difference between himself and his opponent on the absorbing question of Texas annexation, but it still gave to Mr. Polk all the advantage of boldness. Under such arguments the Abolition party grew rapidly and steadily, until at the election they polled for Mr. Birney 58,879 votes. This vast increase over the vote of 1840 was very largely at the expense of the Whig party, and its specific injury to Mr. Clay is almost a matter of mathematical demonstration. In New York the vote stood, for Polk, 237,588; for Clay, 232,482; for Birney, 15,812. In 1840 the vote for Mr. Birney in New York was 2,798. But for the Alabama letter, it has always been believed that Mr. Clay would have received a sufficient number of the Birney votes to give him a plurality. The election hinged on the result in New York.

We do not all use the same political reader, it is true, but these are facts that history will note, and THE UNION SIGNAL is content to hopefully wait, watch and pray, believing that the prayers of Christian women are being answered, and that He who rules on high is fast bringing about the issue that shall determine which shall rule, —the Saloon or the Home.

IT is more of a task than we feel equal to at this writing and with limited space, to straighten out the brain-tangle of the Interior, which last week announced to its readers very gravely among many other grave errors, that the W. C. T. U. is the outgrowth of the Moody meetings in Chicago, six years ago; that the ambitious Miss Willard immediately put herself at the head of the movement, etc., all for political purposes and advantage. If the Interior were to state that the Moody meetings in Chicago were an outgrowth of the W. C. T. U. work in this city, it would be far nearer the truth,—and it it might add that Mr. Moody took the ambitious Miss Willard from the W. C. T. U. to conduct women's meetings in his Boston campaign,—and that this same ambitious personage one year thereafter, declined the presidency of the W. C. T U., to which she was elected by a handsome majority—and that the W. C. T. U. so far from having recently become an advocate of legal, as opposed to moral suasion, adopted the following preamble to its first constitution in 1874:

We, the women of this nation, conscious of the increasing evils, and appalled at the tendencies and dangers of intemperance, believe it has become our duty, under the providence of God, to unite our efforts for its extinction."

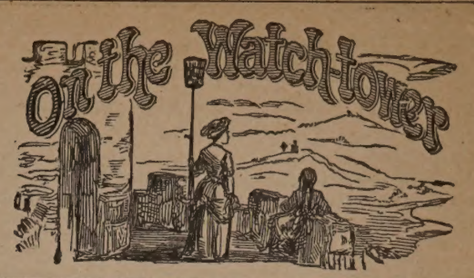
And then formulated the aims and objects of the society as follows:

The education of the young: The formation of a better public sentiment; the reformation of the drinking classes; the transformation by the power of Divine Grace of those who are enslaved by alcohol; and the removal of the dram shops from our streets by law.—

If all this could have been stated by the Interior in place of some very wild and wide misstatements, there would be less reason for the prayer that this period of judicial blindness and stultification may be shortened, so that certain good people may be saved the sin and shame of their utterances.

SOME very industrious work is being done by interested parties, in the hope of securing a division of W. C. T. U. forces. The source of such effort is easily surmised, and the W. C. T. U. will scarcely be deceived by even such ingenuous sheets as the New York Tribune and the New York Mail and Express which are being circulated very generally in its ranks. The New York Tribune which is getting such generous free advertising, contains a communication from the husband of a W. C. T. U. member endeavoring to show from the "mouths of babes and sucklings," that Miss Willard has been grossly duped by the Champion editorials. The Mail and Express contains a letter, also written by a "brother in law," predicting the immediate division of the national union. As one of our correspondents says, in sending us her own marked copies of these papers—"They are sent by some one who is apparently sending out many, judging from the style and color of the blue pencil-strokes surrounding and calling attention to the articles; also from the style of the wrappers and directions on the same." This little excerpt shows that W. C. T. U. women are as quick to detect conspiracies as to discern the signs of the times. Concerning such work we can be sure that it is "of men" and will as surely "come to naught." We stay our souls and abide the test of that organized effort which is "of God," for no man can overthrow it.

OUR National superintendents were never so immediate in their efforts to secure a whole year's work in their respective departments. A large number have already communicated officially through our columns with their constituency and a large number more are asking us to call upon state superintendents to report at once their names and work. Among the latter class, are Mrs. Esther T. Housh, of the Press department, and Mrs. E. G. Greene of the temperance kindergarten work. Mrs. A. E. Greene, who was appointed to the work for the suppression of the social evil, is constrained to decline the appointment because she believes that this effort like the kingdom of heaven "cometh without observation"—and that publicity will checkmate the most faithful endeavors in this direction. She would have all Christian women engage in it quietly and prayerfully, training children to purity of life and thought, and establishing by all means in their power, one standard of morals for both sexes.



Six hundred young Irishmen voted the other day in Quincy, Mass., for no license, and saved the town from the legalized dramshop.

In Boylston, Mass., the home of John B. Gough, there have been no saloons for many years, and Mr. Gough says that the constable of the town has absolutely nothing to do, and the jailer would have his house left unto him desolate, were it not for tramps from license villages roundabout.

* * *

Which reminds me that Mr. Gough gave one of his old-time temperance lectures at Evanston to an audience of six or seven hundred the other night, full of fire and conviction. The W. C. T. U. manage the course and are making a good thing of it.

I am surprised at what our lecturers say in regard to their audiences. Since the temperance reform was so set back for a quarter of a century, by the late election, I did not expect a corporal's guard would attend a temperance lecture, but Col. Bain is speaking to crowded houses, and Miss Willard ditto, and from everywhere I hear but one story.

* * *

Mrs. M. Anna Smith, a veteran worker in Illinois ranks, flies southward each winter with the birds. Last year it was Texas that gave her health in return for temperance work, and this year it is Florida. A Band of Hope springs up wherever she goes.

* * *

Misses Cassie and Lois Smith, the dear evangelists of Everywhere, are comfortably wintering in Wernersville, Pa., where Miss Lois is very rapidly improving in health.

* * *

A noble worker fallen, is Mrs. Mary McLaughlin Price, matron of the Newsboys' Home, Chicago. Miss Mary Allen West writes most appreciatively of her life work in the Galesburg Register, a journal reaching many of her lifelong friends.

* * *

Mrs. Chapin addressed the South Carolina legislature the other day, on the scientific temperance instruction bill, with excellent effect.

* * *

"Are there any local anti-tobacco societies in existence?" somebody asks. Let Mrs. Anna Glinn, of Coultersville, Pa., hear from them, if there are such.

* * *

More than a month ago Major and Mrs. Scott, of New Jersey, began work in Kansas. Hutchinson was the first engagement. They have wrought a good work, I hear.

* * *

Mrs. L. Johnson, the retiring corresponding secretary of the Texas W. C. T. U., has good reason to know the esteem and love of her co-workers. A silver water set was given her at the state meeting in token thereof.

* * *

"Those of us who cast our votes at a longer range than the present administration can remain unruffled and undismayed," says one who knows the peace which passes present understanding.

* * *

Vassar girls had great times over the election—a majority "lent their influence" to Blaine. Wonder if they are a political party.

* * *

The W. C. T. U. of Maine, Iowa, Illinois and West Virginia have issued fine, substantial documents in the way of annual reports this year—and speedily following their state conventions too.

ON DUTY.

News From the Field.

AT THE SOUTH.

MRS. CHAPIN'S LATE ITINERARY.

The readers of The Union Signal probably know something ere this of the work done by Mrs. Buell and myself in Mississippi. Our first work was at Winona, the seat of the State Convention. We received a right royal reception. Mrs. Morey, the wife of their congressman, welcomed us in a charming address. We spoke to crowded audiences, and formed a union of one hundred and sixty, and a Band of Hope of one hundred and forty.

Mrs. Ervin, I think has been raised up (as she told us at convention), from what "all supposed was her death bed," to do a great work for her state. She impressed all with her earnestness and consecration.

At Vicksburg, our meetings were planned by Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, Dr. Andrews, and Rev. Mr. Woodward. The opera house was rented at large expense for the mass meeting, and upon the platform with other ministers, was seated a learned Jewish Rabbi. At this meeting we were introduced by a distinguished lawyer. The other meetings were held in the Baptist and Methodist churches. Rev. Dr. Galloway, editor of the New Orleans Advocate, took occasion at one of our meetings to say he wanted to be put on record as one of the ministers who believed in "helping those women." To those of us who knew the D. D. the information was not necessary. Dr. C. K. Marshall and Dr. Galloway are to the W. C. T. U. of the south towers of strength; broad and advanced in thought, they have courage enough to express their convictions, and influence enough to make them felt. Mrs. Marshall was a Miss Vick, of Vicksburg; the city occupying the site of what was once her father's plantation. We were entertained elegantly in their home; Mrs. DeMorse, the Doctor's widowed daughter, did every thing to aid us in our work. We formed a fine union and Band of Hope.

From Vicksburg we went to Edwards, where a cousin of mine is pastor of the Presbyterian church. Both Mrs. Buell and myself spoke to a crowded audience in his church, and formed a union.

Natchez was our next stopping place, and there again the Presbyterians received us, and Dr. Stratton of that church placed us under lasting obligations for assistance given in our work. A union and Band of Hope were the result of our efforts. We were entertained at Major Reed's, whose kind family made us feel that we were not strangers. The sisters of Mrs. Douglas Walworth (whom we could so illy spare from our southern work, but who left us for New York), added by their attention much to the pleasure of our visit, and we were glad to leave one of the sisters, Mrs. Dr. McPheetus, president of the newly formed union. This means success for it.

From Natchez, we went to my Baton Rouge home, at the Goodales. As we stepped from the car, there they stood waiting to receive us. I need not tell you of them, save of the dear mother, Mrs. Read, of Read Villa, who is now educating the second generation of Louisville girls, and is as dearly loved by the daughters as she was by their mothers. She gave me a beautiful thought a few years ago. She said when she joined the church, she opened her Bible for a verse that should be a kind of direction for her Christian course, and turned to Heb. 13th and 13th; she had never, she said, until she joined the W. C. T. U. felt that she was "bearing the reproach" for doing work "without the camp."

And now, my friend with whom I had taken such sweet counsel, and whose companionship in the weary journeyings had been so delightful, was to leave me, and go north after speaking in New Orleans. I would have gone with her even across the Gulf if I had felt she needed me, but she was no longer going among strangers. To go to New Orleans, means to go to charming homes and loving hearts. I knew a warm welcome awaited her, and Lousiana's grand president, our Mrs. Merrick, was all sufficient for every and any emergency. The heart of the southern superintendent does safely trust in her and I cannot forbear adding, in that husband and son of hers, also; for to Judge Merrick, and his junior I am indebted for innumerable kindnesses. Mrs. Buell won all hearts, wherever she went, and I am sure will be gladly welcomed whenever she feels like coming to see us again in our southern homes.

The Alabama convention met in Selma. I was the only outside aid they had, and Mrs. Woodliff, who is so self distrustful that she does not realize half she is worth, insisted on my presiding. Mrs. Judge Brooks was to deliver the address of welcome, and Mrs. Dr. Bryce, of Tuscaloosa, to respond for the convention. These addresses were both to be delivered (so the program said) "in the afternoon, before the convention." When I took the president's chair of course I had to have a program to suit me, and it suited me to have these two ladies, who by education and social position are among the most distinguished ladies of the state, speak when I did, in the evening. They insisted they never could speak before the larger audiences that would assemble in the evening, but were at last induced to make the attempt; and the addresses were worthy of the National. Judge Brooks, who is one of Alabama's most distinguished lawyers, sat upon the platform wearing conspicuously our white badge. When his young wife, after speaking, took her seat, he quietly leaned over and said, "You acquitted yourself beautifully, I never was so proud of you in my life."

We could not get along at all at the south without our gentlemen, they sustain us in all our efforts. One minister, who actually preached at us from the pulpit before we came, joined us, tied on the white ribbon, and attended every one of our meetings. Ministers of all denominations honored us with their presence. Rev. Mr. Barnwell, of the Episcopal church, came up and congratulated his two members, Mrs. Bryce and Mrs. Brooks, on their addresses, and expressed his delight with all our proceedings. So did Judge Brooks, who handed me a letter in which he says he never attended a convention of any kind (and he has attended a great many), where so much important business was dispatched in so short a time, and with so much harmony, and such regard for parliamentary usage. The Band of Hope led by one of their members (a boy of ten) who played the cornet, added much to our evening meetings. Gen. Shelly, member of Congress, carried round a hat at the collection. Baskets of flowers were presented to the southern superintendent, the retiring president, Mrs. Woodliff, and Mrs. Dr. Bryce, the newly elected one. So you see this was a real genuine convention, and will, I am sure, place Alabama in the lead of all our southern states.

The plans of work adopted are heroic, and they will be carried out. The president and cabinet are unequalled in any state. I went with the president to Birmingham, the magic city of Alabama, to form a union. Miss Moore had formed one, and all she does is well done and cannot be improved on, so as this union had only gasped and expired, the prospect was rather discouraging. Mrs. Woodliff, however, finding out that Major Thomas, a prominent citizen of Birmingham, was a cousin of mine, telegraphed him to meet me at the train at midnight, and have a meeting gotten up for me. He did meet me, but did not know exactly how much of a martyr I was going to make of him, and was quite relieved when I explained my mission. He entered heartily into the work, and secured for me a large audience, from which we organized a union, with Mrs. Gen. Thomas, of the Presbyterian church, as president and the Alabama state union was invited to hold its next convention there.

From here I was to go home, but a telegram from Mrs. Brooks urged me to meet her and Mrs. Rothroc that night in Montgomery, where the legislature was in session, and help get a bill passed putting temperance text-books into the schools of Alabama. I went, and spoke, urging the importance of doing so. At the close of the meeting, I asked all gentlemen who would vote for the bill to rise; the newspaper said "all rose in the church but four." So we feel quite sanguine about it.

I am going with Mrs. Sibley, of Georgia, to present a similar bill to the Georgia legislature. I have, since the National convention, traveled 1,700 miles, attended two conventions, and spoken forty times. I am going to work this year as never before. Never was temperance sentiment in the south so high as now. I wish we had a few thousand dollars to put the right kind of lecturers into the field. The Macedonian cry comes to me, from every state, and I was going to add from almost every county.

S. F. Chapin.

KANSAS.

Hutchinson.—The temperance people outside of Kansas litttle realize how much we need temperance work in our state. We find when eastern workers come here that their first impressions are very discouraging. They say, "Why, we thought you had a constitutional amendment!" So we have, but we find that it is a very difficult matter to have prohibition prohibit, because the whisky element throughout the country have to a great degree concentrated their efforts upon Kansas, so that they may be able to fight constitutional amendments in other states with the statement that "It is impossible to make prohibition prohibit in Kansas, therefore it is not the best way to advance the temperance cause." And some of our poor, weak, temperance brothers might be misled by this logic. While on the other hand our temperance friends both in and out of the state say, "There is an amendment in Kansas so there is no further need of effort on our part."

Could I tell you of the hundreds of persons who have come to our state to escape this terrible rum curse and have found here that same enemy who drove them from their beautiful homes in the east, you would exclaim as with one voice, "Our sister state is in distress, and if we want to carry the constitutional amendment in the other states we must devote a part of both our time and labor in helping her in her struggle to enforce the law." In our own beautiful little city we have found more need, if possible, of work, since the passing of the law, than ever before.

About a year ago we heard of the labors of Major Scott, of Ocean Grove, N. J., and when we found that he would attend the national convention at St. Louis we invited him to come here and work for us. We pledged fifty dollars for one week's labor. To many this may seem but a small amount, but to a W. C. T. U., which meets with little else but opposition and which had in its treasury but six dollars, it appeared to be a great undertaking. But knowing that the work must be done and believing that God would help us, we sent for him. We held a prayer service preparatory to the lectures, and to us came these words uttered so long ago. "O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt." The Major began his work with a Sunday evening meeting, and although that week there was all the excitement of the election, some hard rain storms and other adverse circumstances, against which he was obliged to contend, still every night he drew good audiences, and by Saturday night, although the pledge had only been presented twice, ninety had signed it. We decided to request him to remain with us a few days longer, and when he left after ten days work, between two and three hundred had signed the pledge and many were brought up out of the very depths and with them was begun a reformation, which will bring self-respect and happiness to their friends.

Major Scott takes up all phases of the temperance question. He not only uses moral suasion but works earnestly for the enforcement of the law. His dear, good wife, who accompanies him, seconds all his endeavors and does all in her power to build up unions, start Bands of Hope etc. They would do a wonderful work in Kansas, should they remain in the state all winter. They are now holding a series of meetings in Newton, and from there will go to other parts of the state. To those unions who are afraid to attempt any extra temperance work on account of the expense, we would like to say, just try it, and I doubt not that you will meet with the same success that we did.

In less than half a day we raised over eighty-five dollars. While we appreciate the fact that this wonderful work has done much for us, still we are like Oliver Twist, we desire and ask for "more." C. W. K.

OREGON.

Corvallis.—There have been several honorable mentionings of Miss Henrietta Moore's work, and please let me add another. Coming at this untoward time, with the clouds of slander, malice and political uncharitableness hanging over us, some unions have been afraid to let her come at all. For this reason we had a longer time with her, and I do believe her words have been the means of blowing some of our black clouds away. She spoke three times here, besides at a less public conference, and we noticed the same bitter feeling, but still (after their fashion) temperance Republicans came again and again to hear her. Not that she laid on any salve. She gave them the strongest advice respecting the prayerful and conscientious use of the ballot box. We just wished her advice had come a few weeks sooner; for we felt what a power there was in it. We are so thankful the number of national organizers is increased. We feel out here that incalculable good is done by one hour's public talk of the National W. C. T. U. leaders.

L. A. Nash.

Scio.—We have a small union here, struggling with might and main against opposition from almost every quarter. Notwithstanding all the fiery darts that have been hurled at us, we have stood our ground and endeavored to show by our works that we are about our "Father's business." We organized last April with nine members. Our union received but one addition, until September 10, when Miss Alice Clawson, of Portland, Oregon, came, gave us one lecture and by her energetic and thorough arguments succeeded in breaking down some of the prejudice that had existed against our union, and brought into it five honorary members. November 8 and 9, Miss Henrietta Moore came to remain with us two days. On Saturday night she spoke to a small audience; the elements and also the excitement of the election, with bonfires, anvils and other noises, were greatly against us. However, by her convincing arguments, she did much good. She addressed the Sunday school for a short time, much to our satisfaction. She dwelt particularly upon the tobacco habit. After which she met the union in conference, and gave us some very helpful advice and wise suggestions. Sunday night she lectured to a crowded house, the Baptist minister, Mr. Osburn, kindly giving away to her. She gained for us in all seven honorary members and four regular members. All went home well pleased with her address and with the opinion that "lady temperance lecturers are not so bad after all." Our union at present numbers twenty-seven, twelve of whom are honorary members. God speed our cause "For God and Home and Native Land."

Mrs. H. M. Surles, Pres. W. C. T. U.

NEW JERSEY.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS.

We have a little union down here by the sea, organized last July, only numbering about twenty members. Believing that God called us to form this union and band ourselves together to put down the evil of intemperance in our midst, in the shape of two saloons selling under government license, we resolved to secure a place near the polls on election day, in which we could dispense sandwiches and coffee to all voters, also distribute temperance literature. We boldly asked for the half of a billiard hall. The proprietor considered the matter for one day and decided we could not have it. This seemed the only eligible place, to us, and we gave it up, but God undertook for us, and on Sunday morning He put it in the heart of one of His children to offer us her entire house. We immediatly accepted it as from God, and prepared to "hold the fort;" armed with tracts and leaflets suitable for such an occasion, plenty of the best coffee and sandwiches, we started on our mission. We put up a banner, "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for God, and home and native land;" also placards, inviting all to lunch. Only nine of our members could be with us, one, a dear, young girl, sat all day at the piano and played our beautiful gospel hymns for those that came in to sing, and such singing I never heard before. I am sure she will always thank God for that day and the rich blessing that came to her heart.

As soon as we were ready, it was announced to the crowd at the polls directly opposite. While waiting for them we went to prayer for God's blessing upon our own efforts and to send in such as we could influence for good. Before rising from our knees, they came, and from that until ten o'clock at night they came and went, awed into stillness as God's ministers, laymen and women called on God for His blessing. Many listened with tearful eyes, as mothers talked to the boys as only mothers can talk, whose hearts are full of the love of Christ, and of souls. Sobs were heard as we plead with them to forsake their cup, and turn to Christ, hands were raised for prayer, some signed the pledge and are faithfully keeping it. O, such manifested presence of God as was felt in that room! In all this, no word was spoken of party politics, no prayer for the success of either; only that the right might prevail, God have His way and the people be saved. No tickets offered, no words spoken except of counsel and prayer. We did not keep an accurate account of the callers, but feel quite sure we gave out nearly two hundred cups of coffee and sandwiches, and distributed over three hundred tracts which were read by many as they stood in the rain. No sneers, no jests. It was said that never had there been so quiet an election, so few under the influence of liquor at the polls. At half past nine we began to close the room, still crowded. All were loth to leave the place, many lingered until we had taken the stage coach to go to our homes, about a mile away. As we went we sang, "One more day's work for Jesus." This ended our first venture at the polls, but if God shall spare our lives, we will be found on duty next election. MARY C. NOBLES.

CANADA.

MONTREAL.—Montreal Union is the largest in Canada, numbering 1,285 members. The fee is optional and is paid by about two-thirds of the membership. A police matron will shortly be appointed who will search and attend to the needs of the female prisoners. Visits are made by the superintendent of that work, to the gaols and, when released, assistance is given to many of the prisoners. The hospital is visited regularly, and cottage meetings are also carried on. The secretary of this union writes: Temperance text books are in use in the public schools, and a young ladies' auxiliary has been organized in our girls' high school. Bands of Hope have been formed in three of the benevolent institutions; and many others, not connected with the union, exist as church or Sunday school organizations.

At the present time there are 144 hotels, 233 restaurants, and 432 retail grocery stores where liquor is sold, in this city alone. Besides this, there are 15 wholesale groceries where it is sold, making a total of 824 places where the accursed liquor traffic is carried on. Is it any wonder that our efforts often fail, that sometimes our heads grow weary and our hearts faint when we think how firmly the enemy is entrenched? God grant that we may all be more fully consecrated to His service.

TORONTO.—On a recent evening a large and enthusiastic meeting of the friends of temperance was held in Worms' Hall, village of Brockton, to take into consideration the advisability of forming a ward association for the new ward of St. Mark's. The members of the West End Christian Temperance Society, with their excellent choir were present in full force, the president, Mr. A. Farley, acting as chairman of the committee, Mr. Munns as secretary. The speakers were Rev. John Smith, Mr. Jas. Thompson, and Mr. Farley. The former gentleman spoke for upwards of an hour on the general features of the Scott Act. Mr. Thompson followed in a short but effective speech, and concluded by urging upon residents of St. Mark's ward who were present in the hall to form themselves into an association, which was readily acceded to with the following result: president, Mr. Manning; 1st vice-president, Mr. Wm. Moore; 2nd vice-president, Mr. Hopkins; 3rd vice-president, Mr. Dean; secretary, Mr. F. Young; treasurer, Mr. Shephard; Chaplain, Mr. Van Horne.

OTTAWA.—The Y. W. C. T. U. held its first annual meeting recently, and was greeted by a large audience.

Rev. John Wood conducted the devotional exercises, after which Miss Johnson, the president, took the chair, and gave a short but comprehensive address detailing the work of the year, after which she conducted the business of the meeting. The vice president of the society and Mrs. Chisholm, president of the Ontario W. C. T. U. occupied seats on the platform.

The annual report of the corresponding secretary showed the membership of the union had increased during the year. It has now seventy-one active and thirty honorary members.

The work of the year has been boys' night school, girls' night school, sewing school, entertainments, and flower mission.

All these departments have been very successful and much good it is believed has been done.

The following officers were elected: President, Miss Johnson; recording secretary, Miss Russell; corresponding secretary, Miss Scott; treasurer, Miss Fleck. Vice presidents representing the different denominations: Episcopal, Miss Tilley; Presbyterian, Miss Wright; Methodist, Miss Whelan; R. Episcopal, Miss Tracey; Baptist, Miss Jameson; Congregational, Miss Gallagher.

Superintendents of different departments were also elected as follows: Boys' night school, Miss Russell; girls' night school, Miss Pilson; sewing school, Miss Robertson; flower mission, Miss Eloise Smith: reading circle, Miss Fleck.

Mrs. Chisholm, Mrs. Thorburn and Miss Harmon each spoke a few words of encouragement to the young ladies; after which, Rev. John Wood gave a short address. Miss Russell, who was a delegate to the convention of Ontario W. C. T. U., held recently at Toronto, gave a very interesting report of the proceedings of that meeting.

The treasurer, Miss Crawford, read her report showing a balance on hand of $30.

The meeting was dismissed with the benediction.

BROCKTON.—The Y. W. C. T. U. held a very enjoyable conversazione on the evening of Oct. 14, in Victoria hall. The room was tastefully decorated with flags, flowers, temperance floral cards and scripture texts.

On the wall in front of the entrance, was seen in large characters, "Prohibition for Canada," while below was suspended the banner in white, containing our motto, "For God, and home and native land."

After prayer by one of our ministers, J. Gill, Esq., one of the gentlemen of our Scott Act committee kindly took the chair, and made a short introductory speech. He then called upon the president of the union, Mrs. J. Ross, who read a short address, stating the origin and aims of the organization, earnestly soliciting the aid and co-operation of all Christian women in the community. After a piano duett by two of our young ladies, exquisitely rendered, the recording secretary, Mrs. Dr. Pickup, read the report of the local union. Commencing with 17 members in March last, we now number 44. Four thousand leaflets, tracts, War Notes, etc., had been circulated in various directions, 36 weekly meetings held and a variety of temperance work in different departments effected.

Music and readings filled up the remainder of the evening, refreshments being served between the parts. These were contributed by many kind friends and well wishers. I must also mention a freely given recitation by Miss Lancashire, a young and very talented as well as graceful elocutionist, who is just making her debut in Canada, but has already earned for herself a deservedly high reputation in the United States.

Notwithstanding a perfect down-pour of rain almost the entire evening, we had a full house, and will net well on to $60 by our entertainment.

NEBRASKA.

RIVERTON.—A glorious work has been done in this place, under the labors of Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, who held two meetings a day for twenty-one consecutive days. Seventy-six people have been converted in the gospel temperance meetings, all the leading business men, save two, in the town; they have organized themselves into a home protection club, with the resolve not to rest until the saloons are closed. The sentiment of the town is revolutionized. Ministers from a distance have come to see the work and to plan for a campaign among their people. A W. C. T. U. was organized of forty-five members, and a column secured in the weekly paper. Mrs. Henry began work, immediately after leaving Riverton, in Bloomington, thirty miles west. The editor of the Enterprise is a staunch knight in this "Holy War," and has dealt strong blows for the cause.

The officers of our W. C. T. U. are as follows: president, Mrs. A. W. Harrap; recording secretary, Mrs. M. R. Cross; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. M. Markell; treasurer, Mrs. F. M. Plumb.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PHILADELPHIA.—The tenth annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held November 28, in the parlors of St. George's Hall. Mrs. J. R. Jones occupied the chair. After devotional exercises, a committee on nominations and plan of work was appointed.

The president, Mrs. Jones, read her annual address, which referred to the fact that the women of the union, in tracing effects to their causes, have been led to a study and knowledge of the laws of heredity and hygiene. They hold public meetings, at which they preside, and at which they are frequently the speakers. There are thirty-six departments of work connected with the N. W. C. T. U. These are to be duplicated in the state and local auxiliaries, as far as practicable, affording the fullest scope to utilize the special talent of every individual. Work has been carried on in fifteen departments the past year.

Mrs. F. P. Nicholson, on behalf of the union, presented Mrs. Jones with a beautiful floral design, standing about thirty inches high. It consisted of two plateaus of flowers, above which were two horns of plenty, under a horse shoe, and crowning all, a bouquet of roses. It was a complete surprise to Mrs. Jones, but was responded to most happily.

The tenth annual report of the Central W. C. T. U. stated that temperance schools are now organized under the auspices of the union, with a total membership of 415. The workers in the department of prison and reformatory work have been faithful to their work. Fifty meetings have been held in Moyamensing prison; homes have been found for 16. No adequate estimate can be formed of the good accomplished at the House of Correction. During the year there were distributed 125,742 pages of tracts, 150,062 papers, 500 pledges, 575 books. Efforts have been made during the year to reach and interest the Germans in temperance work. The committee report the work is difficult, but have made some progress. The membership of the union is 296, a gain over last year of 57. Two new unions have been organized; one at Haddington, and the other in the Zoar African M. E. church.

The following officers were elected to serve the ensuing year: President, Mrs. J. R. Jones; first vice president, Mrs. H. F. French; second vice president, Mrs. F. P. Nicholson; third vice president, Mrs. Wister Morris; fourth vice president, Mrs. Mary Sparks Wheeler; fifth vice president, Mrs. H. Tutton; sixth vice president, Mrs. Charles Scott; general secretary, Mrs. I. Forrest; treasurer, Miss Rachel Stokes; assistant treasurer, Miss Mary Potts; superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Hannah W. Smith; superintendent of public meetings, Mrs. D. H. Paul; superintendent of Monday's devotional meetings, Mrs. J. R. Jones; superintendent of special meetings and room committee, Miss Williamson; superintendent of reformatory and home visitations, Miss Martha Parks; prison and hospital, Miss A. V. Dutton; temperance literature, Miss Frances Jones; juvenile work, Miss E. L. Reneker; heredity and hygiene, Mrs. A. C. Law; press, Mrs. Dr. Peddie; Sunday school work, Dr. Caroline M. Dodson; mothers' meeting, Mrs. Roney; scientific temperance work, Miss Beulah Kennard; county and state fairs, Mrs. J. Doughty; German work, Mrs. Mack; publication, Miss E. Nicholson; work among the colored people, Miss Smith.

NEXT FOR THE TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION BILL.

After the din and smoke of battle, we the local union of Eria, Pa., take a calm survey of the field and ask "What next?" Clearly to the ear of every woman comes the answer, "Work for the children! Begin down; build strong and well; to this end—"The Temperance Instruction Bill!" The old Keystone shall join hands as well as lands with the Empire state, for "God and home and native land."

As a forerunner to this work, we called our National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt and Pennsylvania's own Narcissa White, to speak to our people, at our county convention, held in Erie, last May. Large audiences thronged the church to hear these women, the one silver-tongued, cultured, commanding and ripe with experience and wisdom: the other fresh, bright, forcible and as irrisistible in argument as a mountain torrent.

These two women have done much to quicken the thought of the people of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Hunt has opened a similar campaign to the one that carried New York, and Narcissa White has gone the length and breadth of the state, during the entire year, adding to the wearing work of speaking almost nightly for Scientific Temperance Instruction, that of organizing. I find, by reference, that forty new unions are one result of her year's work in Penylvania.

To show how the minds of the people are being bent to this special work of the W.C. T. U. of Pennsylvania for the present year, very recently the most successful Teachers Institute ever held in Erie county had as principal lecturer, Col. Geo. W. Bain, and as prominent instructor, Miss Narcissa White; subject, "How to teach Temperance," and so interested were those three hundred teachers as well as directors, that at the special session on Directors' day, Miss White was requested to repeat a previous lesson for the benefit of the directors, and when the question "Should Scientific Temperance be required by the state?" was discussed, one of the directors, who is to be a Republican member of the next legislature, rose and declared himself heartily in favor of such a law. And a Democratic member elect, after questioning Miss White privately, pledged himself to support such a bill if the people wish it. This is not meant as a eulogy on Miss White. Her own works praise her. This is only to give assurance that old Pennsylvania stands "next" in the class for Scientific Temperance Instruction in her schools. C.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction, is doing most valuable and successful work in Pennsylvania.

As you know, we are working this year for an educational bill such as was passed in New York last year, and Mrs. Hunt is conducting the campaign for us.

Most enthusiastic reports come in from all the places where she has worked, telling of the golden opinions she wins everywhere, and of the universal success of her work.

From one place they write, "Mrs. Hunt addressed a packed house the evening of Nov. 12, as arranged. Her lecture was splendid, and was received enthusiastically. As I told you, the Lawrence County Teacher's Institute was in session, so she addressed representatives from every township in the county and all were more than pleased; as one teacher remarked, 'Pleased does not begin to express it.'

We had all classes and religions present, and all felt that they could have listened to her all night. Every one who heard her is full of praises. A gentleman who knows told me that she particularly pleased the men, her arguments were so convincing and her oratory so fine.

She spoke the next morning a few minutes to the teachers about the books, and a large number will send for copies of the Physiology at once. I am so glad that she came just now, for the teachers are all thoroughly stirred up. I feel that God's hand was in her coming.

The morning after the lecture, my sister took the petition tablets into the institution to have the teachers sign them, and all did so gladly, with the exception of one man. Mrs. Hunt is the right woman in the right place. I wish every village in our state would have her."

In another place where the W. C. T. U. women had been very much discouraged on account of the present political state of affairs, and would have been glad to have given up the lecture if they had not promised it, they wrote me afterwards that Mrs. Hunt's coming had been like oil on the troubled waters. They expressed themselves as delighted that I had insisted on their keeping the engagement and add, "Tell the women everywhere to go forward and not falter, for it will be a blessing to their work, no matter how dark it may look beforehand."

Mrs. Hunt is seeking to reach all the important men who will be in our next legislature, and has had remarkable success thus far in winning their favor for our Bill. In fact I believe she only needs to have a chance to present her cause and she is sure to convince the judgment and win the approval of all who hear her.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

Y. W. C. T. U. NOTES.

The Methodist girls in the Titusville union have collected enough money to make their pastor a life member of their union. Mrs. Dr. Reynolds is its stirring, efficient president.

What do you think of young ladies both planning and carrying out a successful remonstrance against wholesale license? That is just what the Bellefonte Y. W. C. T. U. has done.

The second drawing-room held by the Somerset young ladies was an overwhelming success. They did not expect more than eighteen or twenty, but between forty and fifty were present. During the evening, which was interspersed with delightful music, one of Canon Farrar's Talks on Temperance was read.

Miss S. May Owens, of Bradford, has been made superintendent of young ladies' work in McKean county. We think she will make for her department of work a grand record this year.

Gettysburg, the famous battlefield, has recently organized a Y. W. C. T. U. Miss Mary Sheik is its president.

Miss Carrie Rohm and Mrs. H. John Hill report new unions in Hawley and Indiana, while our sweet and brave Mrs. Wm. L. Haines leads another union of young ladies in West Chester.

Mrs. Stevens, of Wayne county, writes that Miss Jennie Dart, the newly appointed superintendent of Y. W. C. T. U. work in that county, is pure gold! Oh, how gladly we reach out the hand of loving welcome to these fresh links in the chain with which our beloved Keystone state shall be encircled and our dear boys held for lives of godliness and sobriety! R. E. P.

A CHRISTMAS APPEAL.

Dear sisters of the W. C. T. U. The time is drawing near, when we shall once again bestow our Christmas gifts, and frame anew the story in our lives of Him who came to proclaim "peace on earth, good-will to man." By way of carrying this blessed message to as many hearts as possible, shall we not as unions and individuals, in sending out our gifts, remember those who are inside our prison walls, shut away from home and loved ones, even though punishment comes as the result of their own acts? We cannot measure the many influences that have helped to drag the erring ones down; we know that intoxicating liquor has wrought more ruin than aught else, and unless we "lend our influence," and means, toward their reformation, these individuals will come out to mingle with society again, and old habits, and new temptations, will unite to drag them still farther from the better ways of life.

The subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL solicited by Miss Helen Walker in behalf of prison work, have expired for the Joliet penitentiary, and will expire for Chester about the 1st of January, 1885; fifty copies were sent to each prison. If each union will forward to Mrs. S. B. Wilkins, state treasurer of W. C. T. U., Rockford, Illinois, $1.50 to pay for one year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, we shall soon have at least 150 copies making their weekly visits, and carrying helpful words to those that are so much in need of them. Letters showing the practical working for good of these silent visitors, have been received by the publisher of THE UNION SIGNAL, from the chaplain and prisoners.

Dear sisters, in taking up this work anew, let us remember the lesson of the grain of mustard seed that lodged by the roadside; the clouds in pity let their tears fall upon the hard soil, until the earth covered it from sight, then the sunlight reached down and warmed and nourished it until a slender stalk shot up to meet the kindly ray; the wind swayed it gently too and fro, until it put forth a fringe of green leaves; the dew wreathed it with pearls, and summer's breath crowned it with yellow bloom!

Even so the Master's love can find the hard places, and carry sunshine into the darkest corner of prison life, while human love and sympathy, and well directed endeavor, can do much toward uplifting the erring, and bringing to the surface the better and more kindly qualities of the heart.

Please send me names of unions or individuals, who contribute to this fund, so that I can keep a record and report progress through THE UNION SIGNAL.

LIZZIE M. MASON,
Sup't. of Dep't. of Prison and Jail work for Ill.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Fifteen unions have been organized since our Peoria convention, adding 382 new members to our membership.

—Mr. J. B. Gough opened the Evanston W. C. T. U. lecture course on Friday of last week. His audience, which was a large one, was more than pleased with his talk on "Temperance."

—Miss Ida Evans reports a union at Warsaw, Mrs. Waddell one at Pullman, and Mrs. Villars writes that a most cordial reception was given her at Norris City, White county, where she organized a large union.

—Mr. J. C. Ambrose has prepared several fine lectures, one especially deserving of notice by unions desiring to aid in legislative work this winter. It is entitled "My Partner," and treats of the woman's ballot from all points of view. Send to headquarters for terms.

—The state reports are now ready for distribution. Two will be sent each union. If more are desired they will be sent, on order, for postage, at the rate of three cents per copy, or for expressage. The report is the largest and finest we have ever issued, covering 112 pages, and should be in the hands of every member of the union. Send to headquarters for them.

—The fourth district is planning a convention for the latter part of January. The eighth district has just held a county convention at Prospect Park, is planning for another at Elwood, and is arranging for a district meeting at Yorkville in January. The sixteenth district held a mass convention last week at Olney. Three county conventions are being held this week in the seventeenth district. One is being arranged for at Edwardsville in eighteenth district.

VERMONT.

NORTHFIELD.—Mrs. E. G. Greene, our state president and national superintendent of the Kindergarten department, has entered upon her new line of work with a cheerful energy and zeal that are inspiriting. On Wednesday, Nov. 19, she visited the graded and high schools of this place, receiving a most cordial welcome from the principal, Mr. J. M. Hitt, and the teachers in all the departments. The bright eyes and eager faces of the little ones in No.'s 1 and 2, as Mrs. Greene talked to them of trying to learn how to take good care of the bodies God had given them, showed both her happy faculty of instructing children and their interest in her words. One little fellow said to his mother last night at the tea-table, "Mamma, you must not give me any more tea, it isn't good for boys! The temperance lady told us so in school to-day;" and then related the most striking points of Mrs. Greene's remarks, so that the mother obtained a very good idea of what had been explained to her little boy.

I think her visit to our school has aroused more interest than books would have done without it in a long time. The testimony of the teachers in the higher departments is, that their pupils generally were stimulated anew in the study of physiology and hygiene.

Mrs. Greene made a special point of the law, in her address to the advanced scholars and teachers, viz.: That the law requires hygiene to be taught in our schools just as much as it does reading or writing. This method of awakening interest in a department of study hitherto so much neglected, must commend itself to all educators; and in the near future, we believe the parents of the bright boys and girls of our land, will gratefully acknowledge the wisdom and excellence of this plan of temperance education.

M. P. MOORE, Supt. Dept. of Press.

NEWS IN A NUT SHELL.

In accordance with the liberty of action expressed as to state and local unions at the St. Louis convention, the Macon, Mo., W. C. T. U. votes to be non-partisan.

The temperance cause in Arkansas is making good progress. Miss I. C. DeVelling is lecturing and organizing throughout the state, and old prejudices against women as speakers are breaking down. The motto of the W. C. T. U. at this time is, "Agitate and educate."

The Ohio W. C. T. U. is holding institutes where a number of W. C. T. Unions can be represented, in lieu of district meetings, when the latter do not seem quite practicable. The initiation was at London, November 11 and 12, and was a great success. Also one at Logan, November 18, full of enthusiasm.

A pleasant little incident is given, connected with the marriage of the treasurer of the Ipava, Ill., W. C. T. U., Miss Lizzie David, and Mr. W. W. McDermet, of Nebraska, namely, the following expression of appreciation: "While the W. C. T. U. regrets the loss of one of its most efficient officers, the members wish to extend hearty congratulations to Mrs. McDermet, hoping the new union may find her as wise and faithful a treasure(r) as she had been for the Ipava union."

The W. C. T. U. of Plainfield, Wis., was organized in April last, by Miss Edwards of Ohio, with eleven members, and has since added twenty-five names to the roll. They have a Band of Hope numbering eighty-two. Thanksgiving services were held in the Baptist church, and a bountiful dinner was served at the M. E. church to all the children of the village, under the auspices of the Band of Hope. They rent a room and have purchased a small library, the use of which is free to all.

On the second evening of the recent Alabama W. C. T. U. convention, addresses were made by Judge Brooks, Rev. Dr. T. F. Mangum and Mrs. Chapin. Miss Missouri H. Stokes, corresponding secretary of Georgia, was present, and responded to a call by giving an earnest and helpful talk in regard to the share the W. C. T. U. of her state had had in bringing about local option in Georgia. Too much could not be said of the efficient faithfulness of this band of Alabama women, aided by strong and equally faithful men. Their record is on high.

THERE are urgent calls from several parishes in Louisiana for visits from our national workers. The great need of the hour is organization. It is believed that if the work in Louisiana is properly systematized and pushed, it may be one of the first states to secure prohibition. Many consider it the only salvation from the ruin of the negroes, caused by drinking habits, a slavery worse than their former state, "destroying both soul and body." A vote will be taken on prohibition in Morehouse Parish, December 31.

DEPARTMENT OF WORK AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE OF THE NORTH.

I take this opportunity to ask the unions in all the states to appoint superintendents of this department in their state, county and local unions, wherever there are large numbers of colored people, so as to bring them in close affiliation with the methods and plans of work as adopted by the W. C. T. U. and to enlist their co-operation in our common cause. During the ensuing year, I hope this department will receive more attention and awaken greater interest than it did last year. It certainly presents a field of vast importance, taking it either from a political or Christian standpoint. As the vote of the most ignorant and vicious man counts just as much as that of the most virtuous and talented voter, it behooves those who would place the government on the side of righteousness, to strive to educate the masses to wield their suffrage on the side of "God, and home, and native land." And may not this be a special work that God places in the hands of the Christian women of the land, and "if they will not do it, who will?" While I have found some unions ready to lend a helping hand, others have seemed slow in taking hold, but I hope in the future they will learn to look on this department as one of "the precious things of life that lie around our feet." Part of the time since my appointment has been spent in canvassing for local option in Maryland, but I am now in Brooklyn, where I have been spending several weeks, and although I am not sustained by any of the unions, I have succeeded in seeing one new union formed in Brooklyn, and one already in existence has, I understand, more than doubled its members in New York. The new superintendent of colored work, (Mrs. Goff,) opened the way for my coming to the state, and procured me several appointments, one of which was attended by Mrs. Burt, who gave a short address, and several of my other meetings have been attended by Mrs. Goff and Mrs. Hart, county president, whose union was kind enough to pay for the advertising of some of my meetings. In the present state of feeling growing out of the election, they did not see m to think it advisable to keep up the meetings just then as Mrs. Goff had commenced them, but finding opportunity to reach numbers of the colored people through their own churches, I have continued to hold on to the work, as doors are still opening in colored churches. Should any unions feel that they wish any co-operation on my part they can write to Bainbridge street, Philadelphia. F. E. W. HARPER.

Kindergarten Department.

I desire the name of every kindergarten school under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.; also a contribution from the work of each for the New Orleans' exposition

This department is so lately organized that no report of the work has ever been made to the National W. C. T. U., hence the necessity of prompt action to secure a place among our national departments. Address Mrs. E. G. Greene, St. Albans, Vt.

Juvenile Department

The names desired on small cards for "Band of Hope Chain" at New Orleans' exposition, may consist of one card containing name of Band, place, state and number of pupils; or, each child may send a card with her or his name and address. The longer our chain the better. I find my former statement was not quite understood on this point. Please send immediately. ANNA M. HAMMER,

Signal Notes.

THE Monitor Journal, a leading temperance paper of Indiana, is being put upon a solid financial basis. At the recent meeting of the state temperance council, a thousand dollars stock was subscribed among the members present.

A society has been started in Paris called the "Mouthful of Bread," which furnishes a piece of bread and a drink of water with vinegar in it to all who apply. The vinegar serves to destroy the animalcules found in the water of Paris, and gives it a more refreshing quality.

A call is issued by the Central Committee of the Prohibition party of Kansas, for a state convention for extended consultation in regard to plans for future labor, and for perfecting the organization of the party throughout the state. All who stand squarely on theplatform adopted at Pittsburg, July 23, 1884, are invited to co-operate in the selection of delegates to this convention, which will be held in the senate chamber at Topeka, on Tuesday, Dec. 16.

A PITIFUL appeal is that of Esther Amai, a Jewess at Dar-al Beida, who was cruelly flogged without trial, on a charge of immoral conduct. Her letter to Lord Granville, in the hope of redress, dated at Tangier, has this closing sentence: "Some friends tell me that in England there is more justice than in this country, and that Her Majesty, the queen, would never allow a poor girl to be beaten to death, as I have been, and I beg of your lordship to tell the queen about it."

THE quarterly convention of the Total Abstinence Union of La Salle, Putnam, Grundy and Kendall counties, Illinois, was held at the Friends' meeting house, Putnam county, December 4 and 5, 1884 with interesting exercises throughout. An address was given by Rev. Aaron Gurney. In the resolutions adopted are embodied endorsement of the following: scientific temperance instruction, a prohibition party and equal suffrage, means for co-operation with all the temperance associations within the bounds of this Total Abstinence Union are also urged.

A prominent chemist of Elmira, New York, has given the result of recent investigations to the world, as to the proportion of opium found in a dozen packages of the highest priced cigarettes in the market. These he sent to a Pittsburg chemist for analysis. He says, "The considerable quantity of opium found in all the standard brands is astounding. The universally recognized bondage resulting from the use of opium in any form or degree, especially by smoking or absorption, renders the murderous design of the admixture and the sharp lesson to be learned, terribly plain."

THE largest cargo of New England rum ever shipped from the United States was recently sent to Africa. No less than 150,000 gallons were exported from Boston to this new field. The Boston Traveller characterizes this terrible enterprise in the following vivid sentence: "Thus do human greed, satanic influence, and heartless indifference to the moral welfare of the African race, combine to obstruct the path of progress in the regeneration of the dark continent." It is in world-wide contrast to this, that the great Bishop Taylor goes on his Christ-like mission, as an evangelist and organizer to these lands, risking his life and support in his own hands.

THE Minnesota central committee of the Prohibition party, in a communication addressed to the national committee, suggests the pressing demand for immediate action toward bringing into harmonious relations all who believe in protecting the home against the saloon. The communication, signed by L. W. Denton, chairman, and W. W. Satterlee, secretary, concludes as follows: Therefore, we beg to further suggest that the national committee shall correspond and advise with representative persons of all parties and factions, known to be favorable to our cause, in regard to calling a national conference under the broadest call consistent with the great issue that forms its basis, and liberal to the utmost bound of expediency and right."

Get You Ready

FOR CHRISTMAS. There will be stockings to fill. Christmas trees to adorn. Absent friends must be remembered, and if you are a Sunday School teacher, under no circumstances can "those scholars" be forgotten. "But what can I get that will be at the same time attractive, interesting and instructive?" Allow us to suggest "MISTLETOE MEMORIES, or what the Poets Say about Christmas." This unique collection of Poems is selected from the writings of H. W. Longfellow, J. G. Whittier, Thomas Hood, Alfred Domett, Charles Mackay, Sir Walter Scott, Jennie Joy, and others. The whole bound in Banner shape, with rich fringe and tassels. The cover of this novelty is printed in nearly eighteen colors (being an almost exact fac simile of landscape studies printed in oil colors on gold pebble board), and ranks exceedingly high as an imported art production of the premier class. The original designs are drawn by H. Maurice Page, and were awarded a Prize of Fifty Pounds Sterling at the Suffolk street (London) Galleries in a competitive exhibit of 6000 entries, by the following eminent judges: J. E. Millais, Marcus Stone and G. A. Storey. For presentation, this art souvenir is vastly superior to a mere Christmas card, as it combines the advantages of both art and literature. SIZE 4 BY 6½ INCHES. Price, Beautifully Silk Fringed, with Tassels, only 35 cents post paid. Three copies for $1.00. Mailed in envelope and protector, with privilege of returning if not absolutely satisfactory. ORDER AT ONCE.

Every person sending us $1.75, with one new subscriber for THE UNION SIGNAL before December 23d, 1884, will upon demand, receive this beautiful Christmast memento FREE.

Miscellaneous Selections.

JUDGE HAYES' DECISION REVERSED.

A writer from Chicago to the Presbyterian says: You all remember that remarkable decision of Judge Hayes, of the rive-district embracing the counties of Muscatine, Scott and Clinton, Iowa, which seemed designed to render it impossible to convict a liquor-seller under the new prohibitory liquor law of Iowa, and to render that law entirely inoperative. Justices of the peace had no jurisdiction over cases arising under that law, because, said Judge Hayes, the law limits their jurisdiction to cases involving $100, and the fine under the prohibitory law, $100 and the costs (which are part of the penalty), amount to more than that sum. The zealous judge went farther. He decided that the buyer of liquor was equally guilty with the seller, and therefore could not be a witness against the latter. The supreme court of Iowa has knocked this decision into smithereens by deciding that costs are no part of the penalty; justices have ample jurisdiction; the buyer is a competent witness against the seller. We can score half a dozen for the Iowa prohibitionists. The field is now clear for very efficient action, and such action is sure to come.

DEAR children, listen while I tell you something which deeply concerns your welfare. The subject is the shape of your bodies. God knew the best shape. He created us upright, in His own image. None of the inferior animals walk upright.

God fitted the great vital organs in your bodies to an erect spine. Do your shoulders ever stoop forward? If they do, so do the lungs, heart, liver and stomach fall down out of their natural places. Of course, they can't do their work well. To show you how this is, I will tell you that when you bend forward you can only take about half as much air into the lungs as you can when you stand up straight. As I have said, God has so arranged the great organs in the body that they can't do their duty well except when the body is straight. Oh, how it distresses me to see the dear children, whom I love so much, bending over their school desks, and walking with their head and shoulders drooping! If you would have a strong spine and vigorous lungs, heart, liver, and stomach, you must now, while you are young, learn to walk erect.

If a boy were about to leave this country for Japan, never to return, and were to come to me and ask for rules to preserve his health, I should say: I am glad to see you, and will give you four rules, which carefully observed, will be pretty sure to preserve your health. He might say to me: Four are a good many; I fear I may forget some of them, give me one, the most important one, and I promise not to forget it. I should reply: Well, my dear boy, if I can give you but one, it is this:

Keep yourself straight; that is, sit up straight, walk straight, and when in bed, at night, don't put two or three pillows under your head, as though intent on watching your toes all night; and I believe that in this I should give the most important rule which can be given for the preservation of health and long life.

My dear children, don't forget it.—Dio Lewis.

THE importance of the liquor traffic in Paris may be judged from the fact that more than £2,500,000 is annually raised there by octroi duties on alcoholic drinks alone, and the consumption per head of population is as much as forty-five gallons of wine, a gallon and a half of spirits, and three gallons of beer. That the consumer, in Paris at least, has much to put up with in bad wine appears from the municipal laboratory report. Taking the month of June last, 552 specimens of wine were officially tested; only 113 were good, 39 were bitter or acid, 53 had an unpleasant taste, 126 were plastered, 132 had water added, and, lastly, 86 had various mixtures added to them.

OF the 167 towns in Connecticut seventy-six are now under a license vote, and ninety-one under no license.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT
VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 50. CHICAGO, DECEMBER 25, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

SENATOR BLAIR'S bill for the appointment of a commission to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, passed the senate on Tuesday. The vote was a party one, but there is some doubt whether it will be made so in the house.

THE slaughter of the innocents goes on in a fashion that shames this Christian land. St. Bartholomew's massacre was the result of religious intolerance. The massacres of to-day are the outcome of religious indifference. In West Virginia last week, a drunken boy of twelve years, shot his cousin, a little girl of seven. The father of the boy is a vicious, dangerous drunkard, and these three lived together in brutal fashion, all of them intoxicated, it is said, half the time. O Christian America, land bedewed with blood and tears, when will you shake off the chains of the worst slavery that ever cursed humanity, and give every child the right to be free-born.

AMONG the harbingers of a brighter day is the stand taken by the Catholic clergy on the temperance question. Notable meetings were held recently in Baltimore, under the auspices of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, during the session of the Plenary Council. They were largely attended, and addressed by churchmen of the highest rank. At the one held in Ford's Opera House, Vicar-General McColgan presided, and earnest speeches were made by Bishop Ireland, "the Father Mathew of the west," Arch Bishop Elder, Bishop Keane and Bishop Spalding; and on two other occasions Rev. Father Cleary gave telling addresses, in one of which he declared the approval of the Holy See of these efforts and societies, and appealed to the people in the name of the church to make temperance "a universal church work," and urged upon them total abstinence as the "only remedy" for present evils.

How many, we wonder, would be exceedingly surprised to find themselves included in the "Book of Snobs," if the record were opened to the gaze of the world! People who think themselves sincere, and strong in their good intentions, but who are utterly unable to resist "bowing the knee to Baal," in the form of riches, and the transient glory of high position, political and otherwise. It modulates the tones of the lady in meeting her acquaintances at the station or on the train; it graduates the warmth of address in the amenities of social life, and extends in business to establishments "we wot of," pervaded by this spirit, where the clerk, "clothed in a little brief authority," deals out courtesy according to the known money standing of the customer. It is delightful to go into other places, and come into contact with other people,"—"truly" places and people,—who show forth courtesy on that blessed Christmas plane of "peace on earth, good will to men." Such characteristics of life and manner stand out in bold relief in rushing holiday times.

A SADLY truthful letter recently appeared in one of our daily papers, rebuking the selfish and mercenary phase of Christmas "exchange and barter." Such perversions of the sacred meaning of the time are, we trust, not common.

Two beautiful things have come to us in regard to Christmas giving. One, of a woman ardently beloved by a host of friends, who has concentrated almost the whole of her thought and liberality in behalf of the poor,—filling two large boxes, and sending these away for distribution by wise and trusted agencies.

The other, that of a lovely woman taken suddenly ill, and unable to attend personally to the purchasing of her holiday gifts, grieving over none so much as the possible failure to secure appropriate things for two valued servants. "That must be seen to," she said, "if others are neglected, because they have so few to remember them."

Is not this the charity that "is kind"?

THE UNION SIGNAL called attention some weeks ago to the shocking murder of two sisters by the drunken husband of one of them, in Georgia, just before the presidential election. The Atlanta Constitution prints a letter of a surviving sister to the murderer in his prison cell which is one of the most thrilling appeals that the wide range of temperance literature affords. The unmarried sister was dressed in her bridal robes for her sister's inspection when the whisky crazed man rushed into the room to kill them both. This picture is reproduced with a detail that must bring tortures to the guilty man, and the story of the double burial at the once happy mountain home of all the sisters, is pathetic to the verge of agony. Her last appeal to the unhappy murderer is this: "Search the word of God, counsel with your ministers, pray fervently, continually; forget the affairs of this world, know only God and your conscience. Make peace with them here, then I and all of us can the better bear the burden of grief your hand has laid upon us.

Furnishing yourself with writing material, give your life with all its evils to the world, speak a warning voice from your prison walls. Yes, a voice so loud and strong that all in the broad road may hear. God pity and save you."

This deadly work still goes on. Through the chimes of Christmas bells, one may hear the shrieks of agony, and the wails of remorse. How long, O Lord, how long.

THE streets were full of hurrying people. The night before Christmas comes but once a year, and everybody had his arms full and his heart full too, doubtless. One man with especially big bundles ran over the crossing just behind one wagon heavily loaded and in front of another. He tried to dodge the long iron bars that projected over the wagon-bed, and in doing so knocked a man coming just behind him, right under the feet of the on-coming horses. A burly policeman seized the horses and rescued the fallen, but gave the entire benefit of his vigorous English to the man of bundles and boxes who was waiting, honorably anxious, to see that no harm was done. Laying hold of his shoulder in the roughly official way policemen have, he said among other things not quite quotable, "Next time mind, and look out for the man that's behind ye."

Aye, look out today, good people all, for the man that's behind you! Look out for those who are following you, imitating your example. Look out for those who have not reached your stage of happiness and advantage. Look out for the "weak brother" and "Christ's little ones."

DR. LYMAN ABBOTT, of The Christian Union, seems strangely out of harmony with the science of the nineteenth century. He discards the good old-fashioned term, "total abstinence", as a misnomer, and desires us to adopt in its stead "general abstinence". Under this wide definition he counsels special abstinence from those teachings of the scientists which would lead us to use alcohol as the American Medical Association says it ought to be used when used at all, viz: "with the same caution that other poisons are used in prescription." In opposition to such instruction, Dr. Abbott recommends placing "the wine bottle on the medicine shelf, to be used in cases of illness and then only with caution." Who is to be the prescriber? A skilled physician who apprehends the nature of the poison, or the invalid who finds that alcoholic wine stills the cry of pain, and so concludes that the occasion of pain is removed? If the wine bottle is kept constantly on the medicine shelf, is it not a very convenient resort, too, in fancied illness? Would any sensible person keep strychnine or arsenic on the medicine shelf to be so self-prescribed? Would there not be a hundred considerations of awful possibility overpowering the small utility of convenience and ease? Let us get our opinions righted up, and kept plumb with scientific advice.

MY CHRISTMAS KINGDOM.

M. B. W.

A Christmas sky, a Christmas star,
Wise men journeying from afar,
A cradled babe and gifts of myrrh,
A hush of worlds, all heaven astir,
What does it mean to you today?
Has the story told you all it may?

The Christmas sky is in my heart,
The star beams play a wondrous part,
Life's dull, dark manger radiates
A new born light that ne'er abates;
The world's loud clamor hushed and still,
Heaven sends its message—"As God will."

But peaceful heart, are you so sure
These Christmas joys will long endure?
In Bethlehem's star-lit manger lies
The promise of Christ's sacrifice.
And on the radiant Christ-child's brow,
The cross has cast its shadow now.

Oh, doubting one, no joys so great
On lowly cradled Christ-child wait,
As when the soul's full ministry
On some high peak of Calvary
Is wrought; when from eternal calm
Swells full and strong, the victor's psalm.

A CHRISTMAS ANGEL.

EDITH M. DAUGLISH.

Poor old Joshua! He had lived to see a great many Christmas Days, and certainly had never, so far, found anything the least angelic about them. He was very solitary and very surly, and, worst of all, he was blind. His only companion was his faithful terrier, Jack, who ld him about and took care of him, with a sagacity that as almost human.

Joshua Ray had been blind almost ever since he could member. He had that wonderful power of touch and aring granted to most persons deprived of sight, so that he was able to attend to his little household duties as far as he cared to do so.

A grand-daughter occasionally came to look after him, but his surly temper and general crabbedness kept most people away. He was rather shunned than courted by his immediate neighbors. He worked at basket-making, and thus kept himself. A miserable existence it seemed, without light, either for mind or body, and no hope for the future or satisfaction in the past. Poor old Joshua!

One morning in December, when a heavy fog lay over London, Joshua sat in his miserable, dark room trying to finish off a basket with his numb fingers. He had a handful of fire in the grate, but it was too small to be of much use, and he sat there almost too cold and feeble to be conscious of what he was about. Suddenly his senses were quickened by an unwonted sound. It was the song of a bird, a short, liquid trill, as free and joyous as though the singer were on a budding branch and not in a cage in a London fog. The sound ceased, but Joshua was now thoroughly awake and hungering for the music once more. He had the intense love of the blind for all musical sounds, and the longing, common to all humanity, for something harmonious to relieve the sordid weariness of life. Again the bird sang, bringing such a rush of memories to Joshua's heart that he was fain to stand up and try to collect his thoughts. It was years since he had heard a bird's song; years since he had felt the country air on his cheek, or held a rose in his hand. All those sweet and purifying influences had been denied him since he grew to be a man. He had become a drunkard and a swearer, and his heart was hard as a stone.

But now the sound of that bird's song seemed to wake him to better things, and he began to wonder who owned the little warbler, and how long he should be able to enjoy its music. But the sounds soon ceased, even the bird seemed overcome by the gloom and the fog, and relapsed into silence. Meanwhile a conversation was going on in a room overhead, of which Joshua was the subject. A greater contrast between his wretched den and the apartment in question could hardly be imagined.

To begin with, it was tenanted by a little, brisk, old woman, as neat and clean as a new pin, and with a sweet countrified air about her kind, wrinkled face that was very refreshing in the midst of a London winter. She had not long been an inhabitant of Prince's Court, so she was unknown to the bulk of her neighbors. Indeed, she seemed as much out of place among them as a rosebush in a turnip field. Still here she was, and as no one could be in her company long without being the better for it, perhaps better days were to dawn for Prince's Court.

An "old inhabitant," Mrs. Smith by name, was having a gossip with the new comer, and putting her into possession of various facts concerning her neighbors.

"Well, that blind man that you ask after, Mrs. Rutherford, is one as no one can abide. A nasty, cross-grained, mean old fellow, as blind as a bat, and such a swearer! He drove the Bible-reader away with an oath the last time he called." Mrs. Smith did not say that she had likewise dismissed the Bible-reader on the same day, in a manner that could hardly be called polite. That was a matter of no account to anyone she thought, while Joshua's sins, were, of course, common property.

"Dear! dear!" said Mrs. Rutherford, a look of deep pity coming over her gentle old face. "Poor man! blind, too! I cannot bear to think of it. Does no one go in to do for him and make him comfortable?"

"No one would take the trouble to be sworn at by him and perhaps bitten by the dog. He's every bit as fierce as his master," replied Mrs. Smith.

"Perhaps a little kindness might win them both round," said Mrs. Rutherford, with a smile that lit up her face like sunshine. "It's wonderful what that can do. And you say he drinks, too! Ah! dear, dear, what a terrible story, old and blind, and in total darkness. Poor man!"

"If he lets you show kindness to him it's the first time, I can tell you," said Mrs. Smith. "Well, I must be off —How that bird of yours do sing, to be sure! It does one good in this fog."

"Ay, it does. We're both cheerful, linnet and I. We don't mind the fog, because we know the blessed sun is behind. Well, good morning, neighbor."

Mrs. Rutherford had come from her country home, where all her beloved dead lay buried, to be near the sole relation left to her, a little grand-daughter, who was in one of the charity schools of London. Although the wrench from her old life to one of her age and sorrows was severe, she felt it best to be near the young creature who belonged to her, and who could come and visit her on the rare holidays allowed. So the old woman packed up her favorite furniture and transplanted herself and a great deal of sweet country atmosphere, into the midst of a city court. She had a little annuity, and was employed on slop work at a large clothing establishment; so she was not in want, but had to be very thrifty to make both ends meet. Her room was like herself, bright as cleanliness could make it, the dingy walls re-papered by her own neat hands, the window cheerful with plants, the bed gay with patchwork, and the sweet song of the caged linnet adding a consecration of harmony to the whole. The darkness of the wintry days, and the smuts of the city atmosphere, if disagreeable to her country cleanliness, never discomposed Mrs. Rutherford's cheeriness. In her heart there was a light, for long ago the "Sun of Righteousness" had arisen there with healing in His wings, and under those wings she could trust and shine till called up into the everlasting brightness of God's presence.

* * * * * *

A day or two passed without the old man and the old woman meeting even on the stairs. But one morning, as Mrs. Rutherford was on her way out, she met the blind man in the doorway. Instantly she stopped, and said cheerily, "Good morning, neighbor. What a good dog you have there, so trusty he looks, to be sure!"

The pleasant voice aroused Joshua from his gloomy thoughts. He knew it to be quite strange, and as agreeable as it was new. He condescended to reply, a thing he seldom did when accosted by a stranger. Jack, too, forebore to growl, and after a searching investigation of Mrs. Rutherford's hand with his nose, actually wagged his tail.

"Ay," said Joshua, "he's a good beast enough. I can trust him. 'Taint many as you can say that of."

"Not of everybody," said Mrs. Rutherford, "but there's sure to be friends if you only look for them." She stopped, for she saw that Joshua no longer heard her. His face suddenly became intent and listening. A softened expression stole over it, making the hard features look for the moment almost noble. Wondering what could cause this sudden change in the blind man Mrs. Rutherford listened, too. "Ah! you can hear my bird," she said. "He's a sweet singer, isn't he? He cheers one up like."

"Your bird," said Joshua. "Ah." He ended with a long-drawn sigh of irrepressible longing, and Mrs. Rutherford at once saw a way of giving pleasure to her sad and lonely neighbor.

That afternoon she tapped gently at Joshua's door, and not heeding Jack's warning growl peeped inside. It was almost too dark for her to distinguish Joshua sitting there alone in the gloom. He started up on hearing the door open, and an unusual sound of fluttering came upon his ears. "I've come to ask you a favor, Mr. Ray," said Mrs. Rutherford. "While I'm out would you object to mind my linnet? I'm quite afraid of strange cats getting at him, as I leave my window open; and here I know he'll be safe."

Astonished at being asked to render a favor, where the obligation was all on his side, Joshua could only grunt an inarticulate assent; so the cage was placed on the table near the window, where a little light came in, and Joshua and the linnet were left together. At first, in his eager longing for a song, the blind man lingered near the cage, and so frightened the bird that it only hopped up and down in a discomposed manner. The gloom of the wretched room, too, quite overcame it for a while, and it continued perfectly silent. At last, however, Joshua ventured on a soft whistle, a sound which he hardly recognized from his own lips. The bird listened and replied with a chirp. Another whistle, and another reply, then, as if emboldened by these beginnings the linnet burst forth into a song of rejoicing loud and long. It sent Joshua into an ecstasy. The heavenly music touched chords of emotion long silent in his heart, and he wept.

A few days passed, and the linnet paid Joshua several more visits. He gradually grew more polite to its mistress, and even thanked her when she one day swept up his hearth, and secretly threw on a little of her own coal, as she saw the fire was nearly out. Then Mrs. Rutherford ventured a little further. "Wouldn't it make the time pass quicker if some one was to read to you now and then, Mr. Ray? You must get tired of your thoughts all day here."

"No, I don't want any reading. The Bible-reader wanted to read to me, but I sent him about his business. I don't believe in religion."

"If you don't believe in religion it's because you don't know our blessed Savior. He healed the blind, you know."

"Did he? Well, He has not healed me. I suppose I'm no concern of His. He don't know nothing about me, and would not care if He did."

"He cares for all of us; even if we don't care for Him. He knows all about you, and is only waiting to bring you out of darkness to light, till you are willing to go."

"Willing, it's willing enough I'd be, if I only thought it was true. There is a precious deal of darkness here. But no, I don't believe in religion."

Mrs. Rutherford said no more that day, but her words sank down into Joshua's heart like seeds into the dark earth, and soon they began to show signs of life. Yet that very evening he drank gin till he was so tipsy that Jack sat by him till morning, wondering if he were dead. That was Joshua's own way of trying to win the light.

He felt naturally very wretched the following day—more degraded than ever before. Heavy snow and slush lay on the streets; he was afraid to totter out, and no food was in his cupboard. Jack snuffed about and whined discontentedly, till seeing his master light a pipe, he seemed more at ease, and lay down at his feet to keep them warm. About two o'clock a very gentle tap came to the door, so gentle that Jack was the only one who heard it. He started up prepared to bark, when he saw a sight that even the dog could not resent, and he was quiet. A little girl about seven years old, dressed in the quaint garb of a charity school, peeped in at the door. Her bright, childish face was surmounted by a stiff, white cap, under which her sweet, earnest eyes looked forth with becoming innocence. She seemed half afraid of the rough terrier and the dark, miserable room, and it was a moment before she spoke. "Please sir, grannie says, will you be so kind as to mind the bird again this afternoon? And her respects, and will you kindly accept these hot potatoes? We've too many to-day."

Jack's mind was quite made up already about the potatoes, for he was giving approving sniffs to the plate the little maiden held. If he had not been too much of a gentleman he would have helped himself, for he was as hungry as his master.

The blind man turned his sightless eyes towards the musical voice. He answered gently, "Is Mrs. Rutherford your grannie?"

"Yes sir, and I've come to spend my half holiday with her. Please have the potatoes, they're roasted and good."

"Ay, I'll have them, and thank you, too," said Joshua, softened by the entreaty. The child evidently had expected him to refuse her gift; "and I'll gladly mind the linnet. I s'pose grannie can spare the bird now she's got you?"

"Oh! yes," laughed the child, "she says I'm her bird; and we like you to have him to sing to you. You must be very cold and lonely down here in the dark."

"Dark, yes, that's just what it is. I wonder you weren't afraid to come in all by yourself."

"Oh! no, I wasn't afraid—at least, not much. Grannie told me you were blind, and I was so very sorry."

Something seemed to choke Joshua. This childish sympathy was too much for him. He felt as if the child were an angel of light come to solace him. He wanted to keep her longer.

"What is your name?" he inquired.

"Lily; and I'm just seven years old. I am at St. Bede's school, and I am learning to be a servant. May I sweep up your hearth? I know how." Hardly waiting for a reply, the child speedily found a brush and made the hearth neat. Then she put the plate of potatoes down before the fire, while she looked about for a fresh plate to put before Joshua. She found one, but it wanted washing. No matter; the neat-handed little fairy managed this, too, much to Joshua's astonishment, who was too delighted at this gentle ministration to wish to interfere. "I must go now," she said, wistfully looking around again on the disordered room; "but I'm going to stay till the evening, so I'll come and see you again if you'll let me, and I'm coming to spend Christmas day with grannie—won't that be nice?"

"Ay, it will for you and her. I don't know nothing about Christmas, and care less. Good-bye."

This seemed very shocking to Lily, but a bright thought struck her, and when she went back to Joshua with the bird, she had determined on her plan of action.

She found the room so dark that it was hardly likely that Joshua would be enlivened by the linnet's song that day, so he was the more ready to listen to Lily's talk, seeing his bird visitor seemed inclined to silence.

"Did you like your potatoes?" inquired Lily, seating herself on an overturned basket.

"Yes, they was good," said Joshua. "What made you bring 'em?"

"Oh! grannie thought you would like some; as it was so cold and snowy she did not think you could go out. Did your dog have any?"

"Jack? Oh, yes. He and I always go shares, don't we, Jack?"

Jack's eyes sparkled in the gloom, and he wagged his tail at his master's question, doubtless in affectionate remembrance of the potatoes.

"Shan't you do anything nice on Christmas day?" next inquired Lily as a means of introducing her subject.

"Nice! No, child; nothing o' that sort comes in my way. I have not had a Christmas dinner, not for years and years."

"Oh!" exclaimed Lily with wide open eyes, "how very sad!"

"Sad; why? I don't think anything o' Christmas I tell you. There's a precious lot o' rubbish talked about it."

"But it's Jesus Christ's birthday," said Lily simply. "We must keep it if we love Him." Then in a lower and sadder tone she added, "Don't you love Him?"

The appeal was so gentle that Joshua could not answer roughly. He cleared his throat and hesitated.

"I don't know Him," at length he said. "How can I love Him?"

"Shall I say my Christmas hymn to you?" asked Lily eagerly. "It tells how He came on Christmas night." Then without waiting for more Lily began—

"Once in Royal David's city
Stood a lowly cattle shed,
Where a mother laid her baby,
With a manger for His bed.
Mary was that mother mild,
Jesus Christ her little child."

She repeated the lovely, simple lines with a child's musical pathos, and they sounded even sweeter to old Joshua than the song of the linnet had done. For in the midst of his soul darkness he began to see a glimmer of light, a tiny ray like one from a newly risen star. Even on his gloom the first faint rays were beginning to arise, which in time would develop into the perfect day.

When Lily ended her hymn, he begged her to say it again; and after the second repetition he said softly, "And that is why you keep Christmas. Well, I never thought of that before; but very like it ain't for such as me."

"Oh! yes, it is," said Lily earnestly, "because one of my texts says so, 'The people that walked in darkness have seen a great Light; and they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the Light shined.' You walk in darkness, don't you?" said Lily, simply, "so you see it must be for you."

"Darkness! yes, so I have, and so I do," said Joshua, "but may be God is going to help me out of it."

"I am sure He will if you ask Him," said Lily, confidently. "How I wish you could come to church with us on Christmas Day, it's so lovely; all green wreaths, and the hymns are so happy, too; I wish you'd come."

"How could I? I've no clothes," said Joshua, a strange longing coming over him to go once more in his old age to the house of God.

"I don't think you'd be too shabby to go to grannie's church," said Lily; "no one wears fine clothes there; grannie would take you."

"Ah! well, I'll think about it. Little Miss, would you give me a kiss before you go?" It was asked with a humility that was lost on Lily, but she readily complied, and gave the poor old blind man a childish kiss that seemed the promise of a blessing.

Christmas Day arrived and for the first time for many, many years Joshua was going out to dinner! He had actually accepted Mrs. Rutherford's invitation to dine with her and Lily. More than that, he was to go first to church, and that event was even greater than the other. Mrs. Rutherford was to lead the old man; but as Jack could never be separated from his master, he was to go too, and lie in a quiet corner, where he would be unobserved. The verger arranged this with Mrs. Rutherford beforehand. Lily had to attend church with her school, so she would join her grandmother after service. Her face beamed with joy as she saw her come in, leading old Joshua, who, cleaned up for the occasion, looked no unworthy companion to Mrs. Rutherford's trim neatness. Jack behaved to perfection, only giving one short yelp of astonishment when organ and choir burst forth in the Christmas hymn. Joshua sat where he was placed, rising sometimes, but more often sitting still in rapt attention. As the grand words of the first lesson fell on his ears with its record of dimness, and the triumph of light, his face lit up with an expression that made Mrs. Rutherford think of the words, "At evening time it shall be light." The sermon was short and plain, just suitable to one so ignorant as Joshua was, telling in simple words the story of Bethlehem and Nazareth, and the sacrifice on Calvary. It was all new and wonderful, and Joshua felt like one dazzled with sudden light after being long used to gloom.

The rest of the day was as happy as the beginning. The sun shone on the little dinner table, and brightened the odd trio sitting there—the sweet old Christian woman, her fair little grandchild, and the worn out blind man. Jack, too, sat by his master in evident content, though he probably thought that the world was a very strange place, where you were quite unprepared for what might happen next. The linnet sang his happiest carol, and Lily was so merry that she kept her grandmother continually laughing. Even Joshua at last became infected with their cheerfulness and the good food, and actually laughed out more than once.

When dinner was over Lily helped to clear it away, and then with great delight presented her Christmas gifts—a rosy apple to grannie, and an orange to Joshua, both of which had been given her at the school Christmas-tree the night before. This little attention almost overcame Joshua, for he had never had a present that he could remember in all his life before, and Lily's thoughtful love touched his already softened heart so that the tears flowed. This distressed Lily, and to comfort her blind man she got on his knee and laid her cheek against his. They sat so in silence for a minute or two, and then Joshua set her down gently, saying to Mrs. Rutherford, "I understand now what an angel is like, I never knew before."

Mrs. Rutherford smiled, but her eyes were wet. "Ah!" she said, "God sends us angels when we least expect them, and even sometimes when our eyes are too dim to see them; but I'm sure of this much, 'The Lord is mindful of His own,' and 'He is not slack concerning His promise,' for He told us long, long ago, 'At evening time it shall be light.'"

* * * * * *

So it was that the Christmas blessing came to old Joshua; the old, beautiful story of Him who was "meek and lowly in heart," who came to dwell among us that first Christmas-tide so long ago. Let us all remember that as it was then, so it is now:—

"Still to the lowly soul
He doth Himself impart,
And for His cradle and His throne
Chooseth the pure in heart."

PAY TEN CENTS AND SAVE THIRTY DOLLARS.

MRS. M. M. CLARDY.

We would call the attention of Christian patriots to the grand financial reform which the Prohibitionists propose to accomplish. We aim to save, each year, for our entire country, nine hundred millions of dollars, now gathered up by the liquor dealers, and seven hundred millions more paid by sober citizens in the increased taxation consequent upon the traffic, making in all, the sum of sixteen hundred millions of dollars, or about thirty dollars for each man, woman, and child in our country. Each congressional district contains 151,000 people, which multiplied by thirty dollars, gives $4,530,000 per year as its loss in money.

This four and one half millions carried off by liquor dealers and the increased expenses of government, is a loss, which must be borne by farmers, mechanics, miners, manufacturers, merchants, and all other honorable workingmen. Thus far, a majority of them have voted for their own loss, and the saloon-keeper's gain. As the drunkard barters away the children's bread for his drink, so the slaves of political leaders have bartered away their own financial prosperity to keep in office the "Party" that kissed them and enslaved them.

Honest Democrats, honest Republicans, will you again vote the yoke of this cruel traffic upon yourselves, your wives and your children? "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." Shall He behold you casting your ballot for parties which license the robbery and murder of our people?

Citizen kings, Soldiers of the Cross, break off your shackles! Be free! Use your best efforts to tear away the "refuge of lies," behind which the liquor traffic hides its hideous purposes. With voice and pen, with labor and money aid the cause of Prohibition.

Since each congressional district loses $4,530,000, or $30. per capita each year, why should you not, for your own interest, expend ten cents per capita each year to save the thirty dollars. This would produce a fund in each district of $15,100 to educate the people to vote for prohibition. You could from this sum pay fairly for the temperance column in the county newspaper, you could prosecute violations of the liquor laws, hold conventions, pay lecturers, and distribute literature. In three years of energetic training of public sentiment, the victory will be well nigh won, and virtue and prosperity be permanently secured. Let each neighborhood, town and city resolve that it will pay ten cents per year to save thirty dollars, and then appoint a judicious committee of ladies and gentlemen to manage it for the judicious education of public sentiment on the temperance question.

RECONNOITERING IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Dear Union Signal:—I have many shortcomings to confess in regard to writing of my work on the Pacific coast. Notes were made of every place visited in California, Oregon, Washington Territory and Nevada. How inadeqate the reports for California drawn off and forwarded, the W. C. T. U., workers in California know very well. To the workers in the remaining states I can only say, the report is commenced, it lies unfinished in my writing case; and now I am discouraged from finishing and sending, it would be so ancient before it reached their eyes, through these columns.

No nobler women are to be found anywhere than those in the W. C. T. U. work in these commonwealths.

Their success under great difficulties has been very marked, and a patient continuance in the ways they have marked out for themselves will bring the results aimed at, total abstaining communities and prohibitory laws.

The visit to this Island kingdom, so long talked of, was finally arranged for this month, and I embarked at San Francisco, on the steamer Alameda, November 15. Many people have described their feelings on leaving native land for the first time and commencing a long sea voyage, but I had none; I was in some sort benumbed, I think. I was restrained from looking backward or forward during the whole voyage. I felt that the Lord was going with me, that He would prepare the way, and lead me onward with the sun, or turn me back, as he had already determined, and it was sweetly comfortable to know that everything is arranged although I know not what the course is to be.

Neptune and I seem to have nearly made up the little differences we had in my coastwise trips, so while not on perfectly good terms with him, I was able to appear at the table every meal; still I cannot boast of very extensive depredations upon the larder during the passage.

One day only was perfect, during the week's sail. On Wednesday the water was like glass; the light breeze made by our own motion was a joy, and sea and sun smiled at each other all day like two infants in their mother's arms. Two days and nights a swell, caused, as the captain said, by the meeting of waves raised by one storm away at the northwest, and another at the southwest, how far off he did not know, kept the steamer rolling to such an extent that we were obliged to have our chairs lashed to the side in order to keep anywhere. Flying fish were frequently seen, and one large fleet of the tiny creatures called Portuguese-men-of-war. Their sails look like gauzy bubbles on the water.

Saturday morning, November 22, we saw land, the island of Molokai, away at the southwest. Soon after Makapuu Point and Koko Head were seen in the northwest, connected by a shore line running from northeast to southwest. We passed the latter headland, leaving it at the north, also Diamond Head, crowned by the rocky rim of the crater of its extinct volcano, and entered the bay of Honolulu, which faces to the southwest. Oahu, upon which Honolulu is situated, is the third island in size of this group, containing 600 square miles, and its highest point reaching an elevation of 4,000 feet.

Two boats rowed by natives came off, bringing the pilot, and what was of much greater importance to me, Mr. Atherton, a member of the temperance committee. Dr. and Mrs. Whitney, Rev. Dr. Hyde, and Rev. J. A. Cruzan, came on board the steamer as soon as it was made fast, and when we went ashore many others greeted me at my first step upon the wharf. And it was home greeting, as warm and home like as at any city in America. God bless them every one!

Mrs. Dr. Whitney took me to her beautiful home, two miles out from the city. What delight I experienced in that drive I cannot express. Beautiful, perfect June day it was, mother earth outbursting with verdure and bloom. Tamarind, acacia, carob, palms of many varieties, date, cocoa, fan and as its name implies, sovereign of all, the royal palm. The latter tree unites in itself so many fine elements, strength, symmetry, lightness, grace, delicacy, perfection and gloss of surface, that it well deserves its name. The lantana, which we cultivate with such care, is a pest, banished to roadsides and standing in great masses of bloom as high as our lilacs in New England.

At evening of this day, I spoke in the Y. M. C. A. hall, a beautiful room, full to overflowing. The following day, at my request, the Sunday schools of the two Congregational churches were opened to me, and at evening I spoke at a union meeting of the two Congregational churches in Fort Street church, Rev. Mr. Lernzan, formerly of Portland, Oregon, and still earlier of East Weymouth, Mass., pastor. The Bethel church, under the leadership of its recently chosen pastor, Rev. Mr. Oggel, takes an equally earnest part with the Fort Street church in this bit of temperance work, as well as all other good things. The two churches above named are American, and together with the English church, are the only ones in the city where English is used. The church was overfull, Sabbath evening. No American city could give a speaker a better audience than this. Fancy speaking in the presence of father and Mrs. Damon, of Dr. Lowell Smith and Mrs. Smith, Dr. Dwight Baldwin, and other missionaries of the past; Rev. Dr. Hyde and Mrs. Hyde, now having charge of the Hawaiian Theological Institute; Rev. Hiram Bingham and wife, of the Micronesian mission; Rev. Mr. Bishop, son of the missionary, and well known for his scientific attainments and writings; Chief Justice Judd and others holding office under the government. I looked over the hundreds of faces, to the remotest corners, seeing the strongest indications of the best Christian culture, thanked God and took courage to speak on the theme "God in Government," from the sentence, "And the government shall be upon His shoulders."

On Monday, I spoke in the morning in a collegiate school, Punahou, of the grade of our Boston high schools, gave an address to the ladies on "Woman's Work in the Temperance Cause," and a public address in the evening. Tuesday evening, I spoke on prohibition, directing effort to the two points concerning which many questions had been asked me, "Does Prohibition prohibit?" and "Why has the Prohibition party been formed?" Americans here take a very timely interest in the political issues in their native land. An election is held, and they have a saying, "As goes Honolulu so goes the Union." This year the election went four to one for Blaine. Four men voted for St. John. From what has been said to me, were it to be done over again, I think there would be a much larger vote for the Prohibition party.

Wednesday afternoon, a W. C. T. U. was formed with thirty-three members, and the following list of officers: President, Mrs. Dr. Whitney; vice presidents, Mrs. Rev. Oggel, Mrs. Rev. Cruzan, Mrs. Rev. McIntosh; recording secretary, Mrs. Jay Green; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Jordan; treasurer, Mrs. Dr. Hyde. Other unions will soon be formed, doubtless, on other islands, and at no distant date, we shall find national, state and local unions bound together as with us, in the three-fold cord that cannot be broken. Mrs. Whitney is, by virtue of her office and such sanction as my instructions from Miss Willard allow me to confer, vice president of the world's W. C. T. U. which we hope soon to see belting the globe. I never come away from a meeting where a W. C. T. U. has been formed, that every fiber of my being does not thrill with praise to God for the good things that He has done.

Wednesday evening, I spoke to the people again, and then came Thanksgiving, and the happiness of sitting down in the full house, to listen and worship. Rev. Mr. Oggel, of the Bethel, preached, Father Damon, Dr. Hyde, and Rev. Mr. Cruzan, assisted in the service, an excellent choir sang, and also lead the congregation in three hymns, the last being, "My country 'tis of thee." It was given with great power and still I noticed many eyes moisten as the lines rolled up. Oh, that every American in this city would stand for all right things! But alas! some now living here are wielding all the influence they have against the religion and morality taught by the missionaries and the churches. To-night I speak again, completing one week's work since landing. The apparent necessity of finishing during the first four days of the week, what I had to do here, before Mrs. Hampson, the worldwide known English evangelist, should begin her mission, crowded much into these days. But on Mrs. H.'s arrival from Australia, it was apparent that she must have quite extended rest, and her mission was postponed till January.

I am to work on next week in this city, then make a tour of the islands, returning close on to Christmas. During this circuit I hope to see the great volcano Kilanea, but I may be disappointed as I was in regard to Niagara falls, Mammoth cave and Yosemite valley.

Sunday evening next, I am to speak at a union meeting of native churches, through an interpreter. I tremble, pray and trust the Lord will guide me.

Will every dear sister in the W. C. T. U. of America, pray for the success of the work entrusted to me, and for the safety of my dear daughters during this very prolonged separation. Your sister.

Mary Clement Leavitt.

A RIGHTEOUS ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Dear Union Signal.—The reader of newspapers has to wade through so much slander and abuse in these days, directed toward ex-Gov. St. John, that the following manly acknowledgment, from the leading journal of the Episcopal church, will seem like an oasis in the desert to every thoughtful mind, thoroughly as our W. C. T. U. women must differ from the views of prohibition herein expressed. This paragraph is from The American Literary Churchman:

The Prohibition candidate who was not elected for the presidency, and who has in several places been burnt in effigy by a mob of savages, is a gentleman of unblemished honor and most unselfish patriotism. He sought high office not for any personal gain, but that he might be able, by the use of its legitimate powers and influence, to hasten what he believes to be a great national and social reformation; to diminish crime, and poverty, and ignorance; and to elevate the moral tone of society. All honor, we say, to Governor St. John. We entirely reject his theories. We believe that prohibition would do no good, and would do an altogether incalculable amount of harm. But himself we regard with the utmost reverence and esteem, both for his virtues and his abilities, and for a most chivalrous loyalty to a cause which once seemed desperate, and which can only, even now, be regarded as requiring from a man of his eminence an almost complete self-abnegation, a life-time of thankless toil, and promising to him rather the wistful gaze of Moses than the brilliant victories of Joshua.

With this I send Gov. St. John's letter denying the absurd charge that he was a purchasable article in the recent campaign. It is from the last New York Witness:

Olathe, Kansas, Nov. 21.

My Dear Friend: With a hundred unanswered letters before me, I have only time say, in reply to yours of the 18th inst., that the statement of the Philadelphia News (or any other paper, or any individual) that I ever offered to sell myself or the Prohibition party for ten thousand dollars, or any other sum, pledge or promise, is simply on of the many base and malicious lies of which the Republican party has been exceedingly prolific during and since the close of the late campaign. I made the fight for prohibition because I believed, and still believe, it to be right, and the Republicans may burn me in effigy, and threaten personal violence, and continue to publish infamous falsehoods about me, and heap upon me villification and abuse, but they shall never swerve me one jot or tittle from my determination to press on the warfare against the liquor traffic and all parties or individuals that defend or offer an apology for it. And in this struggle we should ever look to God, and not to the politicians of the land for guidance. I did not want the nomination of the Pittsburg or any other convention. I accepted simply because I felt that under the circumstances it was my duty to do so, and I have no apologies to make about it. I had a great deal rather have gone down as I did, fighting for a principle, than to have won a victory through the friendship of the liquor traffic. Let us be earnest and aggressive in our work, never stopping to consider the results. God will take care of that. Very truly your friend.

J. P. ST. JOHN.

Not a particle of proof is offered that the Prohibition candidate was thus guilty, and his simple word will offset any amount of paragraphs in the Philadelphia Press or other partisan journals reiterating that "he would have sold out for ten thousand dollars." Meanwhile, a St Louis "organ" says the Democrats paid him thirty thousand dollars to continue in the race, so that he certainly would not have set a price so moderate upon his perfidy as Republicans have named! How dreary and pitiful is the effort to traduce sincere and earnest people who, up to the time they felt called upon to differ from the majority of those about them, were considered worthy of esteem and confidence. So far as I can learn, the thought of Prohibitionists is this. "None of these things move me, nor even do they disturb, afflict or disconcert me. I appeal from the verdict of the hour, in its passion, to the verdict of its calm." Yours with steadfast courage.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

HOLIDAY BEAUTY AND JOY FOR TEMPERANCE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Temperance brings the choicest gifts in the line of physical beauty, and the joy of health and mental and spiritual loveliness follow in its wake. And though it is the fashion of the world to give the wine glass the place of honor on all festive occasions, yet there is no other such marplot of holiday joy as this same wine glass and its congeners. All the graces have their beauties heightened when they consort with temperance, and so it becomes us in our festivals of grace and joy and beauty to give temperance the place of honor.

Even among our gifts we may inquire how to favor temperance. And as the theme is comparatively new, some hints may be acceptable. First of all having secured THE UNION SIGNAL, through which we get so many good things, we turn to our own children. It will help them to love and admire temperance if they see us give it the place of honor among our holiday gifts. We ought to secure at least one good wide awake book that all would read, such as "Competitive Workmen," by Faye Huntingdon ($1). "Mabel's Work," by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry ($1.50). Miss Kimball's Holly Sprays ($1.60), and that most excellent, but not so recent work, the "Best Fellow." I have myself been exceedingly interested in a new reprint, "Everyday Doings," ($1.25), by Helena Richardson; she handles all sorts of questions vigorously and especially the medical question. The way in which she settles its proper responsibility is refreshing. And with all her serious talk she keeps several love affairs progressing in various degrees of delight or anguish. I believe she is an M. D., and though perhaps not related to Dr. B. W. Richardson, she is sufficiently thorough to remind you of him. She often quotes him, too, and I half suspect she is the one referred to in his "Dialogues on Drink," where he says, "you should have my vote though it placed you in the president's chair of the College of Physicians." This last book is not half known or appreciated by many who would discourage the conventional use of wine. By the way, it should be called "Conversations" instead of "Dialogues," for it is wholly a social discussion of the various apologies for the use of wine, and the doctor himself is one of the company and contributes many telling facts. It is very suitable for young lady workers. For boys, get "Life Cruise of Capt. Bess Adams," or if they must have something thrilling, "How Could He Escape?" As to the thrilling, however, you will find a full supply of that in Dr. Story's Alcohol and Its Effects," (75 cts.), a book which will be as well thumbed if it lies on the table as any other good book you could provide, and it might be made a present to papa, or even to sister if she happen to be a teacher in the Temperance school.

Is it not time to recognize these faithful workers, often and patiently giving their time and their money for the privilege of imparting to your children information of priceless and life-long advantage? How they would prize a copy of Story's "Alcohol;" or better still for their own use, "Alcohol and Science" ($1.50), by Dr. Hargreaves. And if they have both these and you wish to give them something choice and rare, take the "Temperance Science Text Book" ($1.50), just issued by Dr. F. R. Lees, the ripe fruit of many years work in the line of temperance science, whom even Dr. Richardson considers his own pioneer and peer. I have imported ten copies and many an advanced worker will be glad to secure one.

But if you must give "something else besides books," then put in a temperance message on a beautiful chromo card, some of them handsome enough to be presents by themselves. These are some of the ways in which temperance can be given a place among your gifts; and with all your givings, please remember the Literature Department, 72 Bible House, New York City.

OUR SOUTHERN CORRESPONDENCE

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You will have heard before this of the work of our southern superintendent in Mississippi, Tennessee and Alabama, so there is no need to quote from my private letters for your benefit. I will give you instead some fair blossoms for remembrance, gathered from the local journals.

Mrs. Chapin, who goes to and fro so much alone, had the privilege for a brief space of the companionship of Mrs. Buell, and I give you the opinion of a greater correspondent than I, not to laud our workers, but as cause for thanksgiving that the work will prosper as the members of our great national household are becoming known to each other.

Says the Winona Times:

> The earnestness, yet quiet gentleness of Mrs. Buell, gave to her manner an irresistible charm of femininity, grace, self-possession and dignity.
> She impressed the audience in a peculiarly happy way, and the hearts of southern women awoke at her touch, and went out in response to this lovely northern sister, whose words of deep import carried conviction, and who, with one wave of her hand, one glance of her earnest eyes, dispersed much of the cloud of prejudice and distrust which so long stood between the women of the north and the south. "Of once sown seed who knoweth what the crop is?"

Mrs. Chapin's faithful work in Alabama has drawn from an eminent judge a letter of commendation, that is worthy of circulation as an encouragement to our brave women, whose strength is made perfect in weakness.

Pausing only for a night's rest in Charleston, Mrs. Chapin hastened to Columbia, South Carolina, where the people were on the eve of testing by vote, the "license" or "no license" question. In the crowded audience at the opera house to hear her lecture on "Prohibition," were a number of prominent members of the legislature. I trust the utterances of the Palmetto Yeoman, and Columbia Register may have been prophetic, and the eloquent and effective address have won the needed votes for no license legislation.

I close this letter, yet ask space for a sad record which may win from mothers who shall read, a prayer for a mother who weeps tonight, missing a cherished daughter, who was one of those rarely beautiful, unselfish characters that leave an undying memory. This young life, like a bright dream, was almost as brief.

She is doubtless remembered by our Anna Gordon, and Mrs. Chapin, as the pride, and leading spirit of the Lafayette Square Y. W. C. T. U.

A year ago, November 21, she went out from Grace church a bride with prospects all that her nearest and dearest could ask for earthly good. A year ago Thanksgiving morning, she came home from her bridal trip. On this Thanksgiving eve she went home to the beautiful land where no sickness comes. Rapid consumption claimed her, as it has many another bright and gifted one.

Her devotion to the union never faltered. She was one of the busiest in arranging bouquets for the celebration of the flower mission last summer. Her husband, a talented young lawyer, aided her in carrying out her plans for good.

A large circle of friends, for so many loved her, gathered on Saturday in her girlhood's home for the last tribute love could pay. A throng of grieving girls were there, and let me ask the dear girls all over the land, who are not in the W. C. T. U. work, to resolve, as did some of these, to give their influence to temperance, and emulate by their active work the pure and beautiful example of this dear young friend of mine, who will live in remembrance in perpetual youth and beauty. May God comfort her beloved ones, and may this sweet thought come with soothing to her stricken mother:

> Thou wilt never grow old,
> My beautiful lily. Thy leaves will unfold
> In a clime that is purer and brighter than earth.
> O, holy and fair! I rejoice thou art there,
> In that kingdom of light, with its cities of gold,
> Where the air thrills with angel hosannas, and where > Thou wilt never grow old, sweet, never grow old!

MORE NEW BOOKS.

ONE OR TWO; The Poems of Mrs. L. Virginia French and Mrs. Lide Merriwether, twin sisters of Virginia, one, now on the other shore, the other, our beloved co-worker as the president of the W. C. T. U. of Tennessee. The collection embraces very many beautiful poems, each so choice that one finds it difficult to choose between the work of these twin-souled sisters.

Still another volume by Mrs. Merriwether alone, is SOUNDINGS, a series of sketches, full of truth gained as the dedicatory page sets forth, by the casting of a "plummet line down into the deep heart of woman."

Half the sales on these books, published by Mrs. Merriwether herself, is offered by her to the W. C. T. U. treasury, in her love of the service.

THE CHILDREN'S BIBLE, by Miss Fanny L. Armstrong, published by Fowler & Wells Co., New York. This very complete collection of the Bible stories best adapted to children takes up many themes and characters in a novel way. It has many "touches of nature" that will appeal to "children of larger growth," even while keeping close to the hearts and understanding of the "least of these, Christ's brethren."

MR. STANDFAST'S JOURNEY TO HIS FATHER'S HOUSE, by Mrs. Julia McNair Wright, published by the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, Boston, is a new version of an old, old story—a new guidepost on the way of faith. It is a sweet and comforting itinerary of the travels of a steadfast soul to the end of his hope—the blessed activities of heaven.

A DREAM OF THE ADIRONDACKS, by Mrs. Helen Hinsdale Rich, published by G. P. Putman's Sons, New York. A poetical soul finds potent spell in the wierd depths of Adirondack forests, and the poem which gives the name to the little volume before us is an intense and beautiful expression of the love of nature and the high aspiration which feeds upon such a love. Other verses of the collection are as choice, however, as these, for instance this bit of tenderness.

> All that my Father has given to me
> Is mine in the might of unfailing trust,
> To have and to hold in eternal fee;
> If I hold to the bond, it is only just,
> Giving love for love, and I keep the tryst,
> With the absent ones at the Christmas tide,
> As I shall turn to the lips I kissed
> When I recross from the other side."

Side by side and simultaneously appear the "Manual of Arms" of the W. C. T. U. of the United States, and Canada. It is no misnomer certainly to call our PATHFINDER, by Mrs. E. G. Greene, of Vermont, and WHY AND HOW, by Mrs. Addie Chisholm, of Ontario, Canada, the drill-books of the organization that seeks to belt the globe with the beneficence of its sweet fellowship.

The PATHFINDER is emphatically a book for organization and work. Its nearly two hundred pages are almost entirely taken up with methods and suggestions. But a page or two is devoted to the history of the society. The object set before the workers is the making of history, and to this end are set forth in order the various lines of effort adopted by the society and the best manner of prosecuting each. The book might well be called WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT.

A somewhat different but no less valuable book is Mrs. Chisholm's, the president of the Ontario W. C. T. U. While the PATHFINDER is pre-eminently a book for the active worker, its Canadian compeer is one to place in the hands of everybody. It embodies the history of the organization, the argument for its existence, and the call to earnest effort in its behalf. This is the "Why." The "How" is not to be detailed as are the directions of the PATHFINDER, but the suggestions are comprehensive and wise. A very apt illustration of "How" to carry on W. C. T. U. meetings" is given under cover of a dream, which will probably influence quite as much toward improvement and right accomplishment as a direct "preachment."

CHRISTMAS.

RUDISILLE CULBRETH.

A Little Boy under Twelve Years of Age.

Dear Christmas day, dear Christmas day,
On which we lay all cares away!
No other day can ever be,
So full of joy as this to me.

As shepherds watched their flocks at night,
There shone around a radiant light,
An angel band came down to tell,
That God with man had come to dwell.

Not as a man, but baby sweet,
Did He their wond'ring vision meet,
And cradled in a manger poor,
With cattle feeding at the door.

Yes, Jesus was a little child,
With golden locks and eyes so mild,
And now whenever wrong I do,
I feel that He was tempted too.

I wish that I could feed His poor,
Send Christmas presents to their door;
For on this day it seems to me,
That want and care ought not to be.

Sing children! He knew tears and joys;
Perhaps was like us playful boys;
So we can drive all sin away,
For Christ made this one Christmas day.

ONE LITTLE GIRL'S NEIGHBOR.

ELIZABETH WHEELER ANDREW.

Nelly Randall was going to have a Christmas tree; and her little head was so full of it that she made all sorts of funny blunders at school, lost all interest in the games at recess, ran against people on the street and had to keep saying, "Please excuse me," a good many times going back and forth. And she almost forgot the little baby sister who had absorbed all her waking hours before she began day-dreaming about the beautiful vision that was coming to be a reality so soon; for now it was the very last Sunday before Christmas, and she scarcely heard a word Miss Farley was saying, until a sentence flashed upon her like lightning. It was this: "Jesus said, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.'"

Nelly started wide awake, and rubbed her eyes, to make sure she had heard the words.

"Why how can we, Miss Farley? And 'specially if they're not very nice neighbors!" she added, with a quick remembrance of the Bordens just round the corner from her house, who were such a trial to her, from the drunken father and fretful mother down to the crying baby. She had often thought, as she came in at her own gate, how provoking it was that that 'those Bordens' should have to be right under her nose all the time, with all the sights and smells that offended her dainty tastes. Above all, the shambling, degraded father, who reeled home in all stages of intoxication, to find the misery and poverty there growing worse all the time.

So Nelly thought that was a strange command of the Savior, that she love her neighbor as herself. Miss Farley guessed at the struggle going on in the mind of the little questioner, and having strong faith in silent influences, said,

"Suppose you ask the Lord Jesus about that, Nelly. It is a hard question to settle, sometimes, and no one but the loving Savior can tell us what to do. You ask Him to make it plain, and try to find out what He would do in your place, if He were here now."

As Nelly walked home, and turned over in her mind what could be the meaning of the strange words, she went slowly by the wretched house, and looked with a new interest at the gate off its hinges leaning against the fence, the crazy door with its great cracks above and below, and the broken windows stuffed with rags. Just then the doctor drove up in his gig, and giving her a hasty nod, hurried in, and she caught a glimpse of a forlorn group,—the mother with the baby on her lap, and the half dozen curly heads that were generally at the windows all clustered about the sick child, who gave now and then a low, pitiful wail.

Nelly could not bear that. She thought to herself, "If that was our baby—Oh, how I'd feel! I'm going in!" She did not stop an instant to think how strange it all was, that she should be going into a house which in all her life she had only looked at with the wish that it were out of her sight; and when she joined the sad little group it seemed just the right thing; for something warm in her heart said, "Why, Jesus did this very thing. How much He was with sick people, and even lepers and beggars!" and then she prayed the least little bit of a prayer that He would help her to do something;—anything she could do for her neighbor. For the poor baby was going very fast. Even her childish eyes could see that. And the children's sobs were growing louder, while the mother's tears dropped silently, as she held the little quivering hand, and kissed it over and over. It was a pretty baby, with soft brown eyes and rings of lovely golden hair that Nelly had often seen the children twisting over their fingers as they held it at the window, laughing and crowing. She had not given it a second thought, or for a moment dreamed that they could love it as she loved her little sister Edith; and would have said, only yesterday, if she had heard it was dead, "Well, it's a good thing; it's out of misery." But now she, too, stood crying, as she saw the pretty thing floating away into the great unknown; and drawing a stool nearer, took the little one next to the baby into her arms and wiped away the fast-falling tears with her own dainty handkerchief.

The doctor had tried to give the baby some drops when he first came in, but it was too late; she could not swallow, and he knew all would be over in a few minutes, so he only staid to comfort the poor mother.

Just then there came an awkward fumbling at the door, and the drunken father staggered in. How afraid Nelly would have been of him only this morning! but now she looked at him with different eyes; for he was her neighbor too, was he not? But how could she love him as herself?

He tried to be polite, but was too drunk to understand it all, and falling on the bed, soon went off into heavy sleep, and did not know when his little one drew the last quivering sigh, and went home out of its brief life of pain and poverty. It was Nelly who took the baby from the mother's arms and laid it gently in its cradle. And Nelly who came quickly back from her comfortable home with snowy garments to robe the little baby for the grave, followed by her big brother Hal, bringing a basket full of good things for the living. Kind people were coming in now whom the good doctor had notified, and offering services, for hearts are always touched by such sorrow; but it seemed to this little girl who was learning the power of Jesus' words practically for the first time, that the stricken family belonged to her more than to any one else. She took them all into her loving heart, even the dissolute man who had gone down almost to the level of the beasts that perish; and kept saying to herself, "I know he has a soul, if it can only be reached."

She pitied him from her very heart the next day, when he realized all, and she saw him with a shaking hand lift up a little ring of golden hair from the baby's pure forehead, and then turn away to hide his bloated, tearful face from every one.

Nelly's invalid mother saw the change that had come over her darling with joy, and gladly entered into all her eager plans for her neighbors.

"Darling mamma," she pleaded, "don't have any Christmas tree for me! Indeed I would rather you would help me to make things a little better over there, till Mr. Borden gets work, and can fix things up. And O mamma! he hasn't drank a drop since the baby died!—They need so many things,—every thing nearly,—and it will be the best Christmas I ever had if you will give me my wish."

So she had her way, and the Bordens were cheered and helped, not more by the substantial comforts sent in for immediate use, than by the love of their little friend. Other people shook their heads and doubted: she never did. Nobody but Nelly had much faith that shiftless Matt Borden would ever amount to anything, but the child was like an angel in his eyes, and so, when she brought him the pledge and asked him to sign it, he could not refuse her,—so she tied on the blue ribbon with her own little hands, where every one could see it, clear and plain.

If he had tried in his own strength, I fear he must have broken his pledge, even with all the new friends that were raised up for him, and the good times that were coming; but Nelly had made him promise that he would ask Jesus to help him, and so he did, and fought the fight until the victory over sinful habit came.

Mrs. Borden's thin cheeks rounded into rosy health again, and happiness and comfort came back to a household that had once seemed doomed to hopeless misery.

But Nelly never dreamed that she had done a great thing. She only realized that it was a joy to obey the words of Jesus, and to love her neighbor as herself.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S LETTER.

Dear Boys and Girls:—This letter will reach you Christmas Day, and I have been thinking of the different homes that shelter our brave little soldiers of the Prevention Army. In the Eastern, Middle and Northern states our young folks are almost sure to have the traditional "snowy Christmas", with jingling sleigh-bells, and good times skating, sliding, and snow-balling. The children's cheeks will be rosy in the frosty air, and feet and hands will tingle when they come in and rush to the glowing fire. In the beautiful south land, and on the Pacific coast, our boys and girls will eat the luscious fruits, inhale the fragrance of the flowers, and indulge in happy out-door games. Only three years ago Captain Deborah found an exquisite bunch of fragrant wall flowers, pansies, pink daisies, and rose-geranium leaves beside her plate Christmas morning in the Willamette Valley of Oregon, freshly gathered from their out-door haunts. To-day, in bustling Chicago, the thermometer is twenty degrees below zero, and the flowers are either dead under the snow, or living artificial lives under the warmth and protection of glass houses. But here or there, all over the world, it is good to know that the battle is going on for the right, and that we all clasp hands in the great war against intemperance. Best wishes for a "merry Christmas" and a "happy New Year" dear children, and may we all "fight the good fight" this year better than ever before, asking Jesus to help us. Here is a little letter telling about a "jug-breaking":

Bunker Hill, Ill., Dec. 4, 1884.

Dear Captain Deborah:—I want to tell you about our Band of Hope jug-breaking last week. We had it in the hall, and had speeches, songs, and dialogues. Then we broke our jugs and counted the money. We made in all $14.50. I had in my jug 45 cts. and Annie Pringle had the most of all, it was $1.10. We sold the tickets for ten cents. We got $13 at the door and let all the poor folks in for nothing, so the hall was full. My mamma is the superintendent of our band, and it is five years old. We have ribbon stars for badges, and we have to be nine years old before we sign our name to the pledge and get a star. I got my star last time we met. We have an Aid Society where the ladies meet every Friday and make over second-hand clothes for the poor children, so they can come to the Band of Hope and Sunday school. I learn the verses out of The Union Signal to speak in school.

Josie Dow.

Write to me about all such doings at 161 LaSalle st., Chicago, Ill., directing to, Captain Deborah.

COURAGE.

FANNIE BOLTON.

(After "Who's Ready," by Edna Dean Proctor.)

"God help us! who's ready?" There's danger ahead.
Who is able to stand? Hear the enemy's tread.
Hear the laugh of the demon all over our land,
As they fall, our beloved, for the glass in his hand;
And northward and southward and eastward and west,
His legions are tramping to capture our best.

Strong heroes are arming, strong hearts are at prayer.
The light and the darkness are wrestling in air;
But shall the night stay when the sun climbs the sky?
And shall the right fail then, to see the wrong die?
Take courage ye faithless, ye sorrowing rise.
We shall bring back our loved when our enemy dies.

"Be ready! All forward!" undaunted we cry.
"For God, home and freedom we'll fight till we die."
"The rum-holes shall turn out their stench and their sin,
"And sunshine and liberty sweetly flow in.
"Our hands shall be strong, the weak ones to grasp,
"Our hands shall be tender, the sad ones to clasp.
"The God of our fathers is guiding us still.
"Men, women, all forward and conquer we will."

A TEMPERANCE WOMAN'S DIARY.

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO.

MILFORD, N. H., November 30, 1869.—Dr. Dio Lewis came to Milford to give a lecture in a lecture course. He himself proposed to stop over and give a free temperance talk to-morrow.

December 1.—To-day he suggested to the Christian women of the town the feasibility of an appeal to the rumsellers presented by them. The appeal to be drawn up.

Dec. 3.—To-day sixteen of us women met to hear the appeal read.

Dec. 7.—Twenty-one women to-day went out to call on the rumsellers.

Dec. 11.—The reformers went out to make calls again.

Dec. 13.—Sixteen women met at Mrs. Abigail Woods to talk over reform.

Dec. 14.—To-day twenty-two of us went out and called at the hotel and at Jones's and Marshall's saloons.

Monday, Dec. 20.—The temperance committee met in the evening at Mr. Trow's.

Tuesday, Dec. 21.—The ladies went again this afternoon to call on the saloon keepers, Wetherbee Brothers and Mr. Jones.

Jan. 3, 1870.—We met to-day with fifty other ladies at Division Hall to plan our temperance work.

Wednesday Jan. 5.—Went out with forty other ladies to call on saloon keepers, and I went with three others to call on Alvin Woods; he was selling cider.

Jan. 10.—Very stormy. The women are to meet with Mrs. Trow in the evening.

Jan. 14.—We have canvassed all day to get signers to the appeal.

Feb. 2.—At 3 o'clock we met with nineteen other ladies at Temperance Hall.

Saturday, Feb. 5.—Went with Mrs. Abel Chase, Mrs. Rev. H. Moore, Mrs. Rev. J. Tilton, Mrs. David Heald, and Mrs. Mary Fuller Kaley and called on Wetherbee Brothers, saloonists; they abused and discouraged us.

Feb. 22.—A grand mass meeting held in the town hall to-night to hear the report of the temperance women. This work approved by the selectmen.

HOW SICK FOLKS GOT WELL.

REV. GEORGE W. MCCREE.

No one needs wine, beer, brandy, and gin as a medicine. We can get better without it. Consider these facts—for they are facts.

THE VIRTUES OF MILK AND BEEF TEA.

A young lad was knocked down by a van in a London street, and taken to a large hospital. One morning the doctor examined him, and said—

"Nurse, give him two glasses of port wine daily;" and, looking kindly at the lad, he said, "You will get on very well, my boy."

The young patient looked up, and replied—

"Please, sir, don't order me the wine."

"Why not, my boy?"

"If you please sir, I belong to a Band of Hope."

"Oh! answered he, "do you? Well, Nurse, give him a pint of new milk in the morning, and as much beef tea as he likes;" and, laughing cheerily, he said to the boy, "You will get on very well, my lad." And he got quite well without the wine.

THE COMMERCIAL TRAVELER.

We know a commercial traveler who was taken dangerously ill in Glasgow, when far away from his home. When the medical man saw him, he said—

"You must have some brandy."

"No," he answered; "I have studied the nature of bandy, and I will not take it."

The medical man protested that it would save his life.

"I will not take it," replied the patient.

The ladies in the hotel were told of this, and two of them went into his room and implored him, for the sake of his wife and family, to imbibe the brandy.

"No," he replied; "I believe that brandy is of no use as a medicine, and I will not take it."

The medical attendants then proposed to call in an eminent physician, and have his advice. To this the traveler at once assented, and expressed his readiness to pay the consultation fee.

The great man, white-haired and venerable, came to the bedside of the invalid and carefully examined him. In quiet tones he then said—

"You are in great pain. Yes, in great pain, my friend. They tell me you will not take brandy. You are quite right. You need no brandy." Nor was any stimulant given him. Quiet, rest, warmth, wholesome food, and some gentle medicine cured him of the pain and sickness, and he has done many a good day's work since. Had he taken the brandy everybody would have said that it, and it alone, had cured him. But he recovered without it.

THE BROKEN BLOOD-VESSEL.

There was a young lady visiting in London, and while in a shop she suddenly broke a blood-vessel. She was gently removed to a private house, laid on a sofa, and had brandy administered to her. A medical man was summoned, and when he came into the room and felt her pulse, her friends told him they had given her brandy, as though they had done the right thing.

"Brandy!" exclaimed he, "you could not have done a worse thing. Send for some ice. So ice, not brandy, was needful. The lady was not given any more alcohol, and found ice both safer and better. In cases of bleeding, beware of brandy. Try what ice will do.

"YOU MUST TAKE SOME PORTER."

A gentleman had been visiting a number of cholera patients in a low neighborhood, when he was taken ill. As he became convalescent his medical man told him he must buy some bottles of porter.

"What for?" said he.

"Oh! to set you up, of course."

"Well, if I get a dozen bottles of porter, do you know what will be in them?"

"No."

"Then, doctor, I decline taking medicine of which you know nothing." Nor did he order the porter, and he soon recovered his health and strength in perfection, and has ever since been remarkable for his robust constitution. Porter is no the elixir of life.

TAKE WINE OR DIE.

An editor of some very popular works, and a man of immense energy, felt, as he expressed it, "below par," and went two hundred miles to see his family physician.

"My good friend," said the doctor, "you must take two glasses of wine a day, or you will die." Yes, he would die. Nothing but wine would save him. He must take that or die. Resolved to have another medical opinion, Mr. S. returned to the Metropolis, and went to consult Sir James Clark.

"Sir," said the eminent man what are your habits?"

"I am a teetotaller, Sir James."

"Then, sir, you will get better all the sooner!"

So he did not drink wine, and he is not dead yet. He has done noble service for God and man for many years since his family doctor predicted his certain and speedy death. The fact is, alcoholic prescriptions often hasten death instead of preventing it, and many people have died through "drops of brandy" who would have lived had they resorted to beef tea, milk, oatmeal porridge, fresh air, cold water, and plenty of rest. Drugs and brandy are poor substitutes for the natural remedies, and the more simple our diet and medicines are the better.

THE BAD KNEE.

In the Midland counties there is a large boarding-school for boys. We have seen sixty or seventy of them at their desks; and fine, merry, strong, clear lads they were. No intoxicating drinks whatever are placed on the table, and yet several brewers and wine merchants send their sons there for education. This proves that even dealers in strong drink do not regard it as essential to their intellectual activity and physical health. Well, one of the young gentlemen had a white swelling on his knee, and was sent home for medical treatment. When the family doctor arrived and examined the limb he evidently thought it a serious case, and said—

"What sort of a school are you at?"

"Oh, a jolly school."

"What kind of a master have you?"

"Oh, a jolly master."

"But what sort of a table does he keep?"

"Oh, a jolly table."

"Yes, yes; but what does he give you to drink?"

"Oh, the governor's a teetotaller; he puts nothing but water on the table."

"Then," said the doctor to the patient's anxious mother, "we can save his limb. Do not fear; he will soon get better." And he did so, and went back to his desk, his games, and his "jolly table"—not less jolly to him now that he knew water-drinking had been so god for him.

TOPIC: PAUL AT TROAS.

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 20; 2–16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them. Acts 20, 7.

TIME OF EVENTS.—A. D. 57–8.

TIME OF HISTORICAL WRITING.—A. D. 63.

PLACE OF HISTORICAL WRITING.—Rome.

AUTHOR.—Luke, the author of the third gospel.

1. Go back to Paul's departure from Ephesus on the occasion of the riot caused by the silversmiths, and see him beginning his third missionary journey. Troas is his first stopping-place, but he speedily goes on to visit those Macedonian cities where he had founded churches, also the church at Corinth, abiding with the latter, three months. Here a party of seven was made up to accompany him into Asia Minor. At the opening of this new series of lessons, Paul, with Luke, Sopater, Aristarchus and Secundus, Gaius and Timotheus, Tychicus and Trophimus, are at Troas, bearing large collections for the church at Jerusalem, the gifts of the Gentile churches. A plan to kill Paul at the harbor of Corinth had been frustrated by his sudden decision to go over land into Macedonia.

2. Note the fact that missionary churches in Paul's time became at once not only self-supporting but themselves ministered to the necessities of the mother church at Jerusalem. Paul evidently considered a "collection" one of the most important means of grace, and doubtless this "offering" did quite as much to strengthen and build up the churches as Paul's own words of exhortation. Give young Christians something to do for others, and take their attention from themselves and their own spiritual condition as much as possible. There is great danger that if left to themselves they will become spiritual dissectors, and prey on their own spiritual being, greatly to its harm. Christian growth is not helped a particle by trying to grow. Consider the lilies. The Lord will furnish all the conditions of growth, and all we have to do is to fall in with them and go about our Master's business. We shall grow in Him, if we do this.

3. The most definite and detailed description of the observance of the Sabbath by the early Christians that is found in the Scriptures, is given in this lesson. From it we can certainly gather that the first day of the week was the day observed; that the preaching was in the evening when the custom was to assemble and break bread in commemoration of the Last Supper. It is said by cotemporary historians that they met also at daybreak to celebrate Christ's resurrection, and that at the evening service a simple meal was first shared, and at the close came the Eucharist and the mutual pledge of faith and love.

3. Even Paul's preaching did not keep everybody awake. Charles Reade says that it was not because Eutychus was so sinful, that he fell asleep, else "why should Paul make it his business to bring him to life instead of letting him lie as a warning to the sleepy-headed people of all ages."

4. A miracle was only an incident in the early Christian church. The power of the gospel to bring those "dead in trespasses and sins" to newness of life, was the one great central fact of the first century. A miracle seems not to have been regarded as so wonderful then. After Paul had restored Eutychus to life, the breaking of bread continued and the holy talk went on. It was the comfort of his restoration and not the wonder of it that engaged their thoughts. When we get nearest to the heart of the gospel, it is not wonderful that God does great things for us, whereof we are glad—because it is just like Him.

A YEAR AND A DAY.

"Through the harsh voices of our day
A low sweet prelude finds its way."

Its first, faint notes are those of Christmas carols, and they deepen grandly into the Christmas anthem as the day of days to this poor world, draws near. Multitudes of the earthly host to-day take part in the wonderful antiphon, where the heavenly sang alone, nearly nineteen hundred years ago. Think how many new voices swell the answering chorus, since one little year ago.

A year is a heavily laden carrier on time's highway. It brings much, it takes much away. What has it brought to you? Gifts of frankincense and myrrh? If so, it is because you are to be in some small sense the world's saviour. Crosses and crowns of platted thorns? Still then, and the more perhaps, you are bearing a part in the world's redemption.

Has it borne away on its journey into No Man's Land, the rubbish and the falsities of life, wrenching them possibly from your struggling grasp? Rejoice that so you are helped in the laying aside of every weight, the hindrances to the working out of your own and other's salvation. Has it taken the precious jewels of your choice casket, perhaps the very sacrifice from the altar where you had laid it with tears and prayer? Still rejoice, for those who are themselves bought with a costly price can afford to pay much in return.

But a year is more than a carrier. It is a block of solid opportunity set into the masonry of life. If the opportunities have been all improved, the structure is made strong thereby. If careless living has wrought sponginess and rottenness in the stone, it is a sad necessity that still makes it a part of the building.

To stand where the year has been but is now vanished, gives one many thoughts that he would gladly put away, and the question that will not be silenced is, "What shall the harvest be?"

Let us, however, look up and not down, forward and not back. A year is but a year. The calendar has fulfilled its mission. Leaf by leaf it has been torn away. Each year as well as each day there comes the promise, "Behold I make all things new." The incarnation of the Divine is as possible to us to-day as it was to the world nineteen centuries ago. The lowly life; the light of heaven on our path; the ministry to the world's sorrows, diseases and sins; the being "lifted up" in crucial tests and sacrifices; the rising again to tell the story of triumph over the powers of darkness; all this is as near to us as ever. We have but to make it our own by the supreme choice of love and the strong grasp of faith. A Christmas day may well be the birthday of our souls into newness of life, in the world of goodness, truth and love. Christmas bells may chime the new melody, and Christ Himself be born in all our hearts.

THE TRUTH.

Impelled by a desire to shield 150,000 prohibition voters and many more who could not vote at all, from the sharp and biting invectives that whistle round their ears, because of their loyalty to one who is falsely called a traitor to their holy cause, Gov. St. John breaks the silence which every honorable gentleman would choose under such circumstances, to deny in toto, and in detail, the charges made against him. He says:

I have no personal acquaintance with either Mr. Cleveland or Mr. Hendricks, or any other member of the National Democratic committee, nor did I ever have any transaction or understanding either directly or indirectly with either of said gentlemen, or any member of said committee, or any person claiming to act for, or in any way to represent the Democratic party, either state or national, in relation to the campaign just closed, or any other subject whatever. Nor did the Democratic party, so far as I know, ever attempt to communicate with me. It is further stated that, "the committee (Republican) decided to keep him (myself) in the race, and agreed to give him $35,000 if in his canvass he would not say anything that would be detrimental to the Republican candidate for the presidency. St. John agreed to this. He went to Ohio, (Oberlin), just after the Oct. election and made two speeches. * * Before leaving the platform he told his audience that another speaker would address them the following evening. That speaker, St. John said, was a Republican and Prohibitionist, but he thought Mr. Blaine ought to be elected. He is an eloquent speaker, he further said, and may be able to prove to you that it is better to support the Republican nominee." That I ever made any such proposition to the committee, or that the committee ever made any such proposition to me, is wholly false, and I feel sure that every citizen, without regard to party, who heard my address at Oberlin, (which was delivered before the Ohio election,) will do me the justice to say that the whole story about what I am alleged to have said there, is without any foundation, in fact. I never met Mr. Blaine, Gen. Logan or any member of the National Republican committee since Mr. Blaine's nomination, and I never saw Mr. Elkins, of the committee, in my life, and never have I, either directly or indirectly, sent or conveyed any communication or proposition to either of said gentlemen of said committee, or any member thereof, in relation to the late campaign. Nor did I ever propose, for a consideration or otherwise, to withdraw from the canvass; or by act, word or deed, do or omit to do, anything for the purpose of lessening the Prohibition vote or increasing the vote of either of the old parties. Nor did I ever receive a single penny, pledge or promise of any kind in connection with the campaign except my expenses paid by the National Prohibition committee; I have given my time and labor during the canvass freely, "without money and without price." And I now denounce any statement or insinuation inconsistent with the foregoing, as absolutely false, and I challenge all persons who have published or circulated reports to th contrary, to produce competent evidence to establish the truth of their assertions, or stand branded before the people as common sc ndal mongers.

The italics are our own contribution to this most unequivocal document. The challenge is a dauntless one, and bespeaks the gentleman, the patriot and the Christian. One cannot help feeling sorry for the persons who in the heat of partisanship have allowed themselves to be the common carriers of rumors and charges which they cannot substantiate, and which are intended to traduce the character and tarnish the good name of one of God's noblemen, all for political purposes.

ONE of the largest and most influential unions of Illinois, the Peoria W. C. T. U., having taken upon itself new financial burdens within the past six weeks, is sensibly gratified by the following letter, from one of its old supporters and friends, now removed to another city:

THANKSGIVING DAY,
SPRINGFIELD, Nov. 27, 1884.

To the Members of the W. C. T. U., Peoria, Ill.

DEAR FRIENDS: A kind Providence has brought me another birthday, and I remember that a cause very dear to my heart is represented and nobly sustained in Peoria by an earnest, consecrated band of women who are faithfully and successfully carrying forward the work God has given them to do. I remember you have a "birthday fund." So I enclose herewith a little contribution to to that fund, with the fervent prayer that it shall be but one of many offerings which will find their way into the same treasury. I hear whisperings in the air that some who have hitherto contributed to the temperance cause will now withhold their suppor; but I hear other whisperings, that come from above, such as these:

"The Lord will provide." "He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye." "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." "Be strong and of a good courage for I am with thee to deliver thee." "Be ye strong therefore and let not your hands be weak: for your work shall be rewarded." "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Though some contributions may be withheld, your treasury shall be like the widow's cruse of oil, unfailing, for God will take care of His own work. "He is not unrighteous to forget your work of faith and labor of love which ye have shown unto His name."

Think of the many who can rise up and call you blessed. Think of the families all over the land to-day who, because of the blessing of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, can gather round a happy home hearth and perhaps for the first time in years, have a real Thanksgiving. I seem to see an angel to-day making a record of restored comfort and joy in many a family circle because of the W. C. T. U. In the muttering of the storm I know you have heard the voice of Jesus saying as of old, "Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid."

I want to give my Thanksgiving offering to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and I want to subscribe $25 a year to the rent of the new room you are about to enter. If God prospers me you shall have a monthly contribution from me for this cause I so love.

God bless you in your good work. You shall yet shout in triumph, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Sincerely your friend,
WM. J. SEMEBROTH.

A MATTER already too long delayed, is the acknowledgment of courteous fraternal greetings to the N. W. C. T. U. from the general executive committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church. They are handsomely expressed in the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this general executive committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church now in session in Baltimore, reciprocate the cordial greetings of the N. W. C. T. U. so kindly expressed through their fraternal delegates, believing that all organizations working to bring the world to Christ are united in spirit and aim, and are one in Christ Jesus.

Resolved, That we desire the corresponding secretary of the branch within whose bounds may be held the general committee of conference upon the organization of a World's W. C. T. U., shall be a delegate to represent this society, or shall appoint a substitute who will be easily accessible to the place of meeting.

Resolved, That the Zenana paper published by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society for the women of India, will consider temperance, and all other matters pertaining to a Christian life.

Resolved, That the secretary of this committee transmit a copy of this resolution to the president of the N. W. C. T. U., Miss Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.

NOT every W. C. T. U. evangelist gets such quick returns, nor gets them so specifically and statistically as does our good Mrs. S. M I. Henry, who after carrying on a very effective series of revival meetings in Riverton, Neb., received the following testimony from the station agent of the town within one month thereafter:

RIVERTON, Neb., December 16.

Mrs. Henry:—On December 13, we received ten cases beer from Lincoln, consigned to one of our saloons. The consignee refused it on the ground that he had no use for it. Instructions were telegraphed for and orders received to turn it over to the other saloon, which also refused it, the keeper saying that he had ten cases on hand and that he had no use for more. Six weeks ago, twenty cases of beer would have been consumed in one week.

Yours, E. VAN DEUSER.

Sixty conversions have resulted from Mrs. Henry's work in Bloomington, where she now labors. A week ago last Sabbath, she assisted the pastor of the Congregational church in the communion service, at which time over forty of the newly converted were received into church fellowship. Mrs. Henry has agreed to give her whole winter to the "valley of the Republican" in Nebraska, and we know whereof we speak—that nowhere can this blessed work be more appreciated and result in grander triumphs to Christ's cause.

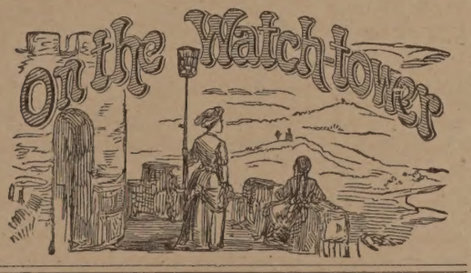
---

THE negro ballots get counted, it seems in municipal elections, down south. Inspired by defeated politicians to believe that they can punish Democrats by voting for whisky, the colored people, our southern advices tell us, are voting license rule into many hitherto prohibition towns—notably in South Carolina and Georgia The more need to send them temperance literature and temperance missionaries.

---

THE hive of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. hums with ceaseless activity. So says a looker on in Boston, who predicts a grander work in the state than any yet accomplished; who also regards the new president and secretary, Misses Tobey and Gordon as remarkably adapted to that work.

---



---

Mrs. M. M. Clardy, state evangelist of the Missouri W. C. T. U., is in Texas, doing excellent service, but shivering under the blast of the "northers".—W. C. T. U. work even in Southland then, is not always "a bed of roses"—misery loves company.

* * *

Our leaders are both philanthropic and artistic. Here, for instance is, the superintendent of Juvenile work in Missouri, Mrs. Hattie Milner, of Springfield, an artist of fine reputation, who has also recently distinguished herself by an excellent dramatization of Longfellow's "Blind Girl of Castle Guille," for the service of some "sweet charity."

* * *

"Temperance driftwood" is his appellation of the so-called "sympathisers" who drift with the current when the temperance tide runs high, but are so easily stranded in low water that they imagine the river has gone dry when they happen to be on a sand bar.

* * *

Miss Lucia Kimball is having excellent meetings in the interest of temperance in the Sunday schools, in Massachusetts.

* * *

It is a pleasure to note Mrs. Barney's recovery, sufficient at least to the putting forth of an excellent circular letter to all superintendents of Prison, Jail, Police station and Almshouse work. As I read it over by the lurid light of recent criticism, I am led to wonder if our enemies—nay our critics "themselves being judges," after being readers—would not take back the charge that "the W. C. T. U. has abandoned all gospel work."

* * *

She asks the W. C. T. U. in localities where the poor are auctioned off to the highest bidder, to present petitions at the town meeting for such provision as will entitle voters to the blessing promised to him "who considereth the poor".—I should say so.

* * *

Miss Esther Pugh—that woman of "bright thoughts" has had another. This time it is a design for Ohio's shield in the W. C. T. U. department of the New Orleans exposition. The shield is of brass and the design is a buckeye blossom, leaf and fruit, wrought in repousse work, and a picture of the Cincinnati fountain, by whose plashing waters the crusade women knelt and prayed, and where they used to sing at curbstone prayer meetings, "Jesus the water of life will give."

* * *

Mrs. Eden M. Watson says that Miss Anna Glenn and not "Mrs. Anna Glinn" is the Coultersville (Pa.) lady who desires tobacco statistics.

* * *

She also informs me of twenty-one new unions organized in Pennsylvania since October, and of her expectation of a great temperance revival after the Temperance Day in the week of prayer. And I feel sure a loving Father acknowledges her victorious faith, saying, "Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

* * *

Another W. C. T. U. woman's republican husband has written an able defense of the organization from his own point of view. It is Mr. S. B. Forbes, of Connecticut, who, though voting for Blaine, says this quietly effective word;

The Republican party, now being relieved from the exclusive management of national affairs, may have a favorable opportunity to review the liquor traffic in its relation to the prosperity of the country. In the midst of the real and imaginary darkness of the present hour, we may have hope for the republic; for "there is a just God who presides over the destiny of nations."

* * *

Still another, too, with his "good word" in the New Orleans Christian Advocate is Mr. W. H. Goodale, of Louisiana, who can speak "by the card" of the St. Louis convention, for he was "there to see." He gives a new significance to the mystical letters, N. W. C. T. U.—based on his observation, I suppose, at that convention. It is "No Woman Can Talk Uselessly."

* * *

Mrs. J. S. Sperry, of South Pueblo, Col., manager of the Ladies' Benevolent Union Home of that place, tells me that in the county jail there are now twenty-two persons, every one of whom owes his punishment to whisky. Mrs. Sperry devotes much time to visiting in the jail and prisons of that portion of the state.

* * *

Two very pretty calendars, gotten up by the superintendent of temperance literature in the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., grace the wall just over the editor's desk in the UNION SIGNAL's pretty new sanctum sanctorum. One is for the Band of Hope scholar, the other for the W. C. T. U. woman's special use. One bears the motto, "Dare to do Right. Dare to be true," the other has simply the dear initials that mean so much to us, and never more than now. The calendars are copyrighted by Mrs. Walker, and sell for ten cents each.

MARYLAND.

DOINGS AT MOUNT WASHINGTON.

Dr. P. C. Williams, one of the leading physicians of Baltimore, delivered a lecture on "Alcohol—its Effects upon Man," at Mt. Washington, Md., November 27, at the invitation of a member of the W. C. T. U.

Dr. Williams held the close attention of the audience by his clear, logical and comprehensive treatment of the subject. During the course of his remarks he alluded to the British Medical Temperance Association which has at present 250 members, many of them men of eminence in the profession and of world-wide reputation. He spoke also of the remarkable experiments of Prof. Martin of the Johns Hopkin's University, of Baltimore, in demonstrating the effect of alcohol upon the heart. The professor succeeded in so isolating a heart as to render its condition during action, simulating normal action, plainly evident. This action was attained through the use of the battery. Pure blood was then allowed to flow in and through the heart, followed after a time by a combination of blood and alcohol. The substitution of the latter for the pure blood caused almost immediately a decided weakening of the action of the heart. That this was not due to degeneration in the heart itself, was demonstrated by again supplying it with pure blood, when it resumed its former vigorous action.

The fallacy of the popular idea in regard to the warmth imparted by alcohol, was proved by the fact that alcohol is strongly condemned by Arctic explorers of any experience; that it has been demonstrated unquestionably that no user of alcohol in any form, can withstand the rigors of the Arctic climate.

The fallacy respecting the strength imparted by this poison, was met with the fact that athletes in training for contests are invariably prohibited its use by those having them in charge.

The lecture was most interesting throughout and highly appreciated.

November 12, the W. C. T. U. state superintendent of hygiene gave a talk on "Dress as it affects the Health of Women," to twenty-two ladies of Mt. Washington. This subject, she says, may not be of the utmost importance to the temperance cause itself, though anything that deteriorates woman and consequently her off-spring, renders them less able to resist temptation and more liable to resort to artificial stimulation, but to the woman worker in that cause and to woman in every work and every walk of life its importance is inestimable. Having realized herself for years the benefits to be derived from a change in the usual style of woman's underwear, having from a life of semi-invalidism been restored principally by this means to one of considerable activity, she earnestly believes that women ought to be awakened to a "consciousness of the injuries that invariably follow sooner or later, the wearing of their present tight, heavy and complicated apparel;" that they should learn that "it is in their power to modify their dress, as to increase the strength, ability and happiness of themselves and their children."

Believing that the destruction of old methods and ideas should be followed by practical information regarding new ones, different styles of reform underwear were after the "talk" shown and explained to the ladies.

Shortly before the presidential election, the Band of Hope connected with the M. E. church at Mt. Washington, gave an interesting entertainment in the lecture-room of the church. About forty of the members were present and each appeared to enter into the exercises as if the success of the evening depended upon his or her individual efforts. The result was all that could be desired.

During the latter part of the summer, a number of ladies of Mt. Washington, who are interested in the W. C. T. U. free kindergarten of Baltimore, (and the only one there), our town being but six miles from Baltimore, gave a reception and concert for the benefit of the Kindergarten. As this entertainment was attended with but little outlay of time, trouble or money, and realized $180, others may be interested in knowing something of the manner in which it was conducted.

A gentleman friend kindly donated about two hundred postal cards announcing the intention of the ladies to give the entertainment; that the reception would begin at 4 p. m., concert at eight; that the admission was ten cents, children half price, and that the recipient and friends it was hoped would attend, etc. These were sent by the ladies to all their friends and acquaintances within coming distance. The hall was arranged with a large Japanese tea hong, or booth, in the center, where iced tea, coffee and chocolate, with biscuit, sandwiches and light cake, were dispensed at reasonable prices. There were also some Japanese articles on sale and some packages of tea; also kindly donated. On the sides were large tables, where different fancy articles were sold, a caramel table, a lemonade well and grab-bag. At the ends, a fruit table and postoffice. The caramel table, home made, was the most profitable, considering the outlay.

A side room was devoted to cake and ice-cream. Friends the ladies kindly furnished the music, which was of a high order and greatly enjoyed. The seats were not arranged as for a concert, but scattered about promiscuous. This added to the sociability of the affair. The music was given at intervals, and between times there were chatting, conversation, promenading, refreshments, etc. Friends came from far and near, and all pronounced it a decided success as far as the entertainment provided was concerned. When the receipts were collected and added together, and expenses deducted, those interested pronounced it a decided financial success, also. They were afterward told that it was the most enjoyable affair of the kind ever held in the place.

The kindergarten branch of our work appeals to the sympathies and interests of all who understand its design or to all who love or care for little children. M. A. L.

RHODE ISLAND.

NOTES OF WORK.

A "chariot" came to my door to-day, in the form of a request that I write for THE UNION SIGNAL "some account" of the work done in this part of our state. I mount quite cheerfully when I remember that thus may be reported "good work" done, which the workers are far too busy to report for themselves. During the summer months the union here followed the same plan so successful and effective last year, holding grove meetings every alternate Sunday afternoon in different parts of the town. Except when the weather was unfavorable, these meetings called out a large attendance and were popular with all classes of our people, as we each time secured speakers who were made acceptable by their previous efforts for us, and elsewhere. The aggregate expense of these meetings was large, but was justified by circumstances and by results. The first year, we aimed to create a healthy temperance sentiment, and the fruit of that seed-sowing was seen in a vote for "no license" in April of this year. This second year we have aimed to perpetuate this, if possible. Since the presidential election many of our former friends seem to be in the "gall of election bitterness and the bonds of political iniquity," and they declare that they will have "yes" ballots printed in large letters and deposit enough of them to defeat our efforts. As a Vermont sister expressed it in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL lately, "it is hard work to keep sweet," but perhaps a consistent holding fast to principle vs. expediency will go far to reconcile or reconstruct, and our "wise as serpents" temperance (?) Republican men will see it wise to make friends of the elements of future success. Said a gentleman to one of our ladies soon after election, "Your Prohibition party has killed Blaine and itself at the same time." Without stopping to disclaim her ownership of the party, or its ownership of her, or the truth of his statement, she answered him in the words of a dying statesmen as rendered by Artemas Ward: "'I aint dead yit,' and there are 200,000 more of us, 'all alive,' and all who are living will be on hand next time. A young giant is born, and if it has defeated the Republican party this time, possibly it may do so again." She got no reply, but Oh! he looked unutterable things. Yet this same lady answered when asked to sign a petition for woman's suffrage, "No, I do not care to vote. I have sons. I shall be satisfied if I may influence them to vote right." Is there a balance of power here suggested not enough taken into account? Since the end of the season for out of door meetings, we have held no public meetings, but expect to commence them soon, either by ourselves or uniting with some other temperance organization, as we did last winter, holding seven of these union meetings with good results. At present, we are busy with temperance work in schools, which the union here hold second to no work in importance, and for which they always make liberal appropriation and plan with special care. The committee appointed are the same as for two years previous, with addition of one from a part of the town not before represented in the membership of the union. The schools, fifteen in number, with some 600 scholars in all, are situated a mile, or a mile and a half apart, and as no lady on the committee has a horse at her disposal, the union furnish a horse and carriage for their use. And so they go from school to school, their hearts warmed and encouraged by this loving care for their comfort and convenience, laden with a generous supply of Miss Coleman's beautiful and appropriate chromo cards, and other attractive temperance literature. They report courteous welcome from teachers and scholars, and that their little blackboard and other talks are rewarded by cordial invitations to come again; and what is far better, they find in most of the schools a deeper interest than ever before, and on the part of the teachers a conception of the importance of the work.

When selected literature was offered suited for the different classes, to be used as an occasional reading exercise, they were accepted with expressions of pleasure in every instance. In some schools the "ladder steps" exercise was found in use. Other teachers asked for more of these, saying, "The children like them." Copies of "Alcohol and Hygiene" were furnished to teachers of higher grades when desired. One teacher has asked for a work on physiology, but no steps are taken to furnish these as yet. Smith's Hygiene is a text book adopted by our school board. Until the law for temperance instruction passed by our legislature last winter goes into effect, this work is done by courtesy of school board, trustees and teachers, and we aim to so do it that this courtesy shall be deserved and may not fail. All other lines of W. C. T. U. work in general use in our state, are pursued by the union here more or less effectively. A visitor lately asked, "where do you get the money to do so much?" We are blessed with a financial agent who says of herself, that "she is good for nothing if not for begging." While our ladies would not admit the truth of this statement in its entirety, we all agree that she is certainly a very successful "special pleader" and our citizens are generous.

WISCONSIN.

TO WISCONSIN WOMEN OF THE W. C. T. U.

I sent to you enrollment lists to obtain names of women who wish to vote and names of men who wish women to vote. Since sending those out, I have received additional reason for earnest work. Several of our legislators write me that they are willing to work for woman suffrage, provided they find in either sex a strong desire that women should be granted the right of suffrage. This calls for petitions, and unless we can go to Madison this winter armed with the power of many names, I fear not much will be accomplished. Please help the cause by sending me as many names as you can.

Woman suffrage and Prohibition must aid each other. Let us make an earnest effort to prove to our Wisconsin legislature that we care deeply for the welfare of our state, and will work to advance its interests. My sisters, will you help? Each name you send will help justice and right. If you have not been furnished with enrollment lists, send to me for them, or head them yourself, one column with, "Names of women who wish to vote," the other column with, "Names of men who want women to vote."

I ought to have them by the first of January.

NEW LONDON COUNTY CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. held a county convention at New London, Thursday, Dec. 4, in the Federal street M. E. church. The three sessions were well attended and were of great interest to all concerned in the progress of the temperance movement. The sessions of the convention were admirably presided over by Mrs. Edward Luce, of Niantic.

At the morning session, satisfactory reports were presented from all the unions in the county; an excellent address of welcome was made by Mrs. Townsend, of this city, and Miss Landfear, the state organizer, acceptably responded. The most interesting of the morning exercises were the paper on state work read by Mrs. Partridge, of Jewett City, and an account of the national convention held at St. Louis in October, by Miss Landfear.

At the afternoon session, reports were read from the juvenile unions of the county and the balance of the time was given to addresses. George P. Rogers spoke on the temperance question, as also Rev. Hugh Montgomery and Mrs. Montgomery, the latter at some length.

In the evening the exercises were pleasantly diversified. The Cold Water army furnished the singing to the accompaniment of the organ and rendered several temperance songs set to popular airs. The session commenced with scripture reading by Miss Landfear followed by prayer by Rev. J. H. Amies. The address of the evening, a very able one, was delivered by Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, corresponding secretary of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. At the conclusion, the Cold Water army sang and the Rev. S. Olin Benton dismissed the meeting with the benediction. Miss Mary Day was elected secretary and treasurer of the county. The following resolutions were presented by the committee on resolutions and adopted by the convention:

Resolved, That we give heartfelt thanks to Almighty God for the success of the past, and we pledge ourselves that we will not weary in well doing until our country is redeemed from the liquor traffic.

Resolved, That the formation of local unions in every town in the county is demanded, and we will enter all open doors for the purpose of organization.

Resolved, That in our prayers and efforts we will insist upon total abstinence for the individual, prohibition for the towns in which we live, and constitutional prohibition for state and nation.

Resolved, That the thanks of this convention are tendered to the New London union for their cordial hospitality and to the trustees of the Federal street M. E. church for the use of their lecture room, and to the gentlemen for their presence and encouraging words.

Resolved, That we in county convention assembled, do recommend to the unions in New London county, that they make special effort to influence pastors and Christian women in towns in which there is no union to prepare the way for Miss Landfear, our state organizer, to labor for the organization of a union in the different towns.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION.

I cannot tell the number of towns there are observing the temperance educational law, but I know many already are doing so; and what is of grave import, the W. C. T. U. women propose to look well after this child of their adoption, and I am more and more convinced that we have brave hearts and warm with zeal in this cold New Hampshire. I am proud of their loyalty. Of course I refer to the burden bearers, who have toiled in cloudy and sunny weather alike, when public favor smiled or frowned.

Our state superintendent, ex-Senator Patterson, of Hancver, told me recently that the towns very generally were intending to obey the law.

I have lectured in about twenty towns on the importance of the enforcement of the law, and in some towns where there are no W. C. T. unions. At the recent state Sunday school convention a resolution was passed to encourage its enforcement. We have organized four new unions since election. MRS. N. H. KNOX.

ARIZONA.

FIRST ANNUAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

This convention was held at Phœnix, Nov. 13, 14, and 15, 1884. In this territory having single counties as large as all New England, it seemed difficult to gather together a sufficient number of ladies for a convention. But our president, Mrs. S. D. Clendenin, is indefatigable in the work, and through her kindness and that of her husband, Col. D. R. Clendenin, a delegation of three ladies was taken from Prescott. The distance is only a little more than a hundred miles, but that does not mean a half day's ride on the cars. We started Monday morning in an ambulance, and reached Phœnix Wednesday afternoon after a long, but pleasant ride. It was enjoyable on account of its novelty. Every mile had something new, another variety of cactus, a shrub unknown before, or a different range of mountains.

Our first meeting was held Thursday morning. Beside our delegation, there was one from Tucson. We considered ourselves wonderfully fortunate in having the presence of Illinois' president, Miss West. We had long known her name, but she is no longer a mere name to us, but is associated with an impression of strength and wisdom which will not soon be effaced.

The day meetings were not so well attended as we should have liked. They were occupied with the usual routine business. The first evening, Rev. Mr. Sumner, of Tucson, gave a clear, able statement of the effects of the liquor traffic upon our country. Friday evening Mrs. Clendenin read the president's annual address, and was followed by Miss West on Our Work. Sunday an interesting children's meeting was held. A Band of Hope was formed. Sunday evening Miss West spoke on Intemperance and Citizenship. The meetings increased in interest to the last and we believe that the work has received an impetus which will be felt through the year.

The success of the convention was due in a great measure to the efforts of Mrs. Clendenin, and that they were appreciated was shown by the fact that she was unanimously re-elected to the office she filled so well last year.

KENTUCKY.

EAST BEMSTADT.—It was not given us to have a part in the crusade ten years ago, but its days have not yet passed by, as many have supposed.

Just now our hearts are full of praises to God for the wonderful victory He has given us over the rum power in East Bemstadt. Though but a small mining village, yet it was cursed with four saloons, open seven days in the week, and this in opposition to a stringent local option law.

After a season spent in prayer, asking God to close the saloon doors and so mould public opinion that they could not again be opened, our W. C. T. U. began a series of public meetings.

We had no money wherewith to employ speakers, no headquarters or church wherein to gather, no assurance of outside aid or sympathy; but putting our trust in the God of Jacob, we began in the district school house. From the first the Holy Spirit was with us, and wonderful manifestations of His power were given.

For two weeks we labored, and as one after another the prominent business men and sturdy miners came forward to don the white ribbon, our hearts gave forth shouts of thanksgiving. Two of the saloon keepers signed the pledge, the other two relinquished their U. S. licenses and closed their doors. Before we closed our meetings, it was impossible to buy one drop of distilled, fermented or malt liquors in the town.

The following week our white ribbon men, without regard to race or previous condition of party servitude, nominated a temperance ticket, and elected every town officer, viz., police, judge, marshal and trustees.

The negroes joined heartily in the work, and we organized for them a Christian Temperance Union. All unions, especially the poor and weak ones in rural districts, should gain courage from our experience.

Organized just one year ago, in a town said to be the worst on the line of the L. & N. railroad in Kentucky, never having more than ten members present at a weekly meeting, having a paid membership of only twenty-five, yet through us the Lord has worked mightily, and given the temperance cause such a victory as we have never before known in the mountains of Kentucky.

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of hosts." MRS. L. A. HIELD.

MINNESOTA.

SCANDINAVIAN W. C. T. U.

I wonder if one of our dear Minnesota W. C. T. U. workers, Mrs. R. C. C. Gale, of Faribault, vice president of the third congressional district, has not obtained the very "key to the situation?" We know how our hearts grow strong with hope for the future temperance history of our land, when we can educate the judgment and enlist the sympathy of our young women in gospel temperance work. Mrs. Gale is applying this principle in a new direction. She has gathered a class of Scandinavian young women, many of them servant girls, and is training them to think about and comprehend our W. C. T. U. plans of work, hoping after awhile so to educate and influence them, that they may be able to organize and maintain a Scandinavian Y. W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Gale writes, "When I spoke to one of the girls about this temperance work as a means of self preservation, and the benefit it would be to induce the young men of their acquaintance to give up the use of intoxicants," she replied, "Oh, all the young girls think of is their appearance. They'll marry them if they are nice looking." And yet, dear UNION SIGNAL, in this great northwest, as Mrs. Gale adds, "These girls are to be the mothers of our future citizens." They are open to conviction, and anxious to learn; and as a rule thankful for instruction. Is there not here right around our W. C. T. U. workers a field "white for the harvest," and one which we have almost entirely overlooked?

May Mrs. Gale's key help to give us triumphant access to this difficult German and Scandinavian fortress of intemperance. And may there be many classes of Scandinavian girls taught in the principles of gospel temperance the coming winter. H. A. HOBART.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CHESTER.—The W. C. T. U. held their anniversary exercises on Thanksgiving evening in the M. E. church on Madison street. Business meetings have been kept up regularly, also bi-monthly meetings for prayer and Bible readings. Petitions were circulated against tavern licenses. One thousand and fifty names were sent up to Media as remonstrances, accompanied by fifteen members of the union to the court room during the hearing of the licenses.

Temperance papers have been liberally distributed. Anniversary of the Woman's Crusade was observed on the 23rd of December. Copies of THE UNION SIGNAL were secured for the Times and News (our city papers,) with the wish expressed that they would transfer to their own columns such items as would arouse the consciences of their readers. A gospel temperance meeting has been carried on every Saturday evening in the city hall, which has been well attended and furnished with excellent speakers from Philadelphia and other points. Petitions for a compulsory law for temperance education in the public schools were circulated among the citizens, and teachers names in Del county secured on one petition. Three hundred leaflets on High License, by Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D., were distributed. The union also assisted in providing ice for the Y. M. C. A. water-cooler, during the heat of the summer.

Mrs. J. R. Nichols, of Indianapolis, was with us for a week and did effective and encouraging work in both city and county. Mothers' meetings and cottage prayer meetings are about to be started.

The temperance school continues to flourish. It is the most effective work done here. It is self sustaining, the yearly entertainment being very popular, and yields funds that supply the school needs. There are about one hundred names on the roll, and the average attendance is fifty-five.

Mrs. Mary Hunt was with us on Thanksgiving evening, and left a fine impression upon the audience, both as to herself as a speaker and her subject as worthy of the regard and efforts of our citizens in the education of the young on the drink habit, and of heredity in the perpetuation of intemperance in our land; her arguments on this point were strong and convincing.

Our W. C. T. U. is not large in numbers, but we are encouraged to labor until temperance shall have victory written upon every banner.

"The Lord is their strength, and He is the saving strength of His anointed." Psalms 28:8.

MRS. T. MCCAULY, Secretary.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

KEYPORT.—Superintendent of legislative work, Mrs. T. W. Seabrook, calls upon all our workers to help in obtaining signatures to our petition to the legislature "for the submission of our amendment to the constitution of the state, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage." If our New Jersey readers of THE UNION SIGNAL fail to receive a blank, please send for one and help the cause along.

PATERSON.—Is being shaken by Mabee and English. Hosts are signing the pledge nightly, and the whole city is in a ferment. A new W. C. T. Union has been formed at Harrisonville. In many places politicians refuse to aid W. C. T. Unions because they took part in the late elections.

NEW BRUNSWICK W. C. T. U. has fifty members and the work is progressing, the future looks bright.

CAMDEN.—Is al alive in the good work. Rev. Mr. Bowman gave a Bible-reading. Sabbath afternoon I spoke of the evils of intemperance. The prohibition union which meets at Temperance Hall, 131 Federal street 7:30, p. m., completed its constitution and by-laws last Tuesday evening, and is ready for active work for the spring campaign.

SOMERVILLE W. C. T. Union and Reform Club are working harmoniously. The devotional meetings are full of interest.

OCEAN GROVE.—The weekly prayer meeting at Downs Cottage every Tuesday afternoon. Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, at the same place, on the first and third Tuesday in the month at 4 p. m. Juvenile temperance meeting every Friday at 3:30 in Park Hall, Asbury Park.

TRENTON.—The temperance people are holding the fort. The Reform Club hold Sunday afternoon meetings; the Chambersburg club also hold meetings on Sunday and Wednesday afternoon, both well attended.

KANSAS.

SEMI-ANNUAL DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The semi-annual convention of the W. C. T. U. for the first congressional district of Kansas, met with the Atchison union, December 9 and 10. It was entirely harmonious and it is hoped that much good may result therefrom. Our state president, Mrs. Fanny Rastall, of Burlingame, favored us with her presence, and kind assistance to our district president, Mrs. M. B. White, of Sabetha, who is working faithfully to make this the banner district of the state; much credit is due.

MRS. M. F. BRADFORD.

TENNESSEE.

Tennessee is moving to the front slowly. I organized a Prohibition club in the little town of Normandy, Thanksgiving day, and where there is a Good Templars' Lodge, do all I can to strengthen that. Whenever practicable, I organize a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The one in Tullahoma is growing fast. On my last visit, I organized Sunday evening a Band of Hope numbering fifty scholars, and we collected twelve dollars at the same time for books. It is called the "Saxon Band," and a very appropriate name. We might so name them all with good reason, since the Anglo-Saxon race is indeed our band of hope to recruit from. I promised them a handsome banner, when the Band should reach one hundred scholars. One in Manchester is doing finely under the care of one good woman and her husband. I organized, with the assistance of our Tullahoma friends, a club of fifty negroes, working for prohibition amendment in our state. They hold the ballot and their race is among the worst sufferers from drinking; and every whisky vote cast by a negro, does for our homes an injury that we can only undo by the instruction and pleading we can and do give.

ELIZABETH L. SAXON.

ILLINOIS.

W. C. T. U. COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Du Page county W. C. T. U. met in convention, December 11, 1884, at Prospect Park, Mrs. M. L. Stratton, president. Our conventions being held every three months, the work of each union is kept fresh in the minds of every other union. In the afternoon we had the reports from our workers, and the filling of vacancies in our official list, among which was the election of Miss Ada Bates, of Lombard, to the office of recording secretary in place of Miss F. E. Hiatt, resigned.

Miss Gilbert, our state recording and financial secretary, was with us, and spoke on the subject of finance, saying, it is nothing new, but the old story, which lies at the foundation of all successful work. There must be some system and plan adopted in this, as in other lines of work.

Mrs. Hagans and several other ladies followed with remarks on this subject. After prayer, we voted to adopt the action of the district in raising funds to carry on the work. After the day's work was over, we felt strengthened spiritually.

In previously looking over the ground and praying on the subject, the thought pressed upon us, that our greatest need was to bring the work of the W. C. T. U. before the people who assemble at our mass meetings in the evening. Thus, after the devotional meeting led by Mrs. A. J. Marks, the president said in view of the statements of the public press, also from some of those whom we were wont to call our friends, that "the work of the W. C. T. U. has been worse than thrown away," and "your work is now at an end," and other like expressions, we would ask the audience to serve as jurors, while we presented "our work" and let them decide whether our mission was fulfilled.

Mrs. S. A. Johnson, of Wheaton, was first introduced, who presented the work of the W. C. T. U. since the crusade in a condensed form, bringing out the different departments of labor in some tangible form, and closing with an eulogy of our efficient and able leaders. The president then gave a report of the work done by the county union, which is now two years old. The reports of the superintendents of departments in our county work followed. Miss A. J. Carothers gave a statistical report of Sunday school temperance work, followed with earnest remarks. Band of Hope undertakings were reported. Mrs. A. J. Marks presented the departments of prison and flower mission, and what had been accomplished, which brought tears to the eyes and gladness to the hearts of many present.

Mrs. Prof. O. F. Lumry, our superintendent of literature and UNION SIGNAL work, had a summing-up not quite equal to a state report, but nevertheless surprising. Her work has not been shut in by DuPage county walls, but is like the little leaven hid in the meal, and in fact is it not true that from every department goes out influence for the good of others, sometimes in far distant states? Christian work can not be confined even in prison walls.

We cannot forget the prisoner, who among others was awaiting his trial in the jail in Wheaton; while there they were often visited by our Christian temperance women. Some promised to lead different lives, while this one testified to the power of God which saved him from his sins. After the trial, he was sentenced to a short term at Joliet prison. Only a few weeks service and a few days suffering, and he received the summons to "Come up higher." The chaplain wrote he went rejoicing.

Some of the last sayings of the evening were by our Mrs. L. A. Hagans, who told us about the state and national conventions; her address was replete with amusing and also with earnest thoughts of wise women who did not hesitate to declare the whole counsel of God. At the close the "Detroit resolution" was read and adopted by a rising vote of the convention. We take no backward steps.

MISS A. J. CAROTHERS,
Corresponding Secretary.

EMINGTON.—Can we have a line among the gleanings of Illinois? We are a small union as yet, but we are gaining in numbers at each meeting. Once a month we take our pastor's place on Sabbath evening, and hold a gospel temperance meeting, or as we did lately, a temperance concert exercise. We distribute temperance literature every Sabbath, so that a copy goes into each home represented in our Sabbath school. THE UNION SIGNAL is a welcome visitor. Our ladies are trying to add to our club.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Mr. J. C. Ambrose has prepared several fine lectures, one especially deserving of notice by unions desiring to aid in the legislative work this winter. It is entitled "My Partner," and treats of the woman's ballot from all points of view. Send to headquarters for terms.

—The state reports are now ready for distribution. Two will be sent each union. If more are desired they will be sent, on order, for postage, at the rate of three cents per copy, or for expressage. The report is the largest and finest we have ever issued, covering one hundred and twelve pages, and should be in the hands of every member of the union. Send to headquarters for them.

—Again the Sixth District carries off the palm, having already forwarded to the state treasurer the first quarter's installment ($75), of its pledge of $300, for state work. There is large room for generous rivalry in this matter.

MISSOURI.

MERCER COUNTY CONVENTION.

This convention was held at the M. E. church, Princeton, December 9 and 10, 1884. A short prayer meeting was held in the morning by the local union.

At 1:30 p. m. Mrs. Watkins, district president, called the meeting to order. She conducted the devotional exercises which consisted of singing, scripture reading, and a season of earnest prayer. Princeton union being the only one in Mercer county there were no delegates, but several ministers and friends to the cause came in from the neighboring towns.

The afternoon session was lively and interesting. Mrs. Hoffman, our well beloved state president, cheered the hearts of her hearers by strong words of hope and encouragement. Several subjects were discussed pleasantly and profitably. All present seemed deeply interested in the work. One minister in describing the situation of things in his town said, "The politicians rage and the people imagine vain things."

The introduction of scientific temperance instruction into the public schools of Missouri is receiving the greatest attention at the present time.

The evening session was opened with devotional exercises by Mrs. Hoffman. The report of the committee on resolutions was read by Mrs. Evans, president of Princeton union, after which Mrs. Hoffman gave an earnest, eloquent address. The music and singing were pleasant features of the convention. Mrs. Shaw and Mrs. Lindsey with other singers gave special help.

The morning session, December 10, consisted of devotional exercises, and arranging plans for organizing unions in neighboring towns. The following are the resolutions adopted by the convention:

Resolved, That we will seek a more thorough consecration to God in our work. That we will cultivate the "charity that suffereth long and is kind." That we will meet argument with argument; reviling and opposition with kindness, and all our difficulties with prayer.

Resolved, That, as we are enlisted for life, or during the war, we will buckle on the armor with renewed determination for the protection of our homes, and to this end we will seek any and every lawful means for the triumph of our cause.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to circulate literature and petitions for securing legislative enactment, that our children may be systematically instructed in our public schools, as to the effects of alcohol and narcotics upon the human system.

Resolved, That we very strongly recommend our unions to secure and fill a column in every paper granting them an "entree" with strong, authentic facts concerning the liquor problem.

Resolved, That we heartily approve the action of our state and national conventions in endorsing the National Prohibition party, as giving us the best embodiment of prohibition principles.

Resolved, That we tender to the citizens of Princeton, to the local union, to the trustees of the church, to the clergymen, editors and singers, our hearty thanks for hospitality, co-operation and words of cheer. May God bless Princeton.

Several new members were added to the Princeton union and the old ones were encouraged and strengthened. The presence and Christian influence of our dear state and district presidents, and their kind, loving words have done much to lessen the feeling of bitterness which the W. C. T. U. has lately so unjustly had to bear. Surely God is with us. "To him be all the glory."

IDA F. BURR.

RHODE ISLAND.

Temperance work in our state, although meeting with discouragment necessarily incidental to the present state of public feeling, is being quietly, but persistently carried on. Two new departments have been recently added to our list, those of relation of intemperance to capital and labor with relative statistics, superintendent, Miss Annie E. Cole, Warren, and Narcotics, superintendent Mrs. L. T. Brownell, Pawtucket.

The Providence union ladies were at the ward rooms all day on the occasion of a recent election and worked most faithfuly in giving out no license tickets, arguing earnestly in favor of the principle of prohibition. Many persons were influenced in the right direction, many voted against license who had not proposed to vote at all on the question (one gentleman saying politely, "I'll do it to please you, ma'am") and many who were bitter at first, relented when they learned that the R. I. W. C. T. U. occupied a non-partisan position; but too many others vented their wrath in voting, as they avowed, for the first time in their lives for license, and the majority for license was larger than formerly.

One of our papers estimated, however, that had it not been for the presence of the women at the polls, the license majority would have been very much larger.

The generally expressed opinion is that had it not been for the revulsion of feeling following the presidential election, Providence would now have no license. But the purpose to stand firmly by the principles for which so much has already been sacrificed, is shown in the fact that the unions are busily at work again circulating petitions for constitutional prohibition. One woman obtained the signatures of one hundred and fifty voters, while giving no license tickets at the polls.

Three conventions have been held within a month and arrangements are being made for quarterly meeting next week, at which it is hoped all parts of the state will be represented.

The many friends of Mrs. J. K. Barney will be glad to know that her health is steadily improving and there is every reason to hope for much added usefulness from one whose past has been so fruitful of good.

MRS. E. S. BURLINGAME.

OHIO.

GREENE COUNTY W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

The annual convention of this body was held at Xenia, in the Reformed church, Dec. 6, '84. A consecration service was held from nine until ten o'clock a. m., and the convention was then called to order by the president, Mrs. J. B. Monroe. Reports from the local unions throughout the county were then listened to, showing that all were in good condition and actively engaged in the work. The officers of last year were re-elected: President, Mrs. J. B. Monroe, Xenia; secretary, Mrs. Bargdoll, Jamestown; treasurer, Mrs. Conover, Yellow Springs. Mrs. Lindsey, M. D., of Xenia, read a paper on the evils of Intemperance. Mrs. Witter, of Jamestown, gave one on "Temperance in Sabbath schools." Remarks were made by Mrs. Hussay and Mrs. Tufts. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the W. C. T. Unions throughout the county appoint committees to wait upon the Sabbath school superintendents and urge upon them the necessity of using the quarterly temperance leaves.

The president's address followed, and was a comprehensive review of the work of the W. C. T. U.

Afternoon session began with devotional exercises. The first paper was on scientific temperance instruction by Mrs. Tufts, of Yellow Springs. Miss Fanny Messenger, M. D., of Springfield, read an able paper on hygiene. Mrs. Geo. Dodds, of Xenia, spoke on temperance dynamite, using the chart representing the "Nation's Drink Bill," a forcible object lesson.

Drs. Morton and Black of Cedarville, and Mr. Geo. Dodds, of Xenia, spoke on the responsibility of the church as to the liquor traffic.

The evening session of the convention was spent in devotional exercises, which lasted an hour and a half.

The convention was a success, and the members of the Union are much encouraged.

IOWA.

WAPELLO COUNTY UNION.

The fifth annual meeting was held Dec. 2, at the Baptist church in Ottumwa. At 10 o'clock the meeting was opened for prayer, followed by talks upon evangelistic work which is the hope and foundation of all temperance good. Mrs. Lizzie Israel gave an excellent paper upon "Charity Work" in connection with industrial schools. Mrs. Israel is superintendent of a flourishing school of this kind under direction of the Ottumwa union. Reports of temperance work were given. At Eddyville and Eldon, the liquor and the vendor have been invited by the law put in execution to go away, and the people are without a saloon and are happy. In Ottumwa, thus far very little restraint has been put upon the saloons. A petition of nearly eight hundred names of ladies only has been presented to the city council, asking for the enforcement of the prohibitory law. The council have resolved in that direction.

The union reports twelve members having paid full dues this quarter, about sixty dollars received from other sources. A mission and industrial school, the former self-sustaining.

After devotional exercises in the afternoon the annual report was read, showing the semi-annual meeting held at Eldon last June, six religious meetings held at the poor farm, and one mass meeting held at South Ottumwa. Young people's and juvenile work were represented by Mrs. Thrall and discussed; also two papers read upon the flower mission, by Mrs. Epperson and Mrs. Lotspirch. The latter department we are confident will add very much to the evangelistic work, for where the delicate, lovely flowers go attended by kindness and sympathy, God's word and prayer can easily follow, especially among the sick. Through the five years of our history we have never lacked friends and helpers among the temperance brethren, so this time Rev. L. S. Hand and Rev. C. E. Brown came in and assisted. The following are the officers elected for the coming year:

President, Mrs. J. A. Burnham, Ottumwa; secretary, Mrs. Emma Baker, Ottumwa; treasurer, Mrs. M. B. Thrall, Ottumwa. Superintendent young people and juvenile, Mrs. C. C. Powell, Ottumwa; superintendent flower mission, Mrs. L. S. Hand, Ottumwa; evangelistic, Mrs. J. A. Burnham; scientific temperance, Mrs. Louise Epperson, Eddyville; Sunday school, Mrs. E. R. Allen, Eldon.

With the good working force among the newly elected officers, we hope for advancement far in excess of former years. We shall labor to redeem Wapello county from the drink habit.

In the evening, Mrs. Helen M. Gougar gave an excellent lecture, boldly and nobly defending the work of the W. C. T. U. and impartial suffrage. The force of strong convictions makes her a speaker of unusual power. The need of the ballot in the hands of women is coming to be more and more felt in our temperance work and every moral reform. Now that the election is past, may the political asperities go with it, and may we show the fidelity toward our sisters who have been so sorely maligned that we would desire for ourselves, and if we can reach that high plane of heavenly grace manifested in Miss Willard's "Call to prayer," we shall do well. By the far-sight of faith we may see beyond the storm-cloud the clear sky of God's providence, and the end may be the final victory over King Alcohol.

MRS. J. A. BURNHAM, Pres. Wapello Co. W.C.T.U.

NEWS IN A NUT SHELL.

On Thursday, November 20, the W. C. T. U. of Delavan, Ill., had a sewing bee at the house of their district president. They met at 9 a. m. and staid until 10 p. m. taking their dinner and supper with them. All political differences were laid aside and sweet harmony prevailed. The kind thoughtfulness, the busy hands, the hum of cheerful conversation, the clicking of the tireless machines, the appetizing feast of delicious food, prepared in so many different homes, the closing prayer and the hymn, "blest be the tie that binds," all made a happy time and a pleasant scene ever to be remembered by those present.

THE W. C. T. U. of Yonkers, N. Y., are sending out a fine sixteen page paper, called The Crystal Fount, in regard to their Christmas fair. The fair will be characterized by many interesting features, and promises to be a great success. The proceeds will go toward completing the first and second stories of the three story building which the union is erecting, and has already enclosed, leaving the third story to be finished when more money is in the treasury. The ladies will re-open their coffee room as soon as they can get into their new building, a work which they had to suspend on account of being obliged to give up the rooms they had occupied for years.

The W. C. T. U. met in pursuance to the call to prayer December 4, in the rooms of the Crusade union at Monmouth, Ill., the meeting being led by three Presbyterian ministers of the city. The first hour the subject was "Solomon's prayer;" the second, the forty-first Psalm; the third hour was devoted to Matthew 4: 6, "If Thou be the Son of God cast Thyself down," Satan's wily temptations, and an earnest plea by the leader of the hour for faith on our part in dark seasons. The meetings were greatly blessed to all hearts.

The work of thoroughly organizing Shiawassee county, Mich., was begun on a recent Sabbath, by the newly appointed county president, accompanied by Mrs. E. Y. Freeman, of East Saginaw, who, in a very able manner, interested her audiences with an outline of the special work of the W. C. T. U. A union of twenty-four members was organized at Maple river, and a union of twenty-eight members, at Corunna.

A "Prohibition conference" for Illinois, will be held at Decatur, December 29 and 30. Gov. St. John will be present, and give an address on Monday night. Representatives are cordially invited to attend from all the temperance organizations of the state. Correspondence regarding the conference should be addressed to A. F. Smith, Decatur, secretary of the local committee.

THE W. C. T. U. of Caledonia county, Vermont, offers the sum of $20. to the public schools and academies of the county for the best essays on the evil effects of alcohol and tobacco, to the academies the prize offered being ten dollars, to the high schools five dollars, to the district schools [illegible] dollars. These offers are made under conditions such as afford the very best tests of information and study.

A visit was also made on Monday at Owasso, and the union there was more perfectly organized, and encouraged to boldly push on in its work, notwithstanding the difficulties in the way.

Five unions now exist in Shiawassee county, and it is hoped before calling a county meeting in April, it will number many more.

The C. W. T. U. at Lathrop, Mo., is making arrangements for a reading-room at that place.

DEPARTMENT OF WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

I am this evening in receipt of a letter from Rev. L Pfeiffer, of East Greene, Erie County, Penn., in which he says he has inquired of Lauer & Yost, of Cleveland, Ohio, what it will cost us to have the chapter on total abstinence and prohibition from Alvan Stoltz's book put in print. The answer comes that they will publish it in neat pamphlet form at $28.00 for the first thousand, and $15.00 for each succeeding thousand copies printed. This price includes covers. If they are ordered without covers, the cost will be $3 50 less or $24.50 and $11.50 per thousand. Mr. Pfeiffer asks what he shall do. Shall we order the tract printed? Will not those who live in districts where Catholic Germans are found come to the help of this line of work and send in orders now for the tracts? I will be one of twenty-eight persons to give $1 each to have the first thousand struck.

Send me in your postal card orders for one dollar's worth of this wise German Catholic's words, and we shall soon have them made alive in action for total abstinence and prohibition.

Please respond quickly,

ADA H. KEPLEY,
Ass't Sup't of work among Foreigners.

TEMPERANCE DAY IN THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

DEAR SISTERS:—In this hour of special need I wish to draw your attention to the fact that very few states in the union have appointed a superintendent for temperance day in week of prayer. If this cannot be done this winter, surely every county president, can at least see that all the ministers in her territory are invited to observe Tuesday of the week of prayer, as a day of prayer, for the cause of temperance progress. If this important department had received the attention it deserves, the endorsement to our petition could have been secured from every Presbytery, conference and Sabbath school convention, held in America during the last year. Yours faithfully,

ELLEN M. WATSON,
Nat. Sup't of day in week of prayer.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

The Pilgrim Series, including "The Pilgrim Teacher," edited by Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., and Mr. M. C. Haazrd; "The Pilgrim Quarterly," edited by the latter; and the Quarterly for the younger scholars prepared by Mrs. Wm. M. Barrous; also Little Pilgrim Lesson Papers, by Mrs. W. F. Crafts, will all have a quarterly temperance lesson for 1885. These are published by the Congregational Sunday School Publishing Society, Beacon st., Boston, and are among our very best Lesson Helps. Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., is too well known as a Sunday school secretary to need any praise other than his own good work.

Mr. Hazard was for years editor of the National Sunday School Teacher, and late associate of the Sunday School Times.

Temperance people in the Congregational church ought, we believe, to use their own publications when they furnish the required helps in the line of temperance teaching. Therefore we commend these Quarterlies to the workers in our denomination.

Mr. F. N. Peloubet's excellent Lesson Helps will have two temperance lessons for 1885. These are published by W. A. Wilde & Co., 25, Broomfield st., Boston. Let us thank God for every answer to our prayers in the provision of temperance lessons through the regular channels of Sunday school teaching.

LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.
Boston, Dec. 18, 1884.

Signal Notes.

A SOCIETY has been organized in Philadelphia, composed of wealthy ladies and gentlemen, to look after the education and other interests of the 400 Chinese in that city.

THE National Prohibition Camp-meeting Association is contemplating a World's Gospel Temperance Prohibition Camp-meeting, to beheld at New Orleans during the exposition, commencing in February, and continuing several weeks. Arrangements will be announced in due time.

THAT fortitude which has encountered no dangers, that prudence which has surmounted no difficulties, that integrity which has been attacked by no temptation, can at best be considered but as gold not yet brought to the test, of which the true value cannot be assigned.—Freeman.

NEW ZEALAND papers tell of the endurance exhibited by a captain who, having been washed overboard in a gale, battled with the waves several hours, and finally succeeded in reaching the coast. The point of interest from a temperance view in the case is, that "he was such a determined abstainer, that even when half dead and totally numbed with exhaustion, he refused to swallow even a teaspoonful of brandy."

FROM two of the most eminent authorities come these ringing, significant words: "It is mere mockery to ask us to put down drunkenness by moral and religious means, when the legislature facilitates the multiplication of incitements to intemperance on every side. You might as well call upon me as a captain of a sinking ship and say, 'Why don't you pump the water out?' when you are scuttling the ship in every direction.—Cardinal Manning.

A GENTLEMAN said at a recent meeting: "A friend of mine who is a large shipowner, lost one of his ships at sea. I went to sympathize with him, as the loss amounted to $40 000. When I spoke about it, he replied, 'Never mind the loss; I can bear that and another $40,000 to that, and another $40,000 to that, without feeling it much; but (opening the drawing room door and pointing to his wife lying on a sofa helplessly intoxicated), if I could remedy this I would give all I have in the world."

"WHAT makes these slums (of London) so horrible? I answer with certainty, and with the confidence of one who knows—DRINK! I tell the nation with confidence founded on experience that there will be no remedy till you save these outcasts from the temptations of drink. Leave the drink, and you will build them palaces in vain. Leave the drink, and before the year is over your palaces would be reeking with dirt and squalor, with infamy and crime.—Archdeacon Farrar.

THE Midland Temperance league have memoralized the London & Northwestern, the Great Western, the Midland, the Great Northern, and the Northern Staffordshire railway companies in reference to the supply of railway refreshments. The memorial urges that first-class tea and coffee be furnished at two-pence a cup, second-class at a penny, and of non-intoxicating drinks at corresponding rates. Also that these refreshments shall be in a room apart from that in which intoxicants are sold.

RECENT statistics regarding women's work in England, are somewhat surprising as to lines of labor taken up by them, which are usually supposed to belong to men. There are 347 women blacksmiths and 9,148 nail-makers, who make nails for horse-shoes. There are 10,595 women who are engaged in binding books, and 2,302 assist in printing them. Coming to intellectual occupations, we find women filling important parts in the world's work. Teachers, 123.995; missionaries and preachers, 2 162; clerks in the civil service, 9,260; painters, 1,180; students 1,000; engravers, 64; in medical and surgical work, 37,910.

Temperance Chromo Cards.

A word is as good as a sermon if the word does the work. And many of these powerful words we have captured and put on beautiful cards. Words from the minister, the scientist, the statesman and many from the poets and the Scriptures. Words for the maiden and the matron, the student and the thinker, and especially for the boys and girls in our Temperance schools, day schools and Sunday schools. We have them at 25 cts., 30 cts., 40 cts. or 50 cts. per hundred, with Scripture texts mostly, some with poetical quotations.
We have a large and beautiful variety, this year, of holiday cards without the holiday greetings, so that those who missed them at the holidays can yet secure the beautiful messengers for use at other seasons. W. C. T. U. cards at 10 cents each; four "Savings of the Scientists" at 5 cents each, on large embossed cards. Some of the classical quotations at 5 cents each, especially one from St. Augustine, "Temperance is Love keeping itself entire and incorrupt for God." I would like to keep that before my own eyes every day in the year. Send for marked lists of cards to use after the holidays, and small sums for specimens for any special use you may designate. ## Miscellaneous Selections.

THE assertion of Col. Robert Ingersoll that Christianity is dying, is answered as follows by Rev. Dr. Kittredge, of Chicago:

In the year 1000 there were fifty millions of Christians in the world, including communicants of the Greek and Roman Catholic churches; all believed in the fundamental truth of a crucified, risen Saviour. In the year 1500, the fifty millions had increased to 100 millions. In 1700, to 155 millions. In 1880, to 200 millions, and in that year began the great awakening of the church to the conversion of the whole world. And in these eighty years the 200 millions have grown to 415 millions. This looks like a dying Christianity.

In the year 1800 there were in this country of actual communicants in evangelical churches, 364,872. In 1850, half a century later, there were 3,528,988. Twenty years later, in 1870, there were 6,673,306, and ten years later, in 1880, there were 10,065,963. Dying rapidly, you see, at the rate of an increase in strength of about 4,000,000 in ten years. Let me give you another alarming sign of approaching death. The population of the United States increased from 1850 to 1870, 66 per cent., while the members of evangelical churches reached 89 per cent. From 1870 to 1880, the increase of population was 30 per cent., and of church members 50 per cent. Does not this look like speedy death? And to figures grand like these the infidel flings back the unmanly, insulting answer, "They are all insincere and do not believe what they profess. I am sincere, but they are all hypocrites." Well, there is one test of any one's sincerity, that is his pocket-book. Insincerity does not open the purse strings and pour out its wealth for a cause which it has no faith. Let me give you the sums contributed by Christians of this country for the two objects of home and foreign missions. From 1830 to 1839 the contributions were $5,228,000; from 1840 to 1849, $8,141,000; from 1850 to 1859, $16 507,000; from 1860 to 1869, $34 099,000; and from 1870 to 1879, $56,133,000—and these immense sums given freely to the spread of Christianity by those who, at heart, did not believe in it!—Exchange.

THIS appeal is from Joseph's Cook's lecture on "Lawlessness":

Let the parlor be aroused. In the city of Cleveland, the ladies who are endeavoring to promote the cause of temperance, will not receive into their parlors the wives of liquor-dealers. I am very proud of their record on this point, and I happen to know that the very wealthiest draw the line at the door of the gin-shop. The lady at the head of the household of the foremost dealer in standard oil, a man who is supposed to own the state of Ohio, or a large part of it, will not receive any woman belonging to the family of a liquor-seller. Social sentiment is rising so high in the state of Ohio, that it is now a kind of social disgrace to know anybody connected with the liquor trade. I am not in favor of building up caste in the United States, except the caste that God Himself builds. There is a difference between the the right hand and the left; and in our society we must draw somewhere the line; certainly it must be drawn at the parlor door between the good and bad, and I am not unwilling that the example of the ladies of that beautiful city on the lakes yonder should be imitated throughout the length and breadth of the Union.

Hazeltine, on trial in Baltimore for the murder of Mamie Thorpe, was defended on the ground of morbid insanity, "accelerated by protracted dissipation."

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.
Let it be forever remembered that the
Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY
is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from
CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.
It also operates the best route and the short line between
Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.
Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.
Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated
North-Western Dining Cars,
the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.
All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.
It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.
Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.
